One time there was a hare who was not unlike other animals of that type, but she had a certain speed and deftness that enabled her to evade the hounds and trap that took her companions, and finally she came to be marked as a difficult quarry and a hunt was organized to catch this animal and kill it. So the boys were sent out to beat the brush, dogs assembled, men and horses, and they started off on a day of sport to track down this foeman that was worthy of their efforts. They finally flushed the animal, started it off on a run. It cut, spun, and twisted as no hare had ever done before, and provided quite a few hours of relaxation and sport. Finally, exhausted and beaten, she ran into a clearing and into a barn, where a man was working. The hounds were right at her heels. She leaped into the man's arms and he beat the hounds off with a hook and closed the door and refused to open it. When they had gone away he took the animal out and set it on the ground. The hare rose and then bounded off to her home in the thicket. When she did, a warm glow suffused all the forest around and the little animals looked at each other in surprise and delight that mercy and justice had been accomplished by that tiny act. [8204]

But now the very fact that the hare had been successful put a new price upon her. Time went by, and new dogs were gathered, new horses, and the men equipped themselves with still fancier riding gear, and they started out to catch that hare once more, and they beat the bushes and they blew the horns, and they started her up and off she went. The dogs just missed her, wounding her, but taking no repose, she fled on and on. Her dexterity had been augmented, her speed enhanced, her courage, determination and resolution were better. But finally all escape was cut off but one. She dashed in the village and there was a house there, a big house, and there was a room where several old men were sitting. The hare darted in the door, leaped up and landed among those men. They got up, closed the door and barred out the pursuers. When they had gone, one of them gathered the hare up in his arms, hid the hare in his coat and went out to the country and let her loose again right near her own thicket where she lived. And when they did somewhere an angel laughed, a high, clear, silver laugh, that justice and mercy were still on the earth.

But now the hare had become something to conjure with. She was no longer an ordinary hare. She was a witch hare, a devil hare. Now it wasn't to be a day of sport; she must be caught, torn and exorcised. She could be seen off in the distance and was quite distinguishable now because one of her legs had almost been torn off and there was a great white scar [8205] along her side where the fangs of one of the dogs had missed her vitals. Now, this time every wilful boy and every scurvy mongrel was drawn out to reinforce the hunt. A fine fleet of hounds from a distant place was brought to participate in it, hounds of such speed and such dexterity and such cruelty that they could not miss, and a great hunt was beat up now, far worse than any of the others. The avenues of escape were cut off, traps set, barriers set, and men were stationed with clubs to see that she was confined within such runway as they chose. And the hare again cut, doubled and turned. She was black with foam, sweat, mud and dust. Nothing seemed to avail her. Her heart was pressed. She was panting with her last breath. The fine man was gone; there was no refuge there. The entrance to the room where the old men sat was closed, and she had no refuge. But finally down in the field she saw a group of just ordinary people, just ordinary people. They were not hunters, they were not judges, they were not magistrates. They were just ordinary people, and into them she leaped for safety.

Well, what about it, my friends? What about it? Are you any less the warm heart and protecting arms of America than Dean Landis was in 1939 or the Supreme Court was in 1941? What about it? Go along with these people—go along with them—and when you write as bad a message as ever has been written in the annals of the United States of America there [8206] will be a cocktail party over in the Hawaiian Islands and a few rich people will smile to each other and congratulate themselves across their glasses, and back in the East a few racketeer labor leaders will rub their hands and clap each other on the back, and the Messrs. Boyd and Messrs. Barber and Messrs. Kaiser will say, "We got him at last!" And all over the world people will weep.

But if you come in with the verdict you should come in with, then up and down the Pacific Coast there will be a quarter of a million people who represent the 70,000 of labor unions that are affiliated under this certain banner, and their wives and children, and they will burst out of their doors with delight and excitement, and over the whole world the 70,000,000 people of the WFTU, the struggling people of many lands, will ring bells and dance in the street because America has reversed the tide, and they are satisfied it is not reactionary, and they are satisfied that it is not committed to the destruction of the people who had advanced the aims of its own common and ordinary people.

That is the problem, and that is what we are satisfied you won't fail us in.

The Court: We will take a short recess, ladies and gentlemen of the jury. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any circumstances or conditions.

Mr. MacInnis after this recess will talk to you and argue the matter on behalf of Mr. Robertson and Mr. Schmidt. We will take a short recess, with the same admonition.

(Recess.) [8207]

Argument on Behalf of Defendants Schmidt and Robertson

Mr. MacInnis: Citizens of the Jury: You may feel that everything has now been said that could possibly be said, so I will have to ask you to exert toward me all the patience that you can in the hope that I may say something that may prove of service to you in your deliberations in this case. That is the only purpose out of which the law permits argument by attorneys at the end of any lawsuit.

I don't think that a speech is worth making unless out of it the fragments of assistance to members of the jury can be found. In other words, I don't think a lawyer bestows any aid upon the jury or upon the cause which he represents if he merely stands before them and says, "Now, Mr. So-and-So said this, and you must believe him; and Mr. So-and-So added these words, and the sum total of all those words meant that you must believe us and return your verdict." I think that the job of a lawyer in a closing argument is to try to find for the jury some keys or some clues for the repositories of truth. A lawyer ought to be able to point out to the jury distinctions, signposts, guide marks by which the truth can be told from the false statements of other witnesses.

I find myself now embarking before you on a closing argument somewhat in the position of Mr. George Bernard Shaw when he made his first visit to America many years ago. I am told that [8208] a banquet was arranged for his honor at the old Waldorf-Astoria. All of the leading wits of the day were gathered to do him a kind of homage. He sat during the course of the evening at the speaker's table, and he listened to brilliant remarks largely made about himself, and finally the orator who was to precede him used such extravagances of expression that Mr. Shaw knew that he couldn't equal them. So when the applause and tumult was over, the chairman called upon Mr. Shaw. He said, "Mr. George Bernard Shaw will now give his address." Mr. Shaw did the right thing. He stood up and he said, "My address is Lamb's Club," and he sat down.

It might be more pleasing to you if I were to follow such an illustrious precedent, but I am going to try to go a little farther with you, because I think, strangely enough, there are matters which we can discuss back and forth, there are matters which you may be able to use to your benefit and ours at the conclusion of this case.

I will go back, if I may, to the time in which Mr. Hallinan and I were engaged as counsel for these three defendants. It isn't so many months ago. It was about three weeks before we assembled here on Novembr 14 for the start of this trial. I was very pleased to undertake the assignment in this case. It was an attractive cause; it was a challenge to any lawyer engaged in trial work. And I remember that when we met the three defendants, all of the encounter lived up to my expectations. But [8209] then I remember the following day when Mr. Hallinan had another conference with the three men, and he came back to our office with rather chilling news. He said, "This case is going to be more difficult than you think. Our clients are innocent." And we looked at each other with wild surprise; it was a novel experience for both of us.

And with that start we embarked on what has been for us a very terrifying education. When we came into this case we had the ordinary relationship of lawyers with clients. We had men whom we admired and in whose integrity we believed. I had met Mr. Bridges before. I had never met Mr. Robertson or Mr. Schmidt. But now we find ourselves at the end of almost five months not lawyers and clients any more; we find ourselves friends sitting together. And maybe this is a corny thing to say; maybe I shouldn't put it that way; maybe I shouldn't pretend to offer you an approach so personal as that. But the case has become a personal case. The bitterness that has surrounded the difficulties with adverse counsel has become a personal difficulty, and any difficulties that I encounter now in speaking about the case are probably difficulties which are personal to myself.

I am wondering whether I saw the case in the right light from the outset of our labors here. I think that now I am at least beginning to see a little light in the fog of confusion that first confronted my thinking. Oddly enough, I was able to [8210] retain a multitude of erroneous notions throughout this entire case, even while I listened and sometimes participated in the taking of evidence. It wasn't until I thrilled, along with yourselves, I trust, to the monumental remarks of Mr. Donohue in his opening argument, that the whole thing finally became clear to me.

Mr. Donohue accepted the prosecution of this case to save our country from a terrible menace. This must be true, because he told you so himself.

Now, I am at a loss to explain my own feelings when I recall the plight in which we might have found ourselves. I shudder. I was a total ingrate not to have appreciated Mr. Donohue sooner. Worse still, I was oblivious to the awful danger that beset our whole community. I was living in a kind of dream world. And after I listened to Mr. Donohue, of course I said to myself, "Who can fail to appreciate, who can fail to agree that America owes a tremendous debt to Mr. Donohue and men like himself—men of alertness; men of iron; men who, sacrificing all selfish interests, have come here to save us from a terrible fate?" America was in danger because of the labor situation in San Francisco, and Jiggs Donohue stepped into the breach. I wonder—I wonder how many of us recognized the peril upon whose brink we so thoughtlessly stood. Workers, employers, executives, even the Pacific Coast waterfront employers, according to their testimony in this case, were ignorant [8211] of the real but lurking danger behind the figure of Harry Bridges; and but for the bravery of Mr. Donohue and his cohorts whom you have seen here, who knows what might have happened by now?

As the ex-Attorney General, Mr. Tom Clark, whom Mr. Donohue so reveres, said in the summer of 1949: "Who knows what might have happened in Hawaii if we had not been able to obtain these indictments?"

So it is in that spirit that I embark upon a discussion of the case, not only from the perspective of Mr. Robertson and Mr. Schmidt, because you cannot abstract the case of any one of these defendants from the other; but in a spirit of looking with you at all that has been offered us here.

You may say to yourselves, "Why so much detailed adversion to historical analogy? Why all these stories about the past?" The special prosecutor, upon whom we can probably depend for a strictly literal approach in ~~this~~ case, will say, "Ladies and gentlemen, this is the Harry Bridges case; this isn't the Dreyfus case; this isn't the Salem witchcraft trials; this isn't any other historical phenomenon. I suggest that we stick to the alleged facts of the case at bar."

Now, in the ordinary criminal case that kind of advice might be well-intentioned enough, because in the ordinary criminal case the labors of the lawyers, the judge and the jury are centered around simple questions: The ordinary question in [8212] a criminal case of who did what to whom in a particular case. But a political case takes its nourishment, I think you will agree, out of a different atmosphere. A political case finds its genesis in a lot of things that require an examination into the culture of any particular era. And so it is that we offer you analogies. And I will say a few more things along that line, because we think that you can find in your own quest for a pattern of today some resemblance to the things that human beings who weren't unlike you or unlike me in the past did in their day and how they solved their problems.

Now, I think this: I think that few of us are able properly to assess the relationship of present historical events to each other. Now, certainly I cannot. I think we all puzzle over the hidden meanings of great international changes. We try to analyze the causes of these things; we try to fit them into their logical historical patterns. We try to reject obvious explanations. We try to exclude hypotheses which are based, for example, upon our own national pride or upon the seething hatreds of Central Europe or upon any other source which finds its flame kindled by emotion without passing through the more temperate spheres of our own minds. We do these things as best we can in any particular era. For instance, I ask you to look back at the events of the past twenty years. Let us look back at just a few of them. What did we think at the time? How did our opinions crystallize and become mature with the passage of [8213] a few years? It is easy to look back; it is easy to see how our own minds changed so many times upon given situations. I can remember—but I won't bore you too long with this kind of detail—I can remember when I was finishing high school back near the end of the Herbert Hoover regime. [8213-A] And I remember then the topics most ordinarily assigned for debate among us teenagers were two: one was "Resolved: that the United States should recognize Soviet Russia"; and the other topic was, "Resolved: that Mussolini has been a benefactor to Italy." Those were the two things that we discussed.

Now, these intrusions into world events took place in the classroom, you may be assured, without much venturing into statistical analysis. In the Russian question, those who upheld the negative side of the question inevitably pronounced in the language of the Hearst press that all Russians were atheists and that the doctrine of the divine right of kings demanded a return of the reins of government to the Czars. In the debates over Mussolini our point of view was just about as simple: the building of roads and schools, the encouragement of trade, received all the attention. None of us in those days had our eyes opened to the plights of great masses of people. These were the pre-Roosevelt days. The phrase "the common man" had not then been invented.

And in college years as many of us can recall, going back into that era, Hitler began to replace his Italian counterpart as a topic for discussion. I remember, as perhaps you do too, the wise and seasoned commentators who used to tell us, "what America needs is a little more discipline. Hitler has the right ticket. We ought to try it ourselves."

Japan? The Japanese were a quaint, faraway people. They [8214] wore flowing robes and they grew flowers, and they loved America very dearly. We didn't look any further.

Now, along that same time, while we were reading Latin essays with an occasional philosophic thought about the unemployment situation, there was another group of young men right here in San Francisco who were a lot more practical than we. Down on the waterfront the longshore workers of Harry Bridges were doing many things that were outside the ken of our own understanding. They were men who were young, as young as ourselves at least; but they had their fingers to a certain extent upon the pulse of the world, because every day they touched cargo that came to their hands from every port upon the Seven Seas.

We remember the many things that Harry Bridges and the longshore workers did while we were in school. They were boycotting, if you please, munitions, scrapiron marked for shipment to Italy. This action was highly subversive. Everyone knew that Ethiopia was peopled by savages and that Mussolini was bringing the light of Christianity to a dark and heathen world. We accepted the reaction of all the respectable members of the public. And they were doing other things a little later. They were refusing to handle German goods, when every decent person knew that Hitler was merely increasing his stronghold in order to protect us from the ravages of Communism. And a little later there were other scandals that developed. There was another [8215] scandal when the longshore union refused to handle the shipment of munitions to Japan. Why, this was an insulting act to a friendly nation. Everyone realized that. Department stores told their patrons that if there was a shortage of toys that Christmas, Harry Bridges and the longshore union would be responsible.

Always, always the longshore union committed the sin of being right at the wrong time. And so it was; we all had to change our minds many times back and forth, turning our attentions on international events much like spectators at a tennis match. "Recognize Soviet Russia," said Roosevelt. All right, we began to do business with Russia. "We love Rusia," said the administration. And it was "Hate Hitler" by 1938 when the country awakened at last to the Nazi peril. And in 1939 it was "Hate Russia" again. But in 1941 it was "Love Russia." And in 1944 it was "Beloved Russia." And then in 1946 it was "Suspect Russia." All over again, back to our beginnings.

In the thinking of our country there were all kinds of offshoots of the same kind of goverment directed thinking. They will be familiar to you as I recount them. "Brave little Finland"—how many of us remember that phrase? "Brave little Finland. She always paid her war debts." And then brave little Finland was on the side of the Nazi German government and we didn't say "Brave little Finland" any more. And there were other dramatic about-faces. Yugoslavia. Yugoslavia, for [8216] example, during the war; pent up admiration in America for Mihailovic was released in fulsome praises by a moving picture called "The Chetniks."

You probably saw that. And then over night a new word came from our State Department. There was a new figure arising, a man named Josip Broz. He later became known as the fabulous Tito. But overnight Tito became a hero, Mihailovic became a Nazi. And then at the end of the war there was another switch in our thinking. At this time Tito was ruler of Yugoslavia, Mihailovic was condemned to die by a Yugoslav court. And then we were told that we were wrong all the time, that Mihailovic was a hero and Tito was a tyrant.

Those things ought to be too closely ingrained in our memory for anyone to forget. And the proposition is this: within the sphere of our own national consciousness anyone who disagreed with any of the policies which I have just reviewed, or worse still, anyone who adopted them prematurely, became either a Communist or a Fascist; if he didn't think the right thing at the right time.

Here in this case men like Mr. Donohue, with such sincerity as you can best appraise—I won't put a character upon it—tell you without blushing, as he does, that his interest in this case stems from the patriotic notion that some cold war may turn into a shooting war. That, in his mind, is connected with the false charges against Harry Bridges. Well, without arguing whether or not that be true, it is obvious that today, at least, [8217] the briers of unseen trouble and worry touch the nerve ends of the whole world. Every nation, whether it be the United States, whether it is France, whether it is the resurgent Germany, whether it is Soviet Russia, The Netherlands—every country claims or pretends to claim that some miniscule minority within it, within the folds of that country, is attempting to overthrow it by force and violence. We see the same thing everywhere.

I am reminded of a French cartoon that was republished about three weeks ago in Time Magazine. Many of you may have seen it. The cartoon showed a scene in one of the central European countries, one of the countries which we call those behind the "iron curtain." And it showed a light playing upon the face of a prisoner who was sitting in a chair, and there was a prosecutor pointing his finger somewhat spookily at him, and the caption underneath said, "Are you now or have you ever been a believer in democracy?" And so it is. I think the picture is probably the same all over the world. Everywhere the majority pretends to have the same fear. Everywhere the majority in government seems to have the same ailment. Everywhere the same inquiries are being made. It is not restricted to democracies, it is not restricted to Communist countries.

In Spain you may have heard two or three weeks ago that the Duchess of Barcelona was arrested and placed in a cell because of the assumption in Spain that the monarchists are joining [8218] hands with the Communists to overthrow the existing Fascist government.

We come back almost to the apothegm of the ordinary criminal case: Who did what and to whom? It is very difficult to judge what we should do in international affairs.

So I don't know about my own perspective in this case, any more than I can tell you what my perspective would have been at any given time upon the quick-changing historical events that we have covered so briefly. Maybe I am too close to the picture of this case to speak clearly about it. Maybe the case is too big for my grasp. Maybe these men have become too much my friends. I think I could have told you last November what this case is about a lot more clearly than I can now. And starting out some time this afternoon, I would ask you just one indulgence: Hope with me that I can capture words of sufficient strength to speak to you properly about the meaning of this case.

I won't ask you to accept anything beause I say it is so. I won't ask you to believe that I am sincere because that is for you to determine; that isn't for me to say. We are hired, Mr. Hallinan and myself. We are hired to use our talents in support of the cause we represent. It is only incidental to say to you that we believe in that cause and that we believe in the people we represent. But don't take that statement merely because I make it. Look critically at every word that I say. Reject me [8219] if I misquote in any instance the record of evidence. Be suspicious of any approach that I offer you; because, as I say, we are partisan in this case. We have lived through too much of it. We think, maybe we perceive too much of it, but again, that is for you to determine in your deliberations. So I won't say, as our prosecutor grandly does, "I say to you with all the sincerity at my command that we have proved something," because if I said that, I would immediately fasten upon myself the same badge of suspicion that I at once accord to him. [8219-A]

I think, members of the jury, that I would do almost anything to win this case. That is one of the reasons why I ask you to listen to me critically and even suspiciously. If I could reach with such words as I may utter all twelve of you, if I could find in twelve persons a bulwark against the forces of what we know to be prejudice and oppression, of course I would rejoice in that most glorious kind of ending to this most execrable of prosecutions. But if my words could reach only one of you, and if I found in that one a bulwark against all that is false and unjust, still I would thank God for that kind of deliverance out of such solitary courage. That is the approach that I would like to bring to this case if I could.

It is very easy to stand before you and say, "This is a simple case, a very simple case. Read the language of the indictment. The indictment is couched in simple English. It is understandable, easy. There is nothing mysterious about what it connotes. That does not make this case a simple case, although there is one simple problem which, if you solve, will be the key to the whole case. They say that, and here perhaps divides the false from the true:

"Yea, and single aloof were the clue, could you but find it, to the treasure house and peradventure to the master, too."

In this case the simple problem which, if you solve it, will be the case and all, we say is this: What is the reason for the [8220] Bridges case? What underlies this prosecution? If you solve that, you have the answer. If you answer that question, you have answered really a compelling and fundamental question. I wish I could tell you precisely the causes for this prosecution of Harry Bridges.

Perjury—you will find that word in the indictment. You will find that word repeated. You will find the accusation that Mr. Bridges swore falsely when he said he was not a member of the Communist Party. But that won't answer your problem. Early in 1949, when Mr. F. Joseph Donohue came out to our city from Washington to conduct this case, he answered all questions about the Bridges prosecution in that manner. He said, "This is a simple case. It is a perjury prosecution. We are officers of the law. We are merely interested in this prosecution because the law has been violated." But when a little time passed, we who have been following the periodical accounts of our times will observe the line of Mr. Donohue underwent a sharp change because patriotism, that element which he deems essential to the conduct of this case, that sword which he feels he must grasp in his hand while speaking before you, came very definitely to his attention—patriotism. He began to say, "This prosecution is being held because of the domination of trade unions by Communists. That is the real reason we have embarked on this prosecution."

And we who tried to analyze statements of that ilk respond [8221] in this fashion: "Do you think that the government believes now, after the long history of the past, after the findings by its own officers, even the highest court of our land—do you think the government actually believes that Harry Bridges has ever been a member of the Communist Party?"

We do not have to answer that question by argument or by inquiry into the motives of the men who wear, at least temporarily, the mantle of United States government, because we see that question answered in a very practical way. Citizenship—that is the issue here—and yet Henry Schrimpf was given his citizenship in 1943 while our country was at war. Henry Schrimpf, who admits he belonged to the Communist Party. What does the prosecutor say in response to that matter? Well, he tells you this: He says, why, in 1943 the Communist Party had not been denounced as a subversive organization. And yet, for those of us who are following the history of this case, Harry Bridges was tried, his deportation was sought under the same statute in 1939 and 1941 under the same kind of language which said any person who belongs to or is affiliated with any organization advocating the overthrow of our government by force or violence must be deported. So the government had the same attitude upon the Communist Party in 1939 and in 1941, regardless of any pious assertion which the special prosecutor makes here now.

The Schneidermann case has been mentioned. William Schneidermann, one of the local leaders of the Communist Party, [8222] whose name has been mentioned, being invoked so many times by the special prosecutor, an open member of the Communist Party, received his citizenship over the protest of the government and was represented by the late Wendell Willkie. So Communism is not the answer. We have to proceed a little further. We have to look a little deeper. We have to try to find some answer that will suit this case. What that answer may be in its composite you will have to glean out of the long and terrible history to which you have listened now for almost five months. The position of Harry Bridges in the labor movement must be the answer in this case, to heal the sores of the ancient struggle with the employers, the fresher wounds out of the struggle for a living wage in the Hawaiian Islands, the everpresent shadow of the Immigration Department, the outcry of Mr. Tom Clark himself, the then Attorney General of the United States, who said last May, "We think the Hawaiian situation would be bettered with the return of this indictment."

There are many causes which we can look for in this prosecution: the intramural squeeze in the CIO, Mr. Philip Murray and Mr. Joseph Curran, whose blessing was given to the advocacy of Mervyn Rathborne; Philip Murray and Joseph Curran, left wing trade union leaders, who have taken upon themselves the badge of right wing, which they deem connotes some kind of respectability, so they align themselves with the corrupt little group of officers—Boyd, Barber and Kaiser—so that they could destroy [8223] one man.

Now, as I say, don't take that because I say it. Look to the facts of the case and see if you find any other reason. See if you do not find that that is the reason. Why destroy Harry Bridges? Because he has refused to be false to the members of his union. He has refused to sacrifice either their rights or their money, as he has told you, and there has been no denial here. He has refused to do anything that would involve him in the engagement of the devolutions of smug politics within the CIO. There is one conclusion about the interposition of the labor movement in this case, and it is this: In the labor movement in America there are two outlaws, members of the jury, whose existence, staunch, rugged, honest and unyielding, is like vitriol to men like Philip Murray and the sycophants who surround him. In the east it is John L. Lewis. Mr. Lewis is native-born. It is idle to call him a Communist. In the west it is Harry Bridges, and toward either of those two men any assertion that fits the time or marks the circumstance can be made because each must be removed from his particular sphere of influence.

Analyze the history of our times, the history of the last years in the labor movement, and ask yourselves if that conclusion is not correct. And so we say this is a labor case. Harry Bridges is on trial because he is a militant and uncompromising labor leader. We say that, and we ask you to believe it out of [8224] the evidence in this case. Reject it if you find our word to be false. If your inquiry as to whether or not this is a labor case, pure and simple, if your inquiry as to the reason that underlies this prosecution of Harry Bridges is unanswered, ask yourselves a further question: How short can our memories be, how far back in the passage of time is 1933, or in 1933 did we live on another planet which has whirled by us so long ago in the music of the spheres? In 1933 a lot of things were going on in America. A lot of things were going on on the waterfront. There was a job to be done. There was a job to be done with men. We did, and we worked, and that job had to be accomplished. We had a depression. I do not know whether we have forgotten that, but in 1933 when the curtain goes up upon the entrance of Harry Bridges into the sphere of activity which we are asked to scrutinize here, America too was upon the threshold of another emergence. We had gone through the depression. We looked forward with hope to the coming of Franklin Roosevelt. 1933. I have a little book. I guess it really is not a little book, it is a big book It was very popular for the last two years as a kind of Christmas present. It is a pictorial portrait of America from the end of the first war up to the beginning of the second World War. "I remember distinctly." And this book brings back very sharply a lot of things that are sometimes easy to forget, and it has a chart upon a page about estimated unemployment over the years. Each of these little men [8225] represents 600,000 persons, and drawing my finger down to the year 1933 there were 13,800,000 persons out of work. 13,800,000 persons.

On the waterfront—well, you have heard the details of the situation that pervaded the San Francisco waterfront, men who got $10 a week to support their wives and families, and into those conditions came Harry Bridges. I think that Harry Bridges made very definite contributions to lifting this part of America out of the throes of the great depression. I do not know whether anyone will challenge that statement, but someone has come here from afar, someone who, I do not suppose, claims he did anything in that distressing period of our national life to alleviate difficulties, strife and suffering, but that person comes here, and with a great facility he turns back the pages of history. He looks all the way back. He disregards the lines he does not want to read. He closes his eyes to the pictures which are unpleasant or which do not fit into the mosaic of his own thought, and he says, "You, Harry Bridges, back in 1933, you should have been a little more selective. You should have said, 'You, Mr. B. B. Jones, I can't help you. I can't assist you. You are a member of the Communist Party,' and 'You, Mr. Sam Darcy, I can't accept any help from you. Leave me alone. You are a member of the Communist Party.' "

Life is tough when the stakes are down. Life does not allow us to indulge in that kind of hindsight. Life does not [8226] allow us to engage in those refinements of thought which might be pleasing to the special prosecutor at this time. That was the life of 1933. . That was the depth out of which these men had to be elevated, and they were elevated by Mr. Harry Bridges who has been made to pay for it ever since.

If you want another thought, and I hope I can say these things without being too tedious upon the same subject, if you want another thought on whether there is movement against labor in America today, a kind of unseen, unspoken movement, the same kind of movement which cried out in dismay at social security, which cried out still louder against old age pensions, wages and hour laws for women, and the like, if you want a little look into whether or not this a labor case, whether or not there is a movement against labor in America, I will ask you to go back in your minds just about three weeks ago. On the East Coast there was being prosecuted a very stubborn strike on the part of the United Mine Workers. The mine workers themselves were brought to trial on a charge of criminal contempt before a federal court. The federal court heard the men and found they were not guilty. On the public pages of our press, when the verdict of acquittal from the mouth of that judge was announced, Senator Taft, Senator Robert Taft, announced that the government, the United States Government, whom he is expected to revere, the same as ourselves, he announced that the government had thrown the case. Senator Wayne

Morris announced if the federal [8227] courts were going to act in that fashion, he would at once propose legislation so that the government could take over the mines. Mr. Robert Taft, you will recall, is the gentleman whose name is borne upon the Taft-Hartley Law, the law which would today outlaw and do away with the hiring halls on the San Francisco waterfront. So ask yourselves, "Is there any movement against labor today and is this any part of that picture?"

If you embrace one thought on that subject, nothing else is necessary. Rathborne testified at great length in this case. He said he was offering you a quotation from Lenin when he said to you in all seriousness, "Trade unions are schools of Communism." Think over those words for just a moment. "Trade unions are schools of Communism." The witness who uttered that remark who conveyed to you that lofty aphorism, did so under the direction of the men who are conducting this case. "Trade unions are schools of Communism." Ask yourselves, Is there any movement against labor in America today? Why, that statement is of equal stature to what Mr. Bruce Barber purports to have told Rathborne on their first meeting, and I remember those words fairly vividly. What did Rathborne say? Barber introduced himself to him, had his first interview, and he said this. He said the Immigration Department is conducting an investigation about the infiltration of Communists into the labor movement. What authority does the Immigration Department have to investigate labor unions? What possible connections would the labor [8228] movement have with the Immigration Department as such?

We have one other little facet of the same picture. If you want to focus your eyes upon it for a moment, ask yourselves, "Has there been any labor-baiting in connection with the preparation of this case?" Or what would you call it? What did you call it when you heard the story of Rathborne going up to the hotel room of Mr. Donohue, the St. Francis here in San Francisco, and making a long distance call at Mr. Donohue's expense, so that he could unleash a publicity blast against the 1948 strike? Does that have some connection with this case? Did the prosecutor in the exercise of that duty of fairness about which he so zealously speaks consider that publicity directed against a particular strike formed some integral part of this case? If you ask yourselves those questions, I think you will be able to give yourselves the answer. We have reviewed the bugaboo of Communist charges and smears all over the country and we have Harry Bridges' explanation of his own situation with Philip Murray—the real reason behind the charge of Communist domination. [8229]

Is there any denial? Is any person brought here to say, "Why, no, Mr. Bridges has exaggerated, Mr. Bridges is dissimulating, Mr. Bridges is lying"? No person comes here to tell you that. No person utters one word of contradiction over the narrative given you by Harry Bridges about the genesis of this case, about the kind of quarrel, the political quarrel, in which he finds himself enmeshed between the group of Philip Murray on the one hand and the outstretched grasp of Mr. Joseph Curran on the other. Nobody denies it, but you are asked to reject it as fantastic merely because Harry Bridges, who has not been impeached in any particular, says that it is so.

And there is a mystery. There is a little mystery that cries out; that rises out of the pages of the indictment in this case about the progress of the trial, and it is this—and I think it is a mystery: Here is the Immigration Department. The Immigration Department has been trying to get rid of Harry Bridges for about sixteen years. So they finally get him indicted. He is facing a criminal charge for the first time in his life. And while he is indicted he comes before this court to ask a favor. He wants to ask if he can leave the continental limits, he is invited to go over to Marseilles to a convention. The Attorney General of the United States, in the person of Mr. Donohue, passes on the request. They say, "No, if we let him out of the country he might not come back." Well, you figure that one out; I can't. [8230]

And it is in a similar vein that I approach in this discussion some of the complaints that the Government counsel have offered you from time to time about the strain of the trial. They have said that we were impolite. Possibly we were. How about the defendants? How about Harry Harry Bridges, Henry Schmidt and Bob Robertson and their families? How about them? They have not been heard to make any complaint. I guess they have no voice to make a complaint. They are the defendants. Anything can be said that will pillory those men. Or are they, as the prosecutor tells you, without any evidence, I am sure, because I would like to see the evidence pointed out if it exists—are they vain—vain, egotistical Harry Bridges, a fake, a sham and a fraud? Those were the words of Mr. Donohue. Those were the words he chose to use while he told you that we had embarked upon a campaign of vilification against the Government of the United States.

And the other two men, who are they? Is that man surly, cold, cunning, ruthless Henry Schmidt? Or is that some extravagant notion conceived by the prosecutor out of the funny papers? "Surly, cold, cunning, ruthless Henry Schmidt." What acts of his would reflect that kind of character? What has been shown against Mr. Schmidt that might endorse the making by the prosecutor of that kind of remark? Well, he finds it easy. I guess he can say anything he wants. He said, "They vented their spleen on us; I will say what I will against them." So, it is "surly, [8231] cold, cunning, ruthless Henry Schmidt, hiding, if you please, behind the skirts of his daughter." That is another little touch that I would like to discuss with you after a while.

And Bob Robertson? Oh, he is a little kinder to Bob Robertson. He just says "dull, unimaginative Robertson, able to follow the line if you spell it out for him." Well, can you find, members of the jury, any segment of the evidence that would allow us to embrace that kind of conclusion about any of those men? Did the bitterest of their enemies accuse Harry Bridges of being a fake and a fraud? Did the accusers of Bob Robertson tell you that he was dull and unimaginative? Did those persons who offered their scattered and hectic impressions about Henry Schmidt tell you that he was surly, cold, cunning and ruthless? Or are those characteristics which so stand out in the man himself that a man of perspective, a man of feeling like F. Joseph Donohue can immediately ferret them out? You will have to answer those questions in dealing with the approach of the prosecution in this case, because it is their approach, and it isn't ours. It is what they say as to the kind of case they are trying here.

And there is another little matter that is, of course, not of commanding importance: whether Mr. Donohue is a special prosecutor, although I have myself indulged those words in dealing with him, I have repeated that phrase. Mr. Donohue, however, chose to tell you that he is a special prosecutor in this case [8232] for the easy reason that the United States Attorney's office in this jurisdiction is understaffed, undermanned and overworked. I think I heard him say that to you in the argument. I think that there has not been an hour in the progress of this trial in which there have not been four deputies of the United States Attorney's office sitting here in the courtroom, not an hour—men from that understaffed, overworked, undermanned organization. Well, as I say, that isn't of commanding importance. It is a reflection which you can weigh when you are thinking about the element of sincerity which you ought to ascribe to the motives of the special prosecutor.

I wonder—I wonder why there is such a feeling of bitterness in this case. I certainly feel it. I would be deceiving you if I told you otherwise. Why this ever-present, unhidden, hard-bitten feeling of bitterness? Maybe—maybe it stems out of our abandoned and malignant hearts. Maybe that is the source of it. Maybe it is because of the expectations that Mr. Hallinan and I have about our own personal fates in this case. Maybe that is what it is, but I don't think so. I don't think so. I have never seen anything like it before.

In the trial of civil cases in this community, all kinds of cases,—insurance cases, will contests, fraud cases,—there is a kind of camaraderie between the lawyers that you read about in books. In criminal cases here in San Francisco there is another kind of comradeship. You see it at the Hall of [8233] Justice every week. Why, I can remember last summer I was trying a case in the Hall of Justice before a visiting judge, and in some very minor matter the judge took me to task for saying something, and the deputy district attorney got to his feet immediately and defended his opponent; and a little later in the case the judge focused his scorn on the deputy district attorney, and I found myself getting up and arguing that the district attorney was perfectly correct in his approach.

This is San Francisco. This is a closely-knit little community. We work hard in the cases we try, but we work most of the time with friends. We try to work fairly, we try to work honorably, and we don't expect that the other side will stint its own efforts.

I can remember in the trial of a capital case against Mr. Pat Brown having dinner with Mr. Brown and his family in the course of the trial. You don't find that kind of bitterness here in San Francico. No, you don't find it except in a special case, and particularly this very special Harry Bridges prosecution.

You have heard some remarks by the special prosecutor telling you that the reputation of San Francisco for hospitality has not suffered because of our conduct toward him. [8234]

Hospitality, he says, should have been extended him. Hospitality! Now, really, I would like to go back again to the outset of this case.

It is very true, looking at this sleek gentleman, one finds it hard to say harsh things about him. To look at him, he is obviously a man of distinction, so loftily extolled by Lord Calvert. We look at him a little more closely; he appears to belong to one of those exclusive after-shave clubs that we see in the advertisements. He dons his glasses to read a piece of evidence. He obviously belongs to the Book-of-the-Month Club. He is a very fine man. You can see it at a glance.

So we looked toward him when we were on the threshold of the case. We said, "Welcome, fair stranger; what happy adventure brings you within the gates of our citadel?" And then the stranger answers; he says, "Alas, it is not a kindly errand. I have come here from Washington to obtain an indictment that will place three of your fellow citizens in a penitentiary. After the term of one of them is served, we will deport him from the country." So we say, "Well, we will not judge you too harshly. You are a public official. You are obviously obeying the orders of your superiors. We will not hold that against you." But then the stranger says, "Alas, that is not quite so either. I am a special prosecutor. I am a lawyer engaged in private practice. I accepted the post of prosecutor in the Harry [8235] Bridges case, I accepted the special appointment. But I want you to understand that I did so not because I am naturally cruel or heartless, but because I thought it was my patriotic duty to do so."

Well, with a little sadness that the thing should be so, we accept the approach of the special prosecutor. We watched him for a few weeks. We watched unfold the kind of "fairness" that he allocated to himself. And what did the fond exercise of those duties command that Mr. Donohue do? I will tell you more about it in the morning.

The Court: We will take the adjournment until ten o'clock in the morning, ladies and gentlemen, and the same admonition to you, not to discuss the case or converse with anybody on the subject of the trial.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken until Tuesday, March 28, 1950, at 10:00 a.m.) [8236]

Tuesday, March 28, 1950, 10:00 o'Clock A.M.

The Clerk: Case of the United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

Mr. MacInnis: I am really just a little bit disappointed to see that Mr. Paisley is back with us this morning, because when he disappeared yesterday afternoon I had thought for just a moment that he had taken Mr. Hallinan's advice seriously and had gone back to combat the poll tax and the Ku Klux Klan in Tennessee. But I see he is right back at the same old stand this morning.

Now, members of the jury, going back, if we may, to the beginnings of this case, I want to approach you with another thought about the manner in which the facts of this case have unfolded themselves before you. All of the lawyers tell you that a case begins by the making of an opening statement. That is, the representatives of each side stand before you and each one tells you as fully as he chooses what it is that he plans to prove, what it is that he vouches for in support of his case. Now, I can not criticize the government for the type of opening statement that was offered you here, because that was the business of the men themselves. They either have the right to make a complete disclosure, or they have a right to make a fragmentary and skeleton statement, as they did.

So, after Mr. McMillan made a very sketchy opening statement [8237] in which he read to you the indictment and told you that the government would prove the facts alleged in the indictment, Mr.

Hallinan got to his feet and started to make an opening statement on behalf of the defense. I think that you all will recall that stormy day. Every word he said was beset by objections. When he offered the jury propositions which he told you that we would prove in this case, the prosecutors—not one, but all three of them at that time—Mr. Donohue, Mr. Paisley and Mr. McMillan—got to their feet, and they told His Honor that the statements Mr. Hallinan was making were fantastic, untrue and entirely outside the scope of the case. They told the Court that by the widest degree of imagination none of these matters could ever intrude themselves within the purview of this record.

Now, the trial judge came here, we must assume, like ourselves; he doesn't read the confidential files of either side in the case. The trial judge doesn't know the inner facts which will support any side in any particular matter. So when the prosecutors made those assertions to the judge, the judge sustained the objections.

Now, going back, I am going to offer you this proposition, and you tell me if it isn't so. Every word that Mr. Hallinan offered to prove, every proposition which was shouted down as "monstrous," as "fantastic," as an attack upon the dignity of these men who temporarily represent our government, every single proposition has come into this record not only without objection [8238] but without denial, on any single instance. So I will invite you to ask yourselves this question: What was the purpose of the prosecutors at the outset of this case? They had determined, apparently, not to reveal their own hand either to the Court or to the jury or the defense; so that each witness would be somewhat of a mystery. That, as I say, was their own business. But when the defense attempted, before there was a syllable of evidence uttered in this case, to take the same position and to tell you everything that was known about the movement of 16 years against Harry Bridges, well, you remember what happened. You remember the appeals that were made to the judge. You remember the criticism that was made at the temerity of defense counsel, who offered you those observations.

Now, what was it he said and what was it that was said to be untrue, fantastic, outside the scope of the case? I think it will not be amiss if I review some of those matters with you now. And I will mention the transcript pages so that these gentlemen can follow me if they wish and if there is something false in what I am now asserting before you, why, they can be very quick to offer corrections.

Mr. Hallinan, at the time the first major objection was made, told the jury that he would show the manner in which the CIO was formed out of the A. F. of L. on the issue of autonomy of unions, on the issue of democracy. Page 553 and page 554. Objections were made by the two prosecutors to that offer, made [8239] to the Court; and while they made those objections, they knew that their witness, Henry Schrimpf, the third witness to be called here, was already waiting to give identically that testimony.

Upon the next page Mr. Hallinan, attempting to unfold the story that he knew would be engraved in the record here, told you that he would show the manner in which the Maritime Federation of the Pacific was organized. Why, these men got to their feet and they said, "What has the Maritime Federation of the Pacific got to do with this case? It is fantastic, it is not within the sphere of this case." When they were uttering those words, John Schomaker was already crouching in the wings waiting to make his appearance here with the story that Harry Bridges had something to do with the Maritime Federation of the Pacific, and that the Maritime Federation of the Pacific was dominated in some way by the Communist Party. [8240]

These men who told the Court that these matters were untrue and had nothing to do with the case were already prepared to put on a case which they knew so well. And we can go on to every single topic that was mentioned by Mr. Hallinan at that time. He told the jury that the support of some officials of the United States Government even had been enlisted in this prosecution and drew a storm of protest. Do you think they did not know about the address made by Mr. Tom Clark in Milwaukee at the very time following the return of the indictments in this case? And on page 565, when Mr. Hallinan told the jury that he would show the extent of surveillance over Harry Bridges, going back to the year 1937, when people placed a dictograph in his hotel room in Portland, the same storm of protest, the same charges that those facts were fantastic and outside the scope of this case, when they knew that three of their witnesses were prepared to testify to that very matter—Mr. Schomaker, Mr. Krolek, Mr. Schrimpf. They were all present, they all revealed the same thing, but when Mr. Hallinan said it in the atmosphere that they desired most to create at the start of this case, it was fantastic, it was inflammatory, it was prejudicial to the Government; it was an assault upon the dignity of these people who put upon themselves the mantle of our Government in order to clothe themselves with some strength before you.

Mr. Hallinan told the jury in his opening statement, page [8241] 571, the objections following page by page to almost every paragraph that he uttered, said, "We will show you that Harry Bridges has been under almost constant surveillance since 1934, and that he never conceivably could have engaged in any of the activities which will be attributed to him in this case." And these men who objected to that statement, who said that was fantastic, that that was untrue, that that was trying to indict a whole nation, in the language of Mr. McMillan, those gentlemen knew all the while that they had prepared Messrs. Johnson, Crouch and Ross to give testimony here about an event that all of them knew had never taken place.

Now, this thought comes to me. I don't know. It has been suggested before. Johnson and Crouch testified that they saw Harry Bridges in June of 1936 at the Communist Party convention in New York. I think we all know that that was not so.

The witness who formed the third man in that trilogy of characters was Lawrence Ross. After Crouch and Johnson were unmasked by the showings here by documents and by the testimony of their witnesses, Ross took the stand and Ross told the jury, "Well, yes, I was back at the Communist Party convention in 1936 and I voted for Harry Bridges, but I did not see him at that convention."

Now, I suggest to you, members of the jury—I may be wrong, but I suggest very strongly to you that if Crouch and Johnson had not been unmasked, Mr. Ross would have given you the [8242] same kind of testimony. He would have gone that extra step. He would have said, "I saw my old friend and comrade Harry Bridges in New York; I heard him make that short speech of welcome and thanks. Yes, I saw him there." Just consider that. It is a fragment. It is a suspicion. But it is an inference that I think attaches itself to that particular piece of testimony.

Mr. Hallinan told the jury on page 571, away back in his opening statement, that Harry Bridges was spied upon and followed in 1941, that he himself had caught and exposed agents of the FBI who were tapping his hotel room. A storm of protest: "Untrue! Fantastic!" The testimony is now in the record before you. I have yet to hear a single denial on behalf of the Government. I have yet to hear a Government agent take the stand and say, "That is not true. It did not happen." Or even to say it did not happen that way. Those things are admitted in the record. And yet those were the things that were so prejudicial that it was said of Mr. Hallinan that he was preventing the decent and orderly execution of justice in this case. Well, I won't go on to all of the materials. Uniformly objections were made and uniformly objections were sustained upon the assertions of these men that the statements were false, fantastic, outside the scope of the case, something the jury would never be entitled to learn.

The most forbidden material in the entire case at the time [8243] of the opening statement was the mention of the fact that there were two previous hearings in which the same issue against Harry Bridges was tried. That was a terrible thing. That could not be said. The prosecutors unanimously objected to that statement. And yet before the first witness, Mr. Garner, Mr. Lloyd H. Garner, an official of the Government himself, had been on the stand for a half hour, those facts had popped into the testimony, the same issue, the same exculpation, the same charge by the Government against the same man, the same acquittal as in the previous charges. But the Government two days before had told the Court and jury that that fantastic issue could never find its way into the scope of the evidence in this case.

Mr. Hallinan said in the opening statement that he would show the jury that in the past the FBI had threatened and berated witnesses to get them to testify against Harry Bridges. The same three gentlemen were upon their feet; it was false, it was untrue, the FBI was not on trial. This was another case; this was the Immigration Department's case.

The FBI was not involved. That matter could never get inside the record in this case. And yet all the while they knew that their fifth witness, Mr. Krolek, was going to testify precisely to that. Mr. Krolek and Mr. Rathborne, who together gave you a very vivid account in their words, not ours, not adopting the biased adjectives I might use, not taking the aura of persecution that [8244] the defense might attribute to itself, not any gratuitous or self-serving adjectives of that kind, but Krolek and Rathborne, persons doing their best to help the Government. Rathborne, paid to help the Government, told you that the FBI had threatened and berated witnesses. But the important thing is this: these men told the Court and told you that that was so fantastic and so foreign to the issues in this case that it could not even be considered.

Manning Johnson was mentioned by name in the opening statement for the defense. Mr. McMillan got to his feet and said, "You can't mention names. We didn't mention any names in our opening statement. You do not know that we are going to produce such a man."

On page 576 Mr. Hallinan told the jury that people whom Harry Bridges had never seen before in his life would come here to tell you that he was elected a Communist Party official. Two of the prosecutors rose to their feet: "Fantastic! Untrue!" "How do they know that our witnesses never saw him before in his life?" And all the time they knew the story of Crouch, of Johnson and of Hancock and of Ross.

I need not recount those incidents over again, because I am sure your memories are at least as clear as mine. Mr. Hallinan told the jury that the Pacific Coast shipowners were no longer a part of the move to get rid of Harry Bridges. Another storm of protest: That could never intrude itself into the case; those [8245] were facts which could never be placed before the jury. He told the jury that the ILWU had attempted to organize the Hawaiian Islands and had drawn further malice upon themselves, the malice and hatred of the Big Five companies. These men who then rose to their feet and objected, who said that was false, fantastic, outside the scope of the case, already knew that Mr. Tom Clark himself, the official who appointed Mr. Donohue to the case, had made a public speech telling the world that these indictments against Bridges, Robertson and Schmidt would do a lot toward relieving the situation in Hawaii. But they told the jury and they told the Court that those things were false and outside the scope of the case.

The same objections were made, the same objections were sustained upon the asserted good faith of these men and the prosecution. When Mr. Hallinan told the jury that hired informers, people who would be paid for their work, would be brought here to testify on behalf of the Government, that was false, that was fantastic; that was a ridiculous assault upon the integrity of the Government. That was a typical Communist tactic, we were told. And yet what happened? Johnson, eighteen previous appearances in the same circuit—Johnson, who left here with our imprecations upon his head but with the blessings of the prosecution, who traveled down to Los Angeles and testified two weeks later in two more cases. Johnson, who appeared in other communities, according to his own statement, to [8246] testify against someone whom he had never met, and whose name he could not now remember. Crouch, testifying in four or five other cases. Ross, created out of the unknown. Rathborne, paid to come here. And yet those men made the objections, those men rose in the robes of their office, they arose and they said in effect to the Court and jury, "We are officers of the Federal Government. We are all together here, citizens of the Government, you, the judge appointed by our Government—we are here to assure you that these things will not take place here. This is the United States Government. We do not do things that way These men who accuse us, these men are saying things that are not true, these men are saying fantastic things in order to create an atmosphere of prejudice."

I wonder now, who do you think was telling the truth? Upon whose shoulders reposed the atmosphere of good faith? I wonder what we think about that,, and I wonder what explanation the special prosecutor will make when he has an opportunity to stand before you again and answer what has been said.

And yet it was because of Mr. Hallinan's insistence in making those statements, statements that he knew would come into this case, statements that he knew constituted our case, statements without which there would be no defense at all in this case, statements and facts which, if they were not intruded into this record, would deny to these men every right that any person is entitled to under our laws, and because he insisted [8247] on stating in his own good faith what he knew would be proved, these men demanded and they received his citation for contempt. It is not that I wish to parade what has been done to the lawyers in this case at all. That is not material to our present endeavors. But I want to suggest this: Ask yourselves this question: Did the situation taking place at the start of this trial, the objections, the allegations of falsity, the statements that the defense was fantastic and untrue—were those things done to create at the outset an atmosphere of prejudice in this case? Were those things done to convince you at the outset that the defense was merely trying to run wild, that the defense was going to flaunt law and order, that the defense was going to do anything just in order to make noise and confuse the issue? [8248]

I wonder if that is what these gentlemen had in mind, and I wonder if there was anything they could have had in mind in doing those things.

I can remember,—I remember it now with kind of a smile—the almost farcical grimness that they had succeeded in creating at the start of the evidence in this case. Remember Mr. Garner? He was on the stand first merely to identify one or two documents. He had in his hand, I think, the original application of Harry Bridges for citizenship and handed that to the special prosecutor. It was marked in evidence, and the special prosecutor walked forward a step in front of the jury and he said, "Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I ask you to observe carefully the line at the bottom of this page, wherein there is mentioned the name of the mother of Harry Bridges. I ask you to observe carefully that her maiden name was Julia Dorgan." And when he said that, a silence fell over the courtroom. Julia Dorgan. His mother's name was Dorgan. The case was proved! And yet that was the atmosphere, literally.

After the difficulties inherent in the opening statement of Mr. Hallinan, after the stormy protests back and forth, the recriminations, the grimness of the case, almost anything could have been done. Almost anything could have been received. And when I look back upon the matters of that kind, I think, as I may have said yesterday, to myself, "I wonder what jurors feel when they come out here out of the real world in which they [8249] dwell, out of their homes, out of their businesses." Jurors come out of the real world, where real people do real things, and then they descend into the almost fictitious atmosphere of the courtroom where anything can be said, wherein the prosecution of a labor leader in a political trial, the special prosecutor can stand before the jury and attach some kind of vague and ephemeral credit to himself by saying, "My interest in this case is grave, in the event that the cold war turns into a shooting war." You don't see those things in real life. In real life, if people said things like that, you would laugh; but you don't laugh at men who wear the badges of officialdom. You have to credit them, at least at the outset, with all of the dignity that their office deserves. Now, that has been the trouble with the outset of this case.

Now, I want to make a few more reflections upon the same subject. Not only as concerns the argument of the prosecutor in this case, but as concerns the entire approach. I should like to have you ask this of yourselves: Was he trying to create an atmosphere of prejudice not connected with the evidence in this case, not attached to Harry Bridges, and not attached to the case itself in any legitimate way? Well, in his opening argument he says this. He says, "Mr. MacInnis has the Communist Party at his elbow." Well, I suppose it is my left elbow, because everything in this case has to do with the "left." Now, why did he say that? Did he have some legitimate [8250] purpose, or did he have some hope that words thus loosely spoken might attach themselves in some way and hamper the defense in its presentation? He says, "The hit dog yelps." He uses aphorisms like "boring from within." He has read those things somewhere. He speaks about meetings in chicken yards. He says this, a kind of remarkable thing, "Their defense is a Communist defense." Now, why does he says that? Well, the logic is apparent, and I suppose it is undeniable. Communists like Rathborne deny that they are Communists, so anybody who is accused of being a Communist and denies it is adopting a Communist Party defense!

But you ask yourselves: What was the reason for saying those things? Do materials like that aid you in determining whether or not there is any proof in this case to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt? He says Harry Bridges is more afraid of the Communist Party than he is of you or of the United States Government. Well, where is the proof of that? Harry Bridges, it certainly appeared to me, without commenting now upon the weight of his testimony, is nothing if not candid. There were all kinds of matters which he discussed here with the special prosecutor in which he could have given himself the edge by adopting just a modicum of hypocrisy; but he wouldn't do it. So in all justice to him, and without talking about the merits of this case, I say that that man is not afraid of anybody. He is not afraid of Mr. Donohue, he is not afraid of the [8251] Communist Party, he is not afraid of anything except anything that will deter him from speaking the truth and from going along in his own honest and ordinary way.

Now, you can either adopt that, or you can reject it; because that is reflection that I make, and of course you are not bound by anything that I might say.

The special prosecutor said to you, "How have we proved this case? Well, we have proved this case in a very good way. We have proved it out of the lips of Bridges' own pals." Bridges' own pals! Well, that rang pretty deeply when he said it. It sounded, well, as though, "How could you prove a case like this more closely than to bring the man's own pals into court?"

Well, who, may I ask, were the pals of Bridges who were brought here? Henry Schrimpf, who has hated Harry Bridges for years. Johnson and Crouch, whom he never saw before in his life. Ross, whom he saw about three times in 1934 and never thereafter. Hancock—another creature out of the darkness of another world. Hancock was never seen before by either Harry Bridges or Henry Schmidt, although Hancock mentioned both of those men. Michener—a man he saw six, eight, ten times in union business in the course of his life. But for the purposes of this case, for the atmosphere which he thinks must surround this prosecution to show how the truth was extracted of the people in a position to know, he tells you, "We produced here pals of Harry Bridges." Well, I don't think that is true. I don't think [8252] there is any evidence of that. Schomaker, back in 1934 and '5, lived next door to Harry Bridges. They were friends. Rathborne in a business way was close to Harry Bridges. Bridges was never to Rathborne's home, Rathborne was never to his. So where this assertion of "pals" comes into the case, I don't know—except I conclude that it is another assertion of the special prosecutor to foment a little more atmosphere in this case.

He says, "The defense tells you that we have brought here liars and scoundrels." "Well," he says, "what else could we do? You don't expect that we could bring here four pastors of the churches." I think those were the words he used. Well, we did; we brought here two pastors of churches to testify as to the good character of the defendants in this case.

He says this. He says, "We have to bring scoundrels and liars before you because this is a Communist case, and of course we know that all Communists are scoundrels and liars." He says, "We bring the scoundrels and liars before you, and we ask that you accept their word in a case against the presumption of innocence and against the doctrine of reasonable doubt."

Now, that is the astounding proposition that is offered you. Pals of Bridges! Well, there is a song that was made popular a year or so ago in that musical comedy, "South Pacific," and the words in it concern "an Enchanted Evening," and "Seeing a stranger across a crowded room." Well, in the enchanted [8253] mornings of this trial, when we have looked across the crowded room, sometimes at that door (indicating) we have heard the name of the stranger pronounced by the Clerk after the announcement of the prosecution, we have turned to each other, I have turned to Harry Bridges, Henry Schmidt, Bob Robertson, and said, "Who is that man?" "Well, never heard of him." Well, I said to myself, "Well, these men meet a lot of people in their lifetime; Harry Bridges has met thousands of people. He can be excused for forgetting a name. As soon as the man is in here, they will see his face, and maybe they will remember him." And so a figure walks into the room, a Stanley Hancock, let us say; they have never seen that man before in their lives. And yet five minutes go by up there. "Harry Bridges? Oh yes, I know Harry well. Oh, yes, I met him first in 1935. Let me see; who was there?" And the little list is given. Mr. Hallinan had the placards here the other day, word for word, identical with the list given by Mr. Schomaker.

How do they do it? I don't know. I can only tell you what I suspect. We can only tell you what we infer out of the evidence in this case. Pals of Harry Bridges! Ross, Hancock, Johnson, Crouch. I don't know what to say. I think everything has been said about those people that could possibly be said. Bridges is a character assassin, says the special prosecutor. He sought to destroy the reputation of a good man, Mr. Mervyn Rathborne! He told you that Rathborne was a burglar, a drunkard, [8254] an embezzler, and an unfaithful husband. Well, so he did, so he did. He did tell you those things. Rathborne took the stand; did you hear any denial by Mervyn Rathborne? Did you hear a syllable that would exculpate Mervyn Rathborne out of his own lips? Did he even create an issue? Did he as much as say, "That man hates me, naturally he is saying things about me. He is trying to build himself up in advance"? Not a word. Why? Because if Mervyn Rathborne had uttered one syllable in the defense of himself on any of those issues, a stream of other evidence would have come in here to corroborate those charges. Rathborne knew it, Mr. Donohue knew it, and much better, it was known by Mr. Barber, for a long time. They couldn't take a chance of having Mr. Rathborne make any denials about the things that were said about him.

And if that was Rathborne's character, who made him that way? We didn't make him that way by the words that we used. If he is a drunkard, we didn't make him that. If he has been a burglar, we didn't make him that. If he has been a liar, we didn't make him that. He was that way when he was discovered by these gentlemen. Whether they discovered him or whether he discovered them is something that we may discuss between ourselves a little later.

Who tried to conceal the background of Rathborne's life? Who protested vigorously about the intrusion into this record of the details of Rathborne's conviction of burglary? Who did? [8255] Mr. Donohue. Who went down and tried to have that record expunged on the 12th day of September of 1949, on the eve of this trial? Mr. Barber and his assistants. Who brought the probation officer up here to give you an explanation, which I think is highly suspicious? Mr. Donohue.

Now, I have asked Mr. Mitchell to find for me the records of the probation officer, and he has. He has brought me one of them here, and I think it will suffice, although there are others. Now, here is a little clue. Maybe this matter isn't worth discussing; maybe it doesn't matter one way or the other if a record has been fabricated. Maybe it doesn't matter if there is something peculiar about the records of the probation department in Los Angeles. In the overall picture it won't decide the case for us here. But here is a man—I have forgotten his name now—who came up here from Los Angeles, the probation officer. And he said this. He said, "When the Immigration man came to see me, I looked into my books and I discovered that the probation of Rathborne had been terminated in 1927." I think he gave a date of August of 1927. And, "I had that in mind," he says, "when I arranged to have a formal order made in court upon the 12th day of September of 1949."

Now, did he have that in mind? Well, the document that he prepared himself—I see his name here is Arthur W. Brayton—the document he prepared himself has upon it, "Expiration date, January 25, 1928." [8256]

In other words, the date that he accepted, in September of last year, when he went over into the Superior Court or sent his deputy over to obtain this so-called expungement, bore the original notation of the court, which said that the probation would expire upon January 25th of 1928.

Now, what did he tell you here? He told you here that he opened up this old record in the probation department and he found a notation, typed, not handwritten, in which probation was terminated some time in 1927. And he knew that all the time. His office deemed that the probation had then been terminated. They acted upon it. And when the Immigration man came in, why, they knew and they accepted the fact that back in 1927 it had been terminated. Well, now, if that were true, why would he put the original court date of January 25, 1928, upon the document when he went over? Now, that may not be conclusive, it may not be. These are the conclusions of a very biased observer. It may be that we suspect these people of trickery where none exists. But it also may be that we receive other things with open hands where there is some trickery that we are not subtle enough to detect. So let me leave that thought with you for just a moment.

In short, in the argument or summations which he made before you, Mr. Donohue said, "The defense has engaged in a campaign of vilification against the Government of the United States." In other words, Mr. Donohue, Barber and [8257] Kaiser are elevated ~~now~~ into the position where any assault upon them is an assault upon the Government of the United States. Well, I don't think we see it that way. I don't think you ought to see it that way. We are the Government of the United States; you are the Government of the United States; the public is the Government of the United States—not this little segment of officialdom which has so shamefully lifted its head before us in this case.

But I want to ask you this question: Were all these things done at the outset in the trial of this case in order to create an atmosphere of prejudice? Well, prejudice is a funny word. I don't think that we have to fear any atmosphere of prejudice in this case, and I will tell you why. In the first place, I think it would be inconceivable that any person who can either serve on a jury or not serve, as he chooses, would take his seat harboring in his heart any secret prejudice against a man on trial for his liberty. I don't think people would do that. It would be pretty fantastic for me to adopt that kind of suggestion. So I don't fear the notion of prejudice.

There are other things, though; there are other states of mind. There are little things, subconscious things, innate things that characterize the thinking of all of us. Matters which do not amount to prejudice but which in the long run sometimes raise their heads in a macabre sort of way, and they influence our thoughts. Now, this is what I have in mind. How many of us have been to dinner parties with others, where all [8258] kinds of current events are discussed, and one man at the head of the table, after the coffee is being enjoyed at the end of dinner, will say, "Well, now, I want to tell you this. I have nothing at all against labor unions, nothing at all. I concede that labor unions are very necessary. They certainly were necessary twenty years ago, in the interest of all workers. But let me tell you, they are going too far now. Let me tell you what a certain labor union did to me."

In other words, having established first his own fairness by that kind of explanation, he cements the prejudice which lies deeply in his heart by unfolding it to others. It is the same as a man who says, in the same kind of gathering, "I want you to know that I have nothing at all against the Jews, nothing at all. Nothing at all. But let me tell you what a certain Jew did to me."

The same approach, the protest of fairness and underneath it the unconscious appeal to whatever lingering prejudice exists in the heart of any person.

Last fall about three weeks before—maybe a little longer than that—this trial started—I think it was before we were engaged in the Harry Bridges case, but at least the Bridges case was a topic of great conversation—I went down with some friends to the Stanford-Michigan football game at Palo Alto. And after the game we rode down for some refreshments before starting the journey back to San Francisco, and seated next to me was a young man whom I knew very slightly, whom I had known over a period of years. [8259]

The Hawaiian strike had just been settled. That I think will fix the date in your minds, though I can't remember how many weeks it was before this trial, and the name of Harry Bridges was upon many tongues in this crowded place, and this fellow began to denounce Harry Bridges. He began to speak very bitterly to him. He began to say all the things we have heard so many times: "He is no good; he is a traitor to the labor movement. He has ruined the waterfront." And as I listened to them I said, "Do you know Harry Bridges? Have you ever met him?"

He said, "No, I don't know and I do not want to know him, but in my business I am in a position to know what he has done."

So I thought, "Well, this man must be a junior executive. Maybe he is an employer." I said, "What is your business?"

He said, "I am with the telephone company."

So I thought, "Well, he is probably an executive. He probably moves in different circles." I said, "What is your job?"

He told me he was in a rather humble position with the company, a very modest kind of job. I wondered to myself why this man was expressing sentiments of that kind.

I said, "How about yourself in the telephone company?" I said, "You are not a member of any union, of course, are you?"

He said, "No, I am not. I am glad to say I am not."

I said, "How is your salary set?" I said, "With all respect [8260] to the fine company for which you work, is your salary dependent upon the generosity of your employers?"

He said, "Oh, no, not at all. They give us the same salary that the union scale sets for other people in our capacity."

And then he realized what he said. He fell silent, and that was the end of the discussion.

Now, in matters of that kind these little arrant, elusive, fugitive thoughts, not amounting to prejudice but amounting to something that will create a dark and lingering doubt in our minds, often present themselves. It takes a little effort to dispel thoughts of that kind. Please make the effort in this case.

There is another subject, the subject introduced here by an odious phrase. At least the phrase was odious to Mr. Donohue. "Patriotic bunk," said Mr. Hallinan, and Mr. Donohue cries, "You are not supposed to say that patriotism can ever be bunk." Now, in this kind of case, of course, Mr. Hallinan should not have said; he should not have said "patriotic bunk." He should have adopted kind of pious assertions as used by Mr. Rathborne and Mr. Donohue, offering words to the Court and jury in the trend of our times, as these men see it—the man who carries a flag in his hand and makes a lot of noise is a patriot. A man who says he is a patriot and who endorses all of his activities by saying, "I see it this way because this is for the good of the country and I think this is my patriotic duty"—that man [8261] you must believe, no matter how shabby his intentions may be at the time he utters those words. The man who says, "Any minute we may have war, any minute an atomic bomb may be dropped upon us"—that man is a patriot. He is alert to the dangers that confront us.

But the man who says, "I do not see why we should have war with another country," that man is no patriot. We recognize him at once. He is a traitor. He is not alert to these dangers. And it is very easy to skip to the second thought. We are patriots, say the prosecutors; everything we say is directed toward the best interests of our country. The corollary is, hence, you must convict Harry Bridges. I think the words "patriotic bunk" need no real defense at all. If you are talking about patriotism, actions, as they always do, speak louder than words.

You have heard a lot about this radical organization, the ILWU, which is headed by Mr. Bridges, Mr. Robertson and Mr. Schmidt. Is the ILWU a patriotic organization? 30 per cent of the members of the ILWU were in the armed forces during the war. The entire assemblage of the balance of the union were engaged in work vital to the war effort at a time when those things counted. Nobody will deny that, nobody at all.

Democracy—we talk a lot about democracy. We say "democracy this, democracy that." Harry Bridges tells you his union is democratic. Well, let us not weigh the merits of his testimony [8262] at the moment. Let me tell you something that will come a little closer in an earthier way, in a more practical way, to finding a test as to whether or not the members of the ILWU are real patriots and real members of our community. More than half of the members of the ILWU are buying their own homes. We talk about free enterprise. We are trying to preserve free enterprise. Why, the ILWU, as an organized segment of our community, is a living symbol of free enterprise. Imagine more than half of a union, which at times has swelled in numbers to 85,000, more than half of those people are buying their own homes in this community. They are buying automobiles. They are sending their children to public schools, to parochial schools in this community. They are sending them to colleges. You see examples of that everywhere. Henry Schmidt and his daughter is one example of a person with a grown-up child. So the ILWU need not apologize to any other group of employees for its Americanism or for its participation in what we so fondly and so frequently call the American way of life, because the ILWU represents and is the American way of life.

I will say one more word upon a related subject before we recess, and that is this: The prosecutor can rise and tell you, "That is fine. Maybe they are buying their own homes with Moscow gold," possibly they will say. "Maybe they are buying cars, maybe they do have children. But they are radical. They are radical. They are a menace to our society, to your way [8263] of living."

Well, in a way they are; in a way they are. I will tell you how they are radical. I will tell you some of the things they have done. I will tell you two of them particularly—some of the things which lift them out of the category of an inert, unattentive, unthinking body of people and place them within the group of that alert people who insist on being, as you heard before, their brother's keepers. There is a group which is mentioned in the newspapers often these days, the FEPC, the Fair Employment Practices Commission. In the State of New York that commission exists according to law. In other States there are struggles to put such a movement into operation. The notion of the whole thing, of course, is to avoid discrimination, particularly against members of the Negro race. We are not talking now in support of or against the FEPC, but I will tell you what the ILWU has done. When the union emerged in 1934 as a strong organization, an organization which now at last could sit at the council table with employers and work out problems fairly and honestly, there was an ordinary situation of discrimination on the waterfront. Thousands of longshoremen went to the various restaurants around the Embarcadero for their daily meals. Many of those restaurants had the old stigma, the old kind of movement by which they would sometimes refuse to serve members of the Negro race. The longshoremen did this—nothing requiring violence, nothing we could call radical— [8264] they merely said, "Unless you serve these Negroes who are members of our union, we won't come back." They ended discrimination on the waterfront. They struck a great blow for the progress of civilization. But things like that are radical; things like that come back again and again.

The ILWU did another thing that people look at askance. Back in 1938 or 1939—we all remember those days when Hitler was in a resurgent state, when the Nazis and their exploits were the talk of the world, when the persecution of the Jews was something people preferred not to talk about, and we remember those days, but what happened here? There is a little organization called the Anti-Defamation League. It does its best in a small, modest, kind of innocuous way to stop persecution of minorities, such as the Jewish people. They try to do it in an educational way. They send out pamphlets to influence public thinking. But they are totally unequipped to handle a matter of great and immediate importance.

A few blocks from this courtroom California Hall has existed for many years. California Hall was the home of the Nazi Bund in San Francisco, and when Hitlerism was at its height, when people literally could speak of philosophy of Hitler out loud without being arrested or without even blushing, a convention of the Nazi Bund was slated to take place in the California Hall. The convention never took place. Do you know why? 10,000 longshoremen, wearing their white caps, marched [8265] up Polk Street, marched around California Hall. They stood there and looked around and the convention was called off. Those are the things for which people condemn the ILWU as radical.

The Court: We will take the morning recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you.

(Recess.) [8265-A]

Mr. MacInnis: One of the instructions upon the law which the trial judge has indicated he will read to the jury at the end of the case is this, and concerns the motive of the prosecution:

> "The motive of the prosecution is not relevant to the ordinary criminal procedure. The material questions ordinarily are whether the defendant has committed the act or acts alleged and whether the act or acts constitute a crime. In the instant case the basic crime charged against the defendant Bridges is that of perjury. Though a defendant in a criminal case may show by proper evidence the hostility, bias or interest of any witness, the motive of the prosecution in instituting the present criminal action is immaterial unless you believe that such alleged motive constitutes evidence establishing the innocence or guilt of the accused."

Now, that is a perfectly proper statement of the law. In other words, if Harry Bridges did commit perjury, if the three defendants did engage in some criminal conspiracy, it wouldn't matter at all how many people got together in order to foment this prosecution. It wouldn't matter if Philip Murray, Joseph Curran, Joseph Donohue, Mervyn Rathborne, any number of people, got together; it wouldn't matter what they did, it wouldn't matter what they said, it wouldn't matter what indirect or other intentions they might have. But we don't have that kind of situation [8266] here.

In this case with lies proved on behalf of the government witnesses, with falsity laid bare, with bribes to witnesses unfolded, not by our words or our charges, but by theirs, we have an entirely different picture. And if our search for the threads of the motives of those persons who have plotted against Harry Bridges leads us into high places, so much the worse. The motive in this case is inextricable from the case itself.

There is a graphic little example of motive in one of the exhibits which has been brought here. I have in mind a sheaf of vouchers sent to the Treasurer of the United States in reference to payments made to Mervyn Rathborne, and there is a little title upon each of these pages that tells a story, the story, a little more completely than my words could ever be, because it says, "Purchases and services." "A public voucher for purchases and services other than person." Purchases and services! If you want a label, if you want a label for the motive of the prosecution, look to the vouchers for some of the payments. Not all, some of the payments made to Mervyn Rathborne. You find the title, "Purchases and Services."

Mr. Hallinan suggested yesterday that some fraud was committed by the Immigration Department upon the Treasurer of the United States in procuring these payments. I wonder if that is so. I wonder if that is just another thing that we have made up.

If a public officer upon the other end of this voucher, [8267] paying out money, were to look, what would he find in explanation of the item? "For confidential services rendered." We turn to the next page: "For confidential services rendered." And then on the next page: "Confidential services rendered." That is as far as he would get. He would not get any farther.

Now, in this case, to say that we are engaged here in searching for the truth, sounds as though we may have embarked upon a rather easy undertaking, because the truth would always seem to be something obvious and readily discernible. But in the life of a case like this, often that assertion is not so. The truth is often furtive, fugitive, elusive, hidden; it is hidden not only behind the venality of men who produce witnesses here to give testimony, but the truth is hidden behind other things—the changing times, vast emotional trends, other matters that weld together by way of simulation the real and the unreal. An inquiry into why a case like this was ever brought is much like an inquiry into the causes of war. Historians do a pretty good job afterwards, after the war is over, of putting the facts together; although, of course, the historians of respective countries sometimes write the pages of history in different fashions.

Tolstoy once wrote an essay upon war in which he said that historians, by piecing together what nations did to others, who was the aggressor, who was the rightful defender, and so forth, do a very incomplete job, because those things are [8268] never the causes of war at all. Tolstoy said that war is like a disease whose virus descends upon the human race about once every generation. There is no reason behind it, there is no rhyme behind it. The virus which impels men to war merely descends. And as long as the virus lasts, men are impelled to kill, to conquer and to pillage. But then suddenly the virus goes away and peace comes.

Now, a case like this can only be explained by that kind of analogy. It can be explained by analogy because there are many antecedents for it in the pages of history. Many things. [8268-A]

I reread a couple of weeks ago a very interesting little work called "The History of Bigotry in America," by Gustavus Myers—not an ancient work at all. I think Mr. Myers died last year. He was a famous economist and historian in America. He wrote many interesting books which are used as texts in many of the universities of our country, and I find from reading the pages of works of that kind of false accusations against particular groups in our country. False accusations of particular people for foreign allegiances are nothing new. They are nothing new to this century at all, because to the fomenters of that kind of vicious and destructive attack every age in ages when our country is in danger. Every age is an age when the rules of evidence and the rules for the protection of human beings must be set aside in order to meet some immediate menace, which is generally a fiction. We see many of those things.

Here in California we remember Samuel F. B. Morse. I think our generation remembers him largely as the inventor of the electro-telegraph and of the Morse code. But to the persons of his own generation Morse was the vocalizer of fear. He was the vocalizer of propaganda. He was the archenemy and the devoted enemy of the Roman Catholic Church. Morse wrote a book which he called "Foreign Conspiracy Against the Liberties of the United States." He wrote that book about, I think, the year 1830 and it was not an idle book; it was not just a little book that passed unnoticed among the more important productions of the [8269] famous men at all, because in that book, engagingly enough, as well as in the newspaper articles that Morse wrote upon the same subject and in which millions of people all over America believed, he followed the same approach as the current solemn warnings that we receive daily about the infiltration of Communism into the trade unions.

Around 1830, as I say, Morse, having spent a couple of years in Europe, returned to warn the entire United States about the curse of Romanism. The Pope, he urged by argument and logic, had formed the Holy Alliance in Europe after the downfall of Napoleon for one purpose: so he could take over America by the infiltration of immigrants into the United States. In the propaganda of Mr. Morse the Vatican replaced the position of the Kremlin as the fountainhead of corruption. The Pope's agents in this kind of scheme—and they used the same phrases: infiltration, boring from within, immigrants coming to America with foreign ideologies—the Pope's agents were said to be the Jesuits, who in the description of Mr. Morse were men whose cunning and duplicity were know throughout the civilized world. Those matters were spread. They were believed. They spread through the East and the Middle West. The master plan was to capture control of the United States, said Mr. Morse, through the ballot box. Now, today, in an age which we believe to be an age of religious tolerance, we laugh down any assertion of that kind; we treat it with scorn. But in the day of Morse [8270] people believed those assertions—not fools, but good, sober, industrious, ordinary people. They believed them. They acted upon them. For forty years here in America the shadow of Samuel F. B. Morse hung like a figure of shame over the American political scene. Were these people ruffians who followed Morse? Not at all. Members of Congress introduced resolutions based upon Morse's book. Solemn clergymen denounced segments of our population. Newspapers took up the cry against the one group in our population. Political parties were formed. You have undoubtedly read about them in the pages of our American history. The Native American Party was formed as a direct consequence of Morse's first publication. The Native American Party had as its first platform the requirement that a person must live twenty-one years in the United States before he could apply for citizenship. The second platform was that public office was to be refused to members of the Catholic Church because they were devoted to a foreign ideology and owed a foreign allegiance.

Now, in 1835 the Native American Party which was formed polled 23,000 votes in the city of New York alone in one year. This was no isolated movement; this was no lunatic fringe. This was something that thinking people adopted as the truth.

In Philadelphia in the year 1844 a mob of the Native American Society walked into the Irish section of Philadelphia and commenced to burn down three blocks of houses. They burned [8271] down the homes of these people. They burned down the Catholic Church and the rectory. The fire department of Philadelphia summoned to the scene, stood by with the play of water in their hands, not daring to save from the conflagration the citadels of Roman Catholicism, but only to safeguard the adjacent property of the decent and respectable people who were not to have the same destruction heaped upon themselves. The police came, and the next day the papers told the story. The Native Americans had acted in self-defense. The Irish Catholics had insulted the flag. There was violence brought about by the Irish citizens, who had flagrantly leapt upon the Native Americans.

Well, that incident itself was not isolated. It may seem a long time ago, 1830—120 years ago. It is easy to say that people have not changed much, but we always consider that the happenings of another century are buried deeply in the pages of the past. I remember as a little example, oh, about six months ago at a party at the home of one of my neighbors I met a lady, a youngish kind of lady, too, but one who was the widow of Simon Bolivar Buckner. You probably all remember the exploits of General Buckner in the South Pacific in the last war. General Buckner was killed, I think, in the year 1944. But the history of that man and his family will demonstrate how quickly time can pass.

General Buckner had married this lady apparently late in his own life, because I think he was in his late seventies or [8272] approaching that sphere of existence when he died. And the father of Simon Bolivar Buckner, who was named after the famous South American liberator, Simon Bolivar, was also named Simon Bolivar Buckner and his father was a general in the Civil War. Between the two these men had skipped about two generations. The father married long after the Civil War and sired his son, I think, at the age of ninety, and between the two of them, the father and son, the passage of time that they encompassed went back to the days of the death of George Washington. So we do not live in a place where so much time has passed that we cannot turn back to any era and say a lot of things happened then. That was in the long ago when we were primitive. We can't do that.

To pursue the same story of the political parties dependant for their philosophy upon Samuel F. B. Morse, in 1852, after the election of Franklin Pierce to the presidency of the United States, there was formed a newer and more terrible organization. It was more terrible because its purposes were said to be secret, its movements were unknown. It operated under cover of darkness. It was called the Grand Council of the United States of America. But to historians who had written many times about this group they were called the Know Nothing Society. They received that name because they had a rule to the effect that whenever one of their members was questioned by any public official or any other person as to his activities, he was [8273] to say, "I know nothing about it." The policy of the Know Nothing Society went even further than that of the Native American Party because the Know Nothing Society gathered, I think, two million people into its fold and had as its prime objective the refusal to allow public office to any member of the Catholic faith and the refusal to allow any member of that faith to progress to a high position in business or civil life. So that party carried on for a period of time until we find that its engagements in public life parallel some of the things we read about in the newspapers today. We read now about charges and countercharges between the State Department and other departments of our government, about who was this, who was that, who was subversive, and so forth.

In 1854 President Franklin Pierce was bold enough to appoint a gentleman from Philadelphia, Mr. James Campbell, as Postmaster General of the United States. Campbell happened to be a Roman Catholic. In New York, in Philadelphia, in Boston, in Washington, all over the eastern seaboard, the Pope and President Pierce were together burned in effigy, riots ensued, literature was issued saying this was the final step, that the Pope had now gained a foothold in the United States of America. They said his agents, the Jesuits, would be taking over.

In Brooklyn in 1854 20,000 people crossed from Manhattan to listen to an orator, who was a member of the clergy himself, denounce the Irish Catholics, and so frenzied did they become [8274] that a riot took place in which ten of the Irish Catholics were killed in the streets.

In the same year as far west as St. Louis, in 1854, the Know Nothing Society circulated a report that in the Catholic college cathedral there were concealed arms and ammunition for the purpose of taking over the government by force and violence, and a 48-hour riot ensued, until finally the State militia was brought in to protect the persons who had done nothing wrong whatsoever. So we have seen in the pages of American history many counterparts of that which we look upon today. Scandals against minorities are nothing new. When we assemble here and listen to the simulated passion of a Manning Johnson as he prepared to denounce a supposed former associate, when we sit here and listen to the alcoholic fervor of a Mervyn Rathborne, coming here t invent an ugly fiction against his supposed former friend, we are not seeing anything new. The names are new, the faces are old, the stories are old, the philosophy is old. The stories they give are the best that their kind of money can buy. I think we have demonstrated that. We have demonstrated that in this case, that in many facets of its never-ending campaign of suspicion against the foreign-born, our vaunted Immigration Department has surpassed the Know Nothing Society of the 1840s, the Native American Society of the same period. [8275]

We see the same things inherent in their approach to this case. Do we have anything like that today? Well, I can say that I am reminded of a hundred examples.

Last spring, just about this time of year, maybe one or two weeks earlier, I had some business which took me to New York for ten days or two weeks, or thereabouts. While I was passing that great hotel, the Waldorf-Astoria, one day, I noted that surrounding it were large groups of men. They were wearing uniforms. They were not uniforms of the American Legion, they were uniforms of other groups whose names are foreign to the West Coast. The names of veterans' groups supposedly protecting our flag—protectors of our flag, repositories of patriotism in the East: These men carried flags, placards. They were walking up and down the entire block. I found upon inquiry that they were protesting the holding of a peace conference in the Waldorf-Astoria, in which representatives of the Soviet government were present. Well, that was all right, I guess. That was their business to protest that meeting if they wanted to. But I saw these people on the street many times as I passed by the same building. Sometimes a thousand of them gathered, sometimes less, sometimes more. Scattered here and there at intervals of maybe twenty yards would be fist fights, interference with passersby.

But the climax of hysteria, from my point of view, took place one day when the president of The Bronx drove up in his limousine to the hotel to attend a meeting of the Saints and [8276] Sinners Club. In New York, as you may recall, instead of the county system, the great metropolis is divided into boroughs. Each borough has its president. So this gentleman, the president of The Bronx, drove up to the hotel, and he was carrying a placard which he thought would get him through this picket line of persons who were carrying the American flag on the streets. The placard said, "I am Mr. Dennis McCarthy, the president of The Bronx. I am not violating your picket line, I am going to a meeting of the Saints and Sinners Club." So he and one of his aides got out of the limousine, and they smiled and they walked toward the crowd, and the crowd fell upon them with fists, and the president of The Bronx was taken over to the Emergency Hospital.

So there was quite a little disturbance about it, that this public official should be so mistreated when he was acting so innocently. But the leader of the veterans' groups, walking along the street, didn't see it that way. He knew that he was right, and he made a stern pronouncement to the police and to the public press. He said, "That man looked as though he was making fun of our picket line. What the people of America must realize is that there are much more important things than the rights of individuals. We are trying to save the world from Communism."

Not a thing happened after the assault upon the president of The Bronx. That is something that happened in the largest [8277] city in the world, the most enlightened city in the world, we are told, in the calendar year 1949.

We are not the only people who allow such things to go on. We are the same flesh, we have the same minds, we are exposed to the same culture, the same scientific progress, all over the world. In Europe there was the fateful trial last year of Cardinal Mindzenty. It reverberated through America. We still talk about it. There, in what we call a totalitarian regime, without the benefit of a trial by jury, a great cardinal was found guilty of treason. He was charged with the familiar offense of "plotting to overthrow the government by force and violence." Now, as Americans we immediately lean toward the theory that Cardinal Mindzenty was framed. We immediately embrace that because of the inherent respect that our generation has for the wearers of any religious cloth. We think of that at the outset and we see matters like that taking place in another part of the world, and we in our press denounce trials of that kind. We say they are not fair, we say they are gross and wanton injustices.

But while we say that, we ought to say this to ourselves: Is our vision so clear and so unerring that we can spot injustices upon the other side of the world, where we would close our eyes to it when we see it in our very midst? Is our vision so clear that we can speak freely, perfectly, truly, about the motivations behind the trial of Cardinal Mindzenty, as we think [8278] we can, and shall we at the same time close our eyes to a fraud and a frameup such as we have seen here? That is not the only incident. I am thinking of another man, Premier Nehru of India. He is now the titular head of, I think, 170 million people. He is one of the foremost anti-Communists among all the rulers of the world today. Yet a few years ago, when Nehru, along with his leader, Mahatma Gandhi, was speaking about the bleeding injustices of English domination of Indian soil, he was labeled a traitor and a radical. He was put in jail. Nehru, who is now the head of that government, was in jail for an aggregate for 16 years. And what was the charge? He was charged with being an alleged Communist. And he has told me that himself.

About three weeks ago the younger sister of the same man, Nehru, came to San Francisco and we had the pleasure of entertaining her. We sat down and talked about many things. In fact, we had Harry Bridges along, and we discussed many things that are of interest to people today. And that lady told us a very astounding story.

She is in the United States and has been for about a year now, with her husband, who is the editor of a great newspaper in New Delhi, and they are here to engage in a lecture tour. A few months ago the schedule called for their appearance in the enlightened city of Memphis, Tennessee. So the husband and wife arrived there, I think an afternoon ahead, according to what [8279] she told me. They had a little time on their hands, and after they made themselves comfortable in their hotel room, they called up the civic organization which had sponsored their speeches and asked if there were some way that they could be taken upon a tour of the vicinity. There was a little hesitation on the other end of the line, but finally the man said, "Well, yes, if you want to see our city and its environs, why, we will send around a car for you in about a half hour."

So in about half an hour the bell in their room rang and they were told to come downstairs. When they reached the lobby of the hotel, they were a little astonished to find that no one was waiting for them in the lobby. They hadn't thought of the pigment in their own skins at the time. They saw an automobile in front, and they walked out, and sure enough, there was a driver and there was a lady from the group. I don't know whether it was the Chamber of Commerce or some discussion club of the city, but they got into the car and they exchanged the amenities cheerfully enough, and they drove around. So after they had driven, oh, three or four blocks, there was a near collision with a car driven by a person of a different race. And the lady in the automobile remarked to Nehru's sister, whose name, by the way, is Hutheesing, "Well, that is the way those people do. You give them an automobile and see how they act." So she replied kind of calmly, "Well, don't you think we all drive a little badly at times? Don't you think we all make [8280] mistakes?" And she said, "No, not like those people." So she said again, "Well, you know we are not very far removed from being members of another race ourselves. Aren't you a little embarrassed to be seen with us?" And the lady said that which ended the discussion. She said, "Oh, nobody can see us here. We are in the automobile."

So they called off the lecture tour and they went on to another city.

Now, that cultured lady, received with applause, with dignity and with acclaim in every city of the United States, was herself placed in a cell as an alleged Communist for an aggregate of 14 months. And the other night when we were talking about things, we all smiled a little about the progress of politics, because now her big brother Nehru, is putting other people in jail because he thinks they are alleged Communists. And thus does the passage of time work its force upon human beings.

There are other analogies of which I could speak. I think that the point has been made clear. There was the incident of Robert Vogeler a few weeks ago—an American with whom we immediately sympathize; arrested and accused of being an American spy. I don't know whether he was or not. I don't know what the merits of the Vogeler case may be. But there was one little thing that stood out in all the reports—that is, the reports we saw in our press, and it was this: they said that Vogeler [8281] infuriated the police of this totalitarian country because he made fun of them. He exposed them to ridicule. You probably remember the articles. Mr. Vogeler put on a false beard, and he would run around a corner and reappear with the beard, and then he would duck into a doorway, and he would laugh at these agents who were following him. And they didn't think it was funny at all. They finally arrested him.

When I read those comments, I was a little mindful of Mr. Donohue who told us so grandly, "You can't make fun of the FBI." Whatever is the Court's pleasure, your Honor.

The Court: We will tage the noon recess, ladies and gentlemen, and resume at 2:00 o'clock this afternoon. The same admonition.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to 2:00 o'clock p.m.) [8282]

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT, U.S.

TRANSCRIPT OF RECORD
IN EIGHTEEN VOLUMES

Office - Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
JAN 14 1953
HAROLD B. WILLEY, Clerk

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1952

No. 548

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT and J. R. ROBERTSON,

Petitioners,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Respondent.

Volume XVII
(Pages 7683 to 8213)

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI
TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

Phillips & Van Orden Co., 870 Brannan Street, San Francisco, Calif.—12-2-52

No. 12597

United States
Court of Appeals
For the Ninth Circuit.

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT and J. R. ROBERTSON,

Appellants,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Appellee.

Transcript of Record

In 17 Volumes

Volume XVII
(Pages 7683 to 8213)

Appeals from the United States District Court,
Northern District of California,
Southern Division.

Phillips & Van Orden Co., 870 Brannan Street, San Francisco, Calif.

Afternoon Session—Tuesday, March 28, 1950

Mr. MacInnis: Now, I hope, and in fact I more than hope—I will finish this discussion within the time suggested by his Honor yesterday. The plan is to allow the prosecution to make such rebuttal as it chooses, beginning with the afternoon of tomorrow. And for this reason I may have to intrude just a little further upon your good nature, and upon the discretion of the Court, because it may be that I will have to ask his Honor to allow me to speak a little bit after four this afternoon. Now, I know that is a little inconvenient, but I think I would rather take the chance of causing you a momentary annoyance now than run what I think is a graver risk, of leaving out something that might find its echo in the ears of just one person. So if we reach that point, I will try not to go too far beyond four o'clock; but it may be a request that I will have to make.

I spoke with you this morning about a lot of other incidents taking place all over the world in which we dwell; upon the notion that people aren't very much different, according to the language they speak or according to the clothes they wear, but that all of us seem to be subject to the same change in cultures, the same scientific advances. We are subject to the same kind of emotional movements. But the one thing that distinguishes, from our point of view, everything that could be said about the trials taking place in Europe today, about whose [8283] results we are naturally very suspicious, is that here in America we have always had the right of trial by jury. Here in America twelve citizens are allowed to bulwark themselves around the accused in any criminal case, whether it is a political like this, whether it is a case surrounding an ordinary breach of the peace. Twelve citizens sit; and the evidence is supposed to filter through to them through a kind of veil. It is a veil that separates the real from the unreal, the true from the false. It is the veil of the presumption of innocence. And that is the way all evidence is supposed to be received. If there is a single doubt based upon reason, the trial judge will tell you upon Friday morning, it is your sworn duty to resolve that doubt in favor of the defense in this case.

But I think this—and this was the reason, largely, for the historical analogies that I offered you this morning: After what has been done in this case, after what we have heard, after the confessions we have listened to from the witness stand, after what we have seen, after the appearances of people who were brought here vouched for as repositories of the truth by these men who were chosen to prosecute the case, after we have seen what we have seen in this case, there isn't much criticism that we ought to be able to make about the mysterious trials of Europe. Hypnotism, sodium pentathol, secret drugs—how else, ask our press, can the mysterious confessions in the trials of Europe be explained? How else, indeed? Mihailovic, [8284] Cardinal Mindzenty, Robert Vogeler—convicted less than a month ago. I wonder. Are these sadistic psychiatric triumphs in a shadowy totalitarian world? Well, think again, to the things that have unfolded in this very room before our astounded ears. The flirtation with Schomaker and his quick and facile seduction; the invention of a purely fictitious person, the queerly psychotic man who gave his name as Paul Crouch; the harnessing of the maniacal, demon-possessed Manning Johnson. What are we to think of those things? What are we to think if we go a little further? Was there ever so clear a picture of cold perfidy etched before our eyes as the production here—I shouldn't say "the production," but I should say the corruption, complete, actual, unanswerable, of Mervyn Rathborne?

But no; those are things to which we have listened in this case. The minions of the Immigration Department—the pale and malicious Barber, Kaiser, the Kidders, the Kesslers, the MacAlexanders—all that crew who have so spent our money and yours—the millions of dollars, the hundreds of persons interviewed, prepared but never brought here. Their names crop up every now and then as fragments in the testimony. People confronted by Stanley Hancock. A man named Taylor, who testified before the Grand Jury in this case, but who was never brought back here. George Hewitt, the companion of Manning Johnson, who was brought here and testified before the Grand Jury and then returned to an insanity ward in Bellevue Hospital in [8285] New York. Many of those things. The hotels, the flights across the country. All of those shameful things to which we have listened. The things that show, so far as I am concerned, the possession, the control, the complete domination of human beings.

Barber and Kaiser. No, you can't draw an analogy between what they have done and the things we read about as having taken place in Central Europe; for their witnesses there is physical torture; they do not use drugs. No psychiatrist whispers sibilant words of hypnotic power into their ears. Not at all. This is America. Barber and Kaiser buy their witnesses with other commodities. Some with money, some with fear, some with power, some with destruction, as we have seen too many times here, of human souls. That is the picture that we have been confronted with in this case. I don't think any of us should delude ourselves about the vaunted integrity of the Immigration Department. In the statements made upon the witness stand by Mr. Krolek and his brother-in-law, Mr. Rathborne, you saw a very full picture of threats, of the attempts to procure false testimony, of intimidations by the FBI. Not out of our lips, but out of theirs. Out of the people upon whose credibility the prosecutors must vouch. Are we to assume that the Kaisers and the Barbers are any more gentle? Why should we? What are we to assume in this kind of case? [8286]

On December 20, as we have mentioned before, while we sat here, one day before the adjournment for the Christmas holiday, there was exposed the open perjury of Paul Crouch and Manning Johnson. We asked for their indictment. We thought all we had to do was to offer evidence, in the ordinary way. Well, one of the gentlemen sitting on the jury has had experience as a member of a grand jury. He knows how that body acts as a public organization of authority, receives evidence. Our evidence was not received in this case. But eight days later, when the furore was at its height, two young women found themselves in jail because they had dared to drive down to Half Moon Bay and talk to Mervyn Rathborne—Mervyn Rathborne, the pet; Mervyn Rathborne, flown to Washington twice, flown to talk to the Attorney General of the United States himself; his past background masked, unmentioned to the higher authorities. Rathborne, flown back to confer upon the preparation of the case with Mr. Donohue.

Now, that statement is a preamble to something else. In relation to what has been said by so many witnesses and in so many divergent ways about the Communist Party, about Communist influences, about the secret and subversive characteristics of the Communist Party, we had an indirect and a kind of circuitious reason for the production here of one witness, Mrs. Jean Murray. Now, Jean Murray is a real revolutionary. If you can conjure up in your own mind a person whose political ideas are far to the left of the Communist Party, that person is Jean [8287] Murray. Jean Murray was expelled from the Communist Party because of the kind of ideas she had—not only as she expressed here, but the kind of ideas that she probably carries in her heart. [8287-A]

So you saw, I think, at the end of her testimony a little segment of the way that unusual young lady really thinks and, believe me if the prosecutor had probed a little deeper, if he had asked her a few more questions on the same subject he might have encountered answers so inflammatory that anything we have ever heard about radicals would pale into innocuousness. The odor of powder and the sight of a fuse almost protruded from her handbag as she sat here before you. Jean Murray hates the Communist Party even more than Bruce Barber, but I suppose in an entirely different kind of way. Bruce Barber, of course, hates the Communist Party in a decent and respectable way. But if that eccentric young lady thought she was doing the Communist Party one iota of good by the testimony she was to give here, she would not have lifted a finger to come to the defense of Harry Bridges.

Now, it can be argued, presently it will be, if we can't believe confessed ex-Communists who testify here, what kind of standards of credibility can we adopt when we have a person on the stand who is far more revolutionary than even the Communists are alleged to be? Well, I think there exists within the small sphere of her own remarks certain clues by which all of us can follow through and find out whether Jean Murray is a proper repository for the truth or whether she is just irresponsible, radical, revolutionary, and a person whom we should discredit, outcast, throw away. I wonder, first of all, is she capable of [8288] deceit?

The ex-members of the Communist Party tell you that they are. So you have that thought which you must consider at the outset. But you must go a little further. Does she fall within the class of the confessed ex-Communists who have come here and told you that they went to schools to practice lying and deceit? Well, she does not. Does she assume some benign position here on the witness stand so we will be lulled into a feeling of security? Does she adopt some pleasant mental trend to influence you to go along and accept her story? She hardly does that. In the language of the people who have been brought here by the government, does she pretend some adherence to our capitalist morality so we won't see the lurking deceptions behind what she says? We need not examine her character very closely to find out that these things can not be true of Jean Murray. Why, you could control Jean Murray, you could tell her what to say just about as easily as you could tell Mr. Bruce B. Jones what to say, and you remember his appearance here. I will speak of him a little later. In the first place, Jean Murray came up here and would not even take the ordinary oath that witnesses take. She feels so strongly about all these notions of hers, which are certainly beyond the pale of ordinary thinking, but which are her right, to do her justice—she felt so strongly that she would not allow herself to be suspect even of believing in the ordinary expectations of a heaven and a hell. She would not do that. Now, we certainly would have been better [8289] pleased if she took the witness stand and concealed any ideas that would be offensive to the ordinary person. We certainly would have been much happier if she had not said those things. I knew she was going to do that. I knew she was going to take that position. But even the forewarning of my own knowledge was not sufficient. When she took the stand, when she stood here by the desk and said she refused to take the oath, I felt the same chill run over myself that I think most of you felt. Sydney Roger, the radio commentator who sits over there, spoke to me in the next recess. "There was a little hole opened in the floor but it was not quite big enough for you to jump into." That is the way I felt, even though I knew in advance what she was going to say. And that is the way it is. She concluded her testimony by saying some things which have caused the special prosecutor to refer to her, if I remember his words, and I think I do, as God-denying, America-hating Jean Murray. That is a very fulsome phrase. If you believe it, of course you must look with scorn upon this young lady. I suppose we must take the position of Voltaire whose words have already been mentioned to you. "I do not believe in what you say, but I will defend with my life your right to say it."

Jean Murray told Mr. Donohue that she thought he was corrupt, and she went so far as to use the word "government" after the adjective of "corrupt:" So that being enough, Mr. Donohue gently dropped her from the stand. [8290]

I wonder—I wonder if I ought to apologize for her. I wonder if I ought to explain "corrupt." Why, if this little gang, Barber and Kaiser who constitute our government, we had better start looking around. Mrs. Murray used the word "corrupt." I am not going to apologize for that. If Barber and Kaiser are our government, theirs is not a government for the common people, much as she said; theirs is not the government for the common corporation either; theirs is not the government for the common employer; theirs is not the government for anything else, but the things we have seen represented here are apologies: Mr. Donohue, presiding here as a kind of deacon of doubletalk, masking by the excellence of his own appearance Mr. Barber, the Colossus of Rhodes so far as we are concerned—corrupt.

After what we have seen in this courtroom—we have seen signs of corruption in the one branch of our government participating in this case, the Immigration Department—well, I do not have to tell you how terrifying an experience it has been for me. We have done a lot of talking about what we will do when this case is over. I do not know what to do, where to go. A vacation? How can you get things like this off your mind? It will take a long time to get over the things I have seen, and I thought I knew a lot about what was going on in the world. I thought I knew when the case started a few things. I probably know only a fraction of the things that have been going on in this sphere of endeavor even now. [8291]

The Immigration Department, the Barbers, the Kaisers, the Kesslers, if you please—Mr. Kessler, who went to the home of a man whose wife was dying of cancer, told the husband that he would procure the services of the United States Cancer Institute for her if he would come in and testify against Harry Bridges. Kessler was on the witness stand. Sure, Harry Bridges testified to that. Nobody comes here to deny it. Kessler is on the stand. We ask him the question. Up to his feet comes the prosecutor: Beyond the scope of the case. You cannot inquire. Mr. Kessler is not even permitted to deny it. Now, if he could safely have denied that question, if he could have answered no to that question without fear of another prosecution for perjury against himself, do you think that Mr. Donohue would not have stayed his hand? Do you think he would not have withheld the objection which he so speedily made? I wonder. We see those people. And I think again of Johnson, Crouch, Ross and Rathborne. Do you think those people arrived at the stories they told here, the miraculous identity in the lists of names, unaided by the people who stand behind the lists of the government counsel here? Do you think that? When I look and regard, as you must have already, the amount of money paid over to Mervyn Rathborne in this case, I think it is a scandal. I think of the pittance in money that is paid to an ordinary, good, faithful public servant like Ed Mitchell, who sits here offering each side in any case his courtesy and diligence, then I think [8292] of the money paid to a man like Rathborne, a king's ransom, it is a scandal. How much of taxpayers' money do you think has been squandered on this case? How much money do you think has been paid out, money that we can never trace? Are there any pictures of the procurement of witnesses which have not been revealed to us by the government witnesses? Maybe there are. I have in mind the testimony of Rathborne revealing something we never would have found out otherwise. Schomaker, Schrimpf sitting there in the Immigration Department at their desks, working weeks after they left the witness stand. What are we to believe? That Schomaker and Schrimpf are merely acting as public-spirited citizens or is something present, does something underlie the situation that we did not find out about in time? I wonder that. Hotel bills everywhere. Kessler and his wife are assigned to live in a hotel at Half Moon Bay, just to be near Mervyn Rathborne. Telephone calls—no limit to them. Call George Wilson in Los Angeles, read him off a press release just because he is critical of the ILWU. It may whip up a little public opinion. How many agents, how many airplane trips across the country? How many witnesses brought here, kept, fed and then released without being produced? Do you think that is my imagination? Do you think I am just inviting your suspicion because we have a few germs of suspicion to work upon? Not at all. Sam Darcy, Tommy Ray, who has publicly called Rathborne a liar, a dozen people mentioned in the newspapers by the [8293] special prosecutor as being persons on tap here in San Francisco to testify before the grand jury. Schneidermann called by the prosecution before the grand jury, Paul Crouch's wife, a dozen different people. And how many hundreds of different people, if you please, have been followed, cajoled, talked to, confronted by people like Hancock, Rathborne, Schomaker and then abandoned and not brought here at all, remaining ever, so far as we are concerned, nameless, faceless, unknown monuments to the monstrous efforts of Barber and Kaiser?

There is a little poem that expresses very much the way I feel about this thing. It goes like this:

"God help that country where informers thrive,
Where slanders flourish and lies contrive,
Call truth by whispers and keep fraud alive.
God help that country by informers fed,
Where fear corrupts and where suspicions spread
By lies and libels even to the dead.
God help that country, cankered, deep in doubt
Where honored men by scandals turned about,
See honor murdered and will not speak out.
God help our country. But for you—for you, brave hearts,
Strong spirits, humble, loyal, true, pretend—
Pretend they know not what they do."

I return again to another facet of the case brought here by the side upon whom the overwhelming burden of proof depends, [8294] the side which has produced the string of witnesses so many times described in their own words before you. Can they say with any strength, with any logic, with any adherence to common-sense, can they say, "This is really a simple case"? Forget—forget about the witnesses who lied. Forget about them. There is still enough in this record, in the testimony of other witnesses whom you may believe; people who are less sullied than they.

Shakespeare said in Richard III, "Just as the more fair a crystal is the sky, the uglier seem the clouds that in it lie." And thus it must be with any case brought here before citizens like yourselves by the government of the United States. Remember—how can we forget?—the side in this case which now assails three citizens, the side which comes here asking for a conviction out of unproved statements, out of innuendo, out of bought testimony, out of conceded lies, that side raises to itself a banner of the government of the United States. What are we to think? This is our government. This is the government of the United States, the government for all the people, including Philip Murray, F. Joseph Donohue, Jean Murray. It is everybody's government. The government of the United States, and I am sure I have read this in the law books somewhere, the government of the United States is not afflicted with the selfish interests of a private litigant. No bias or prejudice tinges the motives of the representatives of our government in [8295] a trial of law. The United States is no partisan in a bitter controversy. The government is as impartial as it is all-powerful. The government merely subpoenas witnesses who come here to speak the truth pursuant to their patriotic duty. I think that is the legend we have all been taught to believe. And can the government of the United States stand before you and say, "Well, part of our case collapsed. It went out the window with Johnson, Crouch and Ross. Let us just forget about those people. There are others to whom you can look, other people concerning whom the defense was not clever enough to offer more destructive cross-examination." [8296]

"Forget about the dark part of the case; look only to those things which are still somewhat in doubt, upon which argument must depend."

Now, did he say that? Mr. Donohue in his opening argument said, word for word, to you ladies and gentlemen—he said:

> "You may believe that Ross is a liar in all else that he says, but you must believe he is telling the truth when he speaks about Harry Bridges."

That is what he said, that you must believe that. I guess because he says so. You must believe that Ross is telling the truth, although he may have lied in everything else. He follows by the rhetorical question, "Would Ross have known whether Harry Bridges was a Communist in that period of time?" And this answer comes to my mind, "It was Ross who told the jury that Henry Schrimpf was a member of the Communist Party up to the end of the year 1937, so far as Ross knew. Ross hadn't been informed that these gentlemen had had Henry Schrimpf testify that he joined the Communist Party in 1934 and got out in 1935." Ross's deceits cannot be abstracted, so that you can take one portion of his testimony and say, "Well, the poor fellow; for reasons best known to himself, he decided to forswear his family, create a new life for himself, invent the fiction of a Kentucky planter, but he is an honorable man and that was just a forgivable little sin with which he is charged." You can't do that, for this reason: The same pretended [8297] lack of memory touches, colors, permeates, everything that Ross said. When he was talking here about the things which these prosecutors say you must believe, events taking place in 1934, 1935, he was subjected to cross-examination. Cross-examination follows a very simple rule: One story is good until another is told. So what did Ross say? You might say, "Well, Mr. Ross, you went to this meeting. Where was it?" "I am sorry, sir, I can't remember that." "Well, where were you living at that time here in San Francisco?" Or, "You lived here for several years?" "I am sorry, sir, I can't remember that." "Well, Mr. Ross, do you remember on what street you lived here in San Francisco?" And these are certainly concerning matters which he gave testimony to. But, "I am sorry, I can't help you out on that. You see, I drew a blind down upon my memory. I drew a blind over all of my past life. I drew a blind; you mustn't press me too hard because I can't look inside that."

So Mr. Donohue says the same thing: You draw a blind over your search for the truth in this case.

You draw a blind over the presumption of innocence. You draw a blind and forget about the doctrine of reasonable doubt. Don't probe into the things that Ross has exposed as his own misdeeds. Think only of those staunch and affirmative statements which he brought here linking Harry Bridges with the charges of the indictment in this case.

Wouldn't that be a fine thing? It is like [8298] the attitude the Government has taken upon Messrs. Johnson and Crouch. Everybody agrees, the Government included, by stipulation, and that has been placed in the record, that the convention of the Communist Party in the year 1936 was held in New York between the dates of June 24 and June 28. That is an established fact. It is not based upon the Western Worker or any alleged Communist publication, but it is based upon the memory of Paul Crouch and upon the records of the New York Times. They were brought here into court, they certainly were authenticated. But the prosecutor isn't at all worried. He says, "Well, if it wasn't June 27, then it was some other day. The important thing is, they say they did see him there. That is all you have to look at. Give these poor men a break. They said that they were doing the best they could, under human limitations. Give them a break." And here is what he said, now—and gauge this, don't be led into any conclusion by what I might say. He says: "Now, Johnson and Crouch testified as they did, all right, but don't let the defense fool you. Don't let the defense fool you into thinking that that is important." He says, "Look at the indictment. You won't find a single word in the indictment about June 27 in New York." Well, that was a wonderful kind of answer to offer the jury! The indictment in this case, as in any other case, is a document charging persons with a criminal act under general and legal language. There is nothing in the indictment about [8299] John Schomaker, about 1933, about signing any application card; and the indictment doesn't pretend to be a recitation of evidence. But Mr. Donohue says to you, "There is no charge in the indictment that Harry Bridges was in New York in June, 1936, so that is surplusage—disregard it. The defense is trying to fool you." Well, I don't forget things that are said here very easily. I don't think you do either.

Mr. McMillan, who was with us here, you will recall, until the morning that Lawrence Ross was exposed,—he then departed from this case—made the offer of proof at the start of this case on the part of the Government. He didn't mince words, he didn't use language that was equivocal. He told you that he would prove that Harry Bridges was elected to the Central Committee, the ruling committee of the Communist Party, in 1936. He told you that, and that statement of his was the springboard for the evidence which has been brought here. So I think this: I think it ill behooves persons who are clothed even temporarily with the mantle of our Federal Government to come here and say this, "What if we were caught in a little perjury? What if we were? After all, this is a difficult case. It is hard to get people to testify against Harry Bridges. We have to depend upon scoundrels. You must allow us a little indulgence in those matters, because there are two or three witnesses who were not a hundred per cent exposed." [8300]

Now, if you think that that is an exaggerated proposition, I will ask you for just a minute to offer to yourselves the converse. Let's think about what would have happened, suppose any one of the defendants in this case or any witness whom we produced here had been caught in a lie such as the lies that characterized Johnson, Crouch and Ross,—forgetting Rathborne for the moment. Just ask yourselves for the moment, What would have been your thought? With what kind of eyes would you have looked upon the defendants? Would you have allowed the defense counsel to stand before you and say, "Well, what if we were caught in a little perjury? We still have the presumption of innocence to safeguard us." Why, you would look at us, and rightfully so, with eyes of scorn. You wouldn't let us get away with it, and I don't think you should let these gentlemen get away with any such thing either, in this case.

You know, maybe it is an aphorism to say that the perfect crime has never been committed. I think it is probably true. Men with great talents for perfidy spend a great portion of their lives trying to dope out ways to enrich themselves by various aspects of our law. Over a period of time there is no such thing as the perfect crime. People get caught. People are human. People relax their vigilance. And the astounding thing in this case is this: Sixteen years have passed, Harry Bridges is on trial for the third time; what is produced [8301] here against him, aside from the statement of persons whose credit is not worth the pages of the record upon which their statements are written? Has any document been produced? Would you think a man could lead the kind of double life ascribed to Harry Bridges over all these years, particularly leading a life with people whom we are to believe now were once his associates in a conspiracy, and have now turned against him? Could you lead that kind of life without leaving one document, one note, one memorandum, one kind of incriminating evidence, one speech in which his true feelings might have been uttered, one association which might have been brought here to damn him forever in your eyes? Sixteen years is a long time, ladies and gentlemen. Sixteen years is a long time indeed. But out of those sixteen years, what portion of this man's life has been painted before you upon the canvas of the record here? A minuscule portion of his life. What kind of taunts are hurled at him on cross-examination? "How many times have you seen Roy Hudson?" "How many times has William Schneidermann been to your office?" "How many times have you said this?" "Have you ever denounced Soviet Russia publicly?" Sixteen years! I think that a minuscule portion of that man's life has been presented to you. Certainly the Government does not have upon itself the burden of uncovering everything Harry Bridges did. They don't tell you of his meetings with bankers, they don't tell you of his meetings with judges, with Senators, with men high in public life. [8302] They don't tell you of the many constructive things that mark the progress of Harry Bridges from 1920, when he entered this country, up to today—thirty years later. They don't tell you those things. They take a little fragment of his life and they say this again, "Be like Lawrence Ross. Pull a little blind down over your eyes. Forget about what Harry Bridges did for this country in the years of the war. Forget the accolades of applause that the State Legislature poured upon his ears at the war's end. Forget the good things in his life. Forget the elevations that he has brought to humble people who were working for $10 a week. Forget all those things. Think only of this small fragment of his life. Look down at the corner of the canvas and say, 'Oh, it is very suspicious; where there is smoke there is fire. You met Roy Hudson, you speak to him, you speak to William Schneidermann, and that is a terrible name to conjure with. You speak to him when you meet him on the street. You do all these things; I think you are guilty!' "

Well, that is what we have had. That is the kind of testimony to which we have listened in this case.

Now, I don't want, of course,—for my own good—to put myself in the position of carping and criticizing and offering personal affronts to the prosecutor in this case. That hasn't been my reason at all for saying the things that I have about him.

I think that Mr. Donohue, if the [8303] circumstances permitted, would be almost as astonished as myself at the things presented to him in this case. I don't think he can do it now. I know he can't. He has got to follow through with what he has. But there are little telltale signs throughout the progress of the case, and I will call one to your attention that now comes to my mind.

You remember a couple of months ago Henry Schmidt was sitting on the witness stand. He was being cross-examined by Mr. Donohue. There had been some testimony given by Henry Schmidt about meeting Lawrence Ross. Henry Schmidt said that the only time he ever saw Lawrence Ross in his life was one time during the 1934 strike, that Ross and somebody else came down to the strike committee hall and offered the services of that newspaper, the Western Worker, to the strikers. He said that was the only time he saw him, and he assumed that the Ross who came here is the same Ross whom he saw then. Harry Bridges said much the same thing about his contact with Ross. So the prosecutor brings here about six copies of the Western Worker—six copies in which Lawrence Ross' name is mentioned. He brings the schedule of some little Party school in Los Angeles County, where Lawrence Ross was supposedly a member of the faculty, and he says, "Mr. Schmidt, now, do you see this? August, 1934. Lawrence Ross was down in Los Angeles then, wasn't he?" And "Do you see this? Here's an item in the Western Worker, December, 1934, stating that a couple of months hence [8304] Lawrence Ross is coming to San Francisco." He jumped all around the calendar of 1934, and he said, "Now, do you still say, Mr. Schmidt, that Lawrence Ross came up here to San Francisco in 1934 during the strike?" Well, shortly thereafter he finished his questions to Mr. Schmidt, and I had the opportunity to ask Mr. Schmidt some questions on redirect examination. So I had an article of the Western Worker, and on the very day on which the strike was running—an article showing that Lawrence Ross was coming to San Francisco and was going to be here that very week. I showed it to the special prosecutor, and I said, "How about it?" I said, "Is this another instance in which you have exerted every human effort, as you said before, to bring the jury the truth?" And the special prosecutor showed a little chagrin. It was one of those rare occasions, of course. And he said this, "No," he said, "I haven't. I present only what I am handed."

That may well be what has happened in this case. It may well be. I am not saying these things about him—and believe me, I am not retracting anything I said about him, either—in a pure spirit of acrimony. You know, the prosecutors and their personalities are not on trial in this case, although I think the prosecution itself is. "Lawyers," they say, "like scissors keen, cut not themselves, but what's between." And so let it be with the prosecutors in this case. Although I can't resist saying one more thing: If there was ever a symbol [8305] of a nearsighted approach to a case, it would be exemplified by that fine afternoon when the judge came out on the bench, the clerk rapped with the gavel, we all sat at attention, and Mr. Donohue walked up to the rostrum and started to propound a question to an empty witness chair. I remember that afternoon very vividly. I was puzzled for a moment; I thought maybe he had a phonograph record or something else that would serve his purpose just as well. But he was not abashed; he was not embarrassed. He said not a thing [8305-A] about it.

So when this worthy man says to you, "Don't let the defense fool you," I will invite you to indulge in a little reflection yourself. I do not think you will let me fool you. I do not think you will let Mr. Hallinan fool you. And I certainly do not think that you will allow this coterie of men to fool you in any degree. I do not have that anticipation. There is another test—of course, there are many—by which you can weigh the element of good faith in any lawsuit. It would be this: What side in the case tried to bring out the whole picture? What side tried to stop the mouth of the other by objections? What side offered to unveil everything, even out of the lips of hostile witnesses, persons paid to testify against us? What side, if you please, sat back to conceal tightly the pages of the past, letting in what they wanted, if there was some minuscule statement that would arise to the detriment of these three unhappy men, and closing the book if there were a volume of constructive testimony which might arise to their defense? Which side? I won't give you the answer to that. Your own recollections ought to serve you best.

There isn't much that one can say about a prosecutor—and again he is only a symbol of the case that has been brought here, he is only the figurehead. I do not speak of him as Mr. Donohue, a person. We are all what we represent in these cases. We are not what we are—at least he is not, I trust—we are not what we are in real life, I hope. I hope he is not that. If [8306] you want another symbol, it would be this: He is a man who stood before you. He is reading a document. The case in which he has engaged in many forays about international affairs. He has attempted to discuss world politics with Mr. Bridges. He comes upon the initials U.S.S.R. on a paper, and so he says two or three times, "The United States of Soviet Russia." Mr. Hallinan gets up and I suppose impolitely says, "If you are going to mention the name of some foreign name, I think you might at least give us the correct name." Mr. Donohue says, "What? Have I made some misstatement?" Mr. Hallinan said, "Haven't you heard? It is the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics," and Mr. Donohue said grandly—and this finishes anything I could ever say, "I am proud to say I do not have that familiarity with it." What can you do? I am speechless. There is nothing that can be added.

We are indebted, and again when I mentioned Mr. Donohue I mean the prosecutor in this case, not the person who sits here—we are indebted in San Francisco to this gentleman for many things that we had not seen for a long time. For many years we have not seen violence in labor affairs. For many years, even though there have been bitter strikes, they have been ironed out peacefully. And for the last two years the longshoremen have enjoyed what you have heard described here as the new look on the waterfront. But about a month ago a little thing happened, a little thing. The Teamsters of Dave Beck [8307] made a raid that you have possibly read about in the newspapers on the warehousemen of San Francisco, and we have seen things here that we have not had for many years—goons, hired thugs—I have been down with Bob Robertson once or twice in the noon hour when he has tried to carry on his own work along with his attendance on this case, and he has seen things that have not touched San Francisco for ten years. Do you think that it is pure coincidence that a raid of that kind, which happily now has been defeated—do you think it is pure coincidence that a raid of that kind took place while these three men who control the destinies of that union were sitting in a federal court on trial for their liberties? Do you think it is a coincidence that Mr. Boyd, who has come back to grace this room with his presence, received his appointment through the intercession of Mr. Dave Beck? That is in the testimony. I did not make it up. Do you think that is coincidence?

Well, there was another little coincidence that happened today, something for which we are grateful, something we did not decry. In the midst of this tumult, in the midst of all this concerted effort to get rid of Harry Bridges, Bob Robertson and Henry Schmidt, we have seen one side of their activities out of the lips of witnesses. We saw the employers from the waterfront who came here, who appeared as character witnesses, and are now labeled as liars for their pains. "They lied out of the profit motive," says Mr. Donohue. As I said [8308] before, actions speak louder than words. A little action took place today that speaks even louder than the words of praise heaped upon the character of Mr. Bridges by the waterfront employers, because today, with this case unsettled, the warehouse employers of San Francisco entered into a new three-year contract with Harry Bridges and the warehouse union. Now, if there could be anything that would be a demonstration of faith in the natures of these men, I can't think of anything that would top the happening of that incident. Actions speak louder than words.

There are one or two more thoughts that I will offer you before we recess, because there will be questions that you ought to ask yourselves. They would be these: In his assaults, wearing the robe as he does of special prosecutor, upon the integrity of Harry Bridges, does this gentleman take upon himself the burden of carrying on all the burdens of the employers of 1934? I think he does. I watched him. I listened to him as you did for several days, asking Harry Bridges questions taken out of propaganda releases that the employers used to put out in the more vitriolic days of 1934 and 1936. But is there another kind of malice connected with this prosecution? Is there any direct link between the case brought here and the activities of Philip Murray in the East? Ah! That would not be so merely because we say it, but we have to look just a little more deeply. What do we see? Who is the defender of Philip Murray in this courtroom? Who vouches for Philip Murray? [8309] Who stakes his integrity upon the honesty of Philip Murray? No person other than our stout fellow, Mr. Donohue. Mr. Donohue defends Murray, although there is not a syllable of denials placed in the record here concerning any charge made by Harry Bridges in this case.

There was another ironic touch that is worth maybe of being called to your attention. The prosecutor speaks with scorn about the Moscow purge trials of 1936. He refers to a man named Vishinsky as the master producer of perjury, the genius of the tortured confession. Now, I do not know anything about the Moscow trials. I do not know whether you do or not. I do not know what merits they have one way or the other. But I was a little interested when the prosecutor made the assertion. We only learn things out of curiosity. So I procured a little book, and this book purports to be a summary of the Moscow trials of 1936 in Russia. Now, I am not going to be guided by what I read. I am not going to say that the purge trials were just. They may have been the most perfidious prosecutions in the history of the world, as far as I know. All I do see in here is a certain pattern which I will call to your attention in a moment. It is a pattern that may cause you to smile, because in the Moscow trials of 1936 the government depended for its witnesses upon self-confessed members of the counter-revolution, who come into court, confessed their perfidy, and appeared to testify against so-called fellow conspirators, and I [8310] just wondered. I will show you one or two of the things. Mr. Donohue undoubtedly reads Russian.

Mr. Donohue: I have not seen that book introduced in evidence as part of the record and for that reason I am not familiar with it.

Mr. MacInnis: I will read you one little excerpt, and as you are reading it, bear this thought in mind and ask yourselves if this does not sound very much like Manning Johnson, who talked about Beezlebub, about filth, about deceit, about cesspools. I will read you just a fragment.

> "The witness Morgovsky says, 'In 1923 I became a Trotskyite. I took a despicable path, the path of deception of the party. But we must cross out past services. The past does not exist. The present cannot be crossed out. I am a counter-revolutionary. There is nothing in mitigation. I do not want that. I want to be believed that during the investigation and in court I told the whole truth. I want to depart from here without carrying any filth with me. Why did I take the counter-revolutionary path? My connection with Trotsky. That is what brought > me to this. It is from that time on that I began to deceive the party, to deceive its leaders. I depart as a traitor to my party. All that I ask is that I be believed when I say that during the investigation I spat out all this vomit.'"

Now, if you think there is some little analogy between the [8311] utterances of this unknown man in another part of the world and the kind of confession you have listened to here, I turned to another page in the same book and I found something very astonishing. Of course, I could scarcely accuse an eminence like Mr. Donohue of copying the style of the inexorable Vishinsky, but nevertheless I heard Mr. Donohue in this courtroom refer to his opponent, Mr. Hallinan, very glowingly as a dog gone mad, and I open this book and I saw the closing paragraph of the prosecutor:

> "I demand that dogs gone mad should be shot, every one of them."

I will leave you for a few moments for the recess.

The Court: Mr. MacInnis, so you may be guided, I intend to adjourn at 4:00 o'clock, at the usual hour.

Mr. MacInnis: May I ask you this, Your Honor? Do you have any notion about the length of the recess now?

The Court: Mr. Mitchell generally allots a certain amount of time to permit the jurors to rest, for counsel to take a respite, and the press to enjoy themselves and the like. What have you in mind?

Mr. MacInnis: I think this: You might request

Mr. Mitchell to ask the members of the jury after they are in recess what their pleasure is. Whenever they feel like coming back, I will be glad to commence.

The Court: I thought we had agreed more or less formally [8312] yesterday in the light of the amount of time I had allotted, rather generously I thought, to the defense, we would have no encroachments, and so forth, and I was hopeful we would live up to it. Now, that is my feeling in the matter, Mr. MacInnis. I do not want to reflect on your allotment of time or on the general program you have delineated in your own mind. I realize those are matters that immediately concern a man individually. At the same time these arguments have been extensive. They have been of long duration, and if the jurors reflect as I do, I am sure they all anticipate Friday morning when I expect to charge them.

Having that in mind, if there are matters of vital importance, I feel tomorrow perhaps we might take a shorter noon hour or something of the kind. Four o'clock is a rather difficult time. These jurors have to go to their homes. There have been illnesses, colds.

Mr. Donohue: If Your Honor please, as long as we have time to burn down Catholic churches in Philadelphia, I think noon tomorrow is ample time for Mr. MacInnis to finish if he will stick to the record.

Mr. MacInnis: I thank the special prosecutor for his consideration, Your Honor, but I do not think you and I differ on this at all.

The Court: Could I ask you to do this? Let us go this afternoon until 4:00, recess and take up tomorrow morning. If [8313] you find at noon tomorrow you are crowded for time, I am sure the jurors and the court will agree to return earlier.

Mr. Donohue: If he needs any time tomorrow, I will give him some of my time, if Your Honor please.

Mr. MacInnis: My time is your time.

The Court: We will take the afternoon recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case.

(Recess.) [8313-A]

Mr. MacInnis: There is another question whose answer may be of some aid to you in your own deliberations on this case, and it is this: In the concept of these gentlemen, is there one rule for for the prosecution and another rule for the defense? It is all very well for us to prate about unfairness on the part of the prosecution, but we ought to be made to prove it, don't you think? On page 3579 Lawrence Ross was on the stand. I was demanding that the transcript of his testimony before the grand jury be produced. Mr. Donohue objected, and here is what he said:

> "I wish the rules of evidence permitted us to reveal the testimony before the grand jury. I wish I had the power and the law permitted it."

Sounds fine, doesn't it? In December these two women who were bold enough to go down to see Mervyn Rathborne were arrested. Every newspaper in San Francisco carried verbatim what Rathborne had testified to before the grand jury. Rathborne said, when quetsioned about his appearances in the early part of this case, "I had taken a sacred oath of secrecy." But when he was shown—because their purposes changed with the passage of time—when it became good propaganda to release grand jury testimony, Rathborne says, "Yes, I talked to Mr. Donohue about that. He said somebody must have let it out."

I think that is one rule for the prosecution and another for the defense. [8314]

We are told, and we were told upon many occasions when prosecution witnesses were being examined by us, that it was highly improper to attempt to prove anything by a newspaper. That was said in the instances of Schrimpf, Hancock, Crouch, Ross, with his own paper, and with Michener. But then, when Harry Bridges was on the stand under cross-examination by a Department prosecutor, anything in the Labor Herald, the People's World, the Seattle Times, the San Francisco Examiner, could be used against him. Anything, even the asserted quotations from President Truman. I think that is a different rule these gentlemen urge for themselves as opposed to us.

Mr. Donohue tells us that the greatest menace in America today is the threat of Communist infiltration. And yet his present superior, Mr. J. Howard McGrath, was here in San Francisco on February 20, almost the same day when Mr. Donohue uttered his historic remarks. Mr. McGrath said, "The threat of Communism has been defeated. The Communist Party is less numerically strong than it has been for two decades. The Communist Party reached its greatest strength during the Hoover depression."

Is that one rule, or is there something wrong between those assertions?

There is a childhood poem that goes:

"Boys flying kites pull in their white-winged birds
But you can't do that when you are flying words." [8315]
"Thoughts unexpressed may fall down dead
But God himself can't stop them once they are said."

Now, so it is with contradictions in the testimony of the prosecution witnesses, which I deem to be irreconcilable with each other. And in speaking of those I will try not to intrude upon any of the ground which has already been covered by Mr. Hallinan.

Before the first witness, Lloyd Garner, assumed the stand, or before he had made more than one answer to any question, he left us with a complete answer to any identification testimony by persons claiming to have seen Harry Bridges once in their lives. He was asked if he could identify Mr. Robertson, and he walked confidently down from the witness stand and placed his hand upon the shoulder of Mr. Hallinan. I think that answers itself. You can judge what testimony of that kind is worth.

Yet the same Mr. Garner, in the end of 1949, when he appeared, pretended without either notes or records, telling us that he made no records—pretended to tell you word for word conversations and questions and answers which he claimed ensued between him, Mr. Robertson and Mr. Schmidt in the month of August, 1945. I won't comment upon it, I will only say that it is remarkable. It is remarkable, because Henry Schrimpf was naturalized in 1943, and by golly, nobody from the Immigration Department can remember any questions or answers put to him; and they stoutly protest against our right to inquire [8316] into whether or not anything was asked of him. So I ask you to puzzle over that little dilemma.

In each of the prosecutions brought in the past against Harry Bridges, there has been a kind of childish or ridiculous attempt to show some written application of Harry Bridges to the Communist Party. In the last case, the warrant of arrest against Harry Bridges, according to the testimony here, undenied, of course, was a bogus application card in the name of "Harry Dorgan." In the course of that trial the Government admitted that the card was bogus, that the signature was not that of Harry Bridges, that it had been purchased from some enemy of Harry Bridges. Those matters have already been described. But here they come back ten years later, and they compose a different kind of thing. Instead of the card, they offer you here the testimony of John Schomaker, telling you about an event that never took place. Well, I think that is something you can consider. I won't speak about Schomaker's story about reactivating the waterfront—something that took place four or five months before he ever arrived upon the waterfront, and I suggest to you very strongly that if there was any explanation for that apparent contradiction, Mr. Schomaker would have been brought back. If there were any explanation for the very minor defect in his testimony about being a member of the Hod Carriers Union in Santa Barbara, he would have been brought back here, to contradict the witness Ortega. And ff there [8317] any contradiction or any explanation, rather, even a minor one, which would have dispelled the force of the testimony of Mr. Bruce B. Jones, these gentlemen, who are at least diligent, would have brought him back.

Now, they can't say, "Well, he gave his testimony, he testified here for days and it stands on its own merits." They can't say, "We didn't want to take the poor man away from his job," because the job he had was down there at his desk at the Immigration Department. And Mervyn Rathborne, who appeared in the rebuttal period of this case, thus described Schomaker and Schrimpf, and neither of those men came back to utter any denial here concerning the testimony thus interposed against them.

It is a fundamental theory of law that uncontradicted testimony must be believed, and that is all there is to it.

I can say only one thing, and I will say it in the language of the law, and I think it is something that touches very deeply the fabric of the testimony of Schomaker, of Ross, of Rathborne, of Michener and of Schrimpf. This is not, again, something that I am saying; this is something which Judge Harris will read to you on Friday morning, and it is this:

> "If any witness produced before you has displayed what purports to be an almost exact memory for matters occurring in the past, and upon which he was questioned during his direct examination by the counsel producing [8318] such witness, but who has displayed an apparent lack of memory concerning incidents, dates, places and details when questioned as to more recent events upon cross-examination, it will be your duty to consider such apparent conflicts in the memory of such witness as bearing upon his credibility."

It is a very good statement of the law, and it is a statement that will be given to you, and I think it eliminates a lot of discussion that I might enter into now about various things said under various circumstances by different witnesses.

Henry Schrimpf. By the time he assumed the witness stand we had done quite a bit of research that was not available to us at the time John Schomaker appeared here. When Schomaker came we had embarked upon this trial with about three weeks of preparation. But by the time Schrimpf was on the stand, we had read a great many documents. So when Schrimpf attempted to corroborate Schomaker, with all of this talk about the 1934 strike being Communist-dominated, about the Communists telling others what to do, about the ends and achievements in the strike being Communist, why, then we had the documents. And of course, confronted with those, Mr. Schrimpf said, "No, the ends of the strike were pure fair trade union ends. The persons who voted in favor of the strike were non-Communists, well-known leaders of the trade unions here in San Francisco," and the like. I think we needn't discuss that further. [8319]

The citizenship of Henry Schrimpf is a matter, I think, so clearly ingrained as a mark of contradiction in some part of this case that I needn't explain that over again for you. There is a Federal statute which has been read into evidence which holds that a period of ten years must be encompassed in the contemplation of a man's life in his application for citizenship, and that he may not have belonged or have been affiliated with any organization advocating the overthrow of the Government by force during that period. Now, the special prosecutor has told you that that is unimportant. He has told you, moreover, that I deceived you in bringing up that matter in the first instance. I will ask you in a moment to review with me the language of the prosecutor, who questioned Mr. Schrimpf on his direct examination, and I will ask you to make this inquiry: Were they trying to conceal something from you and from us? Mr. Paisley was the prosecutor who conducted the examination of Henry Scrimpf. I was trying to find out what happened on his naturalization, in view of this open confession that he was a member of the Communist Party. And Mr. Paisley said this:

> "Mr. Paisley: It now appears that what counsel is seeking to get at is to ask the witness if he did not say to some immigration inspector under oath at some time that he had never been a member of the Communist Party. What that boils down to, your Honor, is this. He is contending [8320] that he can ask a witness, 'Did you not testify in some other proceeding falsely upon some other occasion?' I submit he can't do that."

The argument continued for many pages. I was attempting to find out what Schrimpf did sign and what he did say. And then we come up to page 1915. I was still questioning him. I said:

> "Mr. Schrimpf, you signed a document prepared in printed form by the United States Government, in which you were asked the question as to whether or not you had belonged within the past ten years to any subversive organization or to any organization having for its purpose the overthrow of the Government; and to that question under oath you answered, 'No,' isn't that correct? ✓
>
> "Mr. Paisley: Just a moment. Your Honor, I am amazed at the audacity of counsel. I object upon the same ground. It is irrelevant, it is not within the scope of the direct examination, it has no tendency to impeach or discredit the witness.

"The Court: The objection is sustained."

The testimony of Johnson and Crouch certainly needs no embellishment by me. The effect of that testimony has been thoroughly discussed. I have this question alone that remains with me: Is it conceivable that no secret agent of our Government, no member of the FBI, was present at the Communist Party convention of 1936? And the answer to that is, It is not [8321] conceivable. It is not conceivable. Revelations of the past several years show that for twenty years the FBI, in the exercise of its proper duties, has known everything that went on behind the walls of the Communist Party. So this man Bridges, who stood and was inducted into office with tumultuous applause of 1,000 persons, with 28 stenographers taking notes, left no trace of that quick and rapid visit! I wonder. Mr. Hallinan read to the jury a little story out of the newspapers about members of the FBI who had joined the Communist Party in the exercise of their duty. It was a rather telling story. There is another story in the same variety that comes to my attention. It has an effect somewhat symbolic of the same thing.

There were two men, one an FBI agent who had infiltrated into the Communist Party, the other a member of the Communist Party who had infiltrated into the FBI. The two men found themselves at each other's side almost constantly. They were assigned to the same program by the FBI. They found themselves going to the same meetings at night. Eventually, and for different periods of time, they became roommates when they were on different assignments. Now, these men became highly suspicious of each other. Each began to wonder what the other was doing. And finally their suspicions excited to the utmost, one of the men went before the FBI and made a report asking for the expulsion of his friend; the other man went before the Communist Party and asked for the expulsion of the other man. Well, the two bodies deliberated upon the facts, and they couldn't come to [8322] any conclusion as to which one was telling the truth, because the thinking of the two men over the passage of years had become identical.

Well, of course, that really didn't happen. I made that up. But I think it is pretty much symbolic of the kind of thing that happens. Such things happen these days. It is the kind of thing lurking in the background of a case of this kind. And one appearing as I do, as a lawyer in this case, can say to you with great assurance, based upon common knowledge, that in every endeavor of any secret or subversive group, as we are told the Communist Party is, in every one of their endeavors there are people watching out for the interests of the public—employees of the FBI. I don't think those men have been lacking in diligence, and I think if there were any evidence of any kind, why, what would we do? What answer could we give in this case? If a man employed by the FBI had taken the stand here and told a story based upon his experiences over the years, what could we say? What attack could we make on his credibility? What answer could we make? You can see how all-powerful that testimony would be. But we don't have that here. We have other contradictions.

Earl Browder appears before the House Un-American Activities Committee, by sending them a document containing a list of the members of the Central Committee of the Communist Party for the very year under discussion in this case. Yet [8323] the prosecution witnesses tell us that no such document is ever preserved.

Johnson and Crouch are on the stand. Crouch is questioned. Various names are read out to him, names of persons on the Central Committee. He says, "Oh, those are fictitious names; I haven't heard of those people." Johnson comes back to the stand, Johnson knows those people, people whose names were read out. Which one is telling the truth? Each one claimed to be present at the meetings of the Central Committee of the Communist Party—Ross, Johnson and Crouch all say they were present at this meeting when the Central Committee of the Communist Party was elected. Johnson and Crouch saw Harry Bridges get to his feet and make a speech. Ross, who knew Bridges, at least by sight, over a period of years, didn't see Bridges at all. Now, you can't throw that testimony away by saying, "The important thing is they said they saw him." You can't do it.

The names that Harry Bridges used, according to Schomaker, were Dorgan; he never heard of the name of Rossi. According to Johnson, he used the name of Rossi, and he had never heard of the name of Dorgan. According to Crouch, he used Rossi, Dugan, Derkin and Dwinn. According to Michener, Michener never had heard of either Rossi or Dorgan. Rathborne, who is touted as the person most intimate with Harry Bridges, although that isn't so either, never heard of either Rossi or Dorgan, except as he read those charges in the newspaper. According to Johnson, [8324] according to Crouch and according to the opening statements of Mr. McMillan, made here at the start of the case, Harry Bridges was a high official of the Communist Party, a disciplined Communist, a member of the ruling body. Yet according to Michener, who went to a CIO convention where Bridges was present, Harry Bridges had descended so rapidly in the echelons of the Communist Party that he was only a rank-and-file man who took orders. Michener didn't even know the name of the ruling body of the Communist Party.

Johnson and Crouch told us that copies of the list of members of the Central Committee were neither kept nor published. Crouch told you that the only copy kept was forwarded to the NKVD in Soviet Russia. I asked Lawrence Ross the same question, and Ross said to me, "Are you joking?" Page 3385.

So I wonder at those things. So far as Ross is concerned, there is about one matter, I think only one, worthy of discussion at this time, and it is this: Do any of you remember the termination of Ross' testimony here? He had spent a morning exculpating the prosecution, telling us that nobody asked him anything about his past, that after examining his conscience—of course, after he knew that I was about to procure the information against him—that he went voluntarily to these men and made a confession. Then we come to this astounding remark, which I will now read to you. This is the end of his cross-examination: "So far as you know, Mr. Witness, if you hadn't made what you [8325] call this volunteer disclosure, these men were prepared to let you go ahead and stick to your story?" And the answer: "Yes, sir."

Possibly Mr. Donohue will explain that matter to you when the oportunity is given him to make his closing address.

Michener. He told the special prosecutor, Mr. Paisley, on direct examination, that he never had a Communist Party card, that he never possessed one, that one was never issued to him. On cross-examination he said, Well, his wife kept it for him. [8326] When he was probed a little further, it developed that there was hiatus of about three years before he married that particular wife. Then he brought in a new story which fitted the occasion. He said, "Well, before that time the Communist Party itself kept my card for me." I think we need not spend any more time on the further inconsistencies within the sphere of testimony of Michener.

Poor Michener, the special prosecutor says, poor Michener. He had to go back and work with his hands, he says, because he left the Communist Party. Is that borne out by the testimony? Michener himself told us here that he did not occupy any office in the union at the time he left the Communist Party. So I suggest that that inference, so glowingly offered you here, is not a true inference.

There is one question more. It is a question which Mr. Donohue pretends to find mysterious: He pretends to find something strange in it, because he repeats it again and again. He says this: Why didn't the defense cross-examine Wilson? Now, I suggest, very gently, that the one thing that we have demonstrated here is that we are not lacking in boldness. We refrained from cross-examining Wilson, says the special prosecutor, because we feared the disclosures that he might make. Now, in the first place, what did he say? He said this concerning Bridges: He said he was present at a meeting at the Governor Hotel at an unspecified date and that in his opinion [8327] that meeting was a meeting of Communists discussing trade union matters. Of Bob Robertson he said, "I have attended a Communist meeting with Mr. Robertson. I do not say where or when," although he added it was his impression that Robertson belonged to the same unit as himself. Concerning Henry Schmidt, he merely said, "I have attended a Communist meeting with Henry Schmidt," not naming the time or the place.

Now, we fear to cross-examine Wilson, says the special prosecutor. Here is the thought you are asked to accept. I do not ask you to accept any reasons I offer you now; I ask you to examine that inference. Here is what he says. He said Wilson had locked within his own heart a fund of information, terrible information, destructive information, information which would have driven these men to the wall. However, "I refrained from asking him those questions," says the special prosecutor, speaking of himself. "I wanted to let the defense bring those matters out themselves."

The one thing that we cannot accuse the special prosecutor of being derelict in is diligence. We do not make the charge of lack of diligence against Barber, against Kaiser, against any of these people, and I suggest, dramatic though it may have been to conjure and to nourish the thought that the defense might be discomfited by answers given on cross-examination, I would suggest that if there were anything of benefit which could have been exacted out of the lips of the witness Wilson, Mr. [8328] Donohue would have asked him the further questions. You have ingredients within the appearance of Wilson himself here. You have your own recollections of the manner in which he testified. You can weigh his testimony. Whatever the reason may have been, whatever the policy adopted by the defense, whether sound or unsound, whether we should have probed his testimony a little further, you can take it for granted that if there were anything else to which that man could have testified here, these gentlemen would not have been remiss in asking him those questions.

Rathborne—he tells you he was expelled from the Communist Party in June of 1947. Mr. Donohue told you that leaving the Communist Party was supposed to signalize the ruin of any member of a trade union. But six months after June of 1947, in November of that year, Harry Bridges took up a collection for Mervyn Rathborne. He praised him as a loyal trade unionist. Now, would that be the act of a fellow member of the Communist Party, a disciplined member of the Communist Party toward one who had been expelled for departing from principles of the Communist Party?

When Barber first interviewed Rathborne, the time was the spring of 1948. Barber told him then that he knew considerable about Rathborne's Communist Party activities. Rathborne tells us here that on the first trip upon which he accompanied Barber to the east, the time he visited Mr. Tom Clark, that he confessed [8329] to Barber that he had committed perjury before two bodies of our government. Well, that is not astounding to us. What is the point of that? The point is this: When Rathborne first mentioned his confessed perjury in the past, and Mr. Hallinan made some mention of the fact that the man might have been prosecuted, who rose to his feet with a different answer? Mr. F. Joseph Donohue. He got up before you and he said the reason Mr. Rathborne was not prosecuted was that the United States did not discover his acts of perjury until 1949. Does the testimony bear that out? You know the answers to those questions as well as I. When Rathborne was in the East—here is a little peek at the truth—the year 1937—that is the year when Harry Bridges was exalted to the highest pinnacle of glory inside the Communist Party—but in 1937 a Communist Party official says

Rathborne came to him and asked him if it would be possible for him to arrange a meeting with Harry Bridges—1937. We are asked to believe that Harry Bridges was elected to a two year term as a member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party that year. Rathborne says this: "In March or April, 1948, I did not warn or tell Harry Bridges that the agents were starting a new investigation because I had broken all of those associations when I left the Communist Party." He forgets that in November or December Bridges was the one who made toward Rathborne the gesture of friendship, the protests of loyalty that we have heard about here. [8330]

I think there is a little more that ought to be said about the credibility of the witnesses who have appeared to give testimony before you concerning the difficulties of these three men. I think there is a little more that can be said. I think that if we had interposed no defense at all in this case, the testimony of those witnesses standing alone would not be enough to convince anybody of the guilt of the defendants to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt. But there are still other tests that we can apply to this very fantastic case and I will come to those for such time as may still be allotted to me this evening.

We heard a lot, and we do hear a lot currently, about the doctrine of guilt by association. We tell each other that it is not continent with the American way of life to find any man guilty of anything by words, by connections, by anything falling short of legal proof, and yet how often do we ourselves fall victims to the same kind of easy thinking? How often do we convict our friends, our associates or the public figures who walk across our national horizons? How often do we do that by the kind of thinking that we call guilt by association? We start out with connections, we start out with statements of other persons. I have a few in mind which I would like to present to you now..

Now, here we have a statement which is, of course, subversive by its very nature. It is proved as subversive because the [8331] name of its author, Karl Marx, appears at the bottom, and here is the statement:

> "That the spirit of revoluntionary change, which has long been disturbing the nations of the world, should have passed beyond the sphere of politics and made its influence felt in the cognate sphere of practical economics is not surprising. The elements of the conflict now raging are unmistakable in the vast expansion of industrial pursuits," et cetera.
>
> "Some opportune remedy must be found quickly for the misery and wretchedness pressing so unjustly upon the majority of the working classes."

So we begin with those remarks. They are remarks, of course, which we must dismiss from our minds. They are remarks from literature which we may not embrace.

So we go a little further. We look at the Communist Manifesto itself:

> "A struggle is going on in all the nations of the civilized world between the oppressors and the oppressed of all countries, a struggle between the capitalist and the laborer."

There you have it, a class struggle, a class struggle about which we have heard so much, and worse still, we bring the words home to American life.

> "This country with its institutions belongs to the people [8332] who inhabit it. Whenever they grow weary of the existing government, they have the constitutional right of amending it or the revolutionary right to overthrow it."

Earl Browder.

And worse still, by the man mentioned so often by prosecutor Donohue, "Every great religious movement in this history of the world centered about the class struggle"—— a hersy uttered by Joseph Stalin.

But wait! What have we said? To whom have we ascribed these words of such prejudicial significance? We tear off the spurious author. Who made the long quotation? Pope Leo XIII, the labor encyclical about the turn of the century.

Did Earl Browder write the remarks I have attributed to him? They are pretty un-American. They were made by Abraham Lincoln in his inaugural address:

> "This country with its institutions belongs to the people who inhabit it. Whenever they grow weary of the existing government, they have the constitutional right of amending it or the revolutionary right to overthrow it."

"The struggle between capital and labor"—— not the Communist Manifesto, the Preamble of the Constitution of the American Federation of Labor.

"But best of all—best of all—and I will give a little prize to the person who can guess the author of the last statement, "every great religious movement in the history of [8333] the world centered around the class struggle"—that is the worst heresy of all. F. Joseph Donohue! Page 2444 of the transcript.

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we take the adjournment until tomorrow at 10:00 o'clock. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Thereupon a adjournment was taken to tomorrow, Wednesday, March 29, 1950, at 10:00 o'clock a.m.). [8333-A]

Wednesday, March 29, 1950, 10:00 A.M.

The Clerk: The case of the United States of America vs. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

Mr. MacInnis: You may have said to yourself as we departed from this room last evening, What was the purpose of displaying those four placards before you with the words of well-known people written upon them? First, a spurious authorship designated, then with the real author revealed. Now, a device, of course, is useless in the trial of a lawsuit unless it has some real purpose. Now, the purpose, as I see it, is this: The purpose is to scout the theory that we all have heard about, the theory of guilt by association. This afternoon the special prosecutor will have an opportunity to rise before you and offer some rebuttal to what we have said. If he takes up the transcript and reads any words of Harry Bridges, either in context or out of context, if he reads any passage to you and says, "Listen to this, ladies and gentlemen. I ask you, is this Communistic talk or is it not?" If he does that, I will just ask you, please, to remember the little quotations that were brought before you yesterday, the words of Abraham Lincoln couched above the signature of Earl Browder, the Communist Party Manifesto disguised in the language of the Pope's Encyclical. Very easy. It all depends on who you are and where you sit. If you are one person, if you are Senator Robert [8334] Taft, for instance, you can say the Truman administration is corrupt. Why, even Mr. Donohue wouldn't criticize Mr. Taft, because he is a real person. He is a Republican. The danger of Republicanism exists always upon the unsteady Democratic horizon. It is real, it is a danger, it is there. If you want a whipping boy, you must find some imaginary character.

So you can't pick out language from people who are beyond reproach, because they can say anything. And all I ask you is this, respectfully: If the special prosecutor reads to you anything that Harry Bridges said in that long running commentary on world affairs in which Mr. Donohue and Mr. Bridges engaged for several days, you just remember the words of Abraham Lincoln, of the constitution of the AFL, and even of that great and noble man, Mr. Donohue himself, whose quotation was read to you as we adjourned for the evening. The class struggle, decried, denounced, labeled as Communistic, but coming out the the lips of Mr. F. Joseph Donohue, and not out of context either. I invite him to read you the whole page of the transcript, if you think that the meaning of that sentence was changed in the slightest degree by myself.

A person who is beyond reproach, of course, can say things without inviting reproach. I have in mind one other quotation. Last fall when he conducted his unsuccessful campaign for the United States Senate out of the State of New York, Mr. John Foster Dulles said this to his assembled constituents. He [8335] said: "If the drift toward statism continues, we may as well follow the advice of Thomas Jefferson and revolt." Now, suppose Harry Bridges had said that. Suppose any of these other names which have passed so swiftly through the pages of the record had statements like that attributed to them. They would be damning statements. They would be terrible statements.

Under the theory of guilt by association, almost anything can happen. We have seen it happen in this case. We all went over to a hospital in the East Bay for the taking of testimony one afternoon about a month ago. Willie Christensen, one of the Stockton witnesses, spoke from a hospital bed. After his testimony was given, after it had been touched by the fires of cross-examination, and certainly not withered, what did this special prosecutor do? He looked at the man and he said, "When in 1946 did you visit Soviet Russia?" and the man said, "Who, me? I have never been to Soviet Russia." And very grandly Mr. Donohue said, "In that case, sir, I have no further questions." What was the import of that kind of approach, "When in 1946 did you visit Soviet Russia?" And to a man who had never been to that country in his life! [8336] And how awful it would have been if the man had visited that country. He would have been condemned in our eyes forever. That would have been the answer to all of this testimony. And similarly, "Did you subscribe to the People's World in 1944?"

To the Hon. Dewey Mead, a fine little man, a supervisor for, I think, 15 years in the City of San Francisco, a newspaper of 1938 is dug out; "Didn't you in 1938 say that the People's World was doing a good job and authorize the paper to utter that publication?" Built by association. Always the negative approach. Overlook always the volumes of positive and constructive testimony about the lives of these three men as you have seen them unfold.

Organizations declared subversive by that eminence, the Attorney General. Well, Mr. Donohue, of course, has shown himself to be a perfect example, I think, of that kind of thinking. I have a little document in my hand. It is 143 pages in length, and has approximately eight organizations listed upon every page. About thirty of the organizations begin with the word "American." The ordinary person who receives mailing advertisements, who gets pictures of little children, Jugoslav children, perhaps starving, and sends $5.00, finds himself on the subversive list of the Attorney General. A witness who takes the stand finds the questions put to him, "American Youth for Democracy—do you believe in that?" Or "American League for the Protection of the Foreign Born—did [8337] you believe in that?" Any question like that.

The most graphic, and I thought the most shocking example took place when a humble and obscure man of the cloth from Mill Valley, The Rev. Edward L. Peet, came over here. I had never heard of him before. I doubt if his name had ever reached your ears. Yet to that little man who had come out here but two years ago from another obscure pastorate in New England, there was put the question, "Are you the same Edward L. Peet whose name is listed in Appendix 9 of the Un-American Activities Reports for the year 1949 as one who signed a petition sponsoring the citizenship of William Schneidermann?" Now bold words, those! He asked the man if he knew if he were that person. So the question came to us, How would the man ever know? We tried to look up that volume and we find that there is no such volume released for public consumption. There is a volume listed as unpublished and confidential to the Department of Justice.

So this man who came here to give testimony in the spirit of fairness endorsed and talked about so much by Mr. Donohue was asked if he knew that his name was listed in a book which the prosecutor then knew that no member of the public could ever receive. Guilt by association. All you have to do is say the word "Schneidermann," say the word "Un-American," and you put a brand upon a citizen who has come here to tell the truth. Senator McCarthy, a Republican of Wisconsin, whose name is [8338] currently in the headlines, in his running fire of accusations against our State Department, did an astounding thing the other day. He said that Mrs. Dean Acheson, the wife of the Secretary of State, was of course suspect because she belonged to an organization called The Congress of American Women. When that lady protested and said that she had no idea that that organization was ever denounced by the Attorney General of the United States, Mr. McCarthy had a very good answer. He said this, "Why, everybody knows that organization is subversive. It was formed out of the League of Women Shoppers, and everybody knows that the League of Women Shoppers was instituted to lower prices. It is obviously subversive." How can they talk like that?

And so we proceed. I think I can't spend the time that I wished upon this subject, which I think touches so intimately all of the charges in this case, particularly all of the cross-examinations of witnesses produced here by the defense. I told you the other afternoon that in order to keep up with the regimented thinking suggested to us by Mr. Donohue we would have to be ready to make quick changes from time to time, without rhyme or reason, but directed at the instance of other people.

The Un-American Activities list, the list of organizations denounced as subversive, gives us a very good example of that kind of thinking, about the changing from time to time, because in 1947 if you sent $5.00 to an organization called The American League for the Independence of India, some gentleman in the role [8339] of Mr. Donohue would point the subversive finger at you. But in 1948 that would be perfectly all right, because then India's freedom was recognized by the world. In 1948 the same would be true of the infant democracy of Israel. In 1949 the list for 1948, which I have in my hand, shows that the American League to free Indonesia is subversive. Communist-dominated. But now the United States has recognized the independence of Indonesia, so that little group goes off the list.

It is not extravagant to say that people in high places have not blushed when they have changed their own thinking from time to time. During the war great; sincere and noble phrases were instituted, promulgated through the world by Franklin Delano Roosevelt. He told the world about the Four Freedoms and about the time of the Atlantic Pact. Predominant upon that list was freedom from want and freedom from fear. Just a month ago Admiral Standley, who latterly became our American ambassador to the Soviet Union, refused to unveil a statue in the city of San Diego because it contained upon its base the terrible phrase, "Freedom from Want and Freedom from Fear." Those words were all right to be said during the war, but with the passage of years, with the troubled times in which we live, with the terrible menace that now confronts us, with the weakness of our own nature, with our own readiness to succumb to the glittering bauble of Communism, freedom from want, freedom from fear are now Communist phrases. You can't use them any [8340] more.

I will say no more about the notion of guilt by association. I think the idea is not hard to grasp. It goes right back to one of the structural points in the testimony of the first witness who appeared here as the accuser of the three defendants, John Schomaker. They were connected with the Communist Party, Schomaker told you, because they received aid from the Communist Party—these members of the longshore union—during the great strike of 1934. Our memories need not be long in order to look for an example which will scout that theory utterly. Three weeks ago the United Mine Workers ended their strike. For several weeks the miners had clung to their stand against the exhortations of the federal government. Every newspaper in the country carried the line that the Communist Party was sending shipments of food and supplies to those men. It is the truth; they did. Did the men who received those shipments of food thus become members of the Communist Party? Did they become Communists because they gave the canned vegetables and meats to their families, who would otherwise have been in want? It all comes under the same category—guilt by association.

The time has come to abandon, I think, what we have called our own negative approach to this case. We have offered you the thought that standing alone, if we hadn't uttered a syllable of evidence in our own behalf, the case for the prosecution ought to topple by its own weight, because of the unworthiness [8341] of the witnesses who spoke here and the double unworthiness of the people who produced them.

Let's look at the case as a whole, in the light of the instructions which the Court will read to you upon the law. Let's see how we stand with the witnesses placed in juxtaposition against other witnesses. [8341-A]

Now, I have here a chart in which we have written the names of the principal witnesses who appeared in this case. We have omitted those people who came here merely to identify records or matters of that kind. On the one side of the list are Government witnesses, the witnesses who along with their own deficiencies must support under our law the burden of proof. On the other hand we have the defense witnesses, each one of those witnesses cloaked before you with the presumption of innocence.

Now, the presumption of innocence is not a mere literary aphorism; it is a real and vital safeguard. It is a command from the law itself telling you that the defendants are truly presumed to be innocent. They are encloaked with that presumption and they stand before you. When they take the stand and answer questions, to each answer, when you weigh its verity, you must say to yourselves, "He is presumed to be innocent." Now, I will give you a little example of the difference in the eyes of the law between defense testimony in a case of this kind and testimony adduced by men who appear here with the finger of accusation. Every witness is presumed to speak the truth when he comes here. Lloyd Garner was presumed to speak the truth. John Schomaker was presumed to speak the truth. And Henry Schrimpf, Johnson, Crouch, Ross, Michener, Wilson, Rathborne—they were all presumed to speak the truth.

There are many methods of judging the credibility of witnesses. [8342] Many methods. The Court will read those methods to you in his instructions. But where one presumption, that presumption that a witness speaks the truth, comes into conflict with the great and overweening presumption of innocence, the first presumption must yield. The presumption of innocence controls. If you are considering the testimony of any prosecution witness as opposed to any witness for the defense, the presumption of innocence in every case comes to the aid of the defense.

And I will give you one more thought, holding before you, if I may, again the list of prosecution witnesses. Read their names; recall their faces. Was there a solitary one in that list, was there one person, who was not caught in lies or who was not labeled with the stamp of coercion? Was there one person?

Then look at the other side. Look at the list of witnesses produced by the defense. Was any person produced here by the defense caught in a lie? Was he caught in a contradictory statement? Did any person produced here by the defense or any coterie of witnesses fall into the class of Johnson, Crouch and Ross? And yet those people, touched with every aspect of venality, are the people who must uphold the burden of proof. Not protected at all by any presumption of innocence. The people who stand here unscathed at the conclusion of the testimony are the people we brought here, the people whom the [8343] protection of the law does surround.

And with that in mind, I am going to speak to you a little bit about the affirmative facts of the defense. Some people may say, "It is all very easy for Harry Bridges, it is very easy to go down the middle; very easy to take kind of an easy and slick attitude and say, 'Oh, yes, yes, I went to meetings where there were Communists, yes. I admit those things.' In other words, taking the sting out of the accusation. 'I admit that I went to these places, but I was always acting as a trade unionist.' " That has been our position through the case. And the thing that proves it, to my mind—and I think it will appeal to yours as well—is this: There is not a single meeting testified to by any of the persons who come here to give testimony against the defense, not a single meeting in which so-called Communist Party politics are discussed. Every meeting in which you are told that Harry Bridges was present is a trade union meeting. Every meeting in which Bob Robertson's name is mentioned, Henry Schmidt's name is mentioned, has a trade union aspect. There is nothing at all in any of those meetings linking them with a purely Communist Party approach. And when people say, "Those were Communist meetings, because I say so," you can weigh that against the presumption of innocence and the position of the defense.

On membership in the Communist Party, I think this point has probably been covered well enough by now. You will all [8344] understand that we are not assembled here to determine the sympathies of Harry Bridges. We are not here to determine the secret harborings of his heart. We are not here to determine what his politics are. We are here to determine one simple fact upon which guilt or innocence must depend; and the Court will instruct you in this fashion:

> "To be a member of the Communist Party within the meaning of that term as used in the indictment, a person must be more than merely in sympathy with some or all of its aims. He must be more than merely willing to aid it in a casual or intermittent way. He must be more than merely willing to accept aid from it in furtherance of his own objectives or the objectives of his labor union. As a matter of law, such sympathies and/or activities, as I have just described, fall short of constituting affiliation with the Communist Party; and as a matter of law, even affiliation with the Communist Party falls short of constituting membership in the Communist Party."

I think that is very simple, very clear. It doesn't require any further explanation.

The special prosecutor spoke the truth when he told you that I would devote some time to a discussion of character testimony. I will, because I deem it important. In fact, I think it is kind of wonderful that at a time like this, with so much being said about people like Harry Bridges, Bob [8345] Robertson and Henry Schmidt, members of this community and of the State of California, of some of whom it can be said that their very existence depends upon public feeling, that persons in public life, like Dewey Mead, came here, risked their own reputations in order to tell you that these men were men of good moral character, that their reputation for truth, honesty and integrity was of the best. It would be very easy for any one of those persons to say, "Leave me out of this. I have an election coming up next year," or "Don't call me in; my employer wouldn't like it. Don't call me in; the board of directors of my corporation wouldn't like it." Very easy. We would certainly understand. But those people came here, and they gave testimony, which I am sure you can appraise. I am sure you can appraise it. Mr. Donohue read to you a passage out of a book. He said it was a law book, by some noted text writer, although he didn't offer us the name. He told you it was his notion, out of the pages of that book, it was very easy for a person who was committing the most heinous of crimes to enjoy an unimpeachable reputation in his own community. Well, that is very true. There have been all kinds of examples. There are many Bluebeards throughout the world. There are many people of that kind.

But Harry Bridges is a man who has been accused of the same thing for the past sixteen years, and no person came here as a character witness living in a kind of dream world, not [8346] knowing the accusations levied against Mr. Bridges or his companions, Mr. Robertson and Mr. Schmidt. Nobody came here in that situation. And so strong is character evidence in the eyes of the law, and in this I quote Mr. Donohue himself, that in a proper case evidence of good character of itself is enough to create a reasonable doubt, even if without such evidence no reasonable doubt would have been present. That is how highly the law regards the esteem in which a particular defendant is held in his own community.

You can consider the times in which we find ourselves. You can consider the atmosphere in which this case was nourished, and, considering all those things, I think the fact that we were able to bring here the people of fine caliber who did come here speaks for itself far more eloquently than I could possibly do. There was old Mr. Walther, the man who read the obituary over the grave of the two longshoremen who were killed in the 1934 strike. There was Robert Kenney, the former Attorney General of the State of California, himself—although I suppose he is outside the pale now, because in this little book of the Attorney General he has some connections that Mr. Donohue frowns upon.

Then we have the famous Dr. Eloesser, who has carried his talents for the protection of human beings all over the world, in every country of the world. To say that he is an ornament to San Francisco, as has been suggested before, is kind of [8347] an understatement.

We have Mr. Peet, a humble parishioner from Mill Valley. I don't think anyone will think ill of him.

We have Mr. Augustus Gaynor, the head of the Brotherhood of Railroad Clerks. I don't think there is anything wrong with that man.

We have Daniel Del Carlo, Frank Andrews, a member of the American Legion and of the ILWU alike. We have Dewey Mead, the supervisor here in San Francisco.

Now, some things that were kind of astounding took place after the character testimony was offered. We produced here Mr. Walter Buck. I think probably Mr. Buck's personal fortune, which I am told approaches a hundred million dollars, probably leaves him beyond the stigma of Communist domination. Walter Buck owns at this time a controlling interest in the Matson Steamship Company. The three men who are the representatives of all the waterfront employers of the Pacific Coast, Mr. Pearson, Mr. Hubert Brown, Mr. Kenneth Finnesey, came here and they were speaking not of some pal, not of some person in whose company they had been thrown for years, but of some person whom they knew because of fair dealings across the council table. They knew him in that fashion and they didn't know him otherwise.

But what are we told in this case? If you are a special representative of the Attorney General in this case, you don't [8348] have to weaken a witness by cross-examination. Of course, he doesn't use harsh words like we do. He doesn't yell "Liar" as we do every once in a while. Every time we yell "Liar," though, some witness has proved himself a liar on the witness stand. But men come here, respectable men of your community. They take the stand, they say that they know these men are of good character for truth, honesty and integrity. They depart, without anything being done to them by cross-examination, without being weakened. And what happens? This gentleman arises before you in one of those flipflops that we have heard attributed to the Communist Party, and he says the employers of the Pacific Coast came here motivated by fear—fear, fear of Harry Bridges, Henry Schmidt and Bob Robertson. Or, under the lash of Lou Goldblatt, the Pacific Coast Employers came here. Under the lash of Lou Goldblatt! Well, that's another example of guilt by association. I know Mr. Goldblatt; he is a fine young man. He has a house up on Ashbury Terrace here in San Francisco. He has three children. He has been cleared of the same kind of charges by an agency of the United States Government. He has been charged, like any other member of the ILWU, by people who seek to destroy that union. But here in court, where you can say anything and it is privileged, nobody can sue you for slander, a fine man like Mr. Goldblatt is spoken of in language like that—"under the lash of Lou Glodblatt"! [8349]

Walter Buck came here. I suppose his back was bent from the blows of the whip. And Mr. Pearson, the president of the Pacific Coast Employers' Association. And Hubert Brown and Kenneth Finnesey. I didn't see those men cringing under the sting of any lash—although I saw the signs of many an unseen lash, upon some of the prosecution witnesses who came here.

You can't put characterizations like that upon people unless there is something in the record to support it. And why did they come here? That is kind of a good one. They came here, says the special prosecutor, because they sold their integrity, and they came here out of the profit motive. In other words, these men who are accused of being Communistic have now departed from that field. They are now doing business for the profit motive! Well, I guess you can say anything if you want to blacken a person who comes here for the defense. Character assassinations! This gentleman told you that we had vented our spleen, to coin a phrase from Mr. Vishinsky and Mr. Donohue. We have vented our spleen upon the Government of the United States! Well, what was done by that kind of attack? Mr. Buck, Mr. Pearson, Mr. Brown, Mr. Finnesey—they sold their integrity, they came here under the lash of Lou Goldblatt, and they came here because of the profit motive. Well, we certainly aren't ashamed of the profit motive here in San Francisco.

I think we are all in business to engage in some profit. I think Harry Bridges is in business for profit. I think his [8350] union is in business for profit. And I certainly think that the shipowners of the San Francisco area are in business for profit.

And if we have reached an age, as we have now, where those men have forgotten about the strifes of the past and can sit down over a council table and resolve all their problems three years ahead, so that there is no trouble any more, I don't think we need the advice of people from Washington who can come here and say, "You shouldn't sit down at the table with those people. Are you getting soft? What is the matter with you? Don't you know you are being lashed into doing this?" I don't think it holds up. I don't think that was fair. I don't think it was clean. I don't think it was good. Maybe the special prosecutor will give you some explanation.

He told you that he had produced here as the accuser of the defendants' pals—pals of Harry Bridges. We produced one pal of Harry Bridges here, the only person whom the record shows to have had an intimate association with that man over the passage of years—Father Paul Meinecke. He was a pal of Harry Bridges. Two or three times a week for a period of six to seven years they met each other. They talked over their problems. They had dinner. They enjoyed the ordinary associations of friends. They knew each other well. And that man was brought here, and I would like to speak about that situation for a few minutes. [8351]

You know, of course, from your experience sitting in this case, that the orbit of character testimony is very narrow. In other words, a lawyer like myself, producing a witness to give character testimony, can only ask those questions in kind of formal language, such as is allowed by the law. You can say, "Do you know this man?", "How well do you know him?", "Do you know his reputation in the community for truth, honesty and integrity?", and "What is that reputation?" period, you are finished. So Father Paul Meinecke took the stand and he gave the same endorsement to Harry Bridges which you had heard from the lips of the men who had been brought here under the "lash" of Lou Goldblatt. He said that Harry Bridges' reputation for truth, honesty and integrity was good. He could then have departed from the witness stand. But for some reason the special prosecutor was chagrined. He chose to probe a little further. He chose to desperately attack the credibility of the priest. And as he went after him, by a thorough and I thought vicious cross-examination, the opinions deepened and words which we never could have produced, words which we never could have presented because they were far beyond the scope of character testimony, came into the record in this case. A pal of Harry Bridges, a man who knew him well. Not a man acquainted with such portions of his life as formally may be brought to your attention in this courtroom. Not a man like myself, knowing [8352] these people only in recent times. But a man knowing him during the years when these activities are supposed to have taken place.

Well, he says many things, in response to the prodding and the goading of Mr. Donohue. He says, "I know the man, I know his ideas. There is a great distinction, although some people are not aware of it, between militant trade unionism and Communism; there is a great difference." He says, "Mr. Donohue, as a Catholic priest, if I had the slightest notion that Harry Bridges was a Communist, I would not be here. If I had any suspicion whatsoever that he was, I would not be sitting here as his friend." And he says this; Mr. Donohue was still going after him: "Mr. Donohue: Would you answer the question, Father, as to whether or not during the many years that you knew and were a close friend of Harry Bridges, you ever heard him publicly utter a single word of criticism against the Communist Party?" And then the answer: "I didn't hear it with my own ears, but I remember one day when—probably a public fact; if the Court will pardon me, I will quote the statement. May I be forgiven for quoting it directly? I remember being told, 'See, see Harry Bridges is not a Communist.' "

And then:

> "I said, 'What convinced you?'
>
> "He said, 'Because he told'—I don't know who the name was at the time; he was the head of the Communist [8353] Party around in these parts—he said, 'Harry Bridges told him to go > to hell.' And among ourselves we know you can't do that in a disciplined organization of the Communist Party."

Well, I suggest that a man like Father Meinecke, whose honesty I think is beyond dispute, whose opportunity to observe the subject of his discussion was boundless, is probably a little better qualified either than myself or than yourselves to judge what was the character of Harry Bridges during all of these years. And when he comes here and tells you that Harry Bridges was not a member of the Communist Party, was not even a Communist—when he tells you that he made tests, that he had the interest of a priest in the Catholic Church in stamping out Communism; when he tells you that, I think that is good enough for me.

But what is done to this quiet priest who answers the slurs of the prosecutor with, I think quiet humility? And I use the word "slurs" advisedly. The prosecutors says:

> "Father, are you a psychiatrist as well as a priest?"

And when that is answered, he says:

> "Are you also a lawyer as well as a psychiatrist?"

Father Paul Meinecke appeared as Harry Bridges' witness, and hence he is an outcast. Anything can be said to him and of him. The prosecutor sees an opening, a small hole in the witness' armor. The priest said that he had been interested in the [8354] labor movement. He jumps upon it and he says to the jury, "Undoubtedly he was sent away from San Francisco because of his labor activities." And that is immediately proved to be false. The priest denies it. There is no other proof.

And then something else happened. The trial judge enters into the cross-examination—the first and only time that it hapened in this case. He asks the priest about what conversations he had with me, the defense lawyer, and he comes to the climax:

> "Q. Have you been recently subjected to medical treatment, Father?"

Well, I don't want to be unjust to any person. The trial judge says that that was not his intention; in justice to him he offers this explanation:

> "Latterly, in my examination of Father Meinecke some mention was made by counsel concerning the asserted impropriety of a question on my part to the Father. I might say to you that that was not born of any desire on my part, nor was it designed to inquire into Father Meinecke's mental processes. Nor was it to reflect upon his integrity. The question was born and conceived out of a desire on my part to accord fairness to the witness, for the reason that mention was made during the course of this testimony that he left San Francisco for Nevada; an inference might be drawn from that departure that it had something to do [8355] with activities in trade unionism and the like.

> The Father on the witness stand volunteered that he asked to be transferred. I merely wanted to inquire, ladies and gentlemen, a very simple question, not born of curiosity on my part, but born of a desire to provide you with all the facts surrounding the Father, and it was to the end that I might inquire as to his health. Very many people have to leave large metropolitan areas to go to less burdensome parishes and that was the reason underlying my question."

Then we had more questions the next day by the special prosecutor. The inferences raised by the special prosecutor about the departure of Father Meinecke from San Francisco remained unproved. Balzac, in his novel Pere Goriot, has a line that to me is reminiscent of that simple man when he was here. It goes like this:

> "The humble and modest flowers that bloom in the valley perish, perhaps, when transplanted closer to the stars, to the regions where the storms gather and the sun is scorching."

I would like to invite you to ask yourselves this question about character testimony, because it is the whole answer. When any defendant in a criminal case puts on character testimony, he lays bare the facts of his whole life to interrogation, to inspection, to scrutiny by the other side. What developed, [8356] what monstrous thing ever rose out of the past to condemn the men who stand trial before you here? Nothing.

Another thing. Ordinarily the prosecution may not introduce any character testimony—that is, character testimony adverse to the defense. But when the defense itself takes the initiative and puts on character testimony, the door is opened, the prosecution may then bring in any person, an enemy, a public-spirited citizen, any person who knows the facts. They can bring in any person. Any person could have been brought here to tell you, "No, in my opinion these men are not of good moral character." They were able to produce nobody. In these times, which they say are troubled times, which they say are dangerous—nourished, as we say, in an atmosphere of propaganda and hatred against the defendants in this case, could one person be brought here? Did one person come here and take the stand and offer any refutation to the encomiums placed upon these three men by the character witnesses who came here? There wasn't one such person.

I am reminded of a story someone told me a few days ago about John L. Lewis, who, upon his side of the country, receives a lot of clods cast at him because of his activities on the part of the people who are members of his union. John L. Lewis came to Washington one day, got into an elevator in a large office building, started to go upward to his destination. Behind him in the crowded square car all kinds of people were [8357] talking, but above the mumble of ordinary voices he could hear a lady talking in the back, and she said, "That John L. Lewis! What he has done to this country. Oh, if I could ever get my hands on that John L. Lewis, if I could meet him face to face, I would certainly tell him a thing or two."

So the elevator came to the tenth floor, and Mr. Lewis stepped aside to let the lady past him. And he himself got out at the same floor. And he found himself alone with the lady in the corridor. So he took off his hat and he said, "Madam, allow me to present myself. I am John L. Lewis. Do you have something to say to me?"

The lady fainted.

If I can call your attention to another segment of the defense, one which we have characterized as important, under the heading "The Stockton Witnesses," Walter Mahaffey, Mike Silk, Gerald McDonald, Louis Devonshire, James Shuffler, Frank Jaworski, Bart Woods, and William Christensen. I won't review what they said, because they weren't impeached. They weren't weakened, they weren't touched, by a cross-examiner who had all the forces of the Immigration Department, full interviews with each of these witnesses at his beck when he attempted to cross-examine them.

I will recall to you one little thing. Mahaffey on the stand. Kaiser came to see him. What did he say to Mahaffey? Was he threatening him? Was he using his badge of officialdom? [8358] Kaiser said to Mahaffey, "I will see you in jail." Is there any denial, any denial of that in this case? Was Kaiser brought forward to utter a denial? Not at all.

Mike Silk. You probably remember that gentleman. He has been a longshoreman in the San Pedro area for many years. The agents came to his house twice, he told you. And here is an interesting thing that maybe Mr. Donohue will explain to you as well. Kaiser and somebody else, some other agent, came to Mike Silk, and they wrote out a statement on a piece of paper, and they said, "Will you sign your name here?" and Mike Silk refused to sign. The prosecutor told us about that, not Mike Silk. The prosecutor says, "Didn't they hand you a paper and ask you to sign it, and didn't you say, 'Well, that may be true, but I am not signing anything?'" Well, where is that paper? And I wonder what kind of language was intruded into that paper as a trap for poor old Mike Silk. I wonder. And I wonder why the paper was not brought here by this gentleman in the ordinary exercise of his rights of cross-examination, why he didn't further his point by saying, "Well, now, isn't this the paper you were shown? Isn't this the truth? Isn't this the paper upon which you offered no objection?" No, there was something about that paper. It couldn't be brought here either. And Kaiser isn't put on the stand to explain that to us either.

Mr. Bruce B. Jones. Are we able to laugh him off? Are we able to shrug him off? Are we able to despise him? Well, [8359] you can remember that man and the strength of his testimony. We are not ashamed at all of the language he used in defending himself against the assaults of the special prosecutor. But I have in mind one other touch. One other fragment of his testimony, which I would like to epitomize for you again. Because when he said it, I think I felt the same emotions as you do. And here is what he said, more or less. He said:

> "That never happened. It never happened, that I went with John Schomaker to that restaurant and signed up Harry Bridges. And I will tell you why it never happened. That restaurant was Boyd's. It was named Boyd's down on the waterfront. Times was tough in 1933. Times was tough, Mr. Donohue. And I wouldn't have gone into Boyd's with two friends of mine; Harry Bridges and John Schomaker were my friends. And I will tell you why I wouldn't have gone into Boyd's with two men who were my friends, Mr. Donohue. I used to go into Boyd's myself—I used to get down on my knees and I used to wash the floors in Boyd's in exchange for my lunch. So I wouldn't have gone into Boyd's with any friends of mine, Mr. Donohue. No, Mr. Donohue, I got a little pride. Just a little pride."

And when he said that, maybe I am just more susceptible than the average person, but I had a tough time keeping back the tears, because he said that certainly without any urging from us. We didn't know he was going to offer that explanation. It came [8360] as much a surprise to us as it must have to you. And those words, when I heard them, rang pretty true.

Again, a case depends upon the integrity of the charges, upon the offer of proof that is made and upon the test: Did the side having the burden of proof meet that test? Robert McMillan stood before you at the start of this case. He told you that as regards Mr. Robertson, Mr. Schmidt and Mr. Bridges, he would show you a conspiracy; he would show you that they met together, that they agreed, that they had an understanding that each would testify falsely, that each would aid and abet Harry Bridges in his false procurement of citizenship. We have listened to all of the evidence in this case. Where is it? Where is the evidence of any meeting? Where is the evidence of any conspiracy? Where is the evidence of any secret understanding?

I can recall that matter best to you by telling you what the language of the law will be as it will be read to you by the trial judge on that point. Here is what he will tell you, much as I say now, because it is the state of the record in this case:

> "I instruct you that there has been no direct evidence presented in this courtroom that the defendants or any of them met together and agreed or conspired with each other or with any other persons to defraud the United States Government in any manner as alleged in the first [8361] count of the indictment. The only evidence of such a meeting together, agreement or conspiracy, is purely circumstantial, if it exists at all; and therefore the instructions I have just given you with respect to the standards which you must apply to circumstantial evidence are to govern you in your consider> ation of whatever evidence there is of the existence of the conspiracy which is alleged in the first count of the indictment."

What is the Court going to say to you about circumstantial evidence? He will say it very simply. He will say this:

> "If you find in this case that every circumstance relied upon as incriminating is equally compatible with the innocence of the defendants, then there has been a failure of proof necessary for the defendants' conviction, and your verdict must be Not Guilty."

And he will say this:

> "I instruct you that if the evdence in this case is susceptible of two conclusions or interpretations, each of which appears to you to be reasonable and one of which points to the guilt of the defendants and the other to their innocence, it is your duty under the law to adopt that interpretation which will admit of the defendants' innocence and reject that which points to their guilt."

And as regards Bob Robertson and Henry Schmidt, the Court will tell you this: [8362]

> "As concerns the defense offered on behalf of the defendants Schmidt and Robertson, of course the crucial question is whether or not there was any intent upon the part of either of these defendants to deceive and defraud the > Government of the United States. The asserted good faith, the intent, the purpose and the motive of what was done by the defendants Schmidt and Robertson constitute the vital and important element of the whole case brought against them. Hence the jury may consider any material explanation of their motives and purposes in determining the character of their participation in the citizenship hearing of Harry Bridges."

After the recess, which I assume His Honor will call in a moment, I will explain to you those things which I feel establish beyond question the complete good faith of Bob Robertson and Henry Schmidt.

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we will take the morning recess. The same admonition to you, not to discuss the case under any conditions nor to form an opinion thereon.

(Recess.) [8363]

Mr. MacInnis: As I said before, what gauge for credibility can we adopt? What new standards for testing the truth can we invent if the special prosecutor can come here and say, without evidence, without testimony, without inference, without anything, that these character witnesses, all people of the San Francisco scene, are liars or perjurers; and if in the same breath they can say we are just venting our spleen when we apply the same label to people whose activities have taken place before your very eyes?

Bob Robertson and Henry Schmidt went to court with Harry Bridges on September 8th, I think, of 1945. He was their friend. They had believed in him for many years and he in them. They extolled his virtues. They believed he was fit to become one of us, to be a citizen of the United States. They believed that for a volume of reasons which have been unfolded to you on the witness stand. They knew him well. They knew of his militant trade unionism. They knew he was not a member of the Communist Party. In addition to their personal knowledge of the man, each one had read the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, the highest tribunal in our land. Well, to what nadir of despair have we descended if a citizen can no longer depend upon the writings of the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. Donohue says upon this subject, "Many people might have been misled by the Supreme Court of the United States." Many [8364] people did not read that decision carefully. He said that in answer to an objection here. The good faith of Bob Robertson and Henry Schmidt. Well, I will tell you how strongly they feel about this case. On that morning, after the collapse of Johnson, Crouch and Ross, with the exposure of Michener, the brief appearance here of Wilson, when the prosecution so hastily rested its case, Bob Robertson and Henry Schmidt refused to allow me to advance a motion to the Court asking that they be dismissed from this case because of the paucity of the evidence. They refused to let me do it. They said this: "If anybody is guilty, we are all guilty. If that man did not have a right to become a citizen of this country, where he has conferred so many benefits upon so many people, we do not want to be let out of this case. We want to be in it, too."

You will have to judge the strength of the whole prosecution by the strength of the conspiracy charge against Bob Robertson and Henry Schmidt. When Bob Robertson walked over to the City Hall that morning in the fall of 1945, he did not know that his journey was being so long or that it would carry him to so many places. He did not know that his words of approval given to a fellow man, a fellow worker, a fine man and a friend, would result in later years in some other man rising before a group of people like you, calling him a Communist, dull, unimaginative Bob Robertson, a Communist. He participated, according to the language of the indictment in this case, in a foul conspiracy [8365] against the United States of America. I say, as I have said so many times, who is the United States? You or this gang of officers who have come here? Who has committed the foul conspiracy against you and against our country? The Johnsons, the Crouches, the Rosses, the Rathbornes, willing to lend their perjury to any request of people like Barber. But Bob Robertson and Henry Schmidt are accused of conspiracy. In dark places, unknown to you, secretly, mysteriously, they conferred and conspired. Well, it was a pretty quick conspiracy. Bob Robertson was standing out in the hall, the door opened, Garner—we will assume it was Garner—said, "This other man does not have proof of his citizenship with him. You will have to come back another day." And somebody said "How about you, Bob?" And Bob Robertson went in and said, "Yes, I believe that Harry Bridges is a proper person to be granted citizenship in this country." That was the overt act in the conspiracy. That was the beginning and the end. He placed himself then in the tentacles of the law. With no notes, no memorandum, with forty or fifty other persons processed through to citizenship the same day, Garner forgot the incident like anyone else, but brought here at the order of his superior, Bruce Barber, he remembered amazing things for repetition to you, Bob Robertson, the last minute conspirator.

Let us think for just a moment about Harry Bridges' situation in 1949, what he did and why it happened that these were [8366] the two men who went to court with him. In 1945, after the Supreme Court had so gloriously defended his right to stay in this country, had defended the pulse of his existence, Harry Bridges was sitting on top of the world. Politicians, people of prominence in the community, any person who would have desired, would have volunteered to go to court with him, whether for generous purposes or selfish purposes, but he could have had his pick. He said, "Well, I am going to pick a couple of the old trade unionists. I am going to pick Henry Schmidt and ask him to go with me. He was with me on the waterfront before 1933. And I am going to pick another man, Paul Schnurr, who was older than Henry Schmidt, now retired, but used to be secretary of the union. I am going to court with those old timers. I am not going to have other people."

They went to court. Robertson idled along as a guest and found himself enmeshed in the proceeding. But what was the heinous crime for whose accomplishment they conspired? That one man out of these three men wanted to be a citizen of the United States. These men who prate before you of the cold war, the shooting war, and their patriotic duty—this is not a spy case; this is not a case touching the security of our national government. This is a case of three men who went to court in 1945, gave ordinary and true testimony so that one of them could be received into citizenship in the United States. Well, I guess it is perfectly logical along the lines of the [8367] prosecutor's wit, to exclude from your scrutiny the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. I guess it is just the thing he says. It is an inflammatory document, prejudicial, that would prejudice—indeed it would—the case for the prosecution in this case. So we do not have it in. Bridges—I think he spoke just as candidly before Judge Foley in 1945 as he spoke before you here. He certainly could have sweetened the phrasing of his testimony if he had done a little red-baiting himself, but Bridges is no red-baiter. Bridges does not say anything but the things he really thinks when he is on the stand before you, and if you want a little test of that, we go back to the old axiom, "Actions speak louder than words," the things that are proved by documents.

In the middle of the war when he received the bitter news that the Attorney General of the United States, despite the decision of the Appeal Board, had ordered his deportation from the country, what did he do? He dispatched a wire to Donald Nelson —I think he was head of the Manpower Commission at the time—the letter and wire is in evidence here—and he assured the Commission that there would be no slackening of work, that there would be no retaliation, that nothing would come of this bitter and monstrous decision. That is a little indication of the kind of man he is. We have seen him here in many moods. I have seen him in many moods on the outside. I have seen wasteful things about him. [8368]

Somebody said, "Harry, what are you going to do when this case is over?" He said, "Well, if it turns out all right, I would kind of like to get a new car." And that is hardly a Communistic thought, it seems to me. But this gentleman, the special prosecutor, speaks of all the defendants— Bridges with his heart of stone, a phrase conjured certainly not out of the pages of the record in this case—Robertson, dull, unimaginative. Well, I do not know just what he means by dull and unimaginative. Maybe I should not tell this about Bob Robertson, but we were over to his house for dinner a couple of Saturdays ago and we found that Bob Robertson is a kind of interior decorator. He made all the drapes in his house, in the living room and dining room, and I do not know whether he likes to have things like that circulated around, but he is obviously not an unimaginative man. I found something terrible when I visited his home, something that I am sure would interest people like Mr. William Kaiser. Down in the basement Bob Robertson has a veritable arsenal. He has guns, he has fishing rods and he is an officer of the Marin County Rod and Gun Club—very subversive. I have not looked to see whether it is on the Attorney General's list yet.

Henry Schmidt—surly you were told—surly, cold, cunning, ruthless Henry Schmidt, hiding behind the skirts of his daughter. I have seen that daughter, Louise Schmidt. I have seen her here every day, as you have. She works at the Crocker Bank. [8369] She gives up her lunch hour. I think she gets off about 11:15, and she rushes up here and goes back to work without very much lunch. She does that so she can be near her father. If that is hiding behind his daughter's skirts, I think it is pretty good. I would hide myself. I would pray that if the hour of necessity ever comes upon myself, I would be very pleased if my daughter and my sons would stand around me the way Louise Schmidt has stood here with her father. I do not think he is hiding behind her skirts. I do not think there is anything bad. I do not think there is anything bad that has been exposed about any of these people.

You are told concerning Rathborne that this burglary charge—forget it, the act of a foolish boy that happened so many years ago, so unfair to bring it up. But when Robertson was a boy, because he bought his way out of the navy, and the record is confused on that point, that must be brought to his eternal destruction. Well, the navy records themselves show that they had no desire to follow Mr. Robertson for prosecution. What would you expect in the background of a young man like Bob Robertson? Born in poverty, moving around in strife and unrest, the generation that felt most strongly the ravages of the depression—what do we find? What blemish is there upon his character? I find none, I find none in the record of this case. I find none at all. When he was flat on his back in the hospital, some stenographer took notations for his draft form, and they [8370] omitted the note about the three months in the navy. The only thing brought here, out of an examination of that man's entire life, innuendoes are brought against him. The special prosecutor, without the necessity of bringing proof before you, says, "Mr. Robertson, when you were in Chicago did you attend a meeting of the such-and-such a society to save Earl Browder?"

"No, I did not." This is Mr. Browder.

"Well, were you a member of such-and-such?"

"No, I was not."

"Did you go to a meeting with So-and-so?" naming three people whose names are entirely foreign to this case.

"Well," he says, "I did not." Where are those people? Where is the evidence? Innuendoes without proof, inferences to lead you along the same path, the happy path of guilt by association. I am proud to be here as a representative of a man like Bob Robertson.

In Chicago in 1943, the first half of 1944, but a rogue like Rathborne can sit here on the stand and tell you that Rathborne in December of 1943—Robertson, pardon me, I should say—was at a meeting of this committee called God's Committee of San Francisco. He says Wilson was at the same meeting, although Wilson does not tell us about that. All of the time Bob Robertson is living in Chicago. Now, you can't laugh that off by the analogy offered you by the special prosecutor, [8371] saying, "If I pay my utility bill in Washington by a check in San Francisco, would that prove I was in Washington?" Bob Robertson brought here every conceivable kind of documentary proof as to where he was, and do not think these men do not know where he was every day of every year. How easy it would be to puncture the bubble of an alibi of that kind. The owner of his apartment—we gave the address for the record. Do you think these people have not checked to see where he was? His address is contained on the stationery of the correspondence introduced in evidence here. Do you think these people do not know when he was there and when he was not there? Why, if he lied in the smallest degree, proof would be brought here to his utter and complete destruction, and no such proof has been brought here at all.

Henry Schmidt--what is said about Henry? Well, we begin with the witness Schrimpf, the hater of Henry Schmidt and Harry Bridges, and what does he say? He says one day Henry Schmidt came by and he tossed a card at me and he said, "You want to get wise and sign this," and he walked on. "I don't remember what I did with it. I may have turned it in."

There is the evidence against Henry Schmidt in this case. Is he weakened by cross-examination? Does he fall into the same role as the Johnsons, the Crouches, the Rosses and the Rathbornes? Has their complete investigation uncovered anything about the life of Henry Schmidt which can be brought here [8372] to his disgrace? Not a line. I have not heard anything.

"Were you a member of the Joint Anti-Fascist Committee?" he was asked. "Were you against the war in 1940?" That pictorial history book that I had here yesterday has a picture of people opposing war in 1940. They are sitting on a platform in Madison Square Garden in New York, and they begin with Senator Burton K. Wheeler; next to him is Kathleen Norris; next to her is Henry Ford; next to him is Charles Lindbergh, but when Henry Schmidt takes the stand here, he is asked, "Didn't you in 1940 call the war a war of oppression? Didn't you say America should stay out of war? Did you make a speech against war at Sadler Gate over at the University of California in 1939?" I guess it was unpatriotic to be against war in 1939. And to top the climax, to top ridiculousness added to travesty, he is asked this: "Mr. Schmidt, in 1943 did you vote in the local elections upon the same ticket endorsed by your union?" Henry said, "Why, yes, of course I did."

"Well, don't you see here that your union endorsed Oleta O'Connor Yates? She was a member of the Communist Party running for superivsor, wasn't she?"

Henry says, "Oh, yes," and we look at the rest of the list: Pat Brown, George Riley, George B. Harris. Henry says, "Oh, yes, we voted for all those people. They all came around and asked for our support." Guilt by association! We certainly do not condemn this gentleman because he was on that ticket and I [8373] do not think we should condemn Henry Schmidt either.

It has been truly said by the critics of Harry Bridges, many of whom have appeared here, that, of course, Harry Bridges is not the soul of the whole labor movement. Indeed, that is not true. The success of an outfit like the ILWU depends upon men, more men and more men still. Harry Bridges has done a fine job. I am not going to say more about him. But underneath Harry Bridges, there are men like Bob Robertson and Henry Schmidt, who have done many things that redound to their credit. Bob Robertson is the kind of man who has gone out into hostile states, into strange communities, places where union organizers get tarred and feathered. Robertson got a broken back and later a cracked skull, but he is not complaining about that. He is his brother's keeper, as we have heard so often. That is his crime, too. He is infected with the same kind of virus. He is his brother's keeper. He wants to see that all kinds of people get a chance to earn a living wage. And Henry Schmidt, in his quiet way, has led the same kind of life. Harry Bridges has directed many things and has been a source of inspiration to many men, but it was Henry Schmidt and not Harry Bridges who went over to the Hawaiian Islands, into the bulwarks of feudalism; it was Henry Schmidt who stayed in Hawaii against the charges of Communist domination. He was called the Red Czar from San Francisco. His request for negotiation at a council table was denounced as a Communistic tactic by the Big Five companies [8374] in Honolulu. And yet that man has survived the calumnies, the violence, the riots and he has had his reward no matter what happens in this case. He has had his reward. He has brought economic security in a real big way to about 100,000 people who never enjoyed it before.

How many of us can look ahead in our lives or can look back upon our lives and see that we have done or ever will do anything like that? I am very proud to be friends with men like Bob Robertson and Henry Schmidt.

At the start of this case, members of the jury, the special prosecutor boasted. He boasted of the new faces he would bring here in support of the same old tired charge: "Get Harry Bridges." He told you, he told the public at large, in many propaganda releases, "We will not use a single witness in this case who has appeared in either of the two previous cases against Harry Bridges."

Well, that was fine. That was good strategy. That was fine. It was fine to be mysterious. It was good not to let us know. But I say to that gentleman—he would do well, in contemplating the present trainees of the viper's nest. He would do well to regard, like and to look backwards through the year. He would do well to regard these devolutions of the years upon that other brave band of perjurers who sallied forth so gloriously in 1939 and 1941 when the world was young, and if he looks back, possibly he would regard their faces as symbolic of their [8375] characters. Possibly he would regard the fates of those persons as portending the fates of the ruined men whom he has seen fit to bring here. Two previous witnesses against Bridges were lawyers. One now stands disbarred in his home state of New York for bribing a witness. The other, the notorious Stanley Morgan Doyle, a friend of Mr. Boyd, faces a perjury charge in Helena, Montana, at the present time. Two of the witnesses died in Spain. One witness, released from the bondage of the penitentiary where he was serving a murder sentence, so that he could do his patriotic duty and testify, finds himself back now in his natural habitation. So let us look ahead just a little. What will be the fate of creatures like Johnson and Crouch when their roundelay of testifying for the government has run its gamut, along with the history which has inspired it? What will be their fate? To what degradation, to what oblivion; to what skid road will Mervyn Rathborne descend when his $125 a week is stopped and he no longer has the kindly Kessler to stand between him and the ravages of alcohol? I wonder. I wonder if he thinks about that. I wonder if it is of any importance in this case.

We have mentioned before what we conceive to be the wholly political character of this case. This is the only case that I can recall in this jurisdiction in which Hon. Frank Hennessy, United States Attorney, has not sat at the counsel table for the entire trial. There have been other special prosecutors, [8876] yes, assigned to cases for one reason or another, some because of political patronage, some because of particular skill, some for a variety of reasons, but always Frank Hennessy, representing his own office, has sat here through the trial. At the outset of this case a representative of Frank Hennessy, it is true, made his appearance, made an opening statement, participated in the taking of testimony—Robert McMillan. He disappeared from this case the very day that Lawrence Ross made his confession of lies before you. He disappeared from the case on that day. He has not returned except once, I believe, for a period of about a half hour. We say that, of course, this is a political case, fomented in Washington, where people are not familiar with the local scene in San Francisco. And what could prove that far better than people who have come in here to testify as character witnesses for the defense? Aren't they a little bit symbolic of the spirit of San Francisco, something I think these men do not know about, but they will stand before you and they will tell you it is only accident or coincidence that this case has taken its present form, that it is just an ordinary case, and that it does emanate from the office of Frank Hennessy, the United States Attorney for this district. And I wonder what they will do. I wonder if they will bring in Mr. McMillan to offer you his words in final argument. I make that suggestion very seriously, because the United States Attorney's office here is not dominated, of course, by Mr. Barber, Mr. [8377] Boyd and Mr. Kaiser. Word comes to us occasionally that machinations behind the scenes in this case, and even now as we sit here, pressure is being brought to bring that man, Mr. McMillan, in here, pressure from Washington, so he can add what dignity and respectability may attach itself to his own person to this case, and if he does that, these gentlemen will have paid you an even further compliment. They have paid you already the compliment of asking you to forget the perjury of their witnesses, to remember only that theirs is the patriotic cause. They will do you another compliment if they force Mr. McMillan to come before you. They will ask you to sit here, you who have listened to every syllable of evidence in this case. They will ask you to listen to advice from a gentleman who has departed from this scene about two months ago and who could not possibly be familiar with more than a quarter of the case. I do not know if they will do it. I know what they are trying to do.

Now, the special prosecutor tells you it was sickening, he said—I use the same word he adopted—it was sickening to hear Harry Bridges sit here in the witness stand and tell you about how he trapped the FBI in New York. That sickened this gentleman because Harry Bridges did not at the same time say, "God damn the NKVD," or something like that in the same breath, so he would make himself a patriot. I do not think the FBI merits any praise out of the activities that Harry Bridges relates because [8378] Mr. Donohue has not told you the whole story. Harry Bridges exposed six, eight, ten agents of the FBI in New York. He caught them. The FBI did not feel so proud of those men either, because the FBI discharged each and every one of the men who were caught in that situation.

And there is another little bit of proof that has not been brought out here. From that day to the present, particularly following the decision of the Supreme Court, which says a great deal about the FBI, the FBI has not touched this case, the FBI is not in this case now. No, Mr. Kaiser, Mr. Barber and the people to whose activities you have listened here, are the directors of the case.

The most heinous crimes in all history have left crimson with innocent blood not the hands of the openly depraved and the publicly wicked, but always the sacrosanct, the solemn hands of persons who commit their crimes wearing the robes of public office, sanctimoniously, hypocritically, I think even sadistically. You have seen many things like that in this case. There is always a special prosecutor at a given time, whether you call him Mr. Donohue or whether you call him Mr. Paisley. He arises in another era to condemn as Communists a person who is so bold as to say, "We should have a child labor law. There should be laws governing the labor and hours of women." And then he subsides when legislation of that kind becomes fixed and absolute in our economic life. There is always the same kind of man [8379] who stands up with the same charge. Social security in the days of Franklin Roosevelt used to be called terrible names. Old age pensions. And yet each of those pieces of legislation takes its place. The danger of Communism, the threshold of disaster—that is always the preaching of these self-appointed guardians of our public welfare. What kind of people are we? Are we so weak in our Americanism, are we so dissatisfied with the fine things that we have that we are going to weaken to any other kind of philosophy? Aren't we doing all right? Communism, the ILWU. Well, the ILWU has enjoyed for many years a modest kind of prosperity under the leadership of the three men who are defendants in this case. I do not remember the last statistics. I understand the average worker gets about $3,000 a year. And he is supposed to be interested in Communism, the workers in the ILWU, who buy their own homes, their own automobiles, have plumbing, have all the advantages of modern life. They are supposed to throw that aside for some mysterious reason like the reasons advanced in the subversive lists of the Attorney General.

Communism is supposed to, or we understand from the testimony here, to create chaos and unrest. That is what we are told by people like Johnson, Crouch and Rathborne. These men have devoted their lives to creating security for about 250,000 people on the Pacific Coast. About 100,000 people in the Hawaiian Islands. About 50,000 people in the Midwest. About 75,000 people in the ports of the Gulf. They are adopting [8380] chaos and unrest. You are asked to believe them.

The other morning in the corridor a gentleman of the press approached our special prosecutor and he said, "What approach are you going to take in your final argument in this case?" That gentleman replied, "The flag, my boy, the flag."

That is a serious thought. The prosecutor not only identifies himself with the government of the United States, which we are said to insult by our asaults upon witnesses, but he will go a little further in his appearance before you, and if he speaks of the flag, which we all revere, he will say this to you, "Whose flag is it? Is it your flag? Yes. Is it our flag? Yes. Is it the flag of Lexington and Concord? Yes. Is it the flag of freedom? Yes. Is it the flag of all the people?" And he will say, "Yes," to that, too.

And if any attempt to invoke the discordant notes of patriotism is offered you here, I have another little invention which I will call to your attention. This courtroom in which we sit is a modern room, comparatively speaking. It was finished in a period of time which we considered just a few years ago, but it was finished before the terrible details, the terrible philosophies of the second world war changed the thinking of every person in America, and if there is any attempt at false patriotism in this room, I will ask you to turn your eyes upward, turn your eyes to the ceiling in this room, and what do you see? The architect of another era was not ashamed to place [8381] upon the ceiling of this room the swastika and the Fascist mace. You see them both on the ceiling of this room, glowering and yet smiling fondly upon those who are adept in the bringing of frameups before persons like yourselves. Look at the ceiling if you want a picture of the past, the past that we rejected.. Look at the ceiling if you want to think of another era when other men made false requests, false callings upon the patriotism of those who listened to their words. We won't let symbols of that hated past destroy our concept of the American flag. I am sure we won't do that. We have a stake in this case. I have, you have, every member of the public has, and it is not our own stake. It is not just the stake of the men whose liberties hang in the balance—not that at all. It is a stake of another generation, the children of Harry Bridges, the children of Bob Robertson, the daughter of Henry Schmidt, my children, yours. We do not want cases like this to happen again. We do not want resurgences of the same kind of persecution, the same kind of appeals for mass injustices. We want to make this country saved for our own generation and for the next generation to come.

If these men could be convicted before you, many things would be lost, many things would be useless. The profession of which I am a member would become palid, useless, even destroyed, so far as I am concerned. Don't do it. Be firm in your own approach as citizens of this community. Be just. Look at the [8382] facts that have been revealed to you in this case, the terrible facts which must resound in your ears over these past months, and speak—speak to us as people have spoken before when people have listened before in the face of injustices and intolerance. Be courageous, as I know you will. Remember this: We are in San Francisco. We are not in New York, where the fog of hysteria surrounds every footstep of progress. We are not in Washington, a maelstrom of political intrigue. We are sitting here in San Francisco where the winds of freedom have always blown. Let us not do anything to change that.

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we will take the noon adjournment and resume at 2:00 o'clock this afternoon. The prosecution will then close the argument and we will proceed to the instructions in the schedule outlined. I again admonish you not to discuss the case under any conditions or circumstances.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to 2:00 o'clock p.m.) [8383]

Afternoon Session, Wednesday, March 29, 1950

CLOSING ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Yes, sir.

~~Mr. Donohue:~~ If your Honor pleases, Ladies and Gentlemen of the Jury:

For the first time in a long life I don't know where to begin. But of one thing I can assure you, and that is that I do know when to end.

I feel a little bit as that little old lady, Mrs. Harris, said she felt that night at Jack Shaw's house when she heard Harry Bridges state that he was a member of the Communist Party, and after a recitation of what the Communist Party had done for the waterfront workers, he solicited the membership of those present who were not members. She said, "I was flabbergasted." And so am I. You have been subjected, and so have I, since shortly before noon on the 17th day of this month to a record of calumny, hate, scurrility and vulgarism such as has never shocked the ears of an American jury before; but such as will continue to assualt the sensitivities of decent people while the organization to which these three defendants belong is permitted to continue, like a cancerous growth, that will destroy every decent thing in American life. [8384]

There it is, all Hallinan and MacInnis (exhibiting transcript), save what MacInnis had to say this morning. Unbridled, undisciplined and not bound by any rule of decency.

I don't mind the fact that these two men go beyond the record to sing their discordant note of hate. But I do mind when they go beyond the record and state as facts, only because they state them, not because they were testified to under oath by any witness upon this stand, and state as facts things which are not only not true but which they know are untrue; and were stated, as I warned you, for the purpose of deceiving you.

A brief record of Hallinan and his use of the epithet. He must have had at his shoulder Webster's Unabridged, because there isn't a word of vilification or hate which he hasn't voiced here. Let's go down some of the witnesses.

John Schomaker, by Hallinan: Once "the laughing baboon"; once "the turncoat," once "the informer." Twice "the perjurer." Five times "the liar." Once "a juvenile with an infantile outlook." Once "a man with a limited and closed mind." Three times "a man shown unreliable by testifying falsely under oath." And once, "a man for sale for any project."

Paul Crouch, by Hallinan: "Perjury," 31 times; "nut," once; "being coached by Government agents," once; "an unmitigated scoundrel," once; "a professional beggar," once; "insane," four times; "fraud," two times; "liar," eight times.

Lawrence Ross, courtesy of Mr. Hallinan: "Perjurer," six times; "a hack," just as he called Mr. McMillan a hack, once; [8385] "a liar," sixteen times; "a crook," once; "no damn good"—fine language in an American court—quoting Mr. Hallinan, once; 'a traitor,'' twice; ''a deserter of his wife and family,'' twice.

Manning Johnson: ''A perjurer,'' eleven times; ''an unmitigated scoundrel,'' once; ''a professional beggar,'' once; ''a liar,'' ten times; ''a fraud,'' five times; ''a union-buster,'' once.

Mervyn Rathborne, by Hallinan: ''A perjurer,'' six times; ''a fellon,'' once; ''a burglar,'' twice; ''a liar,'' thirteen times; ''a fraud,'' once; ''coaching witnesses,'' once; ''accepting an alleged bribe,'' twice.

Henry Schrimpf: ''Bribed and bought,'' once; ''a liar,'' once.

The word ''perjurer,'' ''perjury,'' or some variation thereof used by Hallinan 71 times in his closing argument. The word ''suspect,'' ''suspicious,'' or ''suspected,'' forty times. And the word ''coerced,'' eighteen times.

What do you think, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, that Hallinan will say about you if you don't agree in your verdict with his views of this case? Then we may join company.

And Junior, who doesn't want to be outdone, this morning, and the words probably still echo in your ears, stated two deliberate falsehoods, wholly off the record—giving him no right to even make comment; but he said, No. 1, that in consequence of Mr. Bridges' game of hide-and-seek with the Federal Bureau of Investigation, that six, eight or ten FBI agents lost their jobs. Did you hear any testimony about that from the [8386] stand? Of course not.

But the mistake that Mr. Hallinan made and the mistake that Mr. MacInnis made was that they thought that Mr. Donohue would continue until after the case had gone to your hands, and sit here like a fool and be bound by a rule that says even though they go beyond the record, I may not answer. I shall answer. And I say that statement by Mr. MacInnis is false. And I say also, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, that the statement made by Mr. MacInnis this morning that pressure was being brought from Washington to cause Mr. McMillan to come here and make this closing argument is wholly a fraud and is false; and that Mr. MacInnis knew it. But he thought that I could be decent forever and listen to his calumnies and lies and not make answer. But I shan't, because the people of the United States have some rights in this prosecution.

It would be absurd to think that Mr. McMillan, who has been forced to be absent for more than two months, could come in here and make the closing argument. And it is a deliberate and intentional falsehood to say that anyone from Washington or any place else sought to exercise any pressure on Mr. McMillan to come into this courtroom for any purpose.

Now, amazingly enough, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, these two men who represent these three defendants have consistently said to you, "The Government doesn't have any case. We don't know why we are here. It is not worth our time to [8387] put on a defense." Yet, beginning on page 7603 of Volume 70 of the transcript, at 11:45 a.m. on the morning of March 17, Mr. Hallinan began. And for 604 pages, more than a hundred thousand words of testimony, you listened to Mr. Hallinan.

Let me read you, if I may, from Mr. Hallinan's opening sentence:

> "Mr. Hallinan: The only part, the only description that Mr. Donohue gave of me that I feel much concerned in correcting immediately is the statement that I am going to be tiresome and tedious because I will try to not be and not oppress the jury by saying a lot of unnecessary things."

And 604 pages and 100,000 or more words later, he finally came to a conclusion.

Let me read you one other significant statement by Mr. Hallinan, at the very outset, and from the very first page of his opening argument:

> "The problem that the jury is confronted with is to tell which of two sets of witnesses who are telling conflicting stories are telling the truth. That is the proposition. In other words, if all these witnesses that Mr. Donohue produced on the witness stand were telling the truth, then there isn't any questoon as to the effect that their testimony would bear; it would mean, of course, Mr. Bridges had been a member of the Communist Party; had testified falsely, and so forth and so on." Period. [8388]

I wouldn't even comment on the rather extraordinary length of the argument, the argument by Mr.

Hallinan, except that I cannot escape the impression that having told us about some other case here in California in which defense counsel argued the matter for seven and a half days, Mr. Hallinan's vanity inspired him to break that record. And believe me ladies and gentlemen of the jury, he would have done so, except that on Monday morning his Honor set a final limitation on all argument, Government and defense. It ran pretty much as I told you it would. It was essentially an attack on the prosecution. And those of us who constitute the prosecution. It was an attack upon every Government witness who testified; and, parenthetically, even the Los Angeles County probation officer didn't escape wholly unscathed.

It was an amazingly scaled-down and subdued reference to the so-called Stockton alibi, quite minor reference to the testimony of good character, and a complete silence, a complete silence, on any defense testimony, save for a brief reference by Mr. Hallinan to the witness B. B. Jones as "a weird character," and to Jean Murray yesterday, by Mr. MacInnis, as the near cause of his crawling through a hole in the floor, except that the hole wasn't quite large enough. And, of course, a resort at great length to the usual desperate defense reliance upon the presumption of innocence and the doctrine of reasonable doubt. [8389]

I must say, however, that those 604 pages of argument gave Mr. Hallinan an opportunity to display quite an affectation of learning while we waited for him to discuss the evidence in the Bridges case. He read or quoted liberally from Shakespeare, Dante, Macauley, Bertrand Russell, Theodore Dreiser, Emile Zola, Voltaire, Victor Hugo, Rostand, Goethe, Ariosto, Samuel Johnson, Browning, Brooks Adams, Aesop, and some others. And I am sure you recall his dramatization from Aesop of the wolf and the little lamb sharing the same little stream. And I cannot but pause to observe that Mr. Hallinan was badly miscast as the lamb.

This performance by Mr. Hallinan so inspired Junior that he recited a bit of poetry himself, and finally, to show us that he had a couple of books, one of them being a picture book, he brought those in, too.

At the outset, and before making specific reference to certain things stated by these two men, there are three propositions which I would like to make clear. They are there: No. 1, this is the first and not the third Bridges prosecution. No. 2, this prosecution had the full cooperation and support of Mr. Frank J. Hennessy, United States Attorney for this district. And No. 3, the attack made by Mr. Hallinan, Mr. MacInnis and their three defendants upon this prosecution is an attack made upon the Government of the United States.

Discussing these in turn, No. 1: This is the [8390] first and not the third Bridges prosecution. The deportation hearings which these men have consistently brought before your attention, despite the repeated statements by the Court that they were not our concern in this trial, and to which, despite these repeated rulings from the Court, counsel for these defendants have made such frequent reference, were administrative hearings held before an immigration examiner. In preliminary motions which were argued at great length in this prosecution, and before the start of this trial, it was determined by the Court as a matter of law that these hearings were no part of this prosecution, This trial, to the contrary, is upon a criminal indictment returned by a grand jury.

Let me interrupt for a moment to read you from Volume 70, page 7627, one of Mr. Hallinan's many attempts to misquote law and fact for the purpose of misleading you. And I read from the record the statement by Mr. Hallinan, page 7627:

> "Now, it is the obligation of the grand jury to return an indictment if there is a reasonable suspicion that a person has committed an offense. Now, a reasonable suspicion is not a very strong force, so a grand jury returns an indictment when sufficient evidence is introduced before it to raise a reasonable suspicion that a crime has been committed and to put the person who is charged upon his defense for that crime."

That is not the law. The law in the State [8391] of California, established by your Code, requires every grand jury to be charged in this brief language:

> "The grand jury ought to find an indictment when all the evidence before them, taken together, if unexplained and uncontradicted, would in their judgment warrant a conviction by a trial jury." [8391-A]

And so this trial is upon a criminal prosecution, upon an indictment returned by a grand jury, and as I have stated to you before and I repeat again, no witness who testified for the prosecution in this trial has ever testified against Mr. Bridges or his co-defendants before under any circumstance or at any time. It takes no knowledge of the law to understand that since none of the government's witnesses testified against Bridges in either the 1939 or the 1941 deportation hearing, that nothing said by Mr. Landis or by Mr. Sears, who conducted those two hearings, can be of any possible value to us here.

Number two: With no basis of fact from the testimony of any witness, and with no basis of fact otherwise, Mr. Hallinan and Mr. MacInnis have gone to great lengths to attempt to persuade you that the United States Attorney for this district, Mr. Frank J. Hennessy, was not in sympathy with this prosecution in the first place, and that in the second instance, at some time during the trial, the time being quite uncertain, Mr. Hennessy would have dismissed this prosecution. That is another fabrication out of whole cloth, wholly untrue, wholly false, and known by them to be false, but stated for the purpose of prejudicing this prosecution.

Now, the fact of the matter is that when I first came here last spring to present the evidence, much of which you have heard, to the grand jury, and after a discussion with Mr. Hennessy upon that subject, Mr. Hennessy assigned his senior [8392] assistant, Mr. McMillan, to assist me in the presentation of evidence to the grand jury, which Mr. McMillan did. The further fact is that subsequently he assigned Mr. McMillan to actively assist me in the conduct of this trial, which Mr. McMillan did, until such time, unfortunately, as the burden of trial so affected his health as to preclude his return to his active participation, and the final and complete answer to this bold attempt on their part to state an untruth is that the very indictment under which this trial was brought was signed by Mr. Frank J. Hennessy as United States Attorney for this district, and you are allowed to take this indictment into the jury room with you; and you will see his signature.

And yet these men, in the hope that we would fall into a trap and play the game, because we have played it until now, knowing that that argument on their part was improper because outside the record, they thought I would be stupid enough to follow the rule and not to answer it. I tell you, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, they know, because the indictment is available to them, they have copies which show the typed signature of Mr. Hennessy.

Now, number three, the attack made upon the prosecution of this case is an attack upon the government of the United States. The investigation, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, out of which this prosecution arose, was ordered by the Hon. Tom Clark, who was then the Attorney General of the United States, and who [8393] is now a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. Upon the completion of that investigation so ordered, and upon a study made of the same by the Attorney General of the United States, he then ordered that the evidence so obtained be presented to a grand jury in this district. For that purpose I was appointed as special assistant to the Attorney General.

Some time subsequent to the return of that indictment, and before the beginning of this trial, Mr. Clark was elevated by the President to the Supreme bench, and the Hon. J. Howard McGrath, twice governor of the State of Rhode Island, the former Solicitor General of the United States, and at the time of his appointment as Attorney General, a member of the United States Senate from the state of Rhode Island, was appointed the Attorney General. After a discussion with him, the new Attorney General of the United States, my appointment was renewed and I was sent here for the purpose of conducting this trial. This is not my prosecution. This is not the Department of Immigration's prosecution. This is not the case of Donohue and Paisley v. Hallinan and MacInnis. This is not the case of Boyd, Barber and Kaiser against, Bridges, Schmidt and Robertson. This is the case of the People of the United States against these defendants, brought in the name of the people of the United States under the authority of the Attorney General of the United States and the authority of the United States Attorney for this district. No indictment can be returned in this district except by [8394] the authority of the United States Attorney, the Frank J. Hennessy to whom they make reference.

This case is not being tried in a vacuum. A free press reports it all over the world. The charges made here by counsel for these defendants that I am a liar, and on one occasion within a very few minutes thereafter, doubled and redoubled, that I am a briber of witnesses, that I am a suborner of perjury, and that I am a concealer of evidence, an unlawful spender of public funds, has been carried by the press to every corner of the world, including the office of the Attorney General of the United States. More than that, Mr. Hallinan has told you that he has sent letters to Mr. Frank J. Hennessy, the United States Attorney for this district, and to the Attorney General of the United States, demanding the indictment of the witnesses whose alleged perjury he charged me with supporting. So there can be no doubt but that the Attorney General is fully advised as to what is taking place in this courtroom. I am only a hired hand. The Attorney General can remove me by a signature to a piece of paper. He or the United States Attorney, Mr. Frank Hennessy, could end this trial with a word. They have not done so. This is their prosecution, brought in your name, in the name of all of us, and I shall carry it on as their representative, one Hallinan or a thousand Hallinans to the contrary notwithstanding.

Personally, I pay little attention to their vulgarisms, not that this is not the first time in a long experience that I [8395] have ever been so castigated, but because I fully recognize that, despite their stated desire for a verdict by this jury, it was their real hope to either beat or goad me into some act or indiscretion that would justify them in one of their countless numbers of requests to this Court for a mistrial and withdraw this case from the consideration of this jury. My only concern is that you be not misled by their doubletalk, that their attack is wholly personal upon me, for in truth and in fact it is an attack upon you, upon the judge who presides here, and upon our whole judicial system. I only happen to be the immediate and convenient target.

Mr. Hallinan: If the Court please, I feel under the necessity at this time to assign that last statement as misconduct, and ask that the jury be instructed to ignore it. Counsel has no right when he and his allies are accused of personal fraud in saying we accuse this Court and this jury of anything of that kind. The accusations are directed directly against this little gang, and the Court does not mention nor the jury mention it. He has no right, after all, although he is only acting as a private lawyer and a special prosecutor—he is bound by the same rules as a public officer and he has no right to make a statement like that.

The Court: The objection is overruled. The assignment is denied.

Mr. Donohue: It is apparent, in the time within which I [8396] have told His Honor that I would conclude my argument, that I can not hope to answer even a fair percentage of the allegations made by Messrs. Hallinan and MacInnis in this voluminous record. I tried in the opening statement to adhere to that rule that argument must be combined to the evidence and to such comment as may be justifiably inferred therefrom. My opponents, as I have stated before, have completely disregarded that rule for the purpose of prejudicing me and my associate, Mr. Paisley, and thus and through us the case of the United States in your minds. For example, Mr. Hallinan read a long article from one of the local newspapers, the subject matter of which was slum conditions in Washington, D. C., where I happen to live, particular reference being made in that article to the conditions in which some of our colored residents live. He also read another article containing a story from the city where I was born, Lynn, Massachusetts, and in which I have not lived for 30 years. This story concerned a young Jewish boy whose father had given his life for us in the Battle of the Bulge, and who had been cruelly beaten by a gang of young ruffians. Why? There wasn't any testimony about that before this jury. Why do you suppose Mr. Hallinan took your time and mine to read it? It could scarcely be that I, the son of Irish immigrant parents, and of a minority religion, would countenance such conditions or condone such conduct. And for what reason, ask yourselves, did Mr. Hallinan refer to the prevelance of pellagra and the burning of [8397] fiery crosses in the state of Tennessee, which happens to be the native state of my associate, Mr. Paisley, unless it was his purpose to appeal to the basis of all human prejudice, in the hope of saving from their just punishment these Communist defendants? I shall do my best in the time established by His Honor, and I shan't ask for any more, to call your attention to just a few of the misstatements for the purpose of prejudicing the case of the United States in your mind, and I shall call these few instances to your attention in the hope that you will reserve yourselves the right to make final judgment as to whether the pattern which I shall develop has not permeated everything that they have said from beginning to end, and perhaps you will bear in mind that short quotation from Mark Twain in which he said, "A lie can circle the world while the truth is putting its shoes on."

Let me call your attention first to a very strange occurrence. Mr. Hallinan at the outset spent a great deal of our time whining and whimpering about his own contempt case, a matter which is no concern of yours and is no concern of mine, a matter wholly between Mr. Hallinan and His Honor. I call this a strange occurrence, because in order not to prejudice the rights of these defendants, the Court was very careful that these matters be heard in the absence of the jury, and they came only to your attention through Mr. Hallinan. His motive in calling it to your attention is probably best expressed by [8398] his associate, Mr. MacInnis——

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. I will have to make another assignment. I do not like to do it. I do not like to interrupt counsel, but the law requires, so the jury will understand, that if we do not make these exceptions at the time, the statements are uttered, we are held to have waived them. This matter was developed by counsel slyly and sneakily questioning the witness Robert Kenny on cross-examination as to his representation of me in a matter then pending before the Court, inferring that there was something, that there was more to my detriment than a mere contempt of court proceeding. It was necessary then in order to clear up any such allusion and pretense for us to develop what the exact thing was. That is how that came into the record, from his own questions of Mr. Kenny.

I also did not whine or complain about the Court's action in the matter or make any criticism, but I did certainly point out how this gentleman, who now says it was none of his business, came in and whipped up and induced the Court and tried to persuade the Court to remove me from the case at the time. We ask that the jury be instructed to ignore that statement now.

The Court: The objection is overruled; the assignment is denied. I might interrupt counsel momentarily to state that matters of contempt affecting counsel are not immediately before this jury and I should not care to discuss the matter at any length or at all. I do not perceive, however, that Mr. Donohue's [8399] remarks are the subject of misconduct.

Mr. Donohue: Mr. MacInnis, page 8220 of the record:

> "I think, members of the jury, that I would do almost anything to win this case."

That may explain Mr. Hallinan's parading of this circumstance before you. I am not surprised at Mr. Hallinan, having elected to tell you about it, whimpered and whined, because from his conduct here, it is apparent he has more of the canary in him than the eagle. Whatever may have been his purpose, one thing is certain and that is that you are not to consider the question of his contempt, and that you are not, to the slightest degree, permitted to influence or prejudice you for or against these defendants. I raise the question only because of the wholly false statements made by him, and just repeated, that we of the prosecution, Mr. McMillan, Mr. Paisley and I, invited the Court, to quote him, to a hatred and rage for him, cause the Court to hold him in contempt.

Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. I have to make another exception there, Your Honor. I read out from the record just what this young man had to say, calling me a mad dog.

Mr. Donohue: Correct.

Mr. Hallinan: Mr. Paisely calling me a bawdyhouse or some such thing as that, the use of that kind of language, and then he says that was a false statement that was made, that they tried to whip up the Court. I also call to Your Honor's [8400] attention the fact that I read to the jury from the record that they demanded that Your Honor imprison me at once, remove me from the trial of this case, and force Mr. Bridges to go out some place and get another lawyer. Do you deny that, too, sir?

Mr. Donohue: No, and if you will just keep quiet long enough, Mr. Hallinan, I shall read from the record what was said, not what you said was said.

Mr. Hallinan: I take an exception.

The Court: The exception is denied.

Mr. Donohue: May we take the recess?

The Court: Members of the jury, we take the 3:00 o'clock recess. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Recess.) [8401]

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Donohue: I want to make it perfectly clear to you, so that my motive may in no wise be mistaken, that I am talking about this matter of contempt not at all for the purpose of discussing the merits or demerits of that proceeding, because I again repeat, it is not within your concern nor is it within mine. I am only discussing it for the reason that Mr. Hallinan, instead of standing on his two feet like a man and accepting the responsibility for his own misconduct, seeks to put the responsibility for his misconduct on the prosecution. He read you quite liberal interpretations, particularly from the point of view of time, what was said by Mr. Paisley and by myself. I want to read to you exactly what was said by Mr. Paisley, by myself, and what was said by Mr. McMillan, whose statement for some reason Mr. Hallinan eliminated from his discussion.

Now, Volume 7 of the record indicates that the holding in contempt took place on page 810 of the record, which I shall not read. But I shall go to page 841, after Mr. Hallinan's contempt matter had been determined by the Court, and here is the quotation from which Mr. Hallinan gave you a part, and made after the holding in contempt. I said to the Court, with respect to a motion that was under discussion:

> "The United States came into this court before your Honor on Monday of last week, after careful preparation, [8402] to prepare and present to your Honor and this jury the case of the United States of America v. Harry Bridges and others. We expected to present that case with dignity to the United States, carefully safeguarding the rights of these three defendants. And I most respectfully observe to your Honor that while the contemptible and contemptuous conduct of Mr. Hallinan, who has roamed this courtroom since Monday of last week like a mad dog, disregarding the rights of everyone, including your Honor—I say, if your Honor please, that the integrity of the courts of the United States require of your Honor at this time that action be taken that > we not be subjected to this kind of conduct in the future."

And mark you, that is 41 pages in the record after the holding by this Court of Mr. Hallinan in contempt.

Now, with respect to a matter which arose shortly thereafter, and referring now to page 851 of the record, the following occurred:

> "The Court: Mr. McMillan, may I hear from you? I have great respect for your considered judgment, and your temperament.
>
> "Mr. McMillan: If it pleases the Court, I believe the orderly administration of justice and the proper respect to be shown to the Court far exceeds the Bridges case. I think it far more important that the integrity of our [8403] courts and the respect due our courts should be upheld. I see no reason at all for any stay of execution."

After interruption by Mr. Hallinan, Mr. McMillan continues:

> "Mr. McMillan: Because I believe that this thing will continue every day and we would just reach a stage sooner or later where we shall conclude we have just been putting off the evil day. That is what will take place. I am going to suggest to your Honor that this trial be recessed, we will say, until December 5, and that your Honor instruct Mr. Bridges that meanwhile he procure additional counsel to get > prepared to proceed to trial on that date and also announce at this time that if he has not counsel then, that you notify Mr. MacInnis that you are going to assign him to act as counsel and instruct him to act as counsel."

Whereupon, after some more discussion by Mr. Hallinan and Mr. McMillan, the following:

> "The Court: Mr. Donohue, you represent the United States as a special prosecutor. May I have your view on this matter?
>
> "Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, I do not concede that the removal of Mr. Hallinan from the representation of Mr. Bridges will operate to the detriment of Mr. Bridges. I quite definitely feel to the contrary. I concur thoroughly and wholly in what Mr. McMillan has said. I think we [8404] have a situation to meet; we must meet it now. I concur in one suggestion that your Honor adjourn this trial until the 5th day of December and at that time instruct Mr. Bridges to be here with counsel to continue the progress of this trial.
>
> "The Court: Mr. Paisley, may I address myself to you? You have participated in some rather outstanding trials," and so forth. "How do you feel toward the situation?
>
> "Mr. Paisley: Your Honor, I have never seen any such performance as this in my life. Your Honor has indicated that you have never seen any such contemptuous conduct in a courtroom. I dare say that no appellate court would > ever receive such a record as this. Mr. Hallinan—I will not refer to him as counsel—I will not prostitute the word by using it in relation to this matter. He has desecrated this temple of justice."

Whereupon a typical Mr. Hallinan interruption, which I shall not read. And then Mr. Paisley continues:

> "Mr. Paisley: Your Honor, this is the temple of justice. He is trying to make this a bawdy house."

All after the finding in contempt.

Now, not satisfied with trying to pass the responsibility for his conduct onto either the prosecution or the Court, or both of us—if that wasn't enough—let me read Mr. Hallinan's remarks from page 7617, if you want to hear some pompous mummery: [8405]

> "And Mr. Paisley, with his delightful little remark, 'Your Honor, this is a temple of justice; he is trying to make this a bawdy house.' I have been busy in the preparation of the case, haven't had the opportunity to look up the exact significance of the term. I can't tell you what a bawdy house is; I have never been in one, but I have no doubt that Mr. Paisley will furnish you with an exact description."

Now, all anyone has to do if his instincts are correct is to look at Mr. Paisley to know that he is a gentleman, a man of kindly, clean, decent standards. Mr. Paisley doesn't have to apologize for having been born in the great State of Tennessee. Nor does he have to apologize for the fact that his tongue still has the soft slur of the South. Mr. Paisley has been with the Department of Justice for some time. Mr. Paisley is an exceedingly able lawyer. Mr. Paisley has tried with honor to himself and with distinction to the United States some of the most important cases of our times. He is poorly equipped for the kind of contest that suits Mr. Hallinan's temperament.

Fortunately, my skin is a little thicker. It just so happened, though it wouldn't make any difference to Hallinan, that Mrs. Paisley, the mother of two lovely children, one daughter married to an officer in the United States Navy, was sitting in the room when Mr. Hallinan made that remark. But don't be [8406] surprised. Mr. Hallinan sunk to the lowest depth of degradation to which a creature who calls himself a man can sink. And let me call it to your attention. [8406-A]

Page 8050 of the record, talking about a letter written by a woman who was not called to the stand by either side, and who therefore had no opportunity to defend herself against Hallinan's attack, here is what he said:

> "It is a letter addressed by Mrs. Schomaker, Roza Schomaker:
>
> " 'Dear Bruce:'

—asks him to come down and it says:

'you and I have many things to talk about.' "

about.' "

And then it is signed "As ever, Roza."

> "Now, there is a certain intimacy in that letter. There is a certain significance about it. It isn't a letter, 'Why don't you come down and have dinner with John and me?' and so forth. There is a certain hint or suggestion in it, either that B. B. Jones at one time had some romantic interest in Roza Schomaker either before or after she was married, that she felt she exercised some power or control over him. It has a certain teasing quality. And then the phrase, 'As ever, Roza.' What does that mean? What is the significance of that? That letter is a well designed letter to induce a suspectible person to assume that there is some relationship upon which he can count on existing in the person that wrote that letter."

I heard the same Hallinan cry crocodile tears one day [8407] because the child of Harry Bridges was subjected to an unfortunate circumstance where the children called after her, "Your father is a Communist," and I deeply and sincerely regret it. There is nothing more tragic than the hurt feelings of a child. But imagine the father who would put himself in the position where the statement can be called after his children, and the same Hallinan who shed crocodile tears over that child's injured feeling won't have any sympathy for the fine little boy and fine little girl of John and Roza Schomaker. It makes no difference to Hallinan and his gang that the children in the street quote Hallinan and say to Roza and John Schomaker's two children, "Your mother had an affair with B. B. Jones." What kind of a man can do that to a woman who can't defend herself?" It is a fortunate thing for Mr. Hallinan that John Schomaker was not within reach of the filthy mind or the dirty mouth that could voice that accusation at the time it was made, because John Schomaker, man and all man, who could sit back and laugh when Hallinan called him a hobo and a bum and say, "Yes, I could be called that in those days," there won't be any smile on John Schomaker's face when Hallinan is called to account for the slur on John Schomaker's wife and the mother of his children.

And so, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, as I turn tomorrow to some specific instances, again of the tortured truth and the stated lie, remember what Mr. Hallinan said of Mr. [8408] Paisley and what Mr. Hallinan would do to a defenseless woman, and as you listen to the contradictions of fact against lie, let me call your attention to Hallinan on Hallinan. I quote from the record at page 7625, and if you want an insight into Mr. Hallinan, if you want to know how much credence you can place in anything he says, let me read you his discription of himself. Page 7625:

> "You get into the place where you crawl off into a corner and curse the injustice of life, maybe take a kick at it once in a while if they come too close. That is about the position I have degenerated into."

Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, he does not know the depths of his own degeneration and degradation.

May we take the recess until tomorrow, if your Honor please?

The Court: Yes. We will take the adjournment, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, until ten o'clock tomorrow morning. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions or form or express an opinion until the matter is submitted to you. Ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken until Thursday, March 30, 1950, at 10:00 a.m.) [8409]

Thursday, March 30, 1950, 10:00 o'clock A. M.

The Clerk: In the case of United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

The Court: You may proceed.

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, Your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Donohue: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I would like to turn to the record and call your attention to some of the statements made here by counsel, and then refer back to the record for the truth. Quoting Mr. MacInnis in Volume 77, pages 8239 and 8240:

> "Mr. Hallinan, at the time the first major objection was made, told the jury that he would show the manner in which the CIO was formed > out of the A F of L on the issue of autonomy of unions, on the issue of democracy."

referring to pages 553 and 554, a portion of Mr. Hallinan's opening statement. He continued,

> "Objections were made by the two prosecutors to that offer made to the Court, and while they made those objections, they knew that their witness, Henry Schrimpf, the third witness to be called here, was already waiting to give identically that testimony, while said prosecutors knew that this witness, Schrimpf, would give that identical testimony." [8410]

It is a fact that when Mr. Hallinan made his opening statement and referred to the formation of the A.F.ofL. out of the CIO, we did object, because we took the view, and His Honor sustained us, that that was not a matter in issue on the question as to whether or not these defendants are guilty as charged. Now, the suggestion made by Mr. MacInnis was that though we objected, we were responsible later for introducing that evidence before this jury.

Let us turn to the record, and I quote from Volume 14, page 1657, the cross-examination of the witness Henry Schrimpf by Mr. MacInnis:

> "Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): Well, now, after the union which has been the ILA became the ILWU, even after it left the American Federation of Labor and joined the CIO, you were the leader of the opposition which sought to keep the union in the A.F.ofL., isn't that right?"

And so, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we did object to the statement made by Mr. Hallinan in his opening statement, but we did not introduce that testimony after having made the original objection through the witness Henry Schrimpf. It was introduced by Mr. MacInnis on cross-examination. And before I forget it, and on the same theme, Mr. Hallinan and Mr. MacInnis went to some length to tell you ladies and gentlemen of the jury, that for the purpose of prejudicing these defendants before you, we of the prosecution introduced the theme of [8411] patriotism to appeal to your prejudice against these defendants, that we of the prosecution introduced the theme of the cold war, and the possibility it might eventually result in a shooting war, and that statement was made again by Mr. Hallinan and by Mr. MacInnis for the purpose of indicating that we did so to prejudice these defendants. The truth and the fact is so recent in your memory that you can not have forgotten the first word of testimony on that score which came from the lips of the witness Mervyn Rathborne. I knew what had happened when Mr. Rathborne went to Washington and talked to the then Attorney General, the Hon. Tom Clark, but I did not ask Mr. Rathborne if he had gone to Washington and talked with the Attorney General, and if, knowing that he had, what did the Attorney General say to him, because I knew what the answer must be. You will recall that it was Mr. Hallinan himself who said to Mr. Rathborne, "When you talked with the Attorney General of the United States"—Strike that. Mr. Hallinan said, "When you talked to Clark in Washington, what did he say to you?"

The witness Rathborne told him what the Attorney General had said. And so again, and on the same point, I invite your attention to the fact that it was the defense and not the prosecution which introduced that theme into this record.

Now, let us look at another quotation. Mr. MacInnis alleged that the prosecution objected to Mr. Hallinan's opening statement concerning the alleged dictographing of Harry Bridges' [8412] hotel room in Portland in 1937, when the prosecution knew that their witness or witnesses, Schomaker, Krolek and Schrimpf, were prepared to testify to that matter. Quoting Mr. MacInnis, page 8241 of the record:

> "On page 565, referring to Mr. Hallinan's opening, when Mr. Hallinan told the jury that he would show the extent of our surveillance over Harry Bridges, going back to the year 1937, when people placed a dictograph in his hotel room in Portland, the same storm of protest, the same charges that those facts were fantastic and outside the scope of this case, when they knew that three of their witnesses were prepared to testify to that very matter, Mr. Schomaker, Mr. Krolek and Mr. Schrimpf."

Now, what is the fact? The fact is that when Mr. Hallinan stated to you in his opening statement that he would show that a dictograph was placed in Mr. Bridges' room in a hotel in Portland in 1937, we objected. The objection was sustained by the Court, and you may recall at that time I renewed to the Court a statement I had made to the Court theretofore, and that was that not one scintilla of evidence would be introduced in this prosecution which was obtained by dictographing or by wire-tapping. That promise I made then I have kept. Therefore, if Mr. Bridges' hotel room in a hotel in Portland were tapped, if his room were dictographed in 1937, and no evidence thereof was offered in this prosecution the statement was objectionable and [8413] His Honor sustained it. But in order to give the inference to you ladies and gentlemen of the jury that after having objected when Mr. Hallinan made the statement, we then offered that testimony in evidence, let me again turn to the record, and I turn now to Volume 10 and read you from line 20 to line 23 on page 1192. The witness was being examined by Mr. Hallinan.

> "Q. Now, you had something to do with the discovery of the Dictaphone in Mr. Bridges' room in 1937 in the Multnomah Hotel, didn't you? A. Well, I didn't discover it."

And again I say to you, it was not the prosecution, it was the defense which introduced that testimony, references to which we had objected to during the course of Mr. Hallinan's opening argument.

And the third reference, Mr. MacInnis also alleged that after we had made objection in Mr. Hallinan's opening statement to the effect that the issue in this trial was the same as the issue against

Harry Bridges in two previous hearings, that then having made that objection, we called our first witness, Mr. Lloyd Garner, concerning that very matter. Quoting again Mr. MacInnis from the record, at page 8244:

> "In the opening statement was the mention of the fact that there were two previous hearings in which the same issue against Harry Bridges was tried. That was a terrible thing. That could not be said. The prosecutors unanimously objected [8414] to that statement, and yet before the first witness, Mr. Garner, Mr. Lloyd H. Garner, an official of the government himself, had been on the stand for a half hour, those facts had popped into the testimony, the same issue, the same exculpation, the same charge by the government against the same man, the same acquittal as in the two previous charges, but the government two days before had told the Court and jury that the fantastic issue would never find its way into the scope of the evidence in this case."

What is the fact? The fact is that we did object in Mr. Hallinan's opening statement, and the fact, or the recitation of the alleged fact by him that in the two previous deportation hearings, the same issue as is being tried here was being then tried. We objected, number one, because that is not true; we objected, number two, because the Court had ruled as a matter of law that this jury, that this prosecution is not concerned with the prior deportation hearings. Now, if what Mr. MacInnis said, as I just read to you, is true, that in the face of our objection we then called Mr. Garner and put in evidence the very thing which we had objected in Mr. Hallinan's opening statement, he might well criticize us. Well, what is the fact? Let us look again at the record, and I refer now to Volume 5 of the record at page 626, and the witness on the stand is Mr. Lloyd Garner. And here is the question asked of him—not by me, not by Mr. Paisley—again asked of Mr. Garner by Mr. Hallinan. [8415]

> "Q. In other words, in this application, which the applicant Harry Renton Bridges presented to you, and which, as you say, you had in your possession, the day you talked to these three men, and asked the questions which you say are now engraved on your memory, so that you need not refresh your memory, you had this before you:
>
> " 'In 1938 I was arrested in Baltimore on a charge of being subject to deportation. My case was tried in 1939 at Angel Island before Dean James M. Landis. He found and held that the charges against me were untrue and recommended that the warrant of arrest be canceled,'—" and so forth for another half a page.

That is the question of Mr. Garner by Mr. Hallinan. So in all fairness and justness, I ask you, Is it true, as Mr. MacInnis stated to you, that having objected to irrelevant and immaterial matter which Mr. Hallinan in his opening statement said he would prove, that we then turned around and introduced that very evidence before you ladies and gentlemen of the jury? It is not true, because the three instances I have given you—and I shall give you another one, one more—in each of those instances the matter to which we objected when the reference was made thereto by Mr. Hallinan in his opening was subsequently introduced by the defense. And here is the fourth. [8416]

It is alleged by Mr. MacInnis that when Mr. Hallinan in his opening statement said he would show to the jury that the FBI in the past had threatened and berated witnesses to get their testimony against Bridges, the prosecution objected. But then their witnesses, Krolek and Rathborne, testified to precisely the same thing. Now, let me quote from the record Mr. MacInnis' reference, and I quote now from the record of Mr. MacInnis' closing statement:

> "Mr. Hallinan said in the opening statement that he would show the jury that in the past the FBI had threatened and berated witnesses to get them to testify against Harry Bridges. The same three gentlemen were upon their feet. It was false, it was untrue, the FBI was not on trial, this was another case, this was the Immigration Department's case, the FBI was not involved, that matter could never get inside the record in this case. And yet all the while they knew that their fifth witness, Mr. Krolek, was going to testify precisely to that. Mr.

> Krolek and Mr. Rathborne, who together gave you a very vivid account in their words, and not ours, not adopting the biased adjectives I might use, not taking the aura of prosecution."

End of quote of Mr. MacInnis.

Let's look at the record—and I refer now to Volume 19, page 2232, to determine this issue of fact: Did the prosecution, having objected to the opening statement of Mr. Hallinan that he [8417] would show that the FBI used pressure, third-degree methods, berated witnesses, in order to obtain their testimony? We did object to that statement. Question: Did we, having objected, then introduce that very evidence before this jury?

Page 2232. The witness is Mr. Krolek, the examiner is Mr. Hallinan.

> "Q. Now, on April 23 were you taken to the FBI offices in San Francisco by agents, along with your wife?"

And there follows then a great number of questions and answers on that very subject. And I refer that again to you as a final proof of the fact that the matters to which we properly objected, when stated by Mr. Hallinan in his opening statement, were not then subsequently introduced in evidence by the prosecution. They were introduced by the defendants themselves in their own cross-examination of our witnesses. I did not ask Mr. Krolek a single question about his experience with the FBI, because I knew what both Mr. Hallinan and Mr.

MacInnis, each in his closing statement, has said to you ladies and gentlemen of the jury, that the Federal Bureau of Investigation is not a part of this case. There has not been a single word of testimony introduced in this prosecution by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

As you undoubtedly know, both the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization and the Federal Bureau of Investigation are divisions of the Department of Justice, and the Attorney [8418] General of the United States is in complete charge of both the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization. They are sister services within the Department of Justice. Yet, knowing and publicly stating to you that the Federal Bureau of Investigation has not introduced any of the evidence in this prosecution, Mr. Hallinan and Mr. MacInnis went at some length to show that prior to the second deportation proceeding the Federal Bureau of Investigation used coercion on the witness Krolek in order to obtain testimony which he never gave before a public hearing.

Now, we objected. If the evidence that Mr. Hallinan or Mr. MacInnis offered tended to show that in any way Mr. Krolek was influenced by the Federal Bureau of Investigation or by anyone else, in his testimony in this trial, we would not have objected, because it would have been a perfectly proper inquiry. But it was introduced by Mr. Hallinan and Mr. MacInnis despite their assertion, which is true, that the Federal Bureau of Investigation did not produce any of the evidence that you have heard. It was produced by Mr. Hallinan and Mr. MacInnis for the purpose of prejudicing the prosecution.

Now, if you will recall, while we are on the subject, Mr. Krolek and Mr. Rathborne gave somewhat different interpretations of Mr. Krolek's experience with the Federal Bureau of Investigation back some eight, nine or ten years ago. You can well conclude as to the reasons for the differences in the [8419] version of Mr. Krolek's experience as stated by Mr. Rathborne, in contrast to that stated by Mr. Krolek. You know from the evidence that they were brothers-in-law, that they had married sisters. You knew from the evidence that at one time, when Rathborne was the secretary of the San Francisco local of the American Radio Telegraphists' Association, that Mr. Krolek was also secretary-treasurer of either the Portland or Seattle branch of the same union. You know that at one time both Mr. Rathborne and Mr. Krolek were members of the Communist Party. You know that Mr. Krolek's membership in the Communist Party encompassed a period of time of slightly more than a year. You know that at the time Mr. Krolek was interviewed by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, that Mr. Krolek had left the Communist Party and that at that very moment Mr. Rathborne was serving as chairman of the California State CIO Council for Bridges' defense, and that Rathborne, then an avowed Communist, then not considered by Mr.

Bridges a burglar or a drunkard or a perjurer, but a pal—you know because Mr. Rathborne told you, there was a contest "between the FBI and me for the services of Mr. Krolek." And you know, because Rathborne told you, that "I won."

And so I say to you, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, that in the four instances to which I have specifically directed your attention, the allegations are not true that we have adopted the inconsistent position of objecting to an offer of [8420] proof made in an opening statement and then introducing that very objectionable matter ourselves.

Let's look at another matter. Mr. MacInnis, in Volume 77 on pages 8323 and 8324, said this:

> "Earl Browder appears before the House Un-American Activities Committee by sending them a document containing a list of the members of the Central Committee of the Communist Party for the very year under discussion in this case. Yet the prosecution tells us that no such document is ever preserved. Johnson and Crouch are on the stand. Crouch is questioned. Various names are read out to him. Names of persons on the Central Committee. He says, 'Oh, those are fictitious names. I haven't heard of those people.' Johnson comes back to the stand. Johnson knows those people, people whose names were read out. Which one is telling the truth? Each one claimed to be present at the meetings of the Central Committee of the Communist Party. Ross, Johnson > and Crouch—all say they were present at this meeting when the Central Committee of the Communist Party was elected. Johnson and Crouch saw Harry Bridges get to his feet and make a speech. Ross, who knew Bridges at least by sight over a period of years, didn't see Bridges at all. Now, you can't throw that testimony away by saying, 'The important thing is, they said they saw him.' You can't [8421] do it."

In the first place, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, the list which was furnished to the Congressional committee by Mr. Browder and which was identified at least here and handed to the two witnesses Crouch and Johnson to read, pertains not to the 1936 Central Committee of the Communist Party, but it pertains to the 1938 Central Committee of the Communist Party.

When the witness Johnson was recalled, and recalled at the request of Mr. Hallinan, Mr. MacInnis told you, and without equivocation, that the four names on that list, which Paul Crouch had said were fictitious names to cover the identity of persons who were members of the committee, whose identity the Communist Party did not wish to disclose, and that when Johnson was called, Johnson knew those four people. Let's turn to the record—and I quote from Volume 27, page 3112. The witness, recalled, is Manning Johnson. The examiner is Mr. Hallinan.

> "Q. Mr. Johnson, were you familiar with the persons who were members of the Central > Committee of the Communist Party for the year 1938? A. Some of them.

>
> "Q. You attended a convention in 1938, did you not? A. Yes, I did.
>
> "Q. And voted for the members?
>
> "A. That's right.
>
> "Q. Did you ever know a man who was a colored preacher——" [8422]

Let me interrupt myself for a moment. Bear in mind that what Mr. Hallinan is trying to do is to show that the four names which Crouch, several weeks before, because it was before the Christmas recess—that the four names that Crouch had testified to some time before on that list were fictitious, were in fact not fictitious but were known persons, and he was attempting to show that through the witness Manning Johnson. Watch the way he does it.

> "Q. Did you ever know a man who was a colored preacher, had been a colored preacher from Chicago, named Ray Hansboro?
>
> "A. The name is familiar. I don't recall at present. The name is familiar.
>
> "Q. If my recollection serves me correctly (Mr. Hallinan), he had been a minister in Chicago, and then was a member of the National Committee, even after the year 1944. Here is a printed list for the year 1944, and down about in the middle of the second row you will find the name. Will you take a look at it?
>
> "A. Yes.

"Q. On the 1938 list also his name appears. Let me see if I can find it for you. Yes, they followed in alphabetical order. 'Gold, Green,' and then his name, Ray Hansboro. Do you remember anything about that?

"A. No, I don't recall anything about him. [8423]

"Q. Do you remember that he had been a minister in Chicago?

"A. That I don't know.

"Q. Do you remember if he was a colored man? A. I don't recall.

"Q. Do you recall that there was such a man at all?

"A. I recall the name. I have heard of it in Party circles at one time or another.

"Q. You remember he was at times a member of the National Committee of the Party?

"A. That I am not sure of.

"Q. There is another name that I notice here, Halland, H-a-l-l-a-n-d, Jasper Halland. Do you remember that name at all? And that occurs right under the Hansboro name, or above it.

"A. No, I never heard that name before.

"Q. Did you hear of a woman by the name of Rose Biltmore? A. Rose Biltmore?

"Q. Yes. Her name appears under a list called 'Candidates.'

"A. I don't know a Rose Biltmore.

"Q. Did you ever hear of a man named Harry Gwinn? A. No.

"Q. His name also appears among the candidates for the 1938 convention. The only name you remember of those mentioned is Ray Hansboro, is that correct?

"A. I heard that name before." [8424]

Now, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, you are the triers of the fact, and I ask you whether that record supports Mr. MacInnis' conclusion in this statement:

> "Johnson comes back to the stand. Johnson knows these people. People whose names were read out. And those names, the four names I just read to you, are the names which Mr. Paul Crouch stated were fictitious names, placed, as was their custom, upon a list submitted by Earl Browder for the purpose of concealing the real identity of persons whose identity it was to the interest of the Communist Party to conceal."

Let's look at another matter. Quoting Mr. Hallinan, volume 75 of the record, page 8046, Mr. Hallinan said this:

> "Here is the destruction of that story (speaking of Mrs. Irene Harris) and here is the proof of what a fraud Schomaker is. Schomaker was a functionary of the Communist Party, and he attended that party (talking about the party at Jack Shaw's house). He would know that Harry Bridges was under deportation proceedings at that time, and if Mrs. Harris was flabbergasted, what would have been Mr. Schomaker's reaction?"

A fair question. Mr. Hallinan continues:

> "But Mr. Schomaker didn't remember that any such thing had ever been said. He didn't remember that that startling statement had been made." [8425]

Let me read you from volume 9, page 1034, the testimony of Mr. John Schomaker, being cross-examined by Mr. Hallinan:

> "Q. Can you recall at this time anything that Mr. Bridges may have said on that subject?
>
> "A. (By John Schomaker): Well, he spoke about the international situation and the necessity of the workers joining a political party that would fight in the interest of the workers, particularly in view of the international situation that existed then, the rise of Fascism in the world and the threat of a new war (this being 1938), and he stated very emphatically that all workers who were interested in stopping these things should join the Communist Party, because he was a member of the Communist Party and he was there to fight such goings-on."

And then a question by Mr. Hallinan:

> "Q. And you heard Harry Bridges make that statement? A. I did, yes."

Not too important, but just one of those little digs; and when we amass a number of them together, I think you can see a complete picture. It is interesting to study the record and see the almost patent rivalry between Harry Bridges, even before he testified as a witness, seeking to destroy the witness Rathborne, and Vincent Hallinan seeking to destroy the witness John Schomaker.. The reasons are apparent. Mr. Hallinan himself concedes the importance of the testimony of John [8426] Schomaker.

No one knows, not even Hallinan, better than Bridges, how important the testimony of Rathborne is. Is there some significance, ladies and gentlemen, in the fact—and it is not so because I say it; you have a right to believe it to be so because you heard it from the sworn lips of the witness—is there any significance about the fact that in those crucial years from 1941 to 1945 when Mr. Bridges' deportation hearing was either actually in process or being subjected to review, in the fact that his two closest friends and the two most active in his defense were George Wilson, secretary of the Bridges Defense Committee, and Mervyn Rathborne, chairman of the California CIO Committee for Bridges' Defense, and both members of the Communist Party?

Do you think, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, that Harry Bridges, fighting desperately for the right to remain in this great country of ours, fighting it on the basis that he was not a member of the Communist Party, would have had two of the most prominent Communists in this community, one at his right and the other at his left hand? Does that reflect in some measure upon the present situation? Bridges, on his right hand the Communist Schmidt, on the ~~left hand~~ the Communist Robertson? The pattern has not changed.

Hallinan just could not get John Schomaker out of his blood. If you reread Hallinan's argument, he never finished the subject matter of John Schomaker, and he never will, because Hallinan [8427] will never get over the fact that this man, as he terms him derisively, of small intellect, and refers to the humble hod-carrier's hut, which I am supposed in some way to have glorified—believe me, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I would much prefer the company of John Schomaker in what is not so humble a hod-carrier's hut, than I would the mansion which I assume is possessed by that witness who in some measure seems to be glorified by both Hallinan and MacInnis, Hallinan because he said he has ninety million dollars, which MacInnis raised to 100, Walter Buck. You do not measure a man—we do not—in terms of the amount of money he has collected. We measure a man in terms of his character, and as much as Hallinan would like to destroy Schomaker because, as he has stated to you, unless he has destroyed Schomaker, he has lost his case, he has another motive far more important to Hallinan than the verdict is to Mr. Bridges. It is a rancoring bitterness that arose out of the fact that the laughing baboon, as Hallinan saw fit to call him, bested him, beat him and battled him. As I told you in the opening statement, I was privileged to make at a time that seems so long ago, that Mr. Hallinan will never forgive John Schomaker because with all the skill at his command, with all the artifices, tricks and devices of which Hallinan is capable, at the end of a gruelling and exhaustive examination, Big John Schomaker sat at ease, and Hallinan turned away battered and bruised, and he will never forgive Schomaker for it, believe me. [8428] And there is only one answer to it: Schomaker told the truth, and the truth is its own defense, and all the skills of all the Hallinans in the world can never shake the witness who is armed with a conviction of righteousness, who is armed with a conviction that he is doing his duty and knows he is telling the truth. That is why Hallinan attacked Roza Schomaker, and that is why Hallinan, just as a little aside, Volume 72, page 7796, speaking of John Schomaker:

> "He joins the Marine Corps in July, 1922, and remains a member of the United States Marine Corps until his discharge in 1925. Now membership in a military organization in peacetime is not such as to recommend one as being an example of diligence and faithfulness and hard-working proclivities. There is nothing wrong with a person who does. But it is kind of a soft job that somebody takes who hasn't very much of a sense of responsibility."

But he forgets, ladies and gentlemen, and he forgot intentionally, that in Volume 6 at page 764 of the record, I asked Mr. Schomaker these few questions:

> "Q. And you continued a member of the ILWU until when?
>
> "A. Well, until the year 1943. I went into the Navy Seabees.
>
> "Q. In 1943? A. Yes.
>
> "Q. And how long did you remain in the naval service [8429] after you went in in 1943?
>
> "A. Well, I was discharged in June of 1945."

Mr. Donohue: May we take the recess at this time?

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we will take the morning recess. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case.

(Recess.)

Mr. Donohue: May I continue, if Your Honor please?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Donohue: Again, if I may, and quoting from Volume 75 of the record, page 8064, Mr. Hallinan speaking:

> "The second point of the resume is that his story (speaking of John Schomaker) is inherently incredible, that a man who had had the simple occupations that he had had, and appeared on the waterfront in 1933 could, within a month after his appearance, go up to Harry Bridges, an alien, who by Schomaker's own > admission at that time, was under fear that if he joined the Communist Party he would be deported, and that very point was discussed at the time of the signing of the application."

Let me read from the record what Schomaker said on that point.

> Question by Mr. Hallinan: "All right, now, when Mr. Bridges, at the time you say you got an application from the Communist Party for Mr. Bridges, you had discussions, I [8430] take it, with Mr. Bridges or had heard discussions in which it was pointed out that if he were known to be a member of the Communist Party he would be immediately deported; that is right, isn't it?
>
> "A. (By John Schomaker): Why, it is ridiculous."

Again with respect to the witness John Schomaker, page 8066 of the record, Mr. Hallinan:

> "The ILA had been reactivated, a strike had been had, the strike won, and the ILA recognized by the Matson Company back in June of 1933, four or five months before Schomaker appeared on the scene."

Now, in this instance, Mr. Hallinan is using the date of the Matson strike, which he places as June of 1933 as the focal point for his statement that certain things were done four or five months prior to the time that Schomaker arrived on the waterfront. Let us see when the Matson strike occurred.

Mr. Hallinan says in June of 1933. According to the record, the witness is Mr. Bridges, the question:

> "With regard to strikes, in the matter of strikes, the voting for, calling strikes and the concellation of strikes and settlement of them, did the membership vote on that?"

The question was asked by Mr. Hallinan. The answer is Mr. Bridges':

> "At that time, yes. At that time in the general sense of an official strike, yes, but the strike I am talking about, [8431] the Matson strike, which occurred in October of 1933, the early part of October, there was no vote taken on that."

If that is not sufficient to point to the fact that while June better served his purpose, October was the date of the strike, let me again quote from Volume 42 of the record, page 4500 on the direct examination, the examiner being Mr. MacInnis and the witness being defendant Henry Schmidt.

> "Q. I am sorry. Was there any event in the early fall of 1933 at which time the men renounced their membership in the blue book union?
>
> "A. (By Mr. Schmidt): There was a strike on the Matson docks. It was pretty well along in the year, a strike that was of short duration. I think it had to do with the dismissal of four or five men, and I do not recall whether they were dismissed because they had joined the new union or not. In any case, I recall they were reinstated, and after they gave considerable more impetus to the organization of the new union.

"Q. I am going to show you a photostatic reproduction of the San Francisco News of October 10th, 1933, and of the San Francisco Chronicle of the following day, October 11th, and ask you if a reading of those documents can refresh your memory as to the date of the Matson strike of which you spoke.

"A. What was the dates of those [8432] papers?

"Q. The dates are shown on them.

"A. Mr. MacInnis, I don't see anything in the news relating to this Matson incident. Maybe it is in the Chronicle."

Question by His Honor:

"Q. Does that refresh your recollection?

"A. Yes, it does. The date was fairly late in the year 1933. It would be October 10th or 11th or thereabouts."

Now, on this question of Schomaker and when he came to the waterfront and whether or not in the short time he was there he may not have been in a position to have negotiated with his fellow comrade Bruce Jones the application in the Communist Party of Harry Bridges, Mr. Hallinan says in Volume 72 at page 7795, "Here is this man who drifts in from nowhere, starts working on the waterfront, and Bridges, with all this danger and all this suspicion hanging over him, danger and suspicion, by the way, long before he joined the Communist Party, hands over to that man his safety and his right to stay in this country."

Again, on page 7810, Mr. Hallinan:

> "How could he know that any of the people into whose custody this application would fall might not be the very people who were waiting for him, to use it as an instrument to destroy him?"

Quoting from Volume 7, page 819, line 2: The witness is Schomaker, the examiner, myself.

> "Q. Mr. Schomaker, did there come a time when you became [8433] a member of the Communist Party?
>
> "A. Well, there definitely came a time when I became a member of the Communist Party.
>
> "Q. Will you tell His Honor and the ladies and gentlemen of the jury from your best recollection what that time was.
>
> "A. Well, to the best of my recollection, it was the winter of 1931, that is, the fall, the early fall or winter of 1931."

And I pass from that point, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, to observe to you that while it may be true that in the latter part of 1933 or the early part of 1944, when John Schomaker and Bruce Jones solicited and received the signed application of Harry Bridges for membership in the Communist Party, it is true that at that time John Schomaker had not been long on the waterfront. The records introduced by the defendant show that he was initiated into the ILA on the 20th of November of 1933, he stating that he had worked several weeks to get enough money to file his application to join the union. But one thing, ladies and gentlemen, is certain: While John Schomaker may have been relatively new on the waterfront, he was no novice in the Communist Party. He had been a member of the Communist Party since the early fall or winter of 1931.

Now, to pass to another witness, quoting from Mr. Hallinan, Volume 73, pages 7853 and '54, talking about the witness Manning Johnson. Manning Johnson has been called a cobra, black hyena [8434] from hell, perjurer. Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, who says Manning Johnson is a perjurer? Hallinan. Manning Johnson is no child. You observed him on the stand. While it is true that Mr. MacInnis said he would prove that he had been convicted of a felony, as you know, that was not so. It developed that the person named in a telegram received by Mr. MacInnis was convicted of a misdemeanor, was a man dead since 1934. This man has never been convicted of any offense in his life. Manning Johnson, a former member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party, is a material aid to the government of the United States in identifying from his high position in the Communist Party, Communists as they scurry and run for cover. And as I told you ladies and gentlemen of the jury in my opening remarks, do not mistake the fact of the conviction or acquittal of Harry Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, is of minor importance to the Communist Party in comparison to the opportunity which this trial has offered and which Mr. Hallinan has accepted to destroy the ability of those persons upon whom the government of the United States must rely, because of their experience and position in the Communist Party, ever again to testify against the Communists.

Now, what evidence is there upon which Mr. Hallinan usurps to himself the right to call Manning Johnson the names he has called him in this courtroom? Manning Johnson never said that Harry Bridges was in New York on Saturday night, the 27th day [8435] of June. Then why call him a perjurer? I most respectfully say to you ladies and gentlemen of the jury, don't be misled by the purpose, so apparent here not only with Manning Johnson, but let me point to another, Mervyn Rathborne —Mervyn Rathborne, who told you and his testimony is uncontradicted, that he was a member of the top fraction of the Communist Party in the national councils of the CIO, who told you that he was a member of the top fraction of the Communist Party in the California CIO, and who told you that he was a member of the top fraction of the San Francisco CIO Council. Who better than Mervyn Rathborne, with his ten years of experience in the Communist Party—who better than Mervyn Rathborne, with the heights to which he has ascended in the American labor movement, is better qualified to drag these rats out of the holes into which they have been trying to scurry? And don't let Hallinan fool you into destroying him so that his word may never be taken again. [8436]

Examine, if you will, please, the record and ask yourselves, Is Manning Johnson, who has never testified in this trial that Harry Bridges was in New York on Saturday night, the 27th day of June, 1936, going to be destroyed just because Hallinan says that he was a perjurer? Now, let me read what Mr. Hallinan says with reference to Manning Johnson, talking about his appearance before a committee of your State Assembly, which, as Johnson told you, he was called before for one purpose: From his experience in the top echelon of the Communist Party, to tell that committee, so that committee can tell the people of California, the true nature and purposes of this subversive organization. Quote, Hallinan:

> "That is what he was there for. He was not there just to tell a little story. Everybody knows what the general sketch was. What they wanted to do was to get specific things, particularly against the professors at the University of Washington. That is whom they were trying to get. And, my friends, alas, alas, that is whom they did get. That is whom they did get. And indeed, isn't this a curious little thing, too? I do not care where it is, if you are having a meeting of some congressional board down in Tallahassee, Florida, or if you have them up in the tiptop of Scotland, and if you are inquiring into Communist infiltration in Pakhistan, somebody would say to the witness, 'Do you know Harry Bridges? [8437] Have you got anything about him?' It does not matter whether it is Mulholland, back in New York, the captain that Johnson said he first mentioned Harry Bridges to, or a committee in Washington investigating loyalty of their professors up there. Somebody had to say, 'Have you something on Harry Bridges? Is there something we can transmit down to the gang who want to get him? What can you tell us about Harry Bridges?' And knowing that he can say nothing about Harry Bridges to the Canwell Committee, 'Yes, yes, yes, my old friend and comrade, Harry Bridges.' Now, if he had in his mind that tremendously important fact, that worst guarded of all secrets, that thing known to a couple of thousand people, that Harry Bridges had been elected a member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party, wouldn't he have come out and said, 'Yes, I know he was elected as such at such-and-such a convention of the Communist Party'?"

A fair inquiry—if he didn't know, as Mr. Hallinan did, what the record said. Let me quote from the record of Mr. Johnson's testimony before the Canwell Committee:

"Q. (By one of the Committee counsel): Mr. Johnson, here is Exhibit 9, which was introduced yesterday. I will ask you to observe this exhibit and see if you can recognize any of the people there.

> "A. (And here Mr. Hallinan paraphrases with fair accuracy [8438] the record): Oh, yes, yes. That is my old friend and comrade, Harry Bridges. And by the way, he is drinking a toast with Commissar Molotov. Well, well, well. He's in good company. He belongs there."

But that isn't as far as the inquiry went. Let's go a little further, to the next question:

> "Q. Let's develop that testimony a little bit. What makes you say that Mr. Bridges is a comrade? I surmise you are inferring he is a member of the Communist Party?"

Mark Johnson's answer:

> "A. Yes, Harry Bridges is a member of the Communist Party, and in my capacity as a member of the National Committee, I was—I'm in a position to state that"——

He is interrupted by the examiner, who says in the next following question:

> "Q. I think that is enough. Was Harry Bridges ever known under any name other than Harry Bridges?
>
> "A. He was known under the name of Rossi."

Now, Mr. Hallinan would have given you the impression that, having identified Harry Bridges in a picture with Molotov, he went no further. I cannot speculate as to what Manning Johnson would have said had he not been interrupted by the Committee examiner, but I will stand on the record when he said, "In my capacity as a member of the National Committee, I was—I'm in a position to state that——" and he is interrupted by the [8439] examiner, who says, "I think that is enough."

Now, Paul Crouch. Mr. Hallinan stated, page 7862 of volume 75, as follows:

> "However, Mr. Crouch falls precisely into the category that Johnson does, apropos or in face of the Government. After he got out of the Communist Party, where he justifies himself for lying on the ground that he was so instructed and disciplined, he lied under oath before other boards of inquiry. After he had been washed white as snow, he still committed perjury under oath. And when he came in here and testified, these gentlemen knew that he had committed perjury under oath and they treated the jury in precisely the same way that they treated the Attorney General of the United States in this matter."

Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, before turning to the record on that point, ask yourselves this question: What do you think Mr. Hallinan would have said about the witness Whittaker Chambers if he were defending Alger Hiss? Whittaker Chambers, who conceded that on seven occasions after he left the Communist Party, and with respect to matters concerning Alger Hiss, had testified fraudulently and falsely; when Mr. Hallinan can call Manning Johnson a perjurer on the assumption that you will believe it. And I read you literally and actually from the record in my opening statement the testimony of Manning Johnson, who never said that Harry Bridges was in New [8440] York City on Saturday, the 27th day of June.

Now, the record discloses that Paul Crouch left the Communist Party in the spring of 1942, and that the first time he ever gave testimony about the Communist Party was not until his appearance before a subcommittee of the House Committee on Un-American Activities on the 6th of May, 1949; that he appeared on the 14th of May, 1949, before a subcommittee of the United States Senate Judiciary Committee; that he appeared later in the month of May before an executive session of the House Un-American Activities Committee; and that other than these three appearances, in the month of May, 1949, he had never testified before any committee on any subject since he left the Communist Party.

Now, on what basis can Mr. Hallinan stand here before you and say that after having been washed white and after having left the Communist Party, Crouch testified falsely and that we knew it? You know that were there the slightest scintilla of truth in that allegation, they would have brought the records of the committee or committees before whom that perjury was committed, as they did in the instance of the perjurious testimony in 1934, while a member of the Communist Party, before a House subcommittee in Los Angeles of Lawrence Ross. And by the way, Rathborne, while a Communist in 1940 and 1941, before your State Tenney

Committee and before the House Committee on Un-American Activities. [8441]

Again Mr. Crouch. Mr. Hallinan, on page 7861, volume 75:

> "Now, when a person appears and tells you that he was a private in the United States Army, convicted of some crime and sentenced to twenty years (it was forty, as a matter of fact) in a military barracks, then that is commuted after he has served four or five years (he served less than three), that he took a trip to Europe and they made him a brigadier general in the tremendous Red Army of Soviet Russia; look at him and say, 'What manner of man be this? Is this true or is this some sort of fantasy?' "

Let's turn to the record, volume 24, page 2744, under cross-examination of Mr. Crouch:

> "Q. And as I remember, you were sentenced first to a 40-year term at hard labor, is that right?
>
> "A. I do not think it is in the record, but it is correct.
>
> "Q. And then that was afterwards commuted to three years, is that so?
>
> "A. That is correct.
>
> "Q. In that period, how long or how much thereof did you spend in Moscow?
>
> "A. I spent in Moscow and in other parts of the Soviet Union from just before Christmas of 1927 until the end of April, 1928—approximately four months. Not all of this time was spent in Moscow. Some of it was spent in other cities. [8442] And also spent some time with the Red Army, as a representative of the Young Communists' International at the Budenny Division, station at Tambov, where I was made an honorary regimental commander of the Red Army, with the rank equal to that of colonel."

Shall we take the recess, if your Honor please?

The Court: We will take the noon recess until two o'clock, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition, not to discuss the case under any condition.

(Thereupon a recess was taken until 2:00 p.m. this date.) [8443]

Afternoon Session, Thursday, March 30, 1950

Mr. Donohue: In the light of that somewhat unusual statement made by Mr. MacInnis to the effect that he would do anything to win this case, I call your attention for your determination to the explanation given by Mr. Hallinan for his failure to cross-examine the witness George Wilson, the executive secretary of the Bridges Defense Committee during those four crucial years from 1941 to 1945. Mr. Hallinan, in describing the apparent agony of soul that we can all understand was George Wilson's, forgot intentionally that he made a second appearance. But the thing that struck me most about Mr. Hallinan's explanation for his failure to cross-examine George Wilson in the light of his cross-examination of others was Mr. Hallinan's statement that he did not cross-examine George Wilson out of a spirit of kindness. The kindness of Mr. Hallinan, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, is the kindness of the old lady who always warmed the water before she drowned the kittens.

There is one other matter concerning which I think I should say something to you. Mr. Hallinan sought to make you believe that the money that was paid by the Treasurer of the United States to Mervyn Rathborne for the period of time during which he appeared before the grand jury was paid first unlawfully and illegally and constituting a fraud upon the Treasurer [8444] of the United States by Mr. John Boyd, by trying to give you the impression that Mr. Boyd certified to those payments with respect only to the four occasions on which Mr. Rathborne physically appeared before the grand jury, neglecting to read the complete certification of Mr. Boyd, which reads as follows:

> "The certification mentioned in the first paragraph above includes dates on which the witness actually appeared before the grand jury and/or dates that the witness was absent from his home."

And if you recall—and they are in evidence here—the certification covers the following days and dates on which Mr. Rathborne was either physically in attendance before the grand jury or was actually here in San Francisco counseling and advising as an expert on the subject of Communism those who were presenting the matter to the grand jury. The dates contained in the certification here are May 11, 12, 14, 15, ~~16, 17, 18,~~ 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 28, 31, June 1, 2, 6, 7 and 8. Mr. Hallinan sought to persuade you to the opinion that these were not payments made under the statute for the statutory amount payable to expert witnesses, but that what actually had been paid Rathborne was a thousand-dollar bribe, and that the prosecution then fixed up the dates for the appearance of Mr. Rathborne before the grand jury so as to equal the amount of a thousand dollars. The amount actually paid by the marshal upon this certification was $1000.50, but to believe what Mr. [8445] Hallinan said you would have to believe that we knew that counsel then for Mr. Bridges, accompanied by others, was going down to Half Moon Bay to dissuade or persuade Mr. Rathborne from testifying or to learn the subject matter of his testimony, in consequence of which we later in June called him back before the grand jury in order to tell the grand jury of that experience.

Then to make it more complete, Mr. Hallinan said to you, volume 70, page 7607:

> "Now, you remember that she (referring to Betty Teixeira) said that Rathborne told her he had won a thousand dollars playing poker on the ship. She could not possibly have known at the time she testified here that the records of the marshal's office show that around that time Rathborne had received precisely $1000, so there is from outside some concomitant that sheds the light of truth on what the girl said."

Well, that sounds pretty logical except that it is not supported by the record. The records of the marshal's office in evidence here as defendants' Exhibit L-4 reveal that payments made to Mervyn Rathborne for his appearance before the grand jury began on May 11, 1949, and continued intermittently through June 8, 1949, aggregating, as I stated, the sum of $1000.50.

Now, let us turn back to volume 66 of the record at page 7235 and 7236, and see whether or not it was around that time that Betty Teixeira testified she saw Mervyn Rathborne with [8446] a thousand dollars which he said he had won in a game on a ship. These questions are asked by Mr. MacInnis:

> "Q. Toward the end of 1948, after the reelection of President Truman, did you have any meetings with Mervyn Rathborne?
>
> "A. Just immediately prior to the election I saw him at a Democratic luncheon. I think it was the Sunday before the election, and he looked a little better then. I asked him if he had gotten his financial troubles settled all right, and he said that he had, that he had gotten the loan on his house taken care of, and that he had won a great deal of money while at sea.
>
> "Q. Did he say how much he had won?
>
> "A. He said a thousand dollars he had won in cash."

That took place on the Sunday preceding the election of Mr. Truman, by her own statement, in November of 1948, and therefore it does not coincide with Mr. Hallinan's statement to you that her statement about the $1000 proves the bribe paid to Rathborne because it occurred at about the same time. It was at least six months prior to the first appearance of Mervyn Rathborne before the grand jury that Mrs. Teixeira testified that he told her that he had won a thousand dollars on the ship, and, of course, as you know from the record here, in November, 1948, this case had not yet reached the stage where it had even been presented in any fashion before a grand jury in this district. [8447]

There are many more matters which, if time permitted, I would like to direct your attention to. I must say, however, there I must hazard the risk that you, in your recollection of the testimony, will be able to point, even as I have here, to the difference between the unsworn statements of counsel and the record on the same subject; because I am not going to fall into the error of my opponents by spending all of the time allocated to me in finding fault with what they have said. I think I should say to you in the faith which I have in this prosecution that I should call to your attention again, even as I did in my own opening statement to you on the 16th day of this month, the factors which I think you should consider in arriving at your verdict.

I asked you this question at that time: Who said Harry Bridges was a member of the Communist Party? And I called off the roll: John Schomaker, Henry Schrimpf, Mrs. Irene Harris, Stanley Hancock, Charles Krolek, Paul Crouch, Manning Johnson, Lawrence Ross, Lewis Michener, Mervyn Rathborne and George Wilson.

And I asked you at that time: Who, on the other hand, has told you that Mr. Bridges was not a member of the Communist Party, who could have been in a position to know? And I call the roll as: Bruce B. Jones, Jean Murray and Harry Bridges.

Now, let me ask you the question: Who said Henry Schmidt was a member of the Communist Party? John Schomaker, Henry [8448] Schrimpf, Stanley Hancock, Mervyn Rathborne and George Wilson. And who said Henry Schmidt was not a member of the Communist Party? Henry Schmidt.

Who said J. R. Robertson was a member of the Communist Party? Mervyn Rathborne and George Wilson. And who said J. R. Robertson was not a member of the Communist Party? J. R. Robertson.

Now, it is for you and for you alone to determine two things: number one, what degree or what measure of credibility will you assign to the testimony of any witness who has testified before you? Your opportunity to observe the witness under examination, both direct and cross-examination, and the conclusion that you reach as to whether or not in the light of the reaction of that witness and the statements of that witness in relation to the statements made by other witnesses whose credibility you have accepted. It is your sole province to determine what degree of credibility shall attach to any witness, and that includes the defendants.

It is also your province and yours alone to determine when the point is reached where the evidence which you have heard has removed the presumption of innocence which attaches to these, as to all defendants, and has removed the reasonable doubt which attaches to these defendants, as to all defendants. And when you have determined from the degree of credibility which you attach or assign to the testimony of the witnesses [8449] that the proof of guilt has overcome the presumption of innocence, has overcome the doctrine of reasonable doubt, then of course, it is your province and your duty to return a verdict of guilty.

In so doing you have the sole right to reject the testimony in part or in whole of any witness or witnesses who has appeared before you. I believe His Honor will instruct you that where a jury finds that a witness has testified falsely about a material fact concerning which he may not well be mistaken, it is the liberty of the jury to disregard any or all of the testimony of that witness, or to accept such portions or parts of that testimony as they may deem credible. I say that to you for this reason: If you should still have a reasonable doubt in your mind to which these defendants are entitled to the benefit, on the question as to whether or not the witnesses Ross, Johnson and Crouch, testifying that Harry Bridges was elected a member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party in 1936, you have a right to reject any or all of the testimony of those witnesses. And I say to you in all earnestness, that if you do have a reasonable doubt on that part of the evidence, you must give the defendants the benefit of that doubt. And I say to you at the same time that a reasonabe doubt on that portion of the evidence can not affect your determination as to the guilt or innocence of these defendants on the testimony of all other witnesses, because, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, there are [8450] witnesses who have testified before you that all of the skill of the defense has left untouched, and their testimony unsullied. I shall refer to them as Mr. John Schomaker, Mrs. Irene Harris, Mr. Stanley Hancock, Mr. Charles Krolek, Mr. Lewis Michener, Mr. George Wilson and Mr. Mervyn Rathborne.

Now, let's take a look in a chronological way of how the evidence points to the inescapable conclusion that Harry Bridges has been a member of the Communist Party since that day testified to by John Schomaker, when they accepted his application in that restaurant here in your city. It is a peculiar thing about Mr. Bridges and all the testimony and all the statements you have heard about him; they always begin with the year 1933. How little has been said of Mr. Bridges prior to 1933. The beatification or canonization or deification, if you wish to call it, of Harry Bridges always begins in the year 1933, with Mr. Bridges' activity on the waterfront for the betterment of the conditions of his fellowman. Well, Mr. Bridges was on the waterfront from 1923 until 1933 as a member of a star gang, working as a longshoreman, and no one ever heard of him. But Mr. Bridges is perfectly willing to accept all the credit for all of the improvements in the social and economic conditions on your West Coast waterfront from the time when they first begin to talk about Harry Bridges, 1933.

Don't you think, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, that one other man might be entitled to a little bit of the credit [8451] so readily accepted and worn as a mantle by Mr. Bridges? Aren't the incidents of 1933 too close to your recollection and mine as to make it impossible to forget Franklin D. Roosevelt? Doesn't 1933 bring to your mind, as it does to mine, the beginnings by that typical American constitutional way of a social revolution in the United States? When, through the leadership and the inspiration of Mr. Roosevelt, with the support of the American people and the American Congress, the dignity of labor was recognized and the worth of a man compensated for, and all of the great social reforms which we have known in the last 17 years began to be unfolded. But Mr. Bridges wouldn't give Mr. Roosevelt any credit for that. Mr. Bridges will assume the credit himself.

Now, let's see how closely what has happened fits into the pattern of the evidence. Bridges, unknown in 1933; Bridges, who testified in the strike in 1934 that he was made the chairman of the strike committee because of his strike experience in New Orleans in 1921. An experience of a few days. But, as Mr. Bridges said, he brought with him his picket card that he had carried in the picket line and that was his experience. He wasn't the president of the ILA, now the ILWU, at that time. He was just a worker on the waterfront. But Bridges could talk, even back in 1933. And his cleverness and his cunning was well recognized, because just as John Schomaker told you, he was the frequent subject of discussion [8452] among the leaders of the Communist Party, including Sam Darcy, who were looking for a revolutionary with a gift of talk. And when he heard all the peaens of praise about the glibness of Bridges from John Schomaker and others, Darcy said, "Go down and get him," and Bridges said, or Schomaker said, "We went down and we got him."

Then came the 1934 strike. Bridges didn't need any help in the 1934 strike,—help in the sense of advice. He was an expert from the experience of a few days on the picket line in New Orleans. And he wouldn't recognize that Sam Darcy of the Communist Party or anyone else could give him advice, though he would accept their food and money. And we all know what the conditions in 1934 were, because the great social reform was only still in its formative stages, and we know that hunger and want and cold and depression were rampant. We know that the conditions were idea for sowing the seeds of a revolution, and don't forget, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, the San Francisco general strike of 1934 was the beginning of the revolution in this country. Else why do you suppose Earl Browder came from the heights of his position in the Communist Party in New York to meet in a prune orchard with the leaders of the revolution here? You heard Schrimpf testify after the general strike had ended and he and Darcy went back to New York, of the bitter tirade that Darcy received from Browder. He told you that Browder walked up and down the office like a caged lion, [8453] angry because the party here had not continued the San Francisco general strike, which they hoped in those unfortunate days of want and suffering, would be the beginning of a wave of revolution that would sweep from the Pacific until it engulfed the Atlantic.

And then came the strike of 1936. But before that, the end of the 1934 strike, the Communist Party had made its deal with Harry Bridges. "To you, Bridges, the power; to us, the obedience." They not only had Harry Bridges but through him and his comrades they had his union, lock, stock and barrel, body and soul. But that wasn't enough. In the following year they started to reactivate or crawl into the Maritime Federation of the Pacific. The Communist Party wasn't satisfied with the control of the longshore union. It wanted control of the maritime industry, first of the Pacific Coast, then of the Gulf, when they sent Robertson and his crowd down to proselytize and organize for the Communist Party—and then to the East Coast.

Control of the maritime unions in the United States was the objective of the Communist Party, and they did get control of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific, with it local district No. 2 controlled by Bridges as president and Mervyn Rathborne as secretary.

But something went wrong in the Maritime Federation of the Pacific, and along came the CIO. And it looked like the ideal mass organization for the Communist Party to take over. And [8454] Bridges and his crowd of Communists scuttled for safety in the CIO—until it reached the point in 1939, in a national CIO convention in your own city, when John L. Lewis said, "No rising young Communist is going to get any place in the national CIO. I abolish the volish of West Coast director of the CIO. You, Mr. Bridges, from this point (he then holding that position) will be director of the CIO from the State of California."

And then came the '36 strike, and Bridges was right; he didn't need any advice from the Communist Party in 1936. He knew as much as anyone could know about how to conduct a strike. But the Communist Party had an interest in that strike as they have an interest in every strike—when it is going to begin, how long it is going to continue, where it is going to end and the courses it will take during its duration. And again, in exchange for the power which he wanted and they gave him, he gave his obedience. And Mr. Rathborne told you of the almost daily meetings between Schneidermann and/or Lambert, himself and Bridges in the house up on North Point Street, again with Bridges being chairman of the strike committee and Rathborne its secretary.

And it doesn't end there. You don't forget, in 1943, at the national CIO convention in Pittsburgh, Mr. Bridges, who as always when he gets in a corner and can't justify on any sound basis an act presented to him, says, "I made the decision, the decision to remove Phil Connally;" a Communist, the present [8455] editor of the Los Angeles Division of a Communist newspaper. He had just been elected president of the California CIO Council, but because the Communist Party were getting frightened in 1943 that the CIO would eradicate them entirely, decided they had better slow down, as Bridges said, and work from beneath and pay homage to the decisions of the top. And they decided to knuckle down and remove Phil Connally, recently elected, and replace him by a man named Thimmes. Bridges [8455-A] said, "I made the decision." And the witness named Lewis Michener appeared here and testified that he was present at a meeting of Communist Party members in the Bellview-Stratford Hotel in Philadelphia at which Roy Hudson, the national Trade Union Director of the Communist Party, told them the necessity and the reasons for the removal of Phil Connally, and Phil Connally was there present and so was Harry Bridges.

There has been a lot of talk, a lot of testimony about that meeting, but you have not heard from Mr. Connally, and I ask you, sir, if you were accused of being at that Communist Party meeting in the Bellview-Stratford Hotel and the subject of the meeting was Mr. Connally, would you bring him to testify for you? It is all right for Mr. Hallinan to say if Bridges went to any meetings, though he does not concede here that he did, they were meetings to discuss labor problems, and it might be that most or all of the people there were Communists, he was not; he was just there because of his labor interest. Do you think that that meeting in the Bellview-Stratford Hotel was a meeting for the purpose of discussing a labor problem? Don't you know that it was the local reaction in District 13 to a mandate from the Communist Party headquarters in New York handed down to the Communist Party members present at this meeting in the Bellview-Stratford Hotel? And so I most respectfully say to you if you go back to the very beginning when Harry Bridges was pulled from anonymity by the [8456] Communist Party in late 1933 or 1934 and review his rise in the light of the evidence which you have heard here, the conclusion is inescapable that Mr. Bridges is and has been since that incident testified to by John Schomaker a member of the Communist Party. No one, least of all I, would ask you to find a verdict of Guilty against any one of these three defendants upon the theory of guilt by association concerning which so much has been said by Mr. MacInnis. Sometimes clever lawyers use the term "guilt by association" when the fact of the matter is it is an association of the guilty. Now, when this pattern fits so closely into the evidence and is so closely wound about Mr. Bridges, I can see no way whereby any person can escape the inescapable conclusion of the membership of Mr. Bridges in the Communist Party. No one, certainly not I, looking to Mr. Bridges' testimony on certain subjects, would ask you to find on your oaths as American jurors that because during the period of the Nazi-Soviet peace pact from 1939 until 1940 that Bridges agreed with the then theory of the Communist Party that the war between Germany and the Allies was a materialistic war and not the concern of the United States, to find from that fact that Mr. Bridges was a member of the Communist Party. There were many people who undoubtedly believed, as Mr. Bridges stated his belief and believed so honestly and sincerely, and would have believed so whether it was or was not the position of the Communist Party; and [8457] so, too, I say to you that the mere fact that Mr. Bridges, after the Nazi attack on Soviet Russia, then went all out for the war, which then became a people's war, and for following Russia and the Allies, just as did the Communist Party—I wouldn't ask you on that kind of evidence to find Mr. Bridges guilty as a member of the Communist Party, because there were lots of people who did not know, and who did not care what the Communist Party view on that subject was. Nor would I, because Mr. Bridges as early as 1943 demanded a second front in Europe, even though we were not then prepared for that assault, and even though at that time the Communist Party was demanding a second front in Europe, I would not ask you to find Mr. Bridges guilty of being a member of the Communist Party on that fact alone, because there were lots of people who did not know or care what the view of the Communist Party was who were for a second front in Europe, and at the same time. Nor would I, because both the Communist Party and Mr. Bridges agreed in their opposition to the Marshall Plan, suggest to you that it would be fair to ask an American jury to find on that fact alone that Mr. Bridges was a member of the Communist Party, because there are lots of people who neither know nor care the views of the Communist Party on this subject who are also opposed to the Marshall Plan. Nor would I ask you, because of the views which Mr. Bridges has expressed with respect to the American position within the United Nations, not even though it may concur with the view [8458] of the Communist Party, to find Mr. Bridges guilty of being a member of the Communist Party on that fact alone, because there are likely others who also so agree with Mr. Bridges, not knowing and not caring whether their views happen to be in accord with the views of the Communist Party. Nor would I say, and you heard him over a long examination and cross-examination, that because in the ten days that he was on the stand Mr. Bridges had nothing but criticism for all the institutions that we recognize as American, that you should find from that fact alone that Mr. Bridges is a member of the Communist Party, because they too criticize our American institutions. Nor would I at the same time, because during that same period of time, although given countless opportunities, Mr. Bridges failed to criticize either the Communist Party or the Soviet Government, and ask you on that fact alone to find that Mr. Bridges is guilty as a member of the Communist Party, because there may be many persons and for many reasons in this country of ours, with its right of freedom of speech and freedom of thought, who may share his views.

But, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, when you add them all up, when you consider, and it has been made pretty evident here, Mr. Bridges' activities since the morning he signed his name to that little piece of paper in a restaurant on Market Street, which was carried by Bruce B. Jones and John Schomaker to Sam Darcy, every act of [8459] Harry Bridges is consistent with but one positive conclusion: membership in the Communist Party. And I most respectfully say to you that the evidence of the membership of Harry Bridges in the Communist Party as of the 17th day of September 1944, when he falsely swore to the contrary, that false swearing being the basis of this prosecution, that as of that day Mr. Bridges was and had been a member of the Communist Party, and the evidence shows it so overwhelmingly that there cannot be in the mind of one of you ladies or gentlemen a scintilla of doubt.

May we take the recess at this time, your Honor?

The Court: We will take the afternoon recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you.

(Recess.) [8460]

Mr. Donohue: You are tired and I am tired, and I shall keep my contract. We shall finish at or about 4:00 o'clock.

If there be in the mind of one of you a lingering doubt as to the guilt of Harry Bridges, just consider for a moment his own conduct since this trial began. And I refer to one little incident which itself is more convincing that a sermon. Just at the time that John Schomaker was forging a chain of events which has never been broken, Harry Bridges went to the apartment of Jean Murray. Why? Was it to prove his innocence? Or was it for the reasons that subsequently developed to an attempt to close and silence the lips of the witness he feared, Mervyn Rathborne?

Let me read to you from page 7782 a very brief comment in the record by Mr. Hallinan, speaking of Bridges:

> "He can not even trust the wife with whom he resides. Can not trust anyone, literally, my friends. His brothers and sisters, his friends, his children, his associates, anyone."

We trust people, you and I. What is eating at Mr. Bridges' soul that makes it impossible for him to trust even those who are tied to him by the ties of flesh and blood? The answer is simple: His membership in the Communist Party, which he has sought, and well, to conceal over these many years.

Soon I can lay down my burden and you must assume yours. And I am sorry that I must disappoint Mr. MacInnis and that I shall not wave the flag. It isn't necessary. I wouldn't insult [8461] the intelligence of an American jury by engaging in an appeal to patriotism, which I did not interject, nor prejudice, of which I know none. Because this verdict must be an American verdict, based on intelligence, based on reason and understanding, and based on evidence. And as you meet to assume your portion of the responsibility for these proceedings, remember that on the small point as to whether or not John Schomaker in the few months after his discharge from the Marine Corps and after the earthquake in Santa Barbara, worked as a hod-carrier, that they brought a witness here to testify that John Schomaker didn't belong to the hod-carriers' union. And on the small point as to whether or not John Schomaker had any terminal leave when he left the veterans' administration in October of 1933, they brought here the keeper of the records.

A great deal of the testimony here, on the very important question of Bridges' membership in the Communist Party, arose out of a dispute between Mervyn Rathborne and Lou Goldblatt. And George Wilson and Mervyn Rathborne told you that the dispute was never settled until Schneidermann called a meeting of the Communist Party to solve the problem between his comrades and brothers. And not later than yesterday Mr. MacInnis said to you, "Lou Goldblatt is a fine young man. He owns a home up here on some street in San Francisco." But why didn't they bring him here? He is secretary-treasurer of Mr. Bridges' union, the man who put the lash on the shipowners, the man with [8462] whom they had luncheons before they came here to testify. Why isn't he here?

And if you were charged with membership in the Communist Party and the district organizer for this district for the last 14 years or more was your friend, Bill or Will Schneidermann, would you have brought him here? Do you suppose, when Mr. Bridges testified that he talked twice to Schneidermann about getting help for his defense, he didn't ask him, "Can't you come down as district organizer and tell this jury that I am not a member of the Communist Party? You know the extremes to which these people have gone in their defense. You remember the day when Mr. MacInnis made the to-do about "Where's Darcy and where does he live," and in your presence asked me for his address; and you saw me give it to him. But he is not here to testify.

You heard Mr. Bridges condemn a member of the Immigration Service on an allegation that he sought to obtain the testimony of a witness in exchange for a cure for cancer. Herman Mann—the same Herman Mann at whose house Henry Schrimpf and John Schomaker said Harry Bridges attended a Communist Party meeting to discipline Norma Perry. And I challenged Mr. Bridges then, "Bring him here." But he didn't testify.

And where is Walter Lambert and Archie Brown and Slim Connally and "my dear and intimate and longtime friend, Jack Shaw." [8463]

Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, when you go to the juryroom seek in your own conscience and in your own intelligence for the answer to those questions.

Now, I am not going to do like Mr. MacInnis did, on page 8220, when he said this to you:

> "If I could reach with such words as I may utter all twelve of you, if I could find in twelve persons a bulwark against the forces of what we know to be prejudice and oppression, of course I would rejoice in that most glorious kind of ending to this most execrable of prosecutions."

And listen to this:

> "But if my words could reach only one of you, and if I found in that one a bulwark > against all that is false and unjust, still I would thank God for that kind of deliverance out of such solitary courage."

No, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I have not lost faith in this prosecution. How much faith does Mr. McInnis express there in the cause he advocates when he seeks to appeal to one of you to hold out against the others? And that was all included in the same papagraph from which I read the opening sentence yesterday:

> "I think, members of the jury, I would do almost anything to win this case."

In asking that you bring in a fair and a just verdict, I am not going to follow the example of Mr. Hallinan who, when asking [8464] for a verdict, made this extraordinary statement:

> "But if you come in with the verdict you should come in with, then up and down the Pacific Coast there will be a quarter of a million people who represent the 70,000 of labor unions that are affiliated under this certain banner and their wives and children; and they will burst out of their doors with delight and excitement and over the whole world the 70,000,000 of the WFTU, the struggling people of many lands will ring bells and dance in the street, because America has reversed the tide and they are satisfied it is not reactionary and they are satisfied that it is not committed to the destruction of the people who would advance the aims of its own and ordinary people."

No, I am not going to ask you to please the World Federation of Trade Unions, the Communist-dominated and controlled organization of which Bridges heads the maritime division. Though only a few paragraphs before the one quoted, Bridges, Hallinan said, refused to join the ACTU at the instance of Father Paul, because he didn't want to sacrifice the independence of his union. Why didn't he want to join the ACTU? The two first initials spell the answer: One, because it was "American," and two, because it was "Catholic." But he didn't mind tying down his union to the obligation of the World Federation of Trade Unions which is Communist and atheist. No, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I am not going to wave a flag. But don't let Mr. [8465] Hallinan fool you when he said in his closing argument, "These few pitiful people who constitute the Communist Party. What are they? 50,000—90,000, or 70,000." [8465-A]

There are enough. That is what Catholic Poland thought, and that is what the liberty-loving Czechs thought, and that is what the Bulgarians and the Hungarians and the Roumanians, the Esthonians, the Lithuanians and the Latvians thought. And where are they today? Mr. Hallinan concludes by saying, "All he wanted, the great crime, all he wanted was citizenship. He wanted to become one of us." Of course he did. The last bulwark against the red wave is this blessed land of ours. Where else could he serve his master better than in America? Of course he wanted citizenship. Of course he wanted to be one of us—to destroy us.

There isn't any sense, as I see it, in teaching children to pledge allegiance to that flag of the Republic of the United States when before they reach the age where they are able to defend it men like Bridges, Schmidt and Robertson would have destroyed it.

Mr. Bridges brags of his respect for the rank and file. Let us put him to the test. You ladies and gentlemen are the rank and file of America. Let your verdict be an American verdict. I do not know what Bridges' reaction to it will be, but I will accept it.

Thank you.

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, the arguments have now been concluded on behalf of the prosecution as well as the defense counsel. In accordance with the indications [8466] that I have given to you heretofore, the Court will instruct the jury tomorrow morning at ten o'clock as to the law. I anticipate that the instructions will take approximately, let us say, an hour and a half.

We will take the recess at eleven, as usual, in the morning, and conclude the instructions in a half hour thereafter. Immediately thereupon, so you will know the procedure, counsel will have the right to accept or object to the instructions, and you then recess temporarily, mindful, of course, that the case is not finally submitted to you until I so advise you. You are then returned and the matter will then rest finally in your hands. So then we look forward to tomorrow morning at ten o'clock, with the same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions or circumstances and not to converse with any person on any subject of the trial, not to form or express an opinion until the matter is submitted to you.

Thank you.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken until Friday, March 31, 1950, at 10:00 a.m.) [8467]

Friday, March 31, 1950, 10:00 o'Clock A.M.

The Clerk: In the case of United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

The Court: Is it stipulated, gentlemen, that the jurors are present?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

Mr. Hallinan: So stipulated.

The Court: I ask that stipulation only as a matter of course; in the light of the stipulation heretofore engaged in by counsel, it was unnecessary to repeat the same.

INSTRUCTIONS OF THE COURT

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, this case commenced on the 14th day of November, 1949, before this Court and jury. However, before the formal opening of the trial I had occasion to pass on many preliminary legal matters and motions incident to the trial which occupied my attention in one form or another since an early date in September, 1949. Some of those motions and rules and orders and decisions have been referred to in the course of this trial. With the exception of intervening holidays, we have been engaged consistently in the actual trial. I am informed that this case is now considered the longest criminal trial in the history of this federal district. I said to you ladies and gentlemen of the jury at the very threshold [8468] of this case, when you were being examined on your qualifications as jurors, "We will be cloistered in a judicial atmosphere looking toward the grave responsibility of administering justice." I strove during the course of these many months to maintain a judicial atmosphere and composure to the end that your ultimate deliberations and the Court's rulings on the law might be engaged in without any rancor, ill will, prejudice or any other foreign thought or matter that might creep into your actual and ultimate findings.

This Court, and you as jurors, are the recipients and guardians of the great heritage. For more than 160 years the federal judiciary has functioned as an integral and independent branch of our government. Since these courts were established in 1789 they have been strong, component elements of the government. Throughout the years they have represented a bulwark in maintaining, defending and enunciating the principles of our democracy. I say to you that no greater privilege could be conferred upon any greater group than has been tendered to you and the jurors and alternates who, as a result of unfortunate illness, were unable to continue as jurors, and your corresponding loyalty and devotion, as evidenced throughout the many months of trial, represent a monumental accomplishment in the maintenance and preservation of these basic traditions of our federal courts.

The defendants on trial, Mr. Bridges, Mr. Schmidt and Mr. Robertson, are entitled to a fair and impartial trial. I say to [8469] you that from the Court's viewpoint this has been accomplished. The trial of the case in its essentials represents the painstaking study of the evidence in the light of judicial rules which are applicable, tested by reason and common sense. The determination of where the truth rests is your ultimate and principal concern. The probing, sifting and tedious screening involving evidentiary matter or matters are now at an end. I trust that you may be able to perceive the truth shimmering like gold in the crucibles of this trial, in the searching light of legal principles applicable.

The witnesses, as you have observed, were in sharp conflict. The defendants called the government's witnesses by various names and in various terms, that is, stool pigeon, liar, perjurer, renegade Communist and the like. The defendants deny that they were or are Communists. Mr. Robertson and Mr. Schmidt deny knowledge concerning Mr. Bridges' asserted membership in the Communist Party, and likewise deny such membership on their part.

On the issue of Mr. Bridges' asserted membership in the Communist Party, eleven witnesses have testified for the government: Messrs. Schomaker, Schrimpf, Hancock, Mrs. Harris, Mr. Krolek, Johnson, Crouch, Ross, Michener, Wilson and Rathborne. As opposed to the foregoing witnesses concerning the alleged membership in the Communist Party, Mr. Bridges, as well as the other defendants, the defendants have offered two witnesses other [8470] than themselves, that is, Bruce B. Jones and Mrs. Jean Murray. These, apart from the character witnesses offered by the defense.

It might be perceived in a case of this magnitude, immaterial issues have crept in which I will undertake, I hope, to clarify as we proceed with the instructions. You have exhibited great and abundant patience at all times as the testimony unfolded throughout these many, many past months. I realize the toll this case has taken upon your physical, mental and emotional welfare. As we draw near the closing stages and your ultimate deliberations, I ask you to accord the same patient, calm, and considered attitude.

It is my duty to instruct you on the law of this case. It is your duty as jurors to follow the law as given to you in these instructions and to apply the law thus given to you to the facts in the evidence before you. It is the duty of the jury to give uniform consideration to all of the instructions herein, to consider the whole and every part thereof together, and to accept such instructions as a correct statement of the law involved. On the other hand, I charge you that it is your exclusive province to determine the facts in this case and to consider the evidence for that purpose. You are the sole judge of the weight, effect and value of the evidence and of the credibility of the witnesses. As I stated, it is your duty to try the case as to the facts, upon the evidence introduced in this trial, and [8471] upon the law as given to you by the Court. The Court, however, has not attempted to embody all of the instructions or all of the law applicable to the case in one instruction or two instructions. Therefore, you must take all the instructions as a composite or as a whole, and in considering any one instruction you must construe it in the light and in harmony with every other instruction given, and in so construing and considering, apply the principles in it enunciated to all the evidence admitted on the trial.

As I have indicated, my exclusive function is to instruct you on the law, and I ask you not to permit, and you must not permit any notion of your own on any other matters referred to by counsel or on any matters referred to by counsel, to obscure the fact that you must apply the law as I have given it to you, as well as the legal pronouncements that I made during the course of the trial concerning various legal issues as they arose. The law does not permit jurors to be governed by conjecture, passion or prejudice, public opinion or public feeling.

From time to time during the course of the trial I deemed it appropriate to caution the jury on legal matters, and on certain occasions I have assumed to interrogate witnesses very briefly. Such conduct on the part of the Court is not only the right but the duty of a trial judge. It does not constitute an intrusion in the function of the jury, but is done for the purpose of seeing that justice is carried out. I have tried to [8472] remain impartial, dispassionate and judicial. I elieve I have done so.

During the course of the trial, the Court has been called upon to make comments in ruling upon objections of counsel and motions made by them. It has also occurred during the trial that the Court has been called upon to admonish and reprimand counsel in connection with the conduct of the trial of this case. The jury shall not draw any inference from any such remarks or comments or rulings of the Court that the Court was intending to convey to the jury in any manner whatever its view or opinion as to what the verdict or decision of the jury should be. Such comments as the Court may have made in that regard were only pursuant to the power and, indeed, the duty of the Court to supervise the trial of the case and to expedite it.

Allusions have been made by the defense to certain irrelevant and immaterial matters concerning the Immigration Department and its procedures and operations regarding matters, things and events other than the investigation and the prosecution of the case at bar. Many of such matters were sought to be elicited by the defense in questions asked and propounded, to which objections were properly sustained by the Court or motions to strike granted with respect to the purported questions. In view of the Court's action with regard to the same, you must ignore the contents of such question or questions and the implication or implications contained therein. This rule applies generally and [8473] equally to all questions to which objections have been sustained or motions to strike granted. You are not permitted to conjecture or surmise what the answer or answers might have been if the Court had not sustained the objections or the motions to strike. In short, the matter of ruling on all such procedural matters rests solely with the Court. That is exclusively my province and you are bound by the Court's rulings on such matters.

During the course of the trial, there have been various and repeated references made to the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Bridges v. Wixon. I have repeatedly held and rendered written opinions herein that the decision of the Supreme Court is not determinative of any legal or factual issue in the case at bar, and accordingly, I advise and instruct you. You are not to draw any inference or inferences with respect to the objections which I have sustained and the offer on the part of the defense to place the decision before you or to have its contents read to you. The admissibility of the opinion is a question of law for the Court. Members of the jury are bound by my determination.

Reference has been made to a civil complaint on file seeking to denaturalize the defendant Bridges, based upon alleged fraud on his part in gaining citizenship on the date or dates in question. I instruct you that the fact that there is now pending such civil complaint is in no wise to have any bearing [8474] upon your determination with respect to this criminal case.

You have listened to arguments by the various counsel. Counsel have a right, and indeed a duty, to argue the case to you. It is your duty to listen and to be attentive and to give respectful consideration to their arguments. However, in their comments upon the facts of the case, if you find there is any discrepancy between what they stated to you to be the facts of the case and the words that have come from the mouth or mouths of the witnesses, you must disregard, if there is such conflict, the statement as to fact made by the attorneys and consider only the evidence given by the witnesses in that regard. On the other hand, however, if counsel have stipulated or agreed to certain facts, you are to regard the facts as stipulated or agreed to by counsel as being conclusively proven.

In a trial by a jury in a federal court the judge is not a mere moderator, but is the governor of the trial for purposes of assuring its proper conduct and of determining questions of law. In charging the jury, the trial judge is not limited to instructions of an abstract sort. It is within his province, when he deems it necessary, to assist the jury in arriving at a just conclusion by explaining and commenting on the evidence, by drawing their attention to the particulars which he thinks are important. However, as I have pointed out to you on repeated occasions during the course of the trial, and I now repeat to you, you are the final arbiters of the fact or facts, and it is solely and exclusively your province to pass upon the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of the evidence. [8475]

There are certain well-defined rules which apply as to how you shall weigh and consider testimony. Many of them are such as these: First, you have the right to observe the witness upon the stand and to consider the impression he or she may make upon you with respect to telling the truth or telling a falsehood. You have a right to observe his or her demeanor, his attitude, whether he appears conscientiously to be stating to the best of his ability the truth, or whether he appears to be suppressing something or coloring his testimony in a manner not to reveal the truth. If the witness has the appearance of attempting to the best of his ability to tell the truth, and other circumstances tend to establish that situation, then you give full credit to his testimony. But if you are impressed that the witness is attempting to hide something or is not telling the whole truth, then you have the right to give only such consideration to his testimony as you may think it entitled to receive.

In considering these matters you are confined to the case itself. You are not entitled to go outside of and beyond those circumstances which this trial developed and make an assumption or reach conclusions with respect to the facts of the case, but you are bound, as you said in your answers to questions when being selected as jurors to try this case, solely upon the facts and the law as have been presented to you in this courtroom. [8476]

I admonished you not to read news articles bearing upon this controversy or to listen to radio news accounts or commentators concerning the trial, and now out of regard for an abundance of caution I charge you that you must not consider in your determination of the guilt or innocence of the defendants, in accordance with these instructions, anything that you may have read or heard other than that contained in the exhibits and the testimony recorded in this courtroom.

If any witness produced before you has displayed what purports to be an almost exact memory for matters occurring in the past, and upon which he was questioned during his direct examination by the counsel producing such testimony, but who displayed an apparent lack of memory concerning incidents, dates, places and details when questioned as to more recent events of equal importance upon cross-examination, it will be your duty to consider such apparent conflicts in the memory of such witness as may bear upon his credibility.

Generally with respect to the credibility of witnesses there are certain rules applicable. The credibility of a witness may be assailed by proof of prior acts or declarations which demonstrate hostility toward the party against whom such witness is called. A witness may be impeached by the party or parties against whom he was called, by contradictory evidence, or by evidence that such witness has made at other times statements inconsistent with his or her present testimony. A [8477] witness, however, is presumed to speak the truth. This presumption, however, may be repelled by the manner in which he testified, by the character of his testimony, or by evidence affecting his character for truth, honesty and integrity, or his motives, or by contradictory evidence, and the jury are the exclusive judges of the credibility of all of the witnesses.

If a witness is shown knowingly to have testified falsely on the trial touching any material matter, that is, any fact which tends to prove or disprove the defendants' guilt or innocence, the jury has the right to distrust such witness' testimony in other particulars, and in that case you are at liberty to reject the whole of the witness' testimony, except in so far as he has been corroborated by other credible evidence or by facts and circumstances proved on the trial.

If you should find that there are discrepancies or inconsistencies existing in the testimony of any witness or between the testimony of any witnesses, or if you should find yourselves disagreeing over various issues, real or apparent, you should then ascertain whether or not such discrepancies or inconsistencies or such points of difference affect the true issue in this case. Examine such discrepancies or inconsistencies and such disputed points and ask yourselves these questions: How does the decision of this or that or the other discrepancy or other matter in dispute affect the guilt or innocence of the [8478] defendants? Regardless of what may be the truth concerning such discrepancies or inconsistencies, ask yourselves the main question: Did or did not the defendants commit that charges or acts as alleged in the indictment? Is such discrepancy or such disputed point material to establish the main and material issue of fact as to the guilt or innocence of the defendants? If they are not material, if the decision of the same is not necessary to enable you to arrive at the guilt or innocence of the defendants, then such discrepancy or disputed points are immaterial and minor matters, and you should waste no further time in discussing or considering them.

The court has attempted to avoid any comment which might suggest its personal views on the weight of the evidence, the credibility of the witnesses, the inferences to be drawn or the importance of one phase or segment of the testimony as compared to another, and no comment made by the Court has been so intended.

The circumstance that I may mention some of the details concerning the evidence and omit others or discuss certain issues of fact and omit others must not be taken as an indication that one phase of the case is of more importance than another. It is for you alone to determine what evidence you will believe and what weight you will give to it in accordance with my instructions.

During the course of the trial I instructed the jury in [8479] substance as follows: In accordance with the rehabilitation section of the Penal Code of the State of California, Section 1203.4, the offense to which Mervyn Rathborne pleaded guilty many years ago has been expunged or erased from the records. The Legislature of the State of California has seen fit to incorporate such section in the codified law in order to assist in the rehabilitation process of one convicted of felonious conduct or entering a plea of guilty thereto. After the probationary period has expired a certificate in the trial court may be obtained expunging the record of any felonious conduct. Such a certificate has been received in this case on behalf of Mr. Mervyn Rathborne. The record shows that the prior criminal charge or charges against the witness Rathborne were dismissed in September, 1949, or August, 1926. Whatever date may be determined upon, I charge you as a matter of law that the witness may not be impeached as a result of any such prior conviction of felony.

You should look to the interest which the respective witnesses have in the trial or in its results. Where the witness or witnesses has or have a direct personal interest in the result of the trial, the temptation is strong to color, pervert or withhold the facts. The law permits the defendant at his own request to testify in his own behalf. The defendants have availed themselves of this privilege. Their testimony is before you and you must determine how far it is credible. The [8480] deep personal interest which they have in the result of the trial should be considered by the jury in weighing their evidence in determining how far or to what extent it is worthy of credit. The fact that one is a defendant does not condemn him as unworthy of belief, but at the same time it creates an interest greater than that of any other witness, and to that extent affects the quesion of credibility.

It is a familiar rule that the relations of a witness to the matter to be decided are legitimate subjects of consideration in respect to the weight to be given to his testimony.

I further instruct you that the defendants are not required to prove themselves innocent, for the reason that at the outset of the trial they are presumed to be innocent. This presumption of innocence remains with the defendants throughout the entire trial and it stands as a shield to protect them, unless the Government has proved to your minds, beyond a reasonable doubt, each and every essential element in each and every count of the indictment. I further instruct you that the burden of proof never shifts as to the defendants, for the reason that the defendants have entered a plea of Not Guilty, and that such plea puts in issue every material element in each and every count of the indictment. I further instruct you that it is your duty to reconcile the evidence in this case with the presumption of innocence.

The good character of a person accused of a crime when [8481] proven is itself a fact in the case. It is a circumstance tending in a greater or lesser degree to establish his innocence. It must be considered in connection with all the other facts and circumstances of the case and may be sufficient when so considered in itself to raise a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt. But if after a full consideration of all the evidence adduced the jury believes a defendant to be guilty of the crime charged, they should so find, notwithstanding evidence of good character.

I further instruct you that you must view with caution evidence of oral admissions or statements alleged to have been made by any of the defendants. I further instruct you that you are not bound to decide in conformity with the declarations of any numbers of witnesses which do not produce conviction in your minds against a less number or against a presumption or other evidence satisfying your minds.

In order to delineate to the jury what this case is about as to issues and background, I should point out clearly what it is not about. Reduced to its essentials, the asserted case against Harry Bridges as well as the two co-defendants, Messrs. Schmidt and Robertson, is not difficult to analyze from the evidentiary viewpoint. We are not concerned with the following issues that have crept in by insinuation and by indirection, but which may be regarded as immaterial:

First, neither the International Longshoremen's and [8482] Warehousemen's Union nor any other labor organization or association is on trial in this courtroom. The relative merit or demerit of the AFL as compared to the CIO is not a question for determination.

Asserted police brutality in connection with the 1934 waterfront strike as well as the asserted brutality of the deputy sheriffs and vigilantes in connection with strike incidents arising in the San Joaquin Valley and with respect to such other incidents referred to by the witnesses should not be taken by you as tending to prejudice the prosecution in this case, nor should any sympathy be extended to the defendants or either of them by and as a result of such activities. The said issue or issues is and are foreign to the case before this Court and this jury.

The defendants do not contend or assert that any evidentiary matter introduced by the Government in this case was obtained as a result of alleged wire-tapping by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. I further charge you that it is not your function to pass upon the merit or lack of merit of Communism or capitalism, public ownership or private ownership.

Prior deportation proceedings against Mr. Harry Bridges, held before the Bureau of Immigration Examiners, are in no way in issue in this case, nor are any court decisions which have been frequently mentioned relevant issues in this trial. The merit or demerit of any internal controversies between [8483] labor unions or labor leaders are not in dispute.

I think it might be a convenient time, if agreeable to the ladies and gentlemen of the jury, to take a short respite or recess, and I will take up the balance of the instructions shortly thereafter. The same admonition to you, however, not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Recess.) [8483-A]

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen, before the brief respite at recess period, I discussed generally with you the immaterial issues, or the issues which I regarded as immaterial. As I have indicated, they crept into the trial in one form or another.

Now, I charge you to be careful and painstaking that the testimony on the subjects which I outlined and enumerated, and which I regarded as irrelevant, does not distract your attention from the main ~~issue or~~ issues, as defined in these instructions; or engender emotions and sympathy which may make it difficult for you to discern the real and primary underlying issues of this trial.

I charge you to approach your determinations fairly and calmly without prejudice for or against any party herein.

The rule for the exclusion of extraneous matters is most vital in the administration of justice. It is a rule not for the benefit of the Government of the United States. It is a rule for the benefit of defendants charged with the commission of criminal offenses, for, were jurors to be permitted to go into extraneous fields or, in fact, any trier of the fact to do that, no man's life or liberty would be safe. Therefore, it is that we require rigid adherence to the rule that the issues of a case, particularly a criminal case, must be confined to the evidentiary matters submitted in the courtroom.

The motive of the prosecution is not relevant to the ordinary criminal proceeding; the material questions ordinarily [8484] are whether the defendant has committed the act or acts alleged and whether the act or acts constitute a crime. In the instant case, the basic crime charge against the defendant, Mr. Bridges, is that of false swearing. Though a defendant in a criminal case may show by proper evidence the hostility, bias or interest of any witness, the motive of the prosecution in instituting the present criminal action is immaterial unless you believe that such alleged motive constitutes evidence establishing the innocence or guilt of the accused, or the defendants on trial.

Although the indictment has been referred to several times during the course of the trial and read to you at the outset by counsel, I feel that perhaps we should have a closing word about it.

I charge you that, stripped of legal verbiage, the indictment is a comparatively simple document. The first count or charge is concerned with an alleged conspiracy in that the defendants are charged with conspiring to defraud the government by having the defendant, Mr. Bridges, fraudulently petition for and obtain naturalization in the Superior Court of the State of California, by falsely representing to the Court that the defendant, Harry Renton Bridges, had never belonged to the Communist Party in the United States. In pursuance of the alleged conspiracy, the defendants allegedly performed the following overt acts:

(1) On June 23, 1945, the defendant, Bridges, filed a [8485] petition for naturalization;

(2) On August 8, 1945, the defendant, Bridges, and the defendants, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, appeared before a Naturalization Examiner of the United States and gave testimony with respect to the application for naturalization. Defendants Schmidt and Robertson signed as witnesses to the petition;

(3) On September 17, 1945, the defendants, Bridges, Schmidt and Robertson, appeared in the Superior Court of the State of California and gave testimony in support of the petition of defendant Bridges for naturalization.

So much for the first count, the so-called conspiracy count.

The second count is against the defendant, Harry Bridges, alone, and in substance, reads as follows: On the 17th day of September, 1945, in the Superior Court of the State of California, Hon. Thomas M. Foley presiding, Harry Renton Bridges took an oath to testify truly; defendant, Harry Renton Bridges, wilfully and knowingly made a false statement under oath on matters material to the issues of the Naturalization Proceeding when he answered the following questions in the negative:

Q. Do you now, or have you ever, belonged to the Communist Party in the United States?

A. I have not; I do not.

Allegedly Harry Renton Bridges, contrary to his oath and falsely, gave such answers knowing them to be false. In truth and in fact, the defendant Bridges belonged to and had been a [8486] member of the Communist Party from 1933 up to and including September 17, 1945, which was the date of the hearing.

The third count or charge in substance alleges a concert of action as to the two defendants, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, in that they aided and abetted the defendant, Bridges, in obtaining citizenship fraudulently by reason of false testimony offered. The charge in substance is as follows: On September 17, 1945, the defendants, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, assisted Harry Renton Bridges to obtain a Certificate of Naturalization by fraudulent means in a naturalization proceeding before the Superior Court of the State of California at a time when the defendants knew that Harry Renton Bridges had been and was a member of the Communist Party in the United States from 1933 up to and including September 17, 1945. Such fraud consisted in giving false statements and making false representations before the Superior Court with respect to Harry Renton Bridges' membership or alleged membership in the Communist Party during the period in question.

As to the indictment, the formal charging paper, each of the defendants has entered a plea of not guilty, thus placing in issue each and every one of the material allegations embraced in the indictment.

I instructed you at the outset, when you were impaneled as jurors and I have occasion to repeat now, that the fact that an indictment has been returned against the defendant or [8487] defendants in this case by the grand jury constitutes no evidence whatsoever against the defendants.

The indictment in this case is merely a formal accusation. It is part of the machinery by which a criminal trial is conducted under our system of law.

To each of the charges in the indictment, which has been read to you, each of the defendants pleaded not guilty.

By their respective pleas of not guilty, the defendants put into issue every fact material to the accusations brought against them.

The burden is thus cast upon the government to prove the guilt of the defendants to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt.

In the absence of proof of such degree, the defendants are entitled to be acquitted.

Each count of the indictment alleges that "Harry Bridges had in truth and in fact belonged to and been a member of the Communist Party in the United States from the year 1933 up to and including said 17th day of September, 1945."

The Court charges you that dates do not have to be proved precisely as alleged, it being sufficient if the allegations of the indictment and proof as to dates substantially correspond.

I further instruct you that the Government must prove to your minds, beyond all reasonable doubt, the truth of each and every essential element alleged in each and every count of the [8488] indictment and if, from all the evidence in this case, you are not convinced beyond all reasonable doubt of the truth of each and every essential element alleged in each and every count in the indictment, you must return a verdict of not guilty as to such count or counts in the indictment.

I instruct you that, if the evidence in this case is susceptible of two constructions or interpretations, each of which appears to you to be reasonable and one of which points to the guilt of the defendants and the other to their innocence, it is your duty, under the law, to adopt that interpretation which will admit of the defendants' innocence and reject that which points to their guilt.

I further charge you that if you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendants, or any of them, are guilty of the charges or any of them, as embraced in the indictment, then it is immaterial that defendants may have had some helpful, constructive or benign influence on or in the labor movement, or with respect to the waterfront problems or the issues affecting the working classes engaged in longshore or warehouse work. Conversely, you may not find the defendants, or any of them, guilty for the reason that you may believe that their influences or efforts were harmful in the foregoing particulars.

I wish to give you some general rules to aid you in determining the weight of the evidence and how you should judge the evidence. These are somewhat general rules that apply to all [8489] criminal trials in the federal courts. In the first place, it is your duty to approach the case and come to your decision without any sympathy, on the one hand, or prejudice, on the other. At the time you were impaneled as jurors, I told you that, by the filing of an indictment, no presumption arises as to the guilt of a defendant or defendants. I also told you that, to the contrary, it has always been a principle of our jurisprudence that every defendant is at all stages of a criminal proceeding presumed to be innocent, and that presumption continues the jury is convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendants. The burden of proving the guilt of the defendants in a criminal case is upon the prosecution, in this case the Government of the United States of America. That burden always rests with the government and it never shifts to the defendants. Each of the defendants in this case is entitled to the independent judgment of each juror. Even though the defendants are charged jointly in this indictment, nevertheless you must consider the case of each defendant separately, and each of you must give to each defendant your free and impartial and unbiased judgment.

In the trial of the case, it became necessary for both the prosecution and the defense to call upon persons with asserted knowledge of the facts to serve as witnesses. Neither side can control the background, the experience, the associations nor the antecedents of its witnesses. [8490]

In the course of the present trial, many terms have been used by counsel to characterize certain individuals on the witness stand. Such terms as labor spy, stool pigeon, liar, perjurer, reformed Communist, and confessed Communist have been applied to witnesses. In passing upon the credibility or lack of credibility of witnesses characterized by such terms of opprobrium, the jury shall apply the same standards that it utilized for evaluating the testimony of any other witness, in accordance with the instructions given to you herein.

The critical question underlying this case concerns itself with the credibility of witnesses. The defense claims that 11 of the government witnesses are either perjurers, liars, stool pigeons, paid informers, misinformed or badly mistaken. That is to say, the defense claims that all of these witnesses have falsified in one form or another as part and parcel of an alleged conspiracy existing between government agencies and the witnesses. By what rule or rules are you to judge the credibility of such witnesses, as well as the defendants themselves, and the witnesses offered on their behalf in this courtroom?

In order to evaluate the worth of the testimony that is presented to you, you may consider many factors: As I have already indicated, you may consider the circumstances under which the witness has testified, the demeanor or manner of the witness on the witness stand, his intelligence, the connection or relationship that he bears to the government or to the [8491] defense, the manner in which he might be affected by the verdict, the extent to which he is corroborated or contradicted by other evidence, if at all, and any matter that in your view reasonably, considering all the evidence, bears upon his credibility.

You may further recall that, during your impanelment as jurors, and more recently during the arguments, reference has been made to the doctrine of reasonable doubt. And you may further recall that I discussed with you in a very general way matters of intent, presumption of innocence and circumstantial evidence.

The term reasonable doubt means a doubt for which a good reason can be given, in the light of all the evidence. It means a doubt which is substantial and not merely shadowy. It does not mean a doubt which is merely capricious or speculative. Neither does it mean a doubt born of reluctance on the part of a juror to perform an unpleasant duty, or a doubt arising out of sympathy for a defendant or out of anything other than a candid consideration of all the evidence presented.

Without its being restated or repeated, you are to understand that the requirement that a defendant's guilt be shown beyond a reasonable doubt is to be considered in connection with and as accompanying all the instructions that are given to you.

Remember that the defendant or defendants are entitled to any reasonable doubt, as defined, that you may have in your [8492] minds; but at the same time also remember that if you have no such doubt, the government is entitled to a verdict.

In every crime, there must exist a union or joint operation of act and intent, and for a conviction both elements must be proven to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt. Such intent is merely the purpose or willingness to commit such act. It does not require a knowledge that such act is a violation of law.

The law says we have no power to ascertain the certain condition of a man's mind. The best we can do is to infer it more or less satisfactorily from his acts.

A person must be presumed to intend to do that which he voluntarily and wilfully does in fact do, and must also be presumed to intend all the natural, probable and usual consequences of his acts, and conduct.

As concerns the defense offered on behalf of the defendants Schmidt and Robertson, the crucial question is whether or not there was any intent upon the part of either of these defendants to deceive and defraud the Government of the United States.

The asserted good faith, the intent, the purpose and motive of what was done by the defendants Schmidt and Robertson constitute the vital and important element of the case brought against them. Hence the jury may consider any material explanation of their motives and purposes in determining the character of their participation in the citizenship hearing of the [8493] defendant Harry Bridges.

There are two classes of evidence recognized and admitted in courts of justice, upon either of which juries may lawfully find an accused guilty of crime. One is direct or positive testimony by an eye witness to the commission of the crime; and the other is proof in evidence of a chain of circumstances pointing toward the commission of the crime by the defendant and known as circumstantial evidence.

The law in regard to circumstantial evidence is this, briefly:

In order to justify a jury in finding a verdict of guilt based on circumstantial evidence, the facts and circumstances must not only be consistent with each other and with the guilt of the defendant, but they must be inconsistent with any reasonable theory of the defendants' innocence that can be predicated on the evidence and must show the defendants' guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.

In other words, not only must each fact relied upon to show guilt be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, but such fact must be consistent with all the other facts introduced in the chain of circumstances, and must further be inconsistent with any other rational conclusion than that of the guilt of the defendant or defendants.

In other words, in order to award a verdict of guilty based on circumstantial evidence, the jury must find that the facts [8494] and circumstances are consistent with the guilt of the defendants and no other reasonable conclusion but that of guilt can be drawn from the evidence.

If you find, in this case, that every circumstance relied upon as incriminating is equally compatible with the innocence of the defendants, then there has been a failure of the proof necessary for the defendants' conviction and your verdict must be not guilty.

As to the issue of Communism, although reference has been made by several witnesses in the course of the testimony in this trial to the asserted purpose or purposes of the Communist Party to overthrow the Government of the United States by force and violence, I instruct you it is not incumbent upon the Government in this case to prove that the Communist Party had or has such purpose or purposes, or was or is dedicated to such alleged violent ends.

In short, the issue on this phase before the Court and jury is simply this:

Was the defendant, Harry Bridges, at the time of the hearing before Hon. Thomas Foley, Judge of the Superior Court, a member of or had he in the past been, during the period of the time mentioned in the indictment, such member of the Communist Party, and did he swear falsely, as alleged in the indictment, at the said time and place, concerning such membership?

The aims, purposes and objectives of the Communist Party [8495] are not in issue under the indictment as framed, nor is it incumbent upon the Government to prove to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that one of the asserted aims or purposes was to overthrow the government by force and violence.

That issue is entirely immaterial to any ultimate consideration under the evidence as to the guilt or innocence of Harry Bridges and co-defendants J. R. Robertson and Henry Schmidt.

From time to time, as you may recall, during the trial and the reception of evidence presented by the government, objections have been made to testimony concerning alleged activities of the Communist Party of its alleged members outside of the presence of the defendants in this case.

Upon the occasions the Court permitted such evidence to be introduced for purposes explanatory of the testimony of particular witnesses, but in each of such instances the Court instructed the jury that such testimony was in no wise binding upon the defendants in the case.

By such admonishment, the Court meant to inform the jury, and the Court now repeats, that the jury may not consider any of the evidence heretofore submitted concerning alleged activities of the Communist Party or of its alleged members taking place outside of the presence of the defendants in this case as tending to show the guilt of any defendant at bar as to the charges for which he stands accused.

You may consider such evidence only for the limited purposes [8496] indicated by the Court, but you must remember that such evidence may not be used by you in your deliberations in support of any finding of guilt, because such evidence is not binding upon the defendants.

Because of the nature of the evidence which has been received during the trial and because of the contentions made by the prosecution and by the defense with respect to the signficances and meanings of such evidence, it is necessary that I instruct you concerning the legal meaning of the phrase "membership in the Communist Party of the United States," as used in each of the three counts as embraced in the indictment. I instruct you concerning the distinction between membership in the Communist Party and certain other acts and conditions, or states of mind, which as a matter of law fall short of constituting membership in the Communist Party.

The law recognizes various legal relationships that may exist between an individual and an organization. I shall not attempt to enumerate all such possible relationships, but among them are such as association between a person and an organization, connections of a business, professional or other similar nature, affiliation and membership. Mere association between an individual and an organization does not constitute membership. The same is true of business, professional, social or other similar connections. A person may approve some or all of the aims or activities of an organition, yet this does not [8497] make him a member. Even sympathy for the program of an organization, or contributions of money do not create the legal status of membership.

The law also recognizes that active cooperation with an organization in its activities does not create the legal status of membership. I have also mentioned the legal relationship which the law designates as affiliation. Affiliation is defined as conduct of a person which indicates an adherence to or a furtherance of the purposes or objectives of an organization. Even affiliation, if you should find it to exist in this case, would not constitute the same legal status as membership, for the reason that membership refers to something more than, and different from affiliation. Therefore, even if you find that the defendant, Harry Renton Bridges, has established or maintained a relationship with the Communist Party of the United States, consisting of association, cooperation in its activities or objectives, or affiliation; but if you nevertheless are not convinced beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty from all the evidence that the defendant, Harry Renton Bridges, was ever a member of such Communist Party in the United States, then I instruct you that the answers given by the defendant, Harry Renton Bridges, in the naturalization proceedings would be truthful answers and the defendant would not be guilty thereby of false swearing as charged in the indictment.

In summary, then, adverting to the former instruction [8498] which I gave, to be a member of the Communist Party within the meaning of that term as used in the indictment, a person must be more than merely in sympathy with some or all of its aims; he must be more than merely willing to aid it in a casual or intermittent way; he must be more than merely willing to accept aid from it in furtherance of his own objectives or the objectives of his labor union. As a matter of law, such sympathies and/or activities as I have just described fall short of constituting affiliation with the Communist Party and as a matter of law even affiliation with the Communist Party falls short of constituting membership in the Communist Party.

If the evidence shows that the defendant Bridges cooperated at times with officers or members of the Communist Party with the view of advancing the cause of unionism, under our law such evidence alone is not sufficient to show actual membership by the defendant Mr. Bridges in the Communist Party of the United States.

I charge you that whether or not the defendant, Bridges, was a member of the Communist Party is a question of fact which you are to determine from all the evidence. In reaching this determination you are to consider all the evidence offered by the respective parties bearing upon this issue.

Membership in the Communist Party may be established by direct as well as circumstantial evidence and by statements or admissions of a party whose membership is in question. [8499]

In this case the government has offered testimony to the effect that the defendant, Bridges, made application for membership, paid dues, and received certificates of membership or books evidencing membership, and that the defendant, Bridges, was elected to office in the Communist Party. Government witnesses have testified that the defendant, Bridges, on one occasion stated he was a member of the Communist Party and suggested that others join the Communist Party. Witnesses have also testified that the defendant, Bridges, was present and participated in meetings, the attendance at which was restricted to Communist Party members.

In determining whether or not the defendant, Bridges, was a member of the Communist Party, you should take into consideration the testimony offered by the government to establish membership, as well as the denials of membership and all other evidence offered by the defendant Bridges.

The primary question, therefore, for you to determine of a factual nature is, was the defendant, Harry Bridges, a member of the Communist Party at any time during the years embraced in the indictment.

If you answer this question in the affirmative, that is, that he was such a member, then it would be necessary for you to determine whether he swore falsely at the naturalization hearing before Hon. Thomas Foley, as more particularly alleged in the indictment. In this connection, the defendant, Bridges, has [8500] admitted herein that the following questions were put to him and that he answered them in the negative; that is, he denied the same:

"Have you been, or are you now, a member of the Communist Party?"

Mr. Bridges' answer was: "I have not; I am not."

The third consideration for determination as to the second count as it affects Mr. Bridges individually is concerned with the materiality of the questions asked and the answers given.

On the question of the materiality of the alleged perjurious testimony, I charge you that before you would be justified in finding the defendants guilty, you must be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt by the evidence presented in the case—

(1) That Harry Bridges did in fact apply for citizenship as alleged in the indictment;

(2) That Harry Bridges appeared before Judge Foley, as alleged, in the naturalization proceeding;

(3) That he was duly sworn, as alleged;

(4) That, after having been duly sworn, as alleged, he gave under oath the testimony as alleged, that is, that he was not a member of the Communist Party and had never been a member of the Communist Party;

(5) That the testimony so given was false;

(6) That Harry Bridges, at the time he so testified, knew of the falsity of his [8501] testimony; and

(7) That he gave the false testimony wilfully and with criminal intent to deceive.

On the question of materiality of the alleged false testimony, however, I further charge you that it is my duty, as the trial judge, to determine whether or not the alleged false testimony was material testimony in the naturalization proceeding before Judge Foley. I charge you, therefore, that if you find that Harry Bridges gave the answers as alleged in the indictment, then such answers were material answers in the naturalization proceeding.

To state it more briefly, whether or not the alleged false testimony was given in the circumstances alleged is a fact question for you to decide. Whether or not the alleged false testimony was material testimony is a law question for the Court to decide. I charge you that the alleged false testimony was material, and that if you find the false testimony was given as alleged, you are not to concern yourselves further with the question of materiality of the testimony.

I further instruct you that a statement upon which perjury may be assigned must have the following legal characteristics:

(1) It must be competent testimony;

(2) It must be material and relevant to the issue;

(3) It must be a declaration of fact, and not a conclusion of the witness;

(4) It must be such that it would properly influence the [8502] tribunal before which it was made, in its determination of the issue under investigation;

(5) It must be false;

(6) Its falsity must be known to the witness when made and must be wilfully and deliberately deposed to.

I instruct you further, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, that under the second count in the indictment, the evidence submitted by the government must be clear, convincing and direct. The guilt of the accused must be established beyond a reasonable doubt by the testimony of two independent witnesses or one witness and corroborating circumstances.

I further instruct you that two elements must enter into a determination that corroborative evidence is sufficient. The first element is that the evidence, if true, substantiates the testimony of a single witness who has sworn to the falsity of the alleged perjurious statement. The second element is that the corroborative evidence is trustworthy.

If either of the foregoing elements be lacking, no perjury will have been proved.

The defendants, Schmidt and Robertson, have been charged in the third count of the indictment with aiding and abetting the defendant, Bridges, to obtain his citizenship by fraudulent statements and representations pertaining to his alleged membership in the Communist Party. So that you may understand the meaning of the charge in this count, I shall attempt to explain [8503] the legal scope and significance of the term, "to aid or abet."

For one person to abet another person in the commission of a criminal offense, it simply means knowingly and with criminal intent to aid, promote, encourage or instigate, by act or counsel, or both act and counsel, the commission of such criminal offense.

With respect to conspiracy. The first count in the indictment embraces the so-called conspiracy count. If the defendants did not conspire to do the unlawful things which the first count of the indictment charges them with having conspired to do, they are not guilty of the offense thus charged against them.

I instruct you that a conspiracy is a partnership in criminal purposes.

(1) I instruct you that a conspiracy may also be defined as a combination of two or more persons, by concerted action, to accomplish a criminal or unlawful purpose, or some purpose not in itself criminal or unlawful by criminal or unlawful means.

(2) If the above elements are not found by you to be present in the case at bar, no conspiracy will have been proved and you must find the defendants not guilty as to the first count.

Expressed in another way, a conspiracy is an unlawful agreement entered into by two or more persons to commit a crime against the United States or to defraud the United States. To sustain a charge of conspiracy, it must be shown that one of the members of the conspiracy did some act commonly called an overt [8504] act, in furtherance of the object of the conspiracy. The overt act need not be criminal in nature if considered separately and apart from the conspiracy; it may be as innocent as the act of a man walking across the street or driving an automobile or using a telephone. But, if during the existence of the conspiracy, the overt act is done by one of the conspirators to effect the object of the conspiracy, the crime is complete and it is complete as to every party found by you to be a member of the conspiracy, no matter which one of the parties did the overt act.

The defendants, Schmidt and Robertson, are charged with entering into a conspiracy.

As in the case of any defendant accused of crime, every material allegation of the indictment must be proved before any verdict of guilt can be entertained.

If the jury finds that there is no evidence whatsoever concerning any conspiracy entered into between the defendants, Schmidt and Robertson, or between them or either of them with any other persons, the charges brought against these defendants must be rejected and a verdict of not guilty must be returned as to the first count.

In order to find the existence of a conspiracy, it is not necessary that you find that all these defendants met together and formed an express agreement, for probably when men enter into a plan of the character here charged, they do not expressly [8505] agree. Much, probably, is left to unexpressed understanding and it is not necessary that there should have been any time at which all met and with any formal expression of words agreed upon a plan or a conspiracy. They are usually entered into more or less secretly and carried out in a manner so as to leave as little proof or evidence for detection by anyone later. Rarely in conspiracies is there direct proof of the purposes and intentions of the parties; but direct proof is not indispensable. The object of a conspiracy and a defendant's connection with it may be partly or entirely revealed as shown by the facts and circumstances and the reasonable inferences and conclusions to be drawn from them. But every fact and every circumstance from which the inference is drawn and a conclusion based must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

If persons act together for a common purpose, and that purpose is the illegal act charged as the object to be accomplished and the acts of the parties so fit together as to show a common understanding or concert of action as to things to be done, that shows a conspiracy.

I instruct you that there has been no direct evidence presented in this courtroom that the defendants or any of them met together and agreed or conspired with each other or with any other persons to defraud the United States Government in any manner as alleged in the first count of the indictment. The only evidence of such a meeting together, agreement or [8506] conspiracy is purely circumstantial, if it exists at all, and therefore the instructions I have just given you with respect to the standards which you must apply to circumstantial evidence are to govern you in your consideration of whatever evidence there is of the existence of the conspiracy, or alleged conspiracy.

I think I should further charge you that all persons working together in the furtherance of a common design are members of the conspiracy, although the part anyone is to take is subordinate, or is to be executed at a remote distance. It is not necessary that each conspirator participate in each step or stage of the common, general design. One of them may do one thing, another may do a different thing. Some may take major parts, while the participation of others may be in a minor degree. The mere knowledge, acquiescence or approval of an unlawful act, without cooperation or agreement to cooperate, is not sufficient to constitute one a party to a conspiracy. It requires more than proof of a mere passive cognizance of a crime on the part of a defendant to sustain a charge of conspiracy to commit it. And you must find that the defendant did some act or made some agreement showing an intention to participate in some way in such conspiracy.

One who aids or abets a conspiracy after its formation, with understanding of its purpose, becomes a party to it. One who comes into a conspiracy after it has been formed, with [8507] knowledge of its existence, and with a purpose of forwarding its designs is equally as guilty as though he had participated in its original [8507-A] formation.

Since the defendants Schmidt and Robertson are charged with entering into a conspiracy to defraud the United States, the question of whether or not they possessed any criminal intent becomes material to the discussions of the jury.

In any crime, as the Court has heretofore explained, there must be a necessary union of act plus intent, and if one of these two elements be lacking, then no crime at all will have been proved.

There is nothing peculiarly different in the way a jury is to consider the proof in a criminal case from that by which men give their attention to any question depending upon evidence presented to them. You are expected to use your good sense, consider the evidence for the purposes only for which it has been admitted, and in the light of your knowledge of the natural tendencies and the propensities of human beings, resolve the facts according to deliberate and cautious judgment; and while remembering that the defendants are entitled to any reasonable doubt that may remain in your minds, remember as well that if no such doubt remains the government is entitled to a verdict.

I further instruct and charge you that the question ~~of pos~~sible punishment of the defendants, or any of them, in the event of conviction, is no concern of the jury and should not in any sense enter into or influence your deliberations. The duty of imposing sentence rests exclusively upon the Court. The function of the jury is to weigh the evidence in the case [8508] and determine the guilt or innocence solely upon the basis of such evidence.

Under your oaths as jurors you cannot allow a consideration of the punishment which may be inflicted upon the defendants, or either of them, if they are convicted, to influence your verdict in any way.

The indictment, as I have already enumerated, contains three counts.

Each count must be considered by you as a separate and several charge against the defendants and, according to such view as you may take of the evidence, you shall return a verdict of either Guilty or Not Guilty on each count.

Jurors are expected to agree upon a verdict where they can conscientiously do so; you are expected to consult with one another in the jury room and any juror should not hesitate to abandon his or her own view when convinced that it is erroneous.

Your verdict must be unanimous. That is, the twelve jurors must agree.

When you finally retire to your jury room to deliberate, you will select one of your number as foreman or forelady, as it may appear, and he or she will sign your verdict for you when it has been agreed upon, and he or she will represent you as your spokesman in the further conduct of this case in this court. [8509]

I further caution you that if it becomes necessary for the jury to communicate with the Court during its deliberations or upon its return to court respecting any matter connected with the trial of the case, the jury should not indicate to the Court in any manner how the jury stands numerically or otherwise upon the issue submitted to the jury. This caution the jury should observe at all times after the case is submitted to it and until the jury has reached a verdict.

Mr. Mitchell has prepared for your use forms of verdict, and you might, Mr. Mitchell, indicate the forms that we have prepared. I think they have been approved as to form by counsel, have they?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: All right.

The Clerk: I have prepared three separate forms, or three separate verdicts, if your Honor please, which, after the title of the Court and the case and its number, read as follows, in the first instance:

> "We the jury find Harry Renton Bridges, the defendant at the bar, ... on the first count of the indictment, ... on the second count of the indictment."

With a place for the signature of the foreman.

And similarly in the second verdict:

> "We the jury find Henry Schmidt, the defendant at the [8510] bar, ... on the first count of the indictment and .... on the third count of the indictment."

Likewise as to the defendant Robertson:

> "We the jury find J. R. Robertson, the defendant at the bar, ... on the first count of the indictment, ... on the third count of the indictment."

With a place for the signature.

The Court: Thank you, Mr. Mitchell. Those forms are prepared, ladies and gentlemen, merely for your convenience.

Under the law I have now completed my formal instructions, and counsel for the government, as well as the defendants, have under the Rules of Criminal Procedure the right, the privilege and duty to make known to the Court any objections or exceptions they may have to the instructions, so that hereafter any objections or exceptions they may have, if necessary, may be preserved in the record. This procedure, of short duration, is engaged in in the absence of the jurors.

Now, there is one little procedural quirk here that I want to make known to you, so you will be thoroughly mindful of it. The case has not been finally submitted to you. When it is finally submitted to you, I shall advise you. In the interim, you are to take a brief recess, the alternate to join you, and I will hear counsel out on the objections and exceptions. You are not to converse about the case, you are not discuss the matter with any person or among yourselves, until it is finally [8511] submitted to you.

Mr. Mitchell, the jurors may now recess temporarily. The matter is not submitted to you. Bear in mind, until your return to this court, that fact. It is not submitted to you until formal deliverance is given to you of the case.

(Whereupon the jury retired from the courtroom, and the following occurred outside the presence of the jury:)

The Court: Is it stipulated, gentlemen, that the jurors are absent from the courtroom?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

The Court: Under the rules, Rule 30 provides in part—I think counsel are mindful of the rule, but I may reiterate the same so there will be no misunderstanding:

> "No party may assign as error any portion of the charge or omission therefrom unless he objects thereto before the jury retires to consider its verdict, stating distinctly the matter to which he objects and the grounds of his objection. Opportunity shall be given to make the objection out of the hearing of the jury."

Accordingly, in conformity with that rule, counsel for the government may now note any exception or objection they have.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor pleases, the government takes neither exception to nor does it make any objection to any [8512] part of your Honor's charge.

The Court: Now, Mr. MacInnis, I appreciate that you will have some objections and exceptions on behalf of the defendants Robertson and Schmidt, and merely as a matter of routine procedure, the original numerical sequence,—and this applies equally to Mr. Hallinan,—may be had and devoted by you in connection with the exceptions or objections, as I will illustrate: "Proffered instruction No. 10, submitted by the defense," and then state your exception or objection. I merely wanted to clarify that.

Mr. Hallinan: And we have the stipulation already that objections made by one will apply to the others, so that it won't be necessary for me to repeat them.

The Court: Is that agreeable, Mr. Donohue?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: All right, the same stipulation, then, is engaged in at the present time.

Mr. MacInnis: Well, may the record now show that on behalf of all three defendants in this case the following objections are made and the following exceptions taken to the charge made to the jury by the trial judge. I will speak first of those instructions addressed to the jury voluntarily by the trial judge, as distinguished from those proposed by the respective counsel.

After speaking first of the background of the case and the [8513] reciprocal or divided duties of the judge and jury, the trial judge first told the jury that they should consider that eleven witnesses testified in effect that Harry Bridges had been a member of the Communist Party, whereas only two witnesses independently of the three defendants testified that he was not. We object to that instruction, and we take an exception to it, because it assumes as a matter of law some duty on the part of the defendants to negative that kind of testimony. It adopts the argument of the special prosecutor made to the jury in this case in which he said that there was some such duty, that, in other words, if there was a hundred people at a meeting alleged by some witness, the defendants should bring all those people here to negative the charge. And as a matter of law, the instruction disregarded the very well-known rule of law that it is the quality of the evidence and not the quantity of the evidence which must be scrutinized. It disregarded likewise the rule, although that rule is stated otherwise by the trial judge, that it is not the greater number of witnesses which will contribute to the weight of the evidence, but rather those witnesses whose testimony produces conviction in the minds of the average listener.

Now, the second objection made on behalf of the three defendants, the second exception which we take, was upon that instruction under which the trial judge informed the jury as to his motives in questioning certain witnesses who appeared [8514] here. That the trial judge has the right to question witnesses is undenied. That is a function of the trial judge. But in the charge to the jury the trial judge made a gratuitous and self-serving statement to the jury, informing them that his motive in asking certain questions was to see that justice is carried out. Now, it is my belief, as a matter of law, that where the trial judge asks questions to witnesses, as is his right, he subjects himself to the same rules that apply to any other person interrogating a witness. In other words, objections may be made to the questions of the trial judge, and just as the counsel in a case may not bind the jury by a declaration as to his motives in asking a question, neither may the trial judge.

We take exception and we make an objection to another instruction following the one just now mentioned, under whose words the trial judge told the jury that the various reprimands of counsel which had taken place in the course of the trial were, to quote the trial judge, "pursuant to the power and indeed the duty" of the trial judge. Now, we object to that instruction upon the ground that, whether that be true or false, it is hardly material to the labors of the jury in this case whether the counsel were correct or whether the trial court was correct upon any matter involving such a reprimand; and upon the further ground that it is obvious to us and must be obvious to the jury from the record that the only counsel receiving such [8515] reprimand were the two counsel for the defense, myself and Mr. Hallinan.

The Court followed that instruction by another instruction to which we enter an objection and take an exception. The Court told the jury that they must disregard certain allusions by the defense to certain irrelevant and immaterial matters concerning the Immigration Department. I make that citation in substantial language, not quoting the Court exactly. By such words the Court told the jury, without specifying what the material was, that they might well disregard all mention in the testimony of the activities of the Immigration Department in this case; and we would hold, as a matter of law, based upon the facts in this case, that the activities of the Immigration Department in procuring and paying witnesses who came here would obviously be relevant to the credibility of any witness who gave testimony.

We object and we except to that voluntary instruction as distinguished from a later instruction from which the trial judge covered the same material, in which he told the jury that it must, conjointly, disregard all references to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the previous matter involving the affairs of Harry Bridges. By his words the trial judge fold the jury that the decision of the Supreme Court was not determinative of any issue in the case at bar, and the trial judge informed the jury at the same time that before we [8516] assembled here in the trial of the case, by previous motions argued before him he had definitely settled that matter. Now, we object upon the specific ground that the intrusion of the subject matter of the Supreme Court of the United States' decision into this trial came first of all upon matters never argued previously in the presence of the Court. One was the doctrine of res adjudicata; previously the doctrine of twice in jeopardy had been settled by appropriate ruling of the Court. We made no re-urging of that particular point. But we argued that the doctrine of res adjudicata, a thing once decided, the same parties and the same subject matter, determined that point. The second point upon which the Court informed the jury that the decision of the Supreme Court was not determinative of any issue involves the good faith of the defendants Robertson and Schmidt. The defendants Robertson and Schmidt each testified without objection, by appropriate question and answer, that among other factors bearing upon their knowledge and beliefs concerning Harry Bridges they had read the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States and had relied upon its contents. By that instruction the Court negatived the power of a later given instruction, by which he properly told the jury that the good faith and all of the activities of the defendants Robertson and Schmidt in relation to it might be considered.

We enter an objection—— [8517]

The Court: Counsel, if I may interrupt you, merely in aid of the record and so you may be specific, you offered three or four instructions on that point.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes.

The Court: And without referring to them by number, are those the instructions that I did not give? Whatever the numbers may be?

Mr. MacInnis: I am speaking now of the instructions given voluntarily by the Court in his own language before coming to the later instructions.

We object and we enter an exception to that instruction given in the Court's own language by which the Court, in informing the jury of the circumstances under which they might reject the testimony of a witness whose testimony in part at least was proven to be false, added the words, with great emphasis, "unless you find that the testimony was corroborated by other testimony or by facts and circumstances proved in the trial." The language of that instruction, as a matter of law, informed the jury that there were such other facts and circumstances, either corroborating or proving the verity of the particular material.

We object and we take exception to a further instruction given voluntarily by the Court upon the same subject matter, in which the Court told the jury that in considering discrepancies in the testimony of witnesses against the defendants, the paramount question always was, Did or did not the defendants [8518] commit the acts charged in the indictment? And substantially, the Court told the jury that if the discrepancies of themselves were not vital to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, to waste no further time upon them, that they are immaterial. The Court, by such language, disregarded the familiar rule that the credibility of a witness is always material to the issue, and by such language the Court invited the trial jury to disregard the ordinary rules for determining the credibility of a witness.

We object and we take exception to the instruction by which the trial court made reference to the asserted expungement of the felony record of the witness Mervyn Rathborne, and told the jury that it was bound as a matter of law to accept the view that the man was no longer guilty of a felony in the eyes of the law and could no longer be impeached by that route.

We object and we take exception to the language of the Court in the following instruction, by which he informed the trial jury in substance of and concerning the three defendants in this case, as follows, quoting the Court, "Temptation is strong to cover, withhold or pervert the facts," in relation to the defendants alone and not in relation to any other witness produced here. We object to that instruction as having no warrant, either in law or in fact.

We object to a further instruction given by the Court in which he told the trial jury that certain issues, which he [8519] later characterized as immaterial, had crept into the trial by insinuation and indirection; because that instruction had the further vice of striking from the case evidence not objected to evidence which came into the case by appropriate question and answer.

Now, we make a general objection and a general exception to the atmosphere of a series of instructions given by the trial court, voluntarily, not upon the request apparently of either counsel in this case, in which the trial judge told the jury that they must scrutinize in certain fashion the testimony of the defendants, but said not a word about such matters as the payments of money to Rathborne. Following that instruction, as a matter of emphasis, were the instructions that the motive of the prosecution is ordinarily not material to the case at bar.

The final objection and exception to those instructions given voluntarily by the Court is taken to that instruction by whose words the trial judge informed the jury that the defense, by great emphasis, had said concerning eleven of the Government witnesses that they were either perjurers, liars, stool pigeons, reformed Communists or misinformed, in substance. By such instruction the Court placed emphasis upon characterizations applied by defense counsel to witnesses in the course of cross-examination and argument; but the Court said not a word to the trial jury concerning the charges made by the [8520] prosecutor based on no evidence at all, that men of our community, such as Walter Buck and the three representatives of the shipping industry, Mr. Pearson, Mr. Brown and Mr. Finnesey were liars, that they had sold their integrity for the profit motive, that they had come here under the "lash of Lou Goldblatt" to give false testimony. The Court did not mention that circumstance.

Now, I have some formal objections, which I can probably repeat more swiftly, to those instructions given as proposed by the respective counsel and upon the failure to give certain proposed instructions.

We object and except to instruction No. 1 as proposed by the government and read by the trial judge. In that instruction the trial judge, in discussing the doctrine of reasonable doubt, used this language, "neither does it mean a doubt born of reluctance on the part of a juror to perform an unpleasant duty, or a doubt arising out of sympathy for a defendant." We think that that language, as proposed by the prosecution and as endorsed by the trial court, negatives and frustrates the proper interpretation of the doctrine of reasonable doubt.

We object and except to the proposed instruction No. 5 offered by the prosecution and endorsed and read by the Court; particularly as it contains this language, referring to the nature of conspiracy and the kind of evidence ordinarily adduced in support of a charge of conspiracy, "for probably when men enter into a plan of the character here charged, they do not expressly agree. Much, probably, is left to unexpressed understanding. They are usually entered into more or less secretly and carried out in a manner so as to leave little proof of evidence or detection by anyone later. Rarely in conspiracies is there direct proof of the purposes and intentions of the parties." The objection to that instruction is upon the ground that there is no basis either in law or in fact for the giving of such an instruction; that it is a speculation which adopts what might well be an argument by the prosecution upon the circumstantial evidence introduced in the case.

We object and except to proposed instruction No. 10 of the prosecution, by whose language the Court in referring to the defendants emphasized to the jury concerning their testimony as follows, "But at the same time it creates an interest greater than that of any other witness, and to that extent affects the question of credibility." The Court by such instruction places undue emphasis upon the ordinary interest of a criminal defendant, and made no mention whatsoever of the matter of interest of the several witnesses produced here by the prosecution.

We make a formal objection and we take an exception to instruction No. 11 in its entirety; that is, instruction No. 11 of the prosecution, as read by the Court, in which the Court informed the trial jury that the question of materiality was [8522] one which the Court decided now, and upon which the jury was bound, upon ~~two bases: One~~, that there is authority for the fact that the question of materiality is one for the jury. The case of Loos v. The United States, in 49 Fed. (2d), coming out of this circuit, represents such a holding. And upon the further ground that under our law concerning materiality, the charge of membership in the Communist Paty is of itself not a material ground for denying citizenship, according to the Supreme Court of the United States.

We object and except to the reading of the prosecution's instruction No. 13, concerning the motive of the prosecution.

The Court: Pardon me, counsel. What was the number?

Mr. MacInnis: No. 13.

We make the same general objection to the proposed instruction No. 15 of the prosecution as read by the Court, upon the ground that there is no warrant under the evidence or the law for those statements.

We object to instruction No. 13, which I have already mentioned, upon the further ground that while in the instruction the Court summarizes the gist of the testimony given by certain prosecution witnesses, the Court makes no such summation of any evidence adduced by the defense, but merely refers to the denial by the defendants.

Now, as to the instructions proposed by the defense, we object and except as follows as to the failure to give certain [8523] instructions. First, as to the failure to give instructions Nos. 1, 2 and 3, upon the ground that the evidence and the law require that they should have been given.

We object, and upon the same ground, to the failure to give instruction No. 6; and we make a special objection and exception to the failure to read to the jury our instruction No. 7 concerning the factor of absence of motive to commit a crime upon the part of the accused, because it is well stated in our law that while absence of motive is itself not a complete defense to a charge of crime, absence of motive is a circumstance which a trial jury ought to consider, along with the other circumstances of the case.

We object to the failure to give instruction No. 11, although, as I might mention, I concede that that subject has been covered by other instructions given by the Court.

We object to the failure to give instruction No. 13 as proposed by the defense, because without such instruction the jury in this case would not be informed as to the presence or the value of the element of duress as assertedly used by the prosecution against any of its witnesses.

Now, we object generally, and we take exception, to the failure to read instructions Nos. 15 to 23 inclusive, upon the ground that they are a full compendium of the ordinary instructions generally read upon the subject of credibility of witnesses. [8524]

We make a general objection upon the Court's failure to read instructions 25, 26, 27 and 30, upon the ground of circumstantial evidence, recognizing as we make the particular objection that in many respects the materials were covered by other instructions given by the Court voluntarily.

Now, we object to the failure to read our proposed instruction No. 32, which has reference to the testimony of the witness Garner, who gave testimony supposedly without notes or memoranda upon an asserted oral conversation with the three defendants in this case several years after the alleged conversation was supposed to have taken place; upon the ground that there is a regulation of the Department of Immigration requiring all of such statements to be in writing, and that the jury should have been informed of that state of our law.

Now, we object to the failure to read instruction No. 38 to the jury, upon the ground of intent, upon the ground that that matter was not fully covered upon the other instructions addressed to that subject by the trial judge.

We object to the failure to read instruction No. 40, upon the ground that it is clearly our law that there cannot be an unlawful conspiracy to obtain that thing to which one is lawfully entitled. In this case the citizenship of Harry Renton Bridges.

We object to the failure to read instructions Nos. 43 to 48, inclusive, and instruction No. 50, upon the grounds heretofore stated, concerning the Court's informing the jury that [8525] they must disregard all mention of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. And we adopt the same grounds already urged.

We object to the failure to read instructions numbered 61 to 64, upon the same ground.

We object to the failure to read instruction No. 66, upon the ground that the law and the facts demanded that that instruction be given.

We object to the failure to read instruction No. 67, upon the subject of character testimony, upon the ground that, though the instructions adopted by the trial judge are proper in themselves, they do not entirely cover the particular matter.

We object and we except to the failure to read instructions 71 to 74, inclusive; 76 to 78, inclusive, and 84; upon the ground that those instructions deal with the presumption of innocence and the proper role of the various parties in this kind of litigation. We think that those instructions particularly should have been given, because of the emphasis placed by the trial judge at the start of his charge upon the fact that eleven witnesses were produced by the prosecution and that the defendants, additional to themselves, their character witnesses and the witnesses concerning the Stockton matter, had only two other witnesses, as a matter of fact.

We object lastly to the failure to read instructions 79 to 83, upon the ground that the issue of res adjudicata should [8526] properly have been intruded in all stages of the case.

The Court: May the record show, then, counsel for the government and counsel for the defense, that all exceptions and objections to the instructions have been noted herein? So stipulated?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: You may return the jury.

(Whereupon the jury returned to their respective places in the jury box, and the following proceedings were had in their presence:)

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, in accordance with the Rules of Criminal Procedure, such cases made and provided for, all objections and exceptions of counsel have been noted in the record. That procedural detail having been accomplished, we now proceed, Mr. Mitchell, to swear in the attaches, the marshal, the clerk and the matron.

(Whereupon the marshal, the clerk and the matron were duly sworn by the Court.)

The Court: I might state for the record that Mr. Mitchell has been sworn by reason of his familiarity with the exhibits in the case. I might state also parenthetically that all of the exhibits have been collected, and I think counsel should have an opportunity to examine all of them before any [8527] or all are permitted to go to the jury room—for the reason that I do not want included therein any matter marked for identification. And, Mr. Mitchell, I think, has prepared a list for the convenience of counsel in that respect.

In the event the jurors desire any one or all of the exhibits, they may promptly call for the same, and the exhibits at all times during the deliberations will be made available to you and to all of you.

The matter of the trial of The United States of America v. Mr. Bridges, Mr. Robertson and Mr. Schmidt, finally rests in your hands. The matter is submitted to you.

Coincident with my submission to you of this case, I now excuse the alternate juror. The rule provides that an alternate juror who does not replace a regular juror shall be discharged after the jury retires to consider its verdict. Accordingly, I excuse the alternate juror, with the admonition and suggestion, and direction, perhaps, that you would maintain a reasonable peace of mind if you reserve any comments upon your feelings in this case, particularly pending the deliberations of the jury. Thank you very much.

(Whereupon the alternate juror was excused.)

The Court: Mr. Mitchell, I respectfully suggest to the attaches of the court that the jurors as now composed, this trial jury of twelve persons, be taken to luncheon, and after a rest—it has been a long morning, somewhat burdensome in [8528] connection with legal matters—after a respite to return to the building and enter upon your deliberations. I understand that a bus or means of transportation has been provided for you, to the end that you will not have to walk from here to the Whitcomb Hotel and return through busy streets. The reason for that means of conveyance must be perfectly apparent to you. It is the desire of the Court to keep you removed from any possible incursion upon your deliberations, to the end that your deliberations be free of any external influences of any kind, character or description.

You heard the oath that I administered to the attachés of this court, as well as the marshal's office. You saw those attachés. They are to provide for your comforts, your wishes and your desires. No person is to talk to you about any matter under any considerations excepting in the specifications as I have outlined in the course of that oath. I ask you to heed that admonition carefully throughout all of your deliberations.

The matter now stands submitted.

(Whereupon the jury retired at 12:45 p.m. to enter upon the deliberation of the case at bar.)

(The following proceedings then occurred outside the presence of the jury:)

The Court: The alternate juror is not to join in the jury room. [8529]

The Clerk: No. I have informed her, your Honor.

The Court: The Court will now stand in recess.

(Thereupon a recess was taken, court to be reconvened as directed by the Court.) [8529-A]

Friday, March 31, 1950—9:15 A.M.

(The jury sent a message to the Court; whereupon the following proceedings took place in the courtroom in the absence of the jury:)

The Clerk: If your Honor please, the jury has made a request that they receive the instructions which your Honor delivered to them today.

The Court: Gentlemen, I have received from Mr. Sweeney what purports to be a true, correct and full transcript of the instructions of the Court, commencing at page 8468 of the transcript and continuing thereafter to and including 8512. At page 8512 it appears that Mr. MacInnis took up under the rule the exceptions of the defense, and those exceptions continue over to and including page 8527. I see no objection to acceding to the request, at least on the part of the Court, if agreeable to counsel and by stipulation, conditioned, however, that the subject matter of the exceptions or objections be deleted from the text of the instructions, for, as it appears, the exceptions or objections would not be a part and parcel of the formal instructions of the Court. May I have your views on this matter, gentlemen?

Mr. MacInnis: This is the entire instructions, Judge?

The Court: That is what they asked for, Mr. MacInnis.

Mr. MacInnis: I do not see any impropriety in granting it. [8530]

Mr. Donohue: We have no objection, if your Honor please.

The Court: Mr. Mitchell, may I ask you with the aid of counsel to examine this transcript. Bear in mind I have not had a chance to edit the same or look it over with any degree of critical comment. I assume it is in form usual with the transcript. They have been ordinarily very accurate. But I would suggest that you aid Mr. Mitchell in withdrawing the matters which I suggested, the matter of the exceptions and objections, to be sure that nothing goes in other than the instructions. So stipulated?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes.

The Court: The record may show the stipulation, and in accordance, the order is made that the instructions of this Court, as reflected in the transcript, be given to the jury through Mr. Mitchell.

(Thereupon the jury was brought into the courtroom, and the instructions of the Court were read: Transcript, page 8468, line 14, to page 8512, line 5; and page 8527, line 10, to the end at page 8529-A.) [8531]

Saturday, April 1, 1950

(During the deliberations of the jury the following occurred in open court, outside the presence of the jury:)

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, Mr. Bridges is not in court.

Mr. Hallinan: No. He was ill last night, and I just sent to phone him. Of course, we didn't know about this. He should be here.

The Court: Yes, I think so. We have a question. Mr. Mitchell, will you read it into the record, please.

The Clerk: The request of the Court is as follows: "May we have Mr. Schomaker's testimony?"

Mr. Hallinan: Well, I think we could stipulate to let them have that, if they want it, if that is all it is.

The Court: The thought I had in mind, consistent with the practice that has been prevalent in these courts, is to have the testimony read in open court. That is, the cross-examination read by counsel for the defense and the direct by counsel for the Government.

Mr. Hallinan: It would take three days.

The Court: Well, let me have the views of counsel on that.

Mr. McMillan: Well, may it please your Honor, I would ask that the defendant Bridges be present if we can have him here.

Mr. Hallinan: Then as far as deciding upon the other [8532] matter, we might decide that.

The Court: I could not make any formal ruling, Mr. Hallinan, in the absence of the defendant.

Mr. McMillan: I ask the defendant Bridges be present before any further proceedings are had.

The Court: I think we might temporarily recess and find out the state of his health.

Mr. McMillan: Yes, your Honor.

Mr. Hallinan: I have sent to phone him now.

The Clerk: Mr. Bridges is here.

The Court: Here he is.

(The defendant Bridges entered the courtroom and assumed his position at counsel table.)

The Court: May I ask of the Government concerning this matter of reading the testimony, what is your view? I think the record is in much better condition and it is more satisfactory to the Court, in the light of the experiences that we have had in this court and other courts, to read the testimony in open court rather than have the testimony delivered to the jury.

Mr. Hallinan: We are agreeable to that.

The Court: Rather than have the testimony delivered to the jury in the jury room.

Mr. Donohue: It is agreeable to us, if your Honor pleases.

The Court: If I may be permitted to continue my discussion, [8533] I would suggest that we read the testimony, say at half-hour intervals, and then recess temporarily, and then continue, or take periods of forty-five minutes so that there will not be too much reading at one time and too much for the jury to assimilate at one time. Is that agreeable?

Mr. McMillan: Yes, it is, your Honor.

Mr. MacInnis: I wondered about this, Judge: It might be that the jury has in mind certain portions of the testimony which they would know, but which they might not be able to convey by appropriate questions to the Court. If they have the testimony with them in the jury room, they might much more speedily arrive at a determination on whatever point interests them in that testimony, because otherwise, if we embark upon your Honor's suggestion, which is obviously a convenient one, to take half-hour recesses, then the testimony of the witness, who was on the stand many days, would be doubled in its length in the reading.

The Court: Well, if the testimony is taken to the jury room, it will require someone to read the testimony to the twelve jurors in the jury room.

Mr. McMillan: It is possible, may it please your Honor, that the jury, as Mr. MacInnis has indicated, only wishes portions. However, there is nothing to indicate that in the request. It may be they want all of it. I think that could be determined easily enough by bringing the jury in here and [8534] finding out if they want the entire testimony or only portions of it read.

The Court: Would you call the jury, please.

Is it now stipulated that all the defendants are present, Mr. Hallinan?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes.

(Whereupon the jury returned into the jury box at 10:23 a.m., and the following proceedings were had:)

The Court: Gentlemen, is it stipulated the jurors are present?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, your Honor.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, you have conveyed through Mr. Mitchell to the Court a request for the testimony of Mr. Schomaker, Government witness. May I ask you whether you desire all of the testimony, direct and cross-examination, of Mr. Schomaker?

A Juror: Yes sir, we do.

The Court: Counsel, the jury expresses a desire to have the direct and cross-examination of Mr. Schomaker read. You may proceed.

I expressed to counsel the thought, and I think it will be agreeable to the jury, that we read or cause to be read about half an hour of the testimony at a time, or forty-five [8535] minutes, and then take a brief recess and return for additional reading. The transcipt is voluminous and may take a little time to read. But in accordance with the request, that will be done, both direct and cross-examination. I further suggest to counsel that probably on the direct examination, Government counsel conduct the reading of that phase.

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Cross-examination to be read by defense counsel, either Mr. Hallinan or Mr. MacInnis. We might go along as rapidly as we can, and if the reading is too rapid for you or for any of the jurors, express yourselves immediately and we will slow down the reading. I think it might be well to hasten the matter of the reading as much as possible, consistent with the clear understanding.

The Foreman: May I be heard on one more thing, sir?

The Court: Yes, sir.

The Foreman: I believe that the testimony regarding John Schomaker is the signing of the application card or obtaining the application card and the presence of B. B. Jones at that restaurant, and the cross-examination thereon, will suffice.

The Court: All right. You have a digest of the testimony, gentlemen?

Mr. Hallinan: Well, we have. We will have to go a block or two away to get it.

Mr. Donohue: We have sent for ours. [8536]

The Court: We might have the reporter, Mr. Mitchell, attend to the transcript and let us have the page. I had a recollection as to the page number, but I think you gentlemen can supply us the starting page in each instance.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, we can find that quickly.

The Clerk: May I suggest a ten-minute recess, your Honor, so that we may get together on this and have the transcript?

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen, we might take a ten-minute recess, during which time we will arrange this matter.

Mr. Hallinan: It had better be fifteen or twenty, your Honor. I will have to get up to the ILWU headquarters and get the transcripts.

The Court: Very well. You will be called.

(Brief recess.)

The Court: Pardon me one moment. Will it be stipulated that the reporter—well, I think the best thing, perhaps, would be for you to transcribe the matter. Is that agreeable to you, Mr. Reporter?

The Reporter: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: I had thought we might stipulate that the matter to be read here might be considered as having been read into the record; but you had better transcribe it and go ahead.

You may proceed, then. And state for the record, please, the page number, the nature of the testimony, be it direct or cross, the person propounding the question, and the person [8537] giving the answers.

Mr. Donohue: Reading from volume 9 at page 990 of the record, and beginning on line 4, with the witness John Schomaker, the examiner myself:

> "Q. Did you and Mr. B. B. Jones ever meet with the defendant Harry Bridges when no other persons were a party to your conversation, the meeting taking place in the cooperative restaurant at Steuart and Market Streets in the City of San Francisco?

"Mr. Hallinan: I object to that as leading and suggestive and telling the witness what to say, your Honor. Here is the whole thing, the whole statement.

"The Court"——

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. I wonder if we might not omit the objections and rulings, and thus save time?

Mr. Donohue: Well, the only difficulty is that some are sustained and the answers stricken, and I'm afraid we might——

The Court: Well, proceed with the whole text, then, as it may appear; and the rulings on the objections, and whatever may have transpired.

Mr. Donohue: (Reading):

"The Court: Overruled.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Will you answer the question?

"A. The question of the cooperative restaurant—if that is 1933, there was a restaurant on the corner of Steuart [8538] and Market, but it was not a cooperative restaurant, I don't think."

The Court: Pardon me. Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, is that perfectly audible to you, to everyone? Do you hear it all right?

The Foreman: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Very well.

Mr. Donohue (continuing reading):

"Q. What is your best recollection of the name of the restaurant?

"A. I don't remember. It may have been

Boyd's Restaurant. I think the cooperative restaurant went into operation in the early part of 1934, but there was a series of restaurants from the corner of Steuart Street to the Embarcadero. Olson's Restaurant was in there at one time.

"Q. Did you ever meet in a restaurant on the corner of Steuart and Market Street in 1933? A. Lots of times I did.

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. I object to this as leading and suggestive.

"Mr. Donohue: Would you mind if I finished the question?

"Mr. Hallinan: The witness has started to answer already. The witness answers so rapidly I have to make the objection so it won't go in at all.

"Mr. Donohue: I withdraw the [8539] question.

"The Court: The question is withdrawn.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Did you meet Mr. Bridges and Mr. B. B. Jones in a restaurant on or near the corner of Steuart and Market Streets in the City of San Francisco?

"Mr. Hallinan: I will ask that the witness wait until an objection can be made before snapping out an answer. We object to that as leading and suggestive.

"The Court: Overruled.

"A. There is not a restaurant on the waterfront that I didn't meet with some member of the Communist Party, whether it was Jones or any other people.

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Ask that be stricken out as not responsive, if the Court please.

"The Court: The motion is granted.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): The question is whether you met in a restaurant with Mr. Bridges and Mr. Jones on a particular occasion.

"A. I did, yes.

"Q. What is your best recollection of where and when that meeting took place?

"A. Well, that meeting took place in—well, whether you call it fall or winter—November or December of 1933. So it must have been what you term the winter of 1933. And——

"Q. Yes?

"A. The occasion was that—— [8540]

"Q. You may not state the occasion, Mr. Schomaker, but you may state to his Honor and to the ladies and gentlemen of the jury what you said to Mr. Bridges or what Mr. B. B. Jones said to Mr. Bridges as to the reason for your meeting with him, if you recall it.

"Mr. Hallinan: If your Honor please, pardon me. I don't think that counsel has correctly enunciated to the witness what his rights and duties are. The witness' duties and rights are to answer questions. Now, counsel says to him, 'You may state to the jury so-and-so.' Now, that is not a question; it is a direction to the witness. I think a question should have been asked.

"The Court: Objection sustained.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Schomaker, will you state to the jury and to his Honor what was said by either you or Mr. B. B. Jones to Mr. Bridges as to the purpose of your meeting with him.

"Mr. Hallinan: And pardon me; one other objection, your Honor. And might we have somewhat the same sort of agreement that we had before, that in view of the motion that was addressed to you by Mr. Cleary, we should propose an identical objection to each question, that all these matters are res adjudicata. Now, if it be understood that we make the objection that everything preceding the decision in 1945 is res adjudicata, I will not make that [8541] objection as to each separate question asked.

"The Court: Mr. Donohue, will you stipulate to counsel to the end that we have a clear, definite statement in the record?

"Mr. Donohue: Gladly, your Honor.

"Mr. Hallinan: Thank you.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Do you recall the question, Mr. Schomaker?

"A. Well, I remember the one in there, the first thing Jones says, 'How about buying the coffee, Harry?' So, a cup of coffee was only a nickel in those days, so he went and got three cups of coffee and sat down.

"Mr. Hallinan: I think, you Honor, that 'a cup of coffee was only a nickel' should be stricken out, as it is a reminder of the sad conditions where we now exist, where it has gotten up to 15 cents a cup.

"Mr. Donohue: I think, if your Honor please, it was only a recitation of a historical fact; certainly wasn't prejudicial to either side.

"The Court: No one can be injured by a nickel cup of coffee.

"Mr. Donohue: I think not.

"The Court: All right.

"A. So they brought the coffee back to the table and proceeded to discuss the situation on the front. That was, [8542] all stevedores did that in those days, how lousy conditions were, and things that needed to be done to correct them. So when, in the course of the conversation, Jones put the $64 question to Mr. Bridges——

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): What was the question he put to Mr. Bridges.

"A. The question was, 'When are you going to join the Party, Harry?' And since Bridges already had the application,——

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Ask that be stricken out, if your Honor please, as stating an opinion and conclusion and not responsive.

"Mr. Donohue: I have no objection to that going out.

"The Court: Yes, that last part may go out.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): With reference to an application, did you see an application, Mr. Schomaker, in the possession of Mr. Bridges?

"A. I know in those days we always packed three or four applications with us.

"Q. You didn't actually at that time see one in the possession of Mr. Bridges?

"A. No, but Jones had one.

"Q. You saw one in the possession of Mr. Jones?

"A. Oh, yes.

"Q. And did you have one yourself?

"A. Oh, yes, I had several. [8543]

"Q. Now, what was Mr. Bridges' response to the question of, 'When are you going to join the Party?'

"A. Well, Bridges acted kind of coy, you know, like he wanted to be coaxed a little bit. So,—

"Mr. Hallinan: Ask that be stricken out.

"Mr. Donohue: I have no objection, if your Honor please.

"The Court: Yes, it may go out.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): What did he, Mr. Schomaker, say?.

"A. Well, his objection was, he says, 'What about the name?' And so Jones said, 'Well, that should be pretty easy to figure out a name.' He says, 'Pick out any name, like T. J. Plant, for instance. That would be a good name.'

"So Bridges laughed, said, 'That would be a joke on Plant, wouldn't it, if I would get a Party book in Plant's name and drop it in front of the Waterfront Employers down there and let someone pick it up and let a little heat go on Plant for a change?' So, and then he says, 'No, that wouldn't be a good name, either.'

"So Jones said, 'The best thing to do is what is generally done; use a name that you are familiar with, so you won't forget it. And I would suggest you use your mother's name.'

"So we discussed that for, oh, on that basis for a while, and then some guy called in, came in and called me outside for some reason, I don't remember what, and I went [8544] out and stayed 15 or 20 minutes, and then as I was going back in, Jones was coming out.

"Q. Now, you may not state any conversation that was had between you and Mr. Jones while Mr. Bridges was absent, and I take it that when you met Mr. Jones coming out, Mr. Bridges was not with him? A. That's right.

"Q. Now, where did you and Mr. Jones go, if you went together, after you left this restaurant at the end of this conversation?

"A. Well, we walked up Market Street.

"Q. And where did you go?

"A. To 37 Grove.

"Q. And may I ask you what was at 37 Grove Street?

"Mr. Hallinan: Same objection, your Honor: it is calling for an opinion and conclusion of the witness and not the best evidence, incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

"The Court: Overruled.

"A. Well, 37 Grove Street was the editorial office of the Western Worker and the headquarters of the Communist Party of California and San Francisco.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Now, while you were in transit from the restaurant where this conversation was had, and Communist Party Headquarters at 37 Grove Street, did Mr. Jones show you anything? [8545] A. He did, yes.

"Q. What was it?

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Object to that as calling for hearsay, not in the presence of the defendant. I understand the defendant was not present at any of this time.

"Mr. Donohue: This isn't hearsay, if your Honor please. I am not asking for conversation; I am asking the witness if he was exhibited or shown anything by the witness Jones. He certainly can describe the fact.

"The Court: He can state the fact if something was shown to him.

"Mr. Donohue: Yes.

"Mr. Hallinan: I think action, if your Honor please, is as much hearsay as words; in other words, showing a thing outside the presence of a party is as much making a statement as what was said. It is purely hearsay.

"The Court: The objection is overruled.

"A. He showed me an application of the Communist Party.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): And will you describe that application for his Honor and the members of the jury.

"Mr. Hallinan: Same objection, that it is hearsay, not binding on the defendant, words and acts that took place between this gentleman and Mr. B. B. Jones outside the presence of the defendant. [8546]

"The Court: Do you have subsequent testimony with respect to the same document, conversations with reference thereto between this witness, Jones and Bridges?

"Mr. Donohue: No, your Honor, but between this witness and Mr. Bridges.

"The Court: The objection is overruled.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): You may describe the document, his Honor has said, or the application, as you call it.

"A. This application blank was an orange card. It was about the same sized card as the ordinary postal card, and on it was the insignia of the Communist Party of America. In the left-hand corner, I think, in that particular application it was. And it had some fine print which, in a few sentences, explained the aims of the Communist Party. And then it had the name of the applicant, the address, 'Are you a trade union member?,' 'the number of workers employed in your plant,' the—Then it had two blank spaces for sponsors. And then at the end it had the name of the applicant.

"Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me, your Honor. I ask that all that be stricken out, and I have this further objection, if the Court please, that they have not proved the unavailability of that document, and what this witness is purporting to do now is give secondary evidence of its contents without the foundation laid of its unavailability. I ask the answer be stricken out. [8547]

"Mr. Donohue: We obviously cannot prove it is unavailable until we have first proven its existence, if your Honor please.

"Mr. Hallinan: Well, your Honor, they should try to prove that first. Now, if the card existed, there are means they could use for getting it or showing why it wasn't available, and this is putting in secondary evidence of the contents of a written instrument without first accounting for the fact that the written instrument is not available.

"The Court: The objection is overruled.

"Mr. Hallinan: May that objection precede the answer of the witness?

"The Court: Yes, sir.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Have you stated as best you can recall it the nature of this piece of paper you have been describing?

"A. That's right; and on the reverse side it asked the—I think it also had a space there for the name that you were to use, your Party name.

"Q. At that time you were yourself a member of the Communist Party?

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. The same objection has been made before, that it has been asked and answered, your Honor. [8548]

"The Court: Overruled.

"Mr. Donohue: I think it is proper at this time, if your Honor please.

"The Court: Overruled. He has answered it several times, Mr. Donohue.

"Mr. Donohue: I understand.

"Q. May I ask you, Mr. Schomaker, was the document which you have just described similar to the application blank for membership in the Communist Party which you had yourself signed on some prior occasion?

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment, sir. We make the objection that that is again calling for secondary evidence. Now, at least the application that this gentleman says that he has been handling around ought to be available, and there is no reason for introducing secondary evidence in that event. I object to it as calling for the opinion and conclusion of the witness.

"The Court: The objection is overruled.

"A. It was quite similar. Maybe there had had been a few minor changes made in the text of the application.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Now, where were you when you first saw this application which you have just described?

"A. We were walking along Market Street and we were just opposite the Lincoln Hotel.

"Q. And when you say 'we' you refer to yourself and B. B. [8549] Jones?

"A. B. B. Jones and myself.

"Q. Did you observe any handwriting on this application which you have described?

"A. Oh, I did, because Jones showed it to me.

"Q. And what handwriting did you see?

"Mr. Hallinan: Now, just a moment. Same objection, if the Court please; calling for hearsay, opinion and conclusion of the witness, it is not the best evidence, and no reason is shown why secondary evidence should be introduced as to the contents of this document. No showing that the original is not available.

"The Court: Overruled.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Will you answer the question.

"A. Oh, it was the handwriting of H. R. Bridges.

"Mr. Hallinan: Now, just a moment. Ask that be stricken out, if the Court please, and no foundation has been laid for that, and that is calling for an expert opinion.

"The Court: That answer may go out. Will you ask this witness questions that may be considered as foundation for his observation that the handwriting was that of Mr. Bridges?

"Mr. Donohue: But, if your Honor please, at this moment the witness has only stated that he saw in the handwriting of a H. R. Bridges. He has not yet said it was the [8550] handwriting of this defendant.

"The Court: All right; H. R. Bridges.

"Mr. Donohue: I expect to ask him whether he could identify it.

"The Court: I was incorrect. I thought he had made the observation it was Mr. Bridges'.

"Mr. Donohue: No, sir.

"Mr. Hallinan: That is what I thought he had said, too. In fact, I think that's——

"The Court: With that understanding, being in the record, it is stricken, then.

"Mr. Hallinan: Because, your Honor, you understood it correctly.

"The Court: That was my understanding, counsel.

"Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Schomaker, prior to the day about which you have been testifying, had you ever seen the defendant Harry Bridges write his name? A. I have, yes.

"Q. And on how many occasions would you say?

"A. Well,——

"Q. And under what circumstances?

"A. I have already said he submitted articles for the Waterfront Worker, written in longhand, which had to be typed first into a dummy and then later transposed onto a mimeograph sheet, or stencil. [8551]

"Q. And how often had you seen specimens of his handwriting?

"A. Well, I wouldn't specify whether they were a dozen or two dozen times, but it had been numerous times.

"Q. Had you observed anything unusual about the handwriting of the defendant Harry Bridges?

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Object to it as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, calling for a conclusion and on a matter that he has not been qualified to pass upon.

"The Court: I think so, counsel. I think it is asking for the unusual characteristics of a man's handwriting.

"Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, I think the law is pretty well settled that any one of us is able to testify, having seen the handwriting of an individual, as to whether or not in our opinion a sample or type of his handwriting is or is not from our past experience the handwriting of that individual.

"The Court: Similar to.

"Mr. Donohue: And I think we are all—yes, your Honor, similar to. And I think we are all capable of stating whether or not in our layman's analysis of one's handwriting, there was any peculiarity in the formation of characters or any other peculiarity which comes to our attention. That is all I have to ask the witness. [8552]

"The Court: How many occasions prior to this particular occasion had this gentleman seen or observed the handwriting and the signature—particularly the signature—of Mr. Bridges?

"Mr. Donohue: Well, he has only testified as to the handwriting, your Honor. At least a dozen and perhaps two dozen times.

"Mr. Hallinan: Might I ask this, your Honor; I think this is something the Court is entitled to know now, with fairness:

"The Court: Yes.

"Mr. Hallinan: Is the prosecution in possession of this alleged document? Now, if they are, then it is the best evidence, and in good faith it should be produced.

"The Court: I cannot ask the prosecution whether they are presently in possession of it. I have to rule on these matters as they proceed.

"Mr. Hallinan: But then that would go to the good faith of such inquiry, your Honor, as to whether or not this man is qualified to make such a determination, whether he is also, in addition to being an expert hod carrier, an expert handwriting expert.

"Mr. Donohue: Are you questioning our good faith in asking the question?

"The Court: What was the last question? Will you read [8553] it back, Mr. Reporter.

"(Question read.)

"The Court: This goes to the general handwriting, the characteristics that may be present in Mr. Bridges' handwriting.

"Mr. Donohue: Correct, your Honor.

"The Court: And his opinion as a lay person with respect to those characteristics.

"Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor, and no further.

"The Court: The objection is overruled.

"Mr. Donohue: Will you answer the question.

"A. Well, whether I am an expert hod carrier, or what?

"The Court: No, no.

"Mr. Donohue: No.

"The Court: No, no. The last question, please, Mr. Reporter?

"(Question read.)

"The Court: You may answer that.

"A. Well, the handwriting of Mr. Bridges is very legible, for one thing, and he writes very large, and his capitals, capital letters, that is, are generally made with a flourish and his signature is generally written, the H stretches like an S, and he runs them all together, the H, R, B, are generally run without—run in one letter without taking his pencil off the paper or pen off the paper. [8554]

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Schomaker, when you testified shortly ago that on numerous occasions you had seen articles submitted to the Western Worker in the handwriting of the defendant Harry Bridges, may I ask you now whether or not those articles were signed by Mr. Bridges?

"A. Well, they weren't articles for the Western Worker. The articles were for the Waterfront Worker.

"Q. I am sorry; the Waterfront Worker.

"A. No, I don't think they were signed, no.

"Q. Then on how many occasions have you actually seen Mr. Bridges sign his name or his name signed?

"A. Well, I have saw it when he had written resolutions either to be submitted to the local trade union—that is, the local meeting—or we had a group functioning in the Albion Hall, where numerous resolutions were submitted. And there I saw his signature.

"Q. His name was affixed to those resolutions?

"A. Yes, they were.

"Mr. Donohue: May we take our recess at this time?

"The Court: Yes. Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we will take the morning recess and the same admonition to you as I have given in the past, not to discuss the case under any conditions nor to form or express an opinion until it is finally submitted to you. You may step down, Mr. Schomaker.

"(Recess.) [8555]

"The Court: You may proceed.

"Mr. Donohue: Mr. Schomaker, from your stated familiarity with the signature of the defendant Harry Bridges, are you able to tell us whether or not in your opinion the name H. R. Bridges which you saw in the application you have described was or was not in the handwriting of the defendant Harry Bridges?

"A. Definitely it was in the handwriting of Bridges.

"Mr. Hallinan: I ask that that be stricken out. That is not the question he was asked. He was asked whether or not in his opinion he could give an opinion. I ask that the answer go out.

"The Court: Yes.

"'Mr. Donohue (To the witness): The answer be either yes, you can give an opinion, or no, you can not give such an opinion.

"The Court: The answer may go out pending the preliminary question.

"Mr. Donohue: Yes.

"Q. Are you able to state, in your opinion, whether it was or was not the signature of the defendant Harry Bridges? Will you answer the question yes or no? A. Yes, it was.

"Mr. Hallinan: I ask that that go out.

"The Court: The 'yes' may stand. 'It was' may go out. [8556]

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): In your opinion, whose signature was it that you saw on the application you have described to the Court and jury?

"Mr. Hallinan: I object to it, if the Court please, as calling for the opinion and conclusion of the witness, and not the best evidence, again attempting to prove a document which has not been explained by secondary evidence, and calling for the opinion and conclusion of the witness on a matter for which no proper foundation has been laid.

"The Court: The objection is overruled.

"A. In my opinion, it was the signature of that of Harry Bridges.

"Mr. Donohue: I am sorry. I didn't hear.

"The Witness: This interruption kind of confuses me. What is the question? In my opinion, was the signature that of Harry Bridges?

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Yes, the Court stated may give your opinion as to whether it was or was not the signature of Harry Bridges.

"A. In my opinion, it was Harry Bridges' signature.

"Q. Mr. Schomaker, when you and B. B. Jones went to Communist Party headquarters, did you see anything happen with respect to that application that you have described to the jury?

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. We object to that, if [8557] the Court please, as res inter alios acta, matters done outside the presence of the defendant, not binding on the defendants, transactions between other persons, and hearsay.

"The Court: I will overrule the objection on the condition that you attempt to fix the date, the persons present, and the place with more particularity.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): What is your best recollection of the time at which the incident which you have described with respect to this application took place?

"A. Well, it was about 10:00 o'clock in the morning in the fall or winter, whatever you want to term it, of 1933.

"Q. In the City of San Francisco?

"A. In the City of San Francisco, County of San Francisco.

"Q. Can you tell us your best recollection of the time when you and Mr. Jones reached Communist Party headquarters?

"A. We walked up Market Street, since we didn't have any money—short of dough in those days, so we walked up. I imagine it took us about 45 minutes. We arrived at headquarters about 11:00 o'clock.

"Q. Who was present at headquarters whom you can now recall when you got there?

"A: We saw different people there. George Morris was there. He was the editor of the Western Worker. There was a little guy there who sold literature. I don't recall his name. But we went upstairs. They had a mezzanine floor. We [8558] went up on this mezzanine floor into the office of Sam Darcy, who was a district organizer of District 13.

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. I ask that that be stricken out as stating the opinion and conclusion of the witness.

"The Court: In what particular?

"Mr. Hallinan: About Sam Darcy, what his occupation was.

"The Court: That may go out.

"Mr. Hallinan: He was just asked as to who were the people there. He can give the persons and then a description might be asked for.

"The Court: That is correct. Give the parties present.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): You say a man whom you have called Sam Darcy was there?

"A. Yes, Sam Darcy was there.

"Q. Will you tell his Honor and the ladies and gentlemen of the jury who Sam Darcy was? Now, don't answer until counsel has had an opportunity to object.

"Mr. Hallinan: I object to that for the same reason. Of course, it is very difficult to have to get up and object to every question. I am afraid the jury will get a bad impression. They will understand if I do not make these objections, I waive them.

"The Court: I will say to the jury at this [8559] juncture, Mr. Hallinan, if you desire, that counsel for the defendant is entitled to interpose objections to questions which in his opinion he believes to be incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial or hearsay. Those questions are addressed to the Court. I have ruled on them as you have observed. That is my function and my province exclusively. As I indicated to you, your province is to pass upon the facts, and as I further indicated, we work as a sort of team to that extent in channeling this evidence. Mr. Hallinan has urged these objections. It may well be —I am not saying that with particular reference to any phase of the testimony—if he did not urge the objections, he would be foreclosed hereafter from urging them in any reviewing court if the matter ever reaches such court; unless, of course, if counsel will stipulate with government counsel that an objection runs to a certain line of testimony. That procedure apparently could not be adopted here because the interrelation of the questions is such, I take it, he must interpose an objection. Is that satisfactory?

"Mr. Hallinan: Thank you, and where it has been possible to get a stipulation, I have done that, on two occasions, to save the annoyance.

"The Court: I say to you, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, not to be prejudiced in any sense at all by Mr. Hallinan's interposing these [8560] objections.

"Mr. Donohue: May I say, if the Court please, with respect to the pending objection and the instant question, the question being 'Mr. Schomaker, are you able to tell us who Mr. Sam Darcy was?'

"Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. I hadn't finished the objection. I object, too, if the Court please, on the ground that it is not the best evidence. There is no reason why Mr. Sam Darcy can not be produced to testify himself, or no reason shown why records can not be produced to identify who he was. It is calling for an opinion and conclusion and not the best evidence.

"The Court: What particular bearing on this particular phase of the case has Mr. Darcy?

"Mr. Donohue: I may say, if your Honor please, to object to a question as to who Mr. Darcy was would be like, in my judgment, objecting to a police officer who might be on the stand being asked the question, 'Who is the chief of police?' Or if a man was sitting on the stand, and was member of Post

No. 1 of the San Francisco American Legion, objecting to the question, 'Who is the commander of your post?' It certainly is within his knowledge.

"The Court: Bear in mind, Mr. Donohue, both the Court and jury meet the impact of this evidence for the first time.

"Mr. Donohue: I quite understand it, but I never can [8561] develop who Mr. Darcy was if I am going to meet that objection to a question put to a witness who has qualified himself as the unit organizer and as a section organizer.

"The Court: Let us as a preliminary question ask the witness the length of time he has known Mr. Darcy, and so forth, so there is some foundation laid for this question to which Mr. Hallinan objects as his conclusion and without foundation.

"Mr. Hallinan: And might I suggest, your Honor, this in direct connection with what counsel said: Ordinarily a witness is put on the stand and a question, 'Who is the chief of police?', or 'Who is the head of your order?' is not a matter of great moment. Nobody cares. But where the great issue is who is the chief of police, or where that becomes a material matter—I might point out to your Honor that so important is a matter of that kind that after the 1906 fire in San Francisco, when Eugene Schmidts was sentenced to prison for accepting bribes, it was reversed on appeal because of the failure of the prosecution properly to prove that Eugene Schmidts was there in San Francisco. We can not take judicial notice of who else is of the government, officers of the city government, let alone from a witness who gets on the stand and sui spondi identifies people who are not directly related to the charge against the defendant.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Schomaker, when did you first meet [8562] Mr. Sam Darcy?

"A. Well, it was in the depression of the '30's, 1930 or early 1931, I met Sam Darcy.

"Q. Where did you first meet him?

"Mr. Hallinan: I object to that as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and not binding on the defendants, res inter alios acta.

"The Court: Overruled. The purpose of this line of evidence is to determine whether this witness had a capacity to identify him at the time and place in question more recently referred to in the evidence, and that is the reason and solely the reason for this background.

"Q. The Court has indicated that you may tell us where it was you first met Sam Darcy.

"A. Why, he was speaking at a meeting of the unemployed over on—in the California Hall. I think it is on Larkin Street. Anyway, it is the California Hall. Now, what street it is, I don't recall.

"Q. Now, from that time until 1930 or '31, when you first met Mr. Darcy, until the day in 1933 about which you have recently testified, how often did you see Mr. Sam Darcy?

"A. Well, I met him occasionally up to October, 1933, and then after 1933 up until the middle of or the end of '34, let's say—that is, 1933, October, November, to the end of 1934; that is, the fall of 1934, I saw him sometimes [8563] two and three times a day.

"Q. Now, in the interim between 1930 and '31, and October of 1933, when you saw Mr. Sam Darcy occasionally, where did you see him?

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Same objection, if the Court please.

"The Court: Overruled.

"A. Why, I saw him at 37 Grove Street in San Francisco.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): And at what part or place at 37 Grove Street, San Francisco, did you see him?

"Mr. Hallinan: The same objection again.

"The Court: Overruled.

"A. You mean in what part of the building was he?

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Yes.

"A. Oh, why, he had an office on the mezzanine floor at 37 Grove Street.

"Q. Well, what was at 37 Grove Street?

"A. Well, that was the——

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Object to that as having been already asked and answered.

"The Court: It has been, two or three times, sir.

'Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Now, in the interim between October of 1933 and some date which you gave us in 1934, when you say you saw Mr. Darcy sometimes twice a day, where was it that you had then seen him? [8564]

"Mr. Hallinan: Same objection, if the Court please.

"The Court: Overruled. You may answer.

"A. You mean where I met him in this time?

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Yes. Where would you meet him?

"A. Oh, at various places—at homes, at offices, and at 37 Grove Street, on the street, in restaurants.

"Q. And would you tell his Honor and the ladies and gentlemen of the jury the purpose of your meeting Mr. Darcy during this period of time?

"Mr. Hallinan: Now, there is a matter that is between other persons, not in the presence of the defendant, calling for hearsay, opinion and conclusion of the witness, asking him the purpose of his meetings.

"Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, the purpose of this question, as your Honor has indicated to counsel, is not to bind either of the three defendants by the answer of a witness, but merely to qualify him as one capable of stating to your Honor and the ladies and gentlemen of the jury, in order to meet the objection of counsel, why it was he is able to tell us.

"The Court: All right. For that limited purpose, ladies and gentlemen, the evidence is elicited from this witness to show background for knowledge and recollections of events, to the end that he may answer, if he can, and identify a particular witness —by means of questions as [8565] to his occupation and identity. For that limited purpose the evidence may proceed, and for no other purpose.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): What was the purpose of the meetings that you had?

"Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. Just a moment. I will ask that—I have to repeat the objection when he repeats the answer. Your Honor suggested to him——

"Mr. Donohue: Can't we stipulate that—— "Mr. Hallinan: And what he does is make the objection negligible by simply repeating the question. That requires me to repeat the objection.

"Mr. Donohue: In the economy of time, your Honor, may we not stipulate that it will be unnecessary for you to repeat the objection should I again repeat the question? It would save a great deal of time from asking the reporter to go back and read it.

"Mr. Hallinan: I think it would be better if counsel simply learned, if for the first time, the proper procedure in such matters instead of inventing a new form of stipulation that we must enter to accommodate him.

"Mr. Donohue: I shall be guided by your Honor's judgment in the matter.

"The Court: I think you should proceed, then, along this line. Counsel may object for continuity. You may proceed. [8566]

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Do you now recall the——

"The Court: If he is so advised.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): (Continuing): Do you now recall the question, Mr. Schomaker?

"A. What position Sam Darcy held?

"Q. No. The question——

"I will ask the reporter to read it.

"(Question read.)

"A. Well, Sam Darcy was the district organizer of the Communist Party, I was the section organizer.

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Ask that be stricken out as not responsive, if the Court please.

"The Court: The motion is granted; not responsive.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Would you answer the question as to the purpose of the meetings which you had with Sam Darcy?

"Mr. Hallinan: Now, there we have fallen into the same vice, and I will have to repeat the objection again. It should be easy for counsel to have the Court direct the reporter to read the question, where an objection has been made and the Court has ruled upon it.

"The Witness: Why, to carry on Communist Party business.

"Mr. Donohue: Just a moment until his Honor rules, Mr. Schomaker.

"The Witness: Oh, pardon me.

"The Court: The objection is overruled. [8567]

"A. I met with Sam Darcy to carry on Communist Party business.

"Mr. Hallinan: We ask that be stricken out as stating an opinion and conclusion, hearsay and not binding on the defendants, if the Court please.

"Mr. Donohue: I think your Honor just told the jury it was not binding on the defendant.

"The Court: The motion is denied and the answer may stand. The jury, of course, is instructed, as I have indicated before, as to the limitations of the scope of this testimony, at this juncture.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Now, I ask you the question, Mr. Schomaker, when you went to the Communist Party headquarters following the meeting between yourself, B. B. Jones and Harry Bridges, who was the Sam Darcy who you say was present at the Communist Party headquarters?

"Mr. Hallinan: Same objection, not binding on the defendant, hearsay, opinion and conclusion of the witness.

"The Court: Overruled.

"A. To turn in the application we received from Harry Bridges to join the Communist Party.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): And to whom was that application turned in?

"A. Turned in to Sam Darcy.

"Mr. Hallinan: Will your Honor instruct the witness to [8568] wait until——

"The Court: Yes. Mr. Schomaker, may I ask you, in the light of the objections which you have heard, not to answer the question until Mr. Hallinan has an opportunity to interpose the objection and I rule on it? If I sustain ~~it, of~~ course, your answer is not given. If I overrule it, you may answer.

"The Witness: I am sorry I answered it, your Honor.

"The Court: No reflection on you.

"Mr. Hallinan: I ask that the answer be stricken so I may make the objection.

"The Court: Yes, the answer may be stricken.

"Mr. Hallinan: We object to it as calling for the opinion and conclusion, not binding on the defendants, hearsay, not done in their presence; and no proper foundation laid; and furthermore, it is not the best evidence, in giving secondary evidence concerning a document, and its disposition, without explaining the inability to produce primary evidence.

"The Court: Overruled.

"Mr. Donohue: Would you repeat the question, please.

"(Question read.)

"A. It was turned in to Sam Darcy.

"Q. And who was Sam Darcy?

"Mr. Hallinan: Now, if your Honor please—pardon me. [8569] That has already been asked and answered.

"Mr. Donohue: No, it was not answered. I think the witness went over and answered something else.

"The Court: It went out of the record on a motion, Mr. Hallinan. I struck it out on one occasion.

"Mr. Hallinan: We object to that as calling for an opinion and conclusion and not the best evidence, that the records of the Party and Mr. Sam Darcy, or whoever it is alleged he may be, is the best evidence. This is stating an opinion and conclusion.

"Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, with respect to that objection, this witness has heretofore testified that sometime early in 1930 or '31 he became a member of the Communist Party. He has testified that on various and varying days he was one time the unit organizer or a unit organizer for the Communist Party, that he was the agitation and propaganda director for the Communist Party, that he was at one time a section organizer for the Communist Party, that he was editor of a publication for the Communist Party, that he was a member of the executive committee of the district for the Communist Party. He has heretofore testified that he met Mr. Sam Darcy in 1930 or 1931, and saw him on frequent occasions at Communist Party headquarters, and on other occasions to discuss Communist Party business. I certainly suggest to your Honor that we have [8570] established a foundation to permit the witness to answer the question as to who Sam Darcy was in the light of the fact that your Honor has correctly and carefully instructed the jury that these statements on the part of this witness are not binding upon the defendants or any one of them, but are only purposed to state his qualifications to draw the conclusion as to who Sam Darcy was. Mr. Hallinan, reserving a right, which I am sure he will exercise, to cross-examine this witness completely to determine whether or not he was qualified, did in fact know who Sam Darcy was.

"The Court: Objection overruled.

"Mr. Donohue: Now would you repeat the question, Mr. Reporter.

"(Question read.)

"A. He was district organizer of the Communist Party of the United States of America for the State of California, District 13.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Now, you have stated that you saw B. B. Jones turn over the application you have testified concerning, to Mr. Sam Darcy?

"A. I did, yes.

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Ask the answer be stricken out and object to that, your Honor. That is not a question; that is a statement, and leading and suggestive.

"Mr. Donohue: I have merely asked the witness if he [8571] has so testified as a preliminary to a further question, your Honor.

"Mr. Hallinan: It isn't proper to ask the witness——

"The Court: Objection sustained.

"Mr. Hallinan: And the answer may go out, your Honor?

"The Court: Yes.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): How long did you remain at the Communist Party headquarters on this occasion, Mr. Schomaker?

"A. Oh, 45 minutes or an hour.

"Q. Now, may I ask you whether or not——"

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. I think we are getting far afield from what the jury requested, because this testimony has now been read, it is complete not only as to the conversation concerning the jury's inquiry, but also the trip up Market Street, the turning over of the alleged card. Now they are going into a different subject altogether, that is, the putting out of books. I don't understand that was within the comprehension of what the jury requested.

Mr. Donohue: I had thought to read seven additional pages, however.

Mr. Hallinan: None of them are linked to the conversation. I don't care, but as far as I am concerned, we could read the whole thing. However, the jury didn't inquire about that.

The Court: Let's proceed and see what eventuates in the transcript. Is it all after the meeting, the alleged conversation? [8572]

Mr. Donohue: Yes, Your Honor,

The Court: All right; you may proceed.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, the next seven pages relate to the issuance of books, and it has nothing about the conversation with B. B. Jones.

The Court: The asserted membership books, you mean?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: You may proceed.

Mr. Donohue (continuing reading):

> "Q. Now, may I ask you whether or not, subsequent to the date you have been testifying about, you ever received from or delivered to Harry Bridges personally a membership card in the Communist Party?"

The Court: We might take a short recess, if agreeable to the jury.

Mr. Donohue: Except I might finish in ten minutes, probably, Your Honor. At the jury's convenience and Your Honor's convenience and direction, of course.

The Court: Would the jurors like a recess now or would you like to have Mr. Donohue continue?

The Foreman: I think continue, sir.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Donohue (continuing reading):

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Object to that as calling for an opinion and conclusion, if the Court please, as to [8573] its being a membership card in the Communist Party and calling for secondary evidence. No explanation made as to why primary evidence is not produced.

"The Court: Overruled.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Do you remember the question?

"A. Have I ever delivered to Harry Bridges a Communist Party book? I have, yes.

"Q. Will you state to His Honor and the ladies and gentlemen of the jury the circumstances as to time, place, purpose and so forth, when you delivered such a book?

"A. Well, it happened in parallel situations; at the end of each year——

"Mr. Hallinan: Object to that, ask that be stricken.

"The Court: 'It happened in parallel situations' may go out.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): At the end of each year?

"A. At the end of each year the Communist Party calls for a turning in of all the books.

"Mr. Hallinan: Object to that as not responsive; ask it be stricken out.

"The Court: The motion is granted.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Will you state with particularity what you——

"Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. There is a pending question.

"The Court: There is a question before the witness.

"Mr. Donohue: I understood Your Honor granted the objection [8574] of counsel.

"The Court: No, the answer was not responsive. I granted a motion to strike.

"Mr. Donohue: Then I take it there is no question?

"The Court: He was speaking of parallel situations, practice and custom in the Communist Party. The question was a very direct question, calls for a direct answer. (To the Reporter): Would you read the question?

"(Record read.)

"The Court: Now you may answer.

"A. Well, in 1934 in the month of December the Communist Party asked——

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Object to that now. He is putting in something else, too. He can easily answer that question that was addressed to him.

"Mr. Donohue: Without reference to what the Communist Party did.

"Mr. Hallinan: Now, pardon me, Your Honor. I ask that counsel not direct the witness. There is a pending question, and as Your Honor has expressed it, there is a question that is simple and concise and calls for a direct answer. Let him tell us.

"The Court: Yes, sir. I think the question calls for a direct answer.

"A. Well, I got the time in there. I got December, 1935. [8575] And Harry Bridges gave me his Communist Party book——

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment, Your Honor. The question has been asked and answered.

"Mr. Donohue: The question has not been answered, if Your Honor please. I can understand why he objected to the answer, but it is the first time the question has been answered.

"The Court: You may continue, Mr. Witness.

"A. (Continuing): Well, it was in December of 1935 and Harry Bridges gave me his Communist Party book to be what they call 'controlled.' The old book would be turned in and the new book would be granted.

"Q. Now on the occasion in 1935 when Harry Bridges gave you his Communist book, did you give him anything in return?

"A. At that particular time, no.

"Q. Yes. Did you subsequently give him anything in return?

"A. Later, yes; subsequently means later. I did get it later, yes, give him a book later.

"Q. Will you say when it was, subsequent to December of 1931, and the circumstances under which you gave him something and describe that something.

"A. Well, it was December, 1935; and then next year it would be in January, the latter part of January. No, it would be earlier than that; it would be about the middle of January, 1936, when I received the books from the Communist [8576] Party headquarters and gave them to each individual member.

"Q. And do you now state that in January of 1936 you gave such a book to the defendant Harry Bridges?

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Object to that as leading and suggestive, if the Court please.

"The Court: Overruled.

"A. Why, yes, I gave him a book.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Can you recall where it was or where Mr. Bridges was when you gave him the Communist Party book in 1936?

"A. It was at a Communist Party meeting. that is, a unit meeting and the particular place I can't recall.

"Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. Just a moment. Ask that that be stricken out, that it was a unit meeting, that it was a meeting of the Communist Party, as stating an opinion and conclusion and no proper foundation laid.

"The Court: Overruled.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Schomaker, will you state for us whether this was the only instance in which you received from or gave to Harry Bridges a book or membership in the Communist Party?

"A. No, it was not the only instance.

"Q. Then will you state your best recollection of any other instance or instances?

"A. Well, the same procedure went on in '36 and—that is, [8577] the winter of '36—the old book turned in and the new one received in '37.

"Q. Now, will you state for us why it was that you turned in or you received from Mr. Bridges his old book and turned over to him a new book?

"Mr. Hallinan: Object to that as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial; calling for an opinion and conclusion.

"Mr. Donohue: If Your Honor please,——

"The Court: Overruled. He might have answered it before in part with respect to certain proceedings. He may answer.

"A. I was the section organizer of the waterfront.

"Q. And was Mr. Bridges within your jurisdiction as a section organizer of the waterfront section of the Communist Party.

"A. He was in my jurisdiction, yes.

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Your Honor, the witness constantly—and the witness has shown an interest in the thing by the statement, 'Well, we got in the date anyhow.' Now, I think he is purposely trying to fill in with an answer before an objection can be gotten in. I will ask Your Honor to again instruct him to wait until an objection can be made.

"The Court: I will instruct the witness accordingly, Mr. Hallinan, and in addition, I will instruct the ladies and gentlemen of the jury that the observations made by counsel [8578] with respect to the admissibility of evidence may not be regarded by you as evidence in the case. I have already instructed you fully on that score. And the observation made by Mr. Hallinan with respect to what he got in—he, the witness, got in—and so forth are not to be considered by you as a reflection upon the witness at this particular time.

"Mr. Hallinan: No, pardon me, Your Honor; that is not what I said. I said that the witness said that. The witness said, 'Well, we got in the date anyhow.' Do you remember him making that remark?

"The Court: No, I don't

"Mr. Hallinan: Yes, he said, 'Well,'—he said, 'December 1935,' and then he said, 'Well, we got in the date anyhow.' I didn't—I am not saying that. I say he said that. And it shows, I think, and I suggest to the Court, his intention to try to assist the prosecution by answering it too quickly before an objection can be made.

"The Court: You may examine him on that.

"Mr. Donohue: I am only too happy to have the remark stricken, if Your Honor pleases, but I think Mr. Hallinan has tried too many——

"The Court: Where are we now, Mr. Donohue?

"Mr. Donohue: We are about to ask another question, if Your Honor pleases. [8579]

"The Court: All right.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Schomaker, you have heretofore described the process by which upon the payment of dues by a member in the Communist Party, stamps are issued which are pasted by the member in a book——

"Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me, Your Honor,——

"Mr. Donohue: Would you let me finish the question, please?

"Mr. Hallinan: No, it is always held improper to recite to a witness a compendium of what he has already stated. Now, that is always held improper. It is leading and suggestive, making resumes and arguments in advance of the proper time, and there is no disability shown in this witness' part to be able to remember the events, and no necessity for resumes of this sort.

"The Court: The objection is sustained.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Schomaker, did you ever see the defendant Harry Bridges pay his dues as a member in the Communist Party?

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. That is certainly calling for an opinion and conclusion, if the Court please. He could be asked what was done and what he saw and what was said, but he is calling for a direct opinion and conclusion as to whether money passed, whether that constituted dues, for what purpose.

"The Court: The objection is overruled. [8580]

"A. I saw Mr. Harry Bridges on numerous times pay dues to the unit secretary for dues in the Communist Party."

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, does that complete—Strike that. Does that complete the reading of the direct?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, if I understand correctly the jury's question and Your Honor's instructions, it does, if Your Honor please.

The Court: All right. We have arrived at 12:00 o'clock, and the plans, as I understand from Mr. Mitchell—he has handed me a short note—that the bus leaves at 12:00, more or less sharp, and that you will have your luncheon and then I suggest that you return here after the recess, the luncheon recess, for the reading of the cross-examination on that subject. Is that agreeable.

Mr. Hallinan: Surely.

The Court: All right. Pardon me. The lady has a question. Will you address it through the foreman?

A Juror: I wanted to address you through our foreman.

The Foreman: Yes, this one question. Quite surprised to come in here this morning. We thought we would have access to the volumes of testimony. We didn't realize, too, that we would have to come in here, and of course we were caught unprepared as to the, you know, the direct testimony as to this restaurant and the signing up of Harry Bridges, the alleged signing up. And are [8581] we to come in here for any more? Any more of the reading of the testimony? Or do we have it in our jury room?

The Court: Well, ordinarily the testimony is read in court to the jurors. If you specify the parts you desire or the general parts, and we try to select such parts.

Mr. Hallinan: We will stipulate to give them the entire transcript, if Your Honor please, so they can read any part of it. We have no objection.

The Foreman: Well, there will be parts of the various testimony that we will want read, we will want to see it, here or even read the cross-examination on it. We will only be interested in the pertinent points, however.

The Court: Well, would you like to take up the cross-examination of Mr. Schomaker on this phase, and after that we might determine as to your other requests.

The Foreman: That is fine.

The Court: If that is agreeable, all right. We will now recess for the noon period and return at your convenience. We will be available.

(Thereupon a recess was taken until 2:00 o'clock p.m.) [8582]

Saturday, April 1, 1950—2:00 o'Clock P.M.

Mr. Hallinan: As to the cross-examination on those subjects, I might say to the Court and jury, as indicating the time that would be consumed in it, that by selecting out the matters only that bear directly on this, it comprises sixteen pages. The original examination was 40 pages, so it is only a little over a third on those subjects.

Turning, then, to page 1101, line 21 (reading):

"Q. Do you remember yesterday testifying that you had a conversation, you, Mr. Bridges, Mr. B. B. Jones, about the terrible conditions on the waterfront, and, as you put it, the 'lousy conditions on the waterfront'?

"A. I recall that, yes.

"Q. You recall that you said that yesterday. Tell us what was said about that. Give us the whole conversation on that subject.

"A. I couldn't do it verbatim.

"Q. You do not have to do it verbatim. Do it as well as you can.

"A. As I said, as we went into the restaurant evidently on that particular morning Bridges at that time was working——

"Q. Pardon me. Will you please tell us what conversation you had on the subject I just discussed.

"A. I am trying to get a background. [8583]

"Q. We have a background.

"A. What I am trying to do—after all, you asked me a question. I can't snap it out of thin air. I have to get a background in my own mind first. Bridges was working with a gang on the Hawaiian docks. On that particular morning he evidently had a late start because he was in the restaurant when we walked in. Jones said to Harry, 'Harry, how about buying the coffee?'

"So Bridges proceeded to buy the coffee. As I say, it was a nickel a cup at that time. He could easily afford it. We got the coffee and we sat down and began to talk about conditions on the front, particularly about the case of a fellow who was killed—I think it was on the Encinal Terminals—a heavy load of canned goods. The winch fall carried away. He was underneath the load and it killed him, he and his brother were working together, and we were talking about that particular thing, that due to the excessive speed-up and the big loads, here was a guy whose life was sacrificed. And from that we discussed the other conditions, that something more—action needed to be taken and the officers of the ILA at that time were not doing enough to rectify these things.

"Q. What conditions did you talk about? What conditions were being complained of?

"A. Well, for instance, the selection of men to be picked [8584] for a job.

"Q. How was that worked?

"A. That was done on the basis of a shape-up where the boss picked his men."

Now, from there on it goes on to a discussion, if the Court please, about the conditions and so forth; that could or could not be construed as directly entering into the conversation, but I don't think that that is what the jury is interested in now. So then, moving over to page 1171:

"Q. You also testified that when Harry Bridges first signed an application with the Communist Party a book was issued to him under the name of Harry Dorgan, is that correct?

"A. That I testified that a book was issued to Harry Bridges under the name of Harry Dorgan?

"Q. Yes. A. That is correct.

"Q. Can you tell us what was the purpose of having the book issued under the name of Harry Dorgan?

"A. What was the purpose of it?

"Q. Yes.

"A. Well, it was one of the peculiar things that was the standing practices of the Communist Party, is that when you did sign up, you always signed under a fictitious name. The book was issued, rather, in a fictitious name. Now, [8585] just why, I never did quite understand that myself.

"Q. Was it always issued in a fictitious name?

"A. Well, possibly not always, no. But they always recommended that and urged that it should be done.

"Q. Was that for purposes of concealment?

"A. Yes, I imagine it would be. As I say, I imagined it would be, yes.

"Q. Well, now when you talked to Mr Bridges with B. B. Jones in the restaurant there was a discussion about what name he would use and a recommendation was made that he use his mother's maiden name, is that right?

"A. Well, I wouldn't say you would call it a recommendation; it was a suggestion, yes.

"Q. A suggestion. All right. And do you remember that at the time Mr. Bridges had difficulty in remembering what his mother's maiden name was?

"A. No, I don't recall it, no.

"Q. Well, now, don't you remember that he took a couple of pieces of paper that he had started out to write out, to out, what his mother's maiden name was, and he wrote Harvey on one piece of paper, then he wrote Canfield on another piece of paper. And he put those on one side. Then he wrote Dorgan on another piece of paper and Rossi on a fourth piece of paper and put those to one side. And then he tossed a coin to see which of the two piles he would select the [8586] name from. Do you remember that?

"A. No. That sounds to me like some guy had been smoking marijuana. That doesn't sound like Bridges to me.

"Q. Oh. Well, then, don't you remember that the choice of the coin falling to the Rossi-Dorgan axis, that he then separated those names and tossed the coin again, postulating his choice upon the falling of the obverse uppermost on the Dorgan name, and that that is what in effect ensued. Do you remember that? A. Certainly not.

"Q. That never——

"A. That sounds like one of those things out of a dime detective story or something.

"Q. Yes. The whole thing does; it is nuts?"

And then moving over to 1403 to 1413, this relates to the handing in of the card, or the alleged handing in of a card to Mr. Darcy. (Reading):

"Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Mr. Schomaker, you testified about a certain card that you say was signed by Harry Bridges some time back in 1933 in a restaurant at which you and B. B. Jones were present, and I think you said what, so far as you know, became of that card. What was done with the card, as far as you remember?

"A. You mean after it came in Jones' possession?

"Q. Yes. You told about walking up the street, and so [8587] forth. What was its final disposition, and so forth, so far as you observed?

"A. Well, we walked up Market Street——

"Q. No, you testified to that. You said you got to Communist headquarters and then something was done with the card. What was that?

"A. We entered 37 Grove Street. That was the address, 37 Grove Street.

"Q. What was done with the card?

"A. Well, we entered 37 Grove Street and went up onto the mezzanine floor and to the office of Sam Darcy.

"Q. And what was done with the card?

"A. Oh, then Jones trned it in to Sam Darcy.

"Q. Had you ever turned in similar cards before, cards of other persons?

"A. I had, yes.

"Q. How many, approximately?

"A. Well, it was a considerable number. Over a period of years it would run into a considerable number, yes.

"Q. As many as a hundred or two hundred?

"A. I would say, to be conservative, I would say 100.

"Q. Do you know what was done with those cards when they were turned in there? To whom were they turned in? Mr. Darcy? Withdraw that. Don't you remember that you testified it was given [8588] to some secretary or some girl there? A. I testified to that?

"Q. Yes. Wasn't that your testimony? Well, do you remember?

"A. I certainly do remember. Certainly I remember.

"Q. To whom was it handed?

"A. In this particular case Jones and I went into 37 Grove, went up on the mezzanine floor, and Jones, with a smile, gave the card to Samuel Darcy.

"Q. To Darcy himself?

"A. The district organizer of the Communist Party.

"Q. When did you get the book that you said bore the name Harry Dorgan on it?

"A. Well, every Saturday they had a meeting and the section organizers attended, and there they got—well, they had a meeting and they discussed the situations in the various sections——

"Q. That is not what I asked you. Will you confine your answers to the questions. I asked you, when did you get the book with 'Harry Dorgan' on it? When?

"A. Do you mean the exact date?

"Q. About. How long after you turned in this application that you talked about?

"A. I am just trying to give you the background.

"Q. Just approximately in time.

"A. Well, in the case of the Bridges book there was a peculiar [8589] incident about that, because it was——

"Q. I am coming to that later.

"Mr. Paisley: I think he can answer.

"Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, that is not an answer to the question.

"The Court: Mr. Hallinan asked a specific question. I think he is entitled to an answer to it and any explanation the witness may make is quite all right, but he is entitled to an answer.

"Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Was it a week after, a month after, or what was it that you got the Harry Dorgan book that you testified to?

"A. It was longer than the average time that would elapse to get an ordinary book, yes.

"Q. What was the average time?

"A. The average time would be, if you turned the application in on a Monday, why, that next Saturday the book would be issued.

"Q. Was there some sort of a meeting that would pass upon the application?

"A. That is correct. It was a membership—I think they referred to it as a membership committee or application committee, and any applicants that would apply to join the Communist Party had to be proposed by someone, and from there it would go to a membership committee, who would carry [8590] on an investigation as best as possible, and then the book would be issued if the person was considered safeworthy, and so forth—met the qualifications of being a Communist.

"Q. How many people were on the membership committee?

"A. I didn't have too much connection with the membership committee.

"Q. Approximately?

"A. I would say three or four persons.

"Q. Was this procedure that you have testified to the procedure in all cases of admission to the Communist Party you knew of?

"A. No, it was not. The Bridges case was an exceptional case.

"Q. So ordinarily this application would be submitted to three or four persons, is that right?

"A. Well, no, it would not be submitted.

"Q. I say ordinarily an application would be submitted to three or four persons?

"A. No, that is not correct. The way you pose the question is not correct. The persons who made the applications out, who recruited a certain person to join, for membership in the Communist Party, they turned the applications in to the unit organizer, and the unit organizer turned it over to the section organizer. The section organizer turned it in to 37 Grove Street, and later to 121 Haight Street, and there [8591] they had a membership committee which met and would carry on an investigation as best as possible of the proposed member. But in the Bridges instance it was entirely different.

"Q. I am asking about the ordinary one, not the Bridges one.

"A. I am telling you the ordinary one and I am telling you the exception.

"Q. We will come to that in a moment. So that ordinarily a membership application was delivered first to a unit organizer and by him to a section organizer and by him it was delivered or it was turned over to a membership committee to pass upon the application, is that right—ordinarily?

"A. That was the general rule, yes.

"Q. When the application was passed upon verbally, what was done with the application card?

"A. Well, I never saw the application card again.

"Q. Do you know what was done with it? Was it filed? Was it sent to some central headquarters, sent elsewhere, or what?

"A. As far as I know, it was filed for a certain length of time and then destroyed.

"Q. How long was it filed?

"A. That is something I can not answer. I don't know.

"Q. Would it be for several years?

"A. I don't know. I don't have the slightest idea. [8592]

"Q. Who had charge of the files in which they were contained?

"A. I was down on the waterfront as a section organizer and had no connection whatsoever with the filing or any of the office work that was carried on there at 37 Grove Street or 121 Haight Street. I have no conception whatsoever of what they did there.

"Q. In addition to Mr. Darcy at 37 Grove Street, were there other officials of the Communist Party who had their offices their and who functioned from that address? A. Well, yes, there was.

"Q. How many?

"A. I think that your conception of the Communist Party is so——

"Q. If you don't mind, we won't bother with my conception of the Communist Party. I asked you how many officials of the Communist Party in addition to Mr. Darcy performed their functions from

No. 37 Grove Street, that is, that they had offices there, had office space, or they came and went and did certain work in that building. How many?

"A. As I say, in those days the Communist Party was a vest-pocket organization.

"Q. How many?

"A. Well, the Western Worker had their offices there.

"Q. How many people were in the Western Worker? [8593]

"A. Well, they had the editor and they had the assistant editor.

"Q. Anyone else?

"A. Well, then the circulation manager—the circulation manager and the advertising manager was the same.

"Q. Who else?

"A. Then you had the trade union director.

"Q. Anyone else?

"A. And you had the membership director.

"Q. Anyone else?

"A. And you had the agitation and propaganda director.

"Q. All right. Who else?

"A. To the best of my recollection, there was more, but that is the best of my recollection.

"Q. Were there any stenographers working there?

"A. Well, yes. I thought you just wanted the directors of the Communist Party.

"Q. These are all the directors that you can remember, is that correct? A. That is correct.

"Q. You think there were some more, but you can't remember them, is that right?

"A. I say, to the best of my recollection that was the total of the functionaries of the Communist Party at the headquarters. [8594]

"Q. That would be, then, in addition to Mr. Darcy there were five other persons whom you remember? A. Yes, that is correct.

"Q. Were there office stenographers there?

"A. There was, yes.

"Q. How many?

"A. Mr. Darcy had a stenographer. She did other work, too, but, as I say, the Communist Party was a vest-pocket organization.

"Q. Any other stenographer?

"A. I don't know if you could classify them as stenographers or they doubled for other jobs, too.

"Q. How many? How many people were doing that kind of work, either stenographers or doubling in their jobs?

"A. That kind of work was mostly voluntary and if a person had a day off on their jobs they would come down and help out, so it would vary from day to day.

"Q. Would there be as many as ten or fifteen people who did that off and on?

"A. I wouldn't want to give a figure, because——

"Q. Well, roughly.

"A. As I say, I came to the office maybe once a day some days, maybe two or three times a day on other days. I was in and out. I didn't stick my nose in each office and check up on each person and what he was doing there. It didn't concern me. [8595]

"Q. There were people who would act as volunteer workers when they had a day or two off?

"A. That is right.

"Q. You do not know how many there may have been. There might have been as many as twenty or as few as five or six?

"A. It varied with the campaign that was under way. If there was a vigorous campaign under way there would be more. When things slacked off there would be less.

"Q. Was there any file clerk or anything like that?

"A. I wouldn't know whether there was or not.

"Q. When you had books issued for the numerous people you described, who gave you those books?

"A. As I say, we had meetings of the section organizers.

"Q. Let us forget that for a minute.

"A. I am trying to explain how the books were issued.

"Q. You said at the end of the year, for instance, you turned in the old books and had new books issued. To whom did you turn in the old books?

"A. That is what I am trying to explain if you will permit me.

"Q. What was the name of the person to whom you turned them in?

"A. There was a Kay McGee at one time.

"Q. What was her job there or her office?

"A. She generally was secretary to Sam Darcy, at times, I [8596] say. I think she was the director of the membership drives.

"Q. Then who were some of the other people who occupied that same position?

"A. Betty Gannett occupied the position of membership director.

"Q. Did you get some of the books from her or turn in some books to her on occasion?

"A. That is right.

"Q. Anybody else?

"A. It was mostly a woman, that is, generally a woman, and at this time those are the two people that stand out prominently that I remember.

"Q. But there may have been more, is that right?

"A. There may have been more, yes.

"Q. You do not know where in the office they filed these applications, is that right?

"A. Well, to be very frank, I don't think they filed them in that office.

"Q. Where did they send them?

"A. I haven't the slightest idea, For security reasons they didn't tell me what they were going to do with the confidential data they had.

"Q. You do not know where those applications were sent?

"A. It was no concern of myself at all. It was no concern of myself whatsoever." [8597]

Then there goes on a considerable amount of discussion about books and so forth, and then over to page 1419 to 1421. (Reading):

"Q. All right. Now, will you tell me this:

You said that Mr. Bridges' application, that there was something extraordinary about it, that they didn't go through, or the application did not go through, the ordinary channels. Is that roughly correct? A. That is correct.

"Q. And the reason for that, I take it, is that he was an alien and subject to deportation if he were known to be a member of the Communist Party, and hence his membership had to be kept concealed, is that right?

"A. Well, not only for those reasons, because every member, his membership was kept concealed. But in Bridges' case, extraordinary precautions were taken.

"Q. For that reason that I have just enunciated, is that right?

"A. Well, primarily, I guess you are correct on that."

I believe that will be all, your Honor.

The Court: That completes the reading of the request made.

I have worked this formula out in my mind since our discussion this morning: that in the light of the very lengthy record of testimony in this case, and in view of a rule which has obtained over the spread of many years, we would serve, I believe, this case more happily to have the testimony read in the courtroom, for fear that some possible error or claimed error [8598] might creep in. As illustrative: Many matters were heard outside the presence of the jury. It would mean dissecting the transcript in many instances. I can find no rule that would permit the Court to allow, at least in these federal courts, the delivery of the transcripts to the jurors for their independent perusal in the jury room.

I would suggest this, if agreeable to counsel and the jury: If the jurors, through the foreman, present in advance the name or identity of the witness or witnesses and specify a particular part or parts that they may desire, counsel and the Court will then undertake to satisfy the request by going over the transcript, allocating such parts as they believe are being requested, or might be the subject of request, and such portions will be read to you in open court.

Now, as a matter of expediency and in the light of the labors involved, the transcripts would have to be read in the jury room in one form or another by the foreman or some person chosen, to the jurors; and I believe it will serve a useful purpose to have the transcript read in open court or such part thereof that you may desire. It may be that our burdens will be decreased if, after a complete discussion as between the jurors, you indicate through the foreman in writing and through Mr. Mitchell to the Court, the name or names of the witness, then the Court, with counsel, will attempt to sift and analyze the same, so you will have the full impact of your request. [8599]

I have nothing further to say on the subject, unless you have, Mr. Foreman.

The Foreman: No, I think we are perfectly in accord with that. That will be fine.

The Court: Very well, you may then retire, if you desire, for further deliberation.

(Whereupon the jury retired for further deliberation at 2:30 o'clock p.m.)

(The following occurred outside the presence of the jury.)

The Court: If I may have a word with counsel? I might suggest that in the light of any further requests that we might either in court or in chambers, to suit your pleasure and convenience, and whatever the request may be as to the transcript, we may then go over the matters and disassociate from the text of the transcript such matters as may have occurred out of the presence of the jury. There were many matters which occurred. It might result in some degree of prejudice one way or the other, and I think we can analyze and refine the whole request to the end that they get the full burden of the transcript and from both sides.

Mr. Donohue: Very well, your Honor.

The Court: We will recess.

(Recess.)

(At 3:17 o'clock p.m., court was reconvened and the following proceedings were had outside the presence of the jury [8600] in open court:)

The Court: Counsel, Mr. Mitchell has a request from the jury which he will read into the record.

The Clerk: The request is as follows:

> "Mr. Mitchell, may we have read to us the B. B. Jones testimony on direct and cross-examination, re alleged meeting in restaurant with Mr. Bridges in company with Mr. Schomaker. Issue: alleged signing of application by Mr. Bridges into the Communist Party. This testimony may be read to us at the Court's convenience."

Signed: "Glenn Christensen."

And it is marked "3:05 p.m., 4/1/50."

The Court: I think we should attend to that immediately, gentlemen, if agreeable?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: The transcripts are available, Mr. Hallinan?

Mr. Hallinan: We will send to get them. It will take ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. Donohue: We will have ours in a few minutes, your Honor.

Mr. Hallinan: We might use the same transcript.

The Court: Could it be possible in the light of your situation? Could you have some of the—well, you couldn't anticipate that. It is only a matter of ten or fifteen minutes?

Mr. Hallinan: We have told them to bring down the entire transcript and leave it here. We could use the same transcript, [8601] however.

Mr. Donohue: I will send for it at once and we may both use them.

The Court: There shouldn't be any difference on reading it. There wouldn't be any matter on interruptions in Mr. Jones' testimony.

Mr. Donohue: I don't think so.

The Court: If there be any matters, will you call my attention to them?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: All right, we will recess.

(Brief recess.)

(Whereupon at 3:48 p.m., court was reconvened, the jury assumed its position in the jury-box, and the following proceedings were had in open court:)

The Court: You may proceed, then, with the reading of the testimony of Bruce. B. Jones, in accordance with the suggestion made by the jury, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: I understand that the jury is only interested in that part of Mr. Jones' testimony that related to the allegation of Schomaker that he helped him sign up Harry Bridges in the Communist Party, is that right?

The Foreman: Yes.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, then, starting at page 4182, line 23:

"Q. Let me ask you this: Do you know John Schomaker? [8602]

"A. Yes, I know John Schomaker, Mr. Hallinan.

"Q. How long have you known him?

"A. I met John Schomaker in the latter part of 1933. The place I met him at, if I remember correctly, was in the Marine Workers Industrial Union hall, which was located on the second floor of a building I think at 432 Market Street.

"Q. That was known as the MWIU, was it?

"A. Marine Workers Industrial Union.

"Q. Were you a member of that?

"A. I was.

"Q. Was Schomaker? Well, withdraw that. Now, I want to ask you this: Do you know Harry Bridges? A. Yes, sure.

"Q. When did you first meet Harry Bridges?

"A. The first time, Mr. Hallinan, I met Harry Bridges to talk to was when I was on a steamship called the Texan, which was in the third or fourth month of the year 1934. I was a member of the crew of that ship and Bridges was a longshoreman that had been loading the ships. There is a lapse of time or a brief lull between the longshoremen when they get their work done and between them getting off the ship and the seamen who are standing by, before the seamen take over battening down the hatches and like that. That is the first time that I had ever met Harry Bridges to have anything to say to him. [8603]

"Q. You say that was some time in 1934?

"A. I have a discharge, Mr. Hallinan, from the Government, it was the Coast Guard or the Steamboat Inspectors at that time, which says on it, if I remember correctly, it has the first letter is 4, and there is a line and 34; I think the middle is 3. I think it was the fourth month, they calculate it that way, or the day. It was in March or April, 1934.

"Q. Does that card show the name of the ship you sailed on?

"A. It shows my name, the name of the ship, and it shows my rating on the ship, and it shows that I deserted the ship in New York in 1934.

"Q. Is it by means of that card that you are able to place the first time you talked to Harry Bridges? A. Yes, that is correct.

"Q. In other words, you had seen him and spoken to him but had not had a conversation with him prior to that day?

"A. That is correct, Mr. Hallinan.

"Q. That would be about April, 1934, so far as your memory is refreshed by the document that you had? A. That is correct, yes.

"Q. Will you tell us what the nature of your conversation with him was at that time?

"A. I don't know. Harry was standing over there and smoking a pipe. They had just swung in the gear or something, [8604] and if I remember correct, he had ~~a piece of~~ rope in his hand and he said something about having a good voyage and do a good job.

"Q. At that time had you been designated by the Marine Workers or some organization to try to do something about the impending strike on the Pacific Coast?

"A. Well, Mr. Hallinan, it was two ways: I was involved in a transaction trying to get something to eat. I always had my book down there in the fink hall on top to try to get a ship. It was a question of trying to get something to eat and also help out my brother seamen and longshoremen, and under that category, that is when I shipped on that ship."

Your Honor, I might interrupt by saying that I suppose the time at which Mr. Jones met Mr. Bridges would be pertinent, as to whether he had met him in 1933. That is why I put in this part—although it finishes herein a few minutes.

(Continuing reading:)

"It was a question of trying to get something to eat and also help out my brother seamen and longshoremen, and under that category, that is when I shipped on that ship.

"Q. Let me ask you this: Did you in the month of December, 1933, or at any other time or at all, in company with John Schomaker or alone or under any circumstances or in the presence of anybody ever ask Harry Bridges or suggest to Harry Bridges or recommend to Harry Bridges that he join the [8605] Communist Party?

"A. I did not, Mr. Hallinan; at no time did I ever sign Harry Bridges up in the Communist Party, and at no time did I ever ask him to join the Communist Party.

"Q. Did you ever in the company of Schomaker ~~or by~~ yourself or in the company of any other person in a restaurant at Stewart and Market Street or at any place on the wide globe ever receive from Harry Bridges an application signed by him applying for membership in the Communist Party?

"A. I did not, Mr. Hallinan, and Schomaker is a ~~goddam liar when~~ he said that I did."

Then moving to 1945, there are two pages there:

"Q. I asked you a little while before, and then some discussion interrupted it, in addition to saying that you had signed or you had received a signed application card from Harry Bridges, Schomaker testified that in December, 1933, you and he had to walk up Market Street to 37 Grove Street, which he said took about 45 minutes because neither you nor he had the carfare. Do you know whether he was impoverished at that time?

"A. Well, there is one point—let's see. We were supposed to walk up there from a restaurant, Mr. Hallinan?

"Q. Yes.

"A. I will tell you a little story about that restaurant, Mr. Hallinan. That restaurant—I would never have went in [8606] that restaurant with Bridges or Schomaker because at different times I would go in that restaurant and work for a meal. That's right. I have been down on my hands and knees and scrubbed the border around the floors of that restaurant for something to eat, but I have a little pride, and I would never have went in that restaurant in the first place to talk over anything with Schomaker or Harry Bridges. And as far as walking up Market Street with John Schomaker and he said he was short of money, that is a lot of baloney because he was living with his family, Mr. Hallinan. I never saw him short of money or anything like that. I didn't see him flush, but he was eating three square meals a day and living with his family.

"Q. His wife was working for the Japanese Steamship Company, you say, at that time?

"A. That is what she told me, yes."

And then finally, on page 4198 and 4199, finishing the direct examination. This is in a conversation that he had with Schomaker, when he went down to see him after Schomaker had testified before the grand jury:

"Q. And will you tell us what the general nature of the conversation was then?

"A. Well, to the best of my recollection then, Mr. Hallinan, the general nature of the conversation was that George asked Schomaker if he cared to tell him what went on at the [8607] Grand Jury. That is the best of my recollection of it. Schomaker appeared very nervous and hedged and this, that and the other. About the only thing that I can remember, Mr. Hallinan, definitely out of that—out of that conversation that day was that Schomaker told George Andersen that he had told the Grand Jury that he didn't know whether Bridges was a Communist or not.

"Q. Now, we talked about the first meeting and the statement that I had here that was shown to you. A. Yes.

"Q. And as to the conversation that occurred in the first meeting. A. Yes.

"Q. You have read this recently for the purpose of refreshing your recollection, is that correct? A. Yes, one day last week.

"Mr. Hallinan: We will offer it in evidence. It is just the same thing. If you want to object, we don't care.

"Mr. Donohue: We object, if your Honor please.

"Mr. Hallinan: All right.

"Mr. Donohue: It is only self-serving.

"Mr. Hallinan: No, it isn't self-serving. It is just a statement.

"Q. Did Schomaker ever tell you that he was going to use your name in testimony as having been involved in obtaining [8608] a membership application signed by Harry Bridges in the Communist Party?

"A. No, he did not.

"Mr. Hallinan: That is all.

"Cross-Examination"

Mr. Donohue: In examining Mr. Jones, your Honor, concerning that visit that Mr. Hallinan just referred to at Schomaker's house——

Mr. Hallinan: Might I have the page?

Mr. Donohue: Page 4251, line 24. (Reading):

"Q. Referring now to the second visit you made to John Schomaker's home with Mr. George Andersen, Mr. Melin and the name of the third person who accompanied you was what? A. Charles Lampert.

"Q. Charles Lampert?

"A. That is right.

"Q. What time did you get to Schomaker's home?

"A. I would say it was in the mid-afternoon, Mr. Donohue.

"Q. Did you go inside the house?

"A. Not at first, no.

"Q. Later? A. Yes.

"Q. Was this the occasion on which Mr. Schomaker served you with pie and coffee?

"A. Yes, that is true. It is customary to do that. If [8609] anybody comes to my house, I feel insulted—I tell you that—and I just had another invitation, Mr. Donohue, to come down and see her a couple of days ago.

"Q. Did you accept it?

"A. No, I didn't because at that time her husband hadn't said a damn lie here in court about it.

"Q. You went the other two times without invitation, didn't you?

"A. Yes, without invitation the other two times, yes. It was a common understanding when I was in that area, I would go see them, and when they were down there, they would come and see me—when they were up in my area.

"Q. You knew when you went there Mr. Schomaker had already testified before the grand jury?

"A. When I went there the second time?

"Q. Yes. A. That is correct.

"Q. Didn't you go there for the purpose of trying to find out what he had said? A. No, no.

"Q. Let me ask you this: At this meeting at Mr. Schomaker's home, did you not hear George Andersen say to Mr. Schomaker, 'The reason we are here is to ask you to tell us what transpired before the grand jury.'?

"A. I can't recall whether I did that or not, Mr. Donohue. [8610]

"Q. And didn't you hear John Schomaker reply, 'Well, I can't divulge what happened there.'? Did that happen?

"A. I may have heard him and I may not have. He would have been hypocritical if he did; either that or he would have been lying the previous time because he sat down and told me what happened or what was supposed to have happened. He never said that to me the first time.

"Q. I will ask you if it is not a fact that George Andersen said, 'That is true, but will you answer one question: Did you say to the grand jury whether or not Harry Bridges was a Communist?'

Did you hear George Andersen ask you that question? A. I think I did, yes.

"Q. And did you hear John Schomaker make this reply: 'Well, I told them the truth. I said you can ask Melin or Ben the same question and they will answer the same way I answer it.'

"Did you hear him make that reply?

"A. If I remember correctly on that, Schomaker told George Andersen that he had not told the grand jury whether Bridges was a Communist or not, or he told him he was not. I think that is it. I am not sure.

"Q. Then you deny that John Schomaker just made the statement I just read to you?

"A. I didn't deny it, no. [8611]

"Q. Did he make that statement?

"A. I don't say he did, I don't say he didn't.

"Q. Let me ask you this, if it is not a fact——

"A. I am not sure the other one is a fact, Mr. Donohue.

"Q. Didn't John Schomaker then turn to each of the three of you, Melin, the man we have called Lampert——

"A. I don't call him that. That is what he calls himself.

"Q. ——and yourself—— A. Yes.

"Q. ——and ask each one of you in turn did you know the answer to that one, and didn't each one of you say, 'yes,' including you?

"A. No, that wasn't said, no, no.

"Q. And isn't it a fact that John Schomaker then turned to you and said 'You signed him up?'

"A. You are a liar for saying Schomaker said that.

"Q. I didn't ask you that.

"A. It isn't a fact.

"Q. I asked you if he made that statement.

"A. It isn't a fact. At no time at these previous meetings I went down with Schomaker did Schomaker tell me in the presence of these other people anything about signing Bridges up, and it struck me very sharply when it came out in the newspapers that he said that.

"Q. And isn't it a further fact that you said, 'The s.o.b. [8612] was hard to get dues out of.'?

"A. You are a liar for saying that here, and I never said that. You are a liar, Donohue, and Schomaker is, too.

"Mr. Donohue: That is all. No further questions.

"The Witness: You got that, Donohue? You are a liar and Schomaker is, too, and anybody is that ever said I signed Bridges up."

Mr. Hallinan: There are one or two other matters I think should be read in on the cross-examination and a little on redirect.

> "Q. (By Mr. Hallinan, reading): Mr. Jones, after you read Schomaker's statement"——

Mr. Donohue: What page?

Mr. Hallinan: 4255, following along just after what you read.

> "Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Mr. Jones, after you read Schomaker's statement in the paper of what he was supposed to have said, that you had made these statements, did you publish some sort of handbill to distribute to your friends on the waterfront denying these things, denying you had anything to do with signing Bridges up as a Communist?

"A. The chairman of the Defense Committee of Local 10 asked me if I wanted to make a statement and I says, 'Yes.' So after the union meeting that night, on a Wednesday night, we went and explained the thing. He put it on the waterfront. [8613] There was either a typographical error in it or else he misconstrued some of the things I said. I wanted to make that statement. I am familiar with it. I couldn't crash the court and get in here. I wanted to deny it before all the maritime workers and everybody else in the State of California, that Schomaker is a liar. That kind of put the finger on me for being a stool pigeon when he brought that out, and that was the whole conspiracy and the plot to the Department of Immigration when they think that. They were going to dynamite—have Schomaker come out with that idea, and they were going to dynamite, intimidate and scare Jones, scare him with the Gestapo or try to buy him off, like your agent Max Alexander asked me. He said, 'We'll take care of you.' That is your conspiracy and plot, to come out in the newspaper with that stuff and try to get me boxed in with your Gestapo and go along with what Schomaker said."

Now, turning back to page 4202 and 4203, and this is on cross-examination by Mr. Donohue. He asked him first about receiving a phone call from the defense committee and going down and talking to him. (Reading:)

"A. After receiving the phone call, Mr. Donohue, which happened to be a request to do something which I was fully intending to do whether I got the phone call or not, I proceeded to 150 Golden Gate. And I went in there and a clerk [8614] or stenographer showed me a copy of the transcript, I guess you call it, of Schomaker's statements up there, and I was involved in the transaction of reading that over when I think Mr. Hallinan and the attorneys and Bridges came into the room, and I think as they came into the room I was reading this over and explaining to the girl there that it was a lie. That is when I first met him.

"Q. When was that?

"A. That was on the day that Schomaker testified I did that.

"Q. How long did you stay there?

"A. I would say 30 minutes; approximately half an hour or something like that.

"Q. Did you talk with anyone other than Mr. Hallinan or Mr. MacInnis?

"A. On that particular time?

"Q. Yes.

"A. Not that I can remember, no.

"Q. When did you next talk to anyone about your testimony now?

"A. Well, let me see. When was that testimony given, Mr. Donohue?

"Q. Are you referring to the testimony of John Schomaker?

"A. You asked me—repeat your question again, please.

"Q. When did you next talk to anyone concerning your [8615] testimony here after the incident you have just discussed in which you said you talked to Mr. Hallinan and Mr. MacInnis at 150 Golden Gate Avenue?

"A. Well, I will answer—I will say that when that come out in the newspaper it created quite an uproar and there was all kinds of people asking me about it, rank and file longshoremen and all kinds of people, and anybody that asked me about it I told them; and I told anybody who would listen that what Schomaker said up here about me signing up Harry Bridges was a lie. I can't enumerate all the people. It would be half the waterfront, I guess."

Then on page 4209, on cross-examination again:

"Q. And it is a fact that you didn't go down and see Mr. Schomaker until after you had received your subpoena to appear before the grand jury?

"A. That is right. That is what I told the Court. I had nothing in common with him to go down and see him. He is a degenerated moron.

"Q. You didn't tell him that when you went down there? A. What?

"Q. You didn't tell him that?

"A. I didn't say the words degenerated moron, no, but I argued out every point he brought up about the East Coast and the Gulf and that area back there. He said that day that Harry Bridges was a fathead. [8616]

"Q. You didn't tell him that during this visit before or after you had coffee and cake with his wife in the kitchen?

"A. No; since he started involving me here, I have formulated, made up my mind that he is a degenerated moron. I was in the process of coming to that conclusion when he named me here. That guy even tried to write books and I have given him experiences of mine at sea during the war to help him try to write a book.

"Q. Mr. Jones, you didn't tell John Schomaker in the kitchen of his home when you ate his wife's cake and drank her coffee that he was a degenerated moron, did you?

"A. No, I didn't, but I blasted him on every point that he raised. I told him, I says, 'What are you sticking your snout in the waterfront for? You are not on the waterfront; you are down here carrying hod. If you have got something against Bridges or Schmidt, don't take it out on the rank and file.' That is what I told him. 'I am down there trying to make a living,' I says, 'and indirectly you are hitting me.'"

And then on page 4233, just two short excerpts to show the time that he says he first talked to Harry Bridges. On line 3:

"Q. When did you ship on the Texan?

"A. I shipped in San Francisco—I haven't got the discharge with me, but I think it was the fourth month of the year of 1934. [8617]

"Q. We agree, I think, that the fourth month is April?

"A. Yes, I will agree that the fourth month is April, but on this discharge it doesn't say April. It says '4,' it has got a dash, then I think '1' or '2,' and another dash, and then it has got '34.' Some people call the first part the month and some call it the day. I think maybe it is the day or the month, I don't know."

And then over on page 4234, line 12:

"A. When? Well, we—after we sailed from here, we went around through the Panama Canal, up the south Atlantic coast of the United States, stopped at a little place called Norfolk. We were there about in—one afternoon, I think, Mr. Donohue. I went ashore there and referred to a newspaper. We hadn't even got anything about the '34 strike. I picked up a newspaper. I saw in the paper where the West Coast longshoremen had gone on strike."

And then 4253 and 4256. Oh, I am sorry. I think you read that. Yes, that has been read.

The Court: Are there any other phases that you desire to take up on that particular matter, gentlemen?

Mr. Donohue: No, Your Honor.

The Court: We have concluded the reading. You may now retire, if you wish, to further deliberations.

(Whereupon the jury retired to deliberate further, at 4:12 o'clock p.m. Deliberations continued, the dinner hour [8618] excepted, until 9:00 o'clock p.m. when the jury retired to the Whitcomb Hotel for the night, further deliberations to be had tomorrow, Sunday, April 2, 1950, at 1:00 o'clock p.m.) [8618-A]

Sunday, April 2, 1950

(The jury deliberated from 1:00 to 5:00 o'clock p.m.) [8618-A]

Monday, April 3, 1950

(The jury returned to the courtroom at 10:30 o'clock a.m. and in the presence of the jury, the defendants and counsel for the respective parties, the following occurred:)

The Court: Would you read into the record the request made by the jury acting through their foreman?

The Clerk: If Your Honor please, the following message was received a few minutes ago from the jury: "May we have read to us Mr. Wilson's testimony in its entirety?" Signed by Glenn Christensen.

The Court: If agreeable to counsel, you may proceed with the same procedure as we adopted yesterday, the direct and cross-examination being read by respective counsel.

Mr. Donohue: Reading from the record of Friday morning, January 13th, the witness George Edward Haulfish Wilson, called on behalf of the United States, sworn; questions by myself.

"Q. Where do you live, Mr. Wilson?

"A. In Los Angeles.

"Q. And what is your business or occupation? A. I am a newspaper man.

"Q. By what newspaper are you now employed? A. Los Angeles Daily News.

"Q. How long have you lived in Los Angeles, Mr. Wilson?

"A. Since January 1, 1948—or June [8619] 1, 1948.

"Q. And where were you born?

"A. At Charlottesville, Virginia.

"Q. And did there come a time when your family left Virginia?

"A. Yes, I was about two years old.

"Q. And to what state did you go, Mr. Wilson? A. Montana.

"Q. And how long did you live in the State of Montana? A. Until 1934.

"Q. Can you briefly trace your educational or formal educational background in the State of Montana?

"A. I was educated in the public schools, went to the Kentucky Military Institute for one year, went to the University of Montana for approximately two years.

"Q. What was your major study?

"A. Journalism.

"Q. Upon leaving the University of Montana, what, generally, was your employment in the State of Montana?

"A. Newspaper work, entirely.

"Q. And when you came to San Francisco in 1934, would you state generally what your occupation was here until you went to Los Angeles?

"A. Newspaper work.

"Q. Did there come a time, Mr. Wilson, during your residence in San Francisco when you became active in the labor [8620] movement?

"A. There did.

"Q. And will you generally indicate the nature of your activity in the labor movement in San Francisco?

"A. Oh, it started with soon after I came to town, with the American Newspaper Guild, which I joined before I went to work. And after I had gone to work, in the Guild, and the Guild became affiliated with the A. F. of L., sir, I was a delegate to the A. F. of L. Labor Council here. When we were eventually thrown out of the Council, the CIO Council was organized and I became its president.

"Q. Am I correct in stating that you were the first president of the San Francisco CIO Council?

"Mr. Hallinan: I object to that as leading and suggestive, if the Court please.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): May I ask you, were you the first president of the San Francisco CIO Council?

"Mr. Hallinan: Same objection, if it please Your Honor, just repeating it.

"The Court: Overruled.

"A. I was.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): How long did you remain president of the San Francisco CIO Council?

"A. Until the winter of 1941, I believe.

"Q. Did there come a time, Mr. Wilson, and if so, where and [8621] when, that you became a member of the Communist Party? A. Yes.

"Q. Would you state your best recollection as to when it was?

"A. It was either in 1940 or 1941, I am not sure.

"Q. And where did you join?

"A. Well, I have talked with a man by the name of Walter Lambert——

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. I object to this, if the Court please, as hearsay, not binding upon the defendants, not in their presence.

"Mr. Donohue: May I withdraw that question, if Your Honor pleases?

"The Court: All right.

"Mr. Donohue: And ask the question:

"Q. What were the circumstances under which you joined the Communist Party?

"Mr. Hallinan: If the Court please, object to it—res inter alia actae, matters done outside the presence of the defendants, hearsay, not binding upon them.

"Mr. Donohue: May I say, if Your Honor pleases, with respect to this question as with respect to a like objection made to similar questions heretofore that I believe this testimony is admissible not as binding upon the defendants, but as proof of the circumstances under which this witness [8622] did in fact become a member of the Communist Party.

"Mr. Hallinan: Well, where his membership in the Communist Party might also be a matter at issue, if the Court please, it could not be proved in that fashion; that is not the best evidence.

"The Court: The objection is overruled for the reason heretofore disclosed in the record by the Court, and the jury is again admonished, as I have admonished you in the past, that testimony with respect to the entrance of this witness into the Communist Party, and the surrounding circumstances and the incidents related thereto are not binding upon the defendant or either or any of them.

"A. Well, the circumstances, if I understand the question, were that I was asked to join and I joined.

"Q. Did you fill out an application for membership? A. No, I did not.

"Q. Did you receive a membership card?

"A. I later received a membership card.

"Q. Can you tell us from whom you received a card? A. No, I don't remember.

"Q. Did you pay dues as a member of the Communist Party? A. Occasionally, yes.

"Q. And over how long a period did you continue your membership in the Communist Party?

"A. Until the—I would say until the spring of 1945. [8623]

"Q. Was your membership in the Communist Party during that period wholly within the area of the City of San Francisco?

"A. I belonged to the party at no other place, if that is what you mean.

"Q. During the period of your membership in the Communist Party did you attend any meetings of the Communist Party?

"Mr. Hallinan: I object to this as calling for an opinion and conclusion and no proper foundation laid. The circumstances of the meetings might be detailed so the Court and jury could determine the nature of them.

"Mr. Donohue: I think, if Your Honor please, a person who has joined an organization is certainly qualified to testify as to whether he ever attended a meeting of that organization.

"Mr. Hallinan: We have heard that statement numerous times. I contend the foundation should be laid and the circumstances shown so the jury can determine that ultimate fact.

"Mr. Donohue: As Mr. Hallinan and Mr. MacInnis frequently say, if Your Honor please, this question is obviously purely preliminary to what will follow.

"The Court: Overruled.

"Mr. Donohue: Will you read the question?

"(Question read.)

"A. I did.

"Q. About how often, Mr. Wilson, would you say you attended [8624] meetings of the Communist Party?

"A. Oh, the group that I belonged to meet, I think it was, once a week, supposedly once a week. We did not meet that often.

"Q. May I ask you, sir, upon the receipt of your membership card, to which group were you assigned?

"A. It is my recollection that I was assigned to a special group known as a special committee.

"Q. Can you tell us where generally meetings of that group known as a special committee were held?

"A. At that time they were being held on Pierce Street.

"Q. By whom were you notified, if you can now recall, of the time and place of the meetings?

"A. We usually had—I will withdraw that. I was notified by numerous people. Nobody, I believe, had the job of telling us. The word was passed around.

"Q. The notification was not in writing?

"A. Oh, no.

"Q. And at these meetings which you attended, Mr. Wilson, did you know all of the persons who attended those meetings?

"A. Yes, I knew them all.

"Q. And did you know each of the persons who attended the meetings that you have described to be also members of the same committee or group of the Communist Party as yourself?

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. I object to that, if your [8625] Honor please, as calling for an opinion and conclusion, and furthermore we have here a different situation. Now it is disclosed that this gentleman never filed any application. We should know what were the circumstances under which these other persons who are charged now or alleged to be members of it became members. In other words, we have had described heretofore a certain procedure for becoming a member of the Communist Party, and I submit it is obvious now the mere opinion of the witness that he is or is not a member of the Communist Party cannot be binding upon this jury. There was a procedure necessary for becoming such a member. Now there are certain people proposed to be identified as members, and how can the witness' impression or his opinion convey any authenticity?

"Mr. Donohue: While Mr. Hallinan's observation may be well taken as to the degree to which the statement of the witness may be accepted, it certainly cannot go as to its admissibility.

"The Court: This matter has been passed on by the Court in other instances, and perhaps under slightly different circumstances. I will overrule the objection. You may cross-examine on that subject.

"The Witness: Repeat the question.

"Mr. Donohue: Will you read the question, Mr. Reporter?

"(Question read.) [8626]

"A. No, I couldn't answer that question in the affirmative. Some of the meetings were attended by—only by people who were assigned to that committee. There were other meetings that other people came to who were not members of the committee.

"Q. During the time, Mr. Wilson, that you were a member of the Communist Party you were also active in the labor movement in the city of San Francisco? A. I was.

"Q. And during that period of time did you faithfully or otherwise attend meetings, the nature of which was purely a matter concerned with your duties in the labor movement and the persons who were present were persons who may or may not have been members of the Communist Party?

"Mr. Hallinan: I object to that, if the Court please, as complex, unintelligible, and not a proper question. He can ask what meetings were attended and what was the subject under discussion, but we should have each separate meeting so we can follow it.

"The Court: Can you understand the question, Mr. Wilson?

"The Witness: It is a little complex for me.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Have you ever attended labor union meetings, the members present being known to you only as members of the labor group who were conducting that meeting?

"Mr. Hallinan: If the Court please, that sounds as [8627] unintelligible as the other. The proper method, if I may be permitted to interpose an objection—when we are cross-examining people numerous continued objections are interposed and we permit them to be finished. If the Court please, it seems to me the only proper method of doing this now is questions can be asked as to meetings and the persons who attended and the subjects under discussion. But to ask the witness a general wide question of that kind calls for an opinion and conclusion outside the scope of what the witness is permitted to testify to. There is no reason why there should be these short-cuts so as to make a group of all meetings and commit the witness to some such statement.

"Mr. Donohue: I appreciate the suggestion, if the Court please, from counsel.

"Mr. Hallinan: I am not making a suggestion, Your Honor, at all. I am making an objection to the Court.

"Mr. Donohue: I think, however, I should be permitted to ask the question.

"Mr. Hallinan: I certainly do not pretend to presume I can instruct counsel in anything, and I do not intend to do it.

"Mr. Donohue: I think I should be permitted to ask the question in my own way, and if the witness does not understand the question I think he can so state, and I will then reframe it. [8628]

"The Court: The witness may answer the question.

"Mr. Donohue: Will you read the question, Mr. Reporter?

"(Question read.)

"A. If I understand the question, it is if I attended labor meetings at which labor members attended. The answer is Yes, if that is the question.

"Q. Mr. Wilson, did you ever attend meetings of the Communist Party at which no person other than persons known to you to be members of the Communist Party were present?

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. The same objection, if the Court please, no proper foundation as to who the persons were, what meetings were held, or the knowledge of the witness o. those persons. I submit that is calling for an opinion and conclusion and containing too many subjects in one general question.

"Mr. Donohue: It is again only a preliminary question, if Your Honor please.

"The Court: It is overruled, and as you proceed with the witness, may I suggest, Mr. Donohue, in connection with any given person identified, lay the foundation and elaborate thereon.

"Mr. Donohue: Yes, Your Honor. I must ask the preliminary question first.

"Will you read the question, Mr. Reporter?

"(Question read.) [8629]

"A. I did.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Wilson, do you know the defendant Harry Bridges?

"A. I do.

"Q. Do you know the defendant Henry Schmidt?

"A. Yes.

"Q. Do you know the defendant J. R. Robertson? A. Yes.

"Q. Do you see them in the courtroom?

"A. Yes, I see them.

"Q. Will you indicate where they are?

"A. Well, Harry is sitting there leaning back. Henry is next to him, and Bob is over at the other end of the table.

"Q. I assume by 'Harry' you refer to Harry Bridges? A. I do.

"Q. By 'Henry' you refer to Henry Schmidt?

"A. Yes.

"Q. And by 'Bob' you refer to J. R. Robertson?

"A. That is right.

"Q. Did you ever attend a Communist Party meeting at which the defendant J. R. Robertson was also present?

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute. Same objection, if the Court please, no proper foundation laid.

"Mr. Donohue: Again it is a preliminary question.

"Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. If I may be permitted to finish [8630] the objection. We make the objection, if the Court please, no proper foundation has been laid as to who were the persons present, and that meeting should be identified and the persons present first before any general characterization is placed upon it. It is calling for an opinion and conclusion on a non-expert matter.

"The Court: Overruled.

"(Question read.)

"A. Yes.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): And did you ever attend a Communist Party meeting at which Henry Schmidt was also present? A. Yes.

"Q. Can you tell us where and when it was that you attended a Communist Party meeting at which J. R. Robertson was also present?

"A. I attended several meetings with Robertson up at—in an apartment in North Beach, and my memory is that it was around in 1944, 1945.

"Q. Do you know, Mr. Wilson, to what unit of the Communist Party Mr. J. R. Robertson was assigned?

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment. Object to that, if the Court please. No foundation laid, calling for an opinion and conclusion of the witness.

"Mr. Donohue: If the objector will permit the question to be answered, I think the answer will answer the objection [8631] itself, if Your Honor pleases. If he doesn't know, obviously he can state so, that he doesn't know. If he does know——

"Mr. Hallinan: That isn't what he asked him.

"Mr. Donohue: I asked him if he knew.

"Mr. Hallinan: And it is assuming something not in evidence, that Mr. Robertson was ever in the Communist Party or ever assigned to any portion of it. A violent assumption on counsel's part—in fact, a trick question.

"Mr. Donohue: If Your Honor pleases, I ask that the—well, I will pass it. May I say, if Your Honor pleases, that the witness has already testified that he is a member or was a member of the Communist Party, assigned to a unit, that he attended weekly meetings of that unit. He has stated that he has attended a Communist Party meeting at which the defendant J. R. Robertson was present, has indicated his best recollection of the time and place. I think he is certainly qualified to answer the question, 'Do you know to what unit of the Communist Party Mr. J. R. Robertson belonged?'

"Mr. Hallinan: If the Court please, a great deal of foundation would have to be laid for that, as to what he knew about Mr. Robertson, whether Mr. Robertson was a member of the party, how he would know that, what applications were made and so forth. This is assuming something [8632] not in evidence. The witness has not said that Mr. Robertson was a member of the Communist Party nor assigned to any part of it. Only that he attended a meeting.

"The Court: Much of that subject matter is cross-examination. The witness has testified that he knew the defendant Robertson, that he attended meetings in a North Beach apartment with the defendant Robertson. Now he is asked as to a particular unit. I think the question is proper.

"Mr. Donohue: Would you read the question to the witness?

"The Court: You might answer that, Mr. Wilson, as to a particular unit, if any, to which Mr.

Robertson was attached, if he was attached to a particular unit.

"A. Well, it was my understanding he was attached to the same unit I was.

"Mr. Hallinan: Ask that be stricken out, if the Court please—'my understanding'—as stating an opinion and conclusion.

"Mr. Donohue: I think, if Your Honor pleases, again that it is a matter he may be cross-examined about.

"The Court: The motion is denied.

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Would you say, Mr. Wilson, that you attended one or more than one meeting of the Communist Party at which the defendant J. R. Robertson was present?

"A. More than one.

"Q. And with respect to the defendant Henry Schmidt, did [8633] you ever attend a meeting of the Communist Party at which Mr. Schmidt was present? A. I did.

"Q. And would you say that you attended one or more than one? A. More than one.

"Q. Do you know a man by the name of Mervyn Rathborne? A. I do.

"Q. Do you know a man by the name of William C. Schneidermann? A. I do.

"Q. Do you know a man who is referred to as 'Slim' Connolly? A. Yes.

"Q. Do you know a man by the name of Lou Goldblatt? A. Yes.

"Q. And you do know Harry Bridges?

"A. I do.

"Q. Did you ever attend a meeting with the persons named? A. I did.

"Q. If so, will you state the time and place?

"A. The place was in the Governor Hotel. The time I don't know.

"Q. What is your best recollection of the time, Mr. Wilson?

"A. Somewhere between 1942 and 1944. [8634]

"Q. Are you able to tell us in whose room at the Governor Hotel the meeting took place?

"A. I think Rathborne made the reservation.

"Q. And can you tell us first what was the subject matter under discussion at that meeting?

"A. Some difference of opinion between Rathborne and Goldblatt, as I recall.

"Q. Do you recall over what the difference of opinion was?

"Mr. Hallinan: I object to that, Your Honor. What should be done is to ask him to state what the conversation was, as nearly as the witness can remember.

"Mr. Donohue: If we can once find the subject matter, if Your Honor pleases, then I will ask him if he can recall what was said.

"Mr. Hallinan: If he can recall that subject matter, he might——

"The Court: Overruled. He may state the difference of opinion that existed as to the overall policies.

"Mr. Donohue: That is all I wanted to know, Your Honor.

"The Court: And then the detail, if he recalls the detail.

"A. The meeting—and I don't have a very good recollection of it, I mean, of what was discussed—was, as I recall, called by Rathborne to make a complaint against Goldblatt's interference in the State Council work.

"Q. Can you recall what was said by any one of the persons who were present, Mr. [8635] Wilson? A. I can not.

"Q. Would you enumerate for me the persons who were present?

"A. Bridges was there, Schneidermann, Rathborne, Goldblatt, Connolly and myself, sir, as I remember.

"Q. Can you tell us whether those were all of the person who were present?

"A. I don't recall any more.

"Q. And who was Mr. Schneidermann, if you know?

"Mr. Hallinan: Object to that, if the Court please, as calling for an opinion and conclusion; no proper foundation laid.

"The Court: Overruled.

"A. He was the state secretary, I believe, of the Communist Party.

"Q. And who was the man referred to as 'Slim' Connolly?

"A. He was the president at that time, I think, of the State CIO Council.

"Q. And who was the man described as Lou Goldblatt?

"A. He was secretary of the International Longshoremen & Warehousemen's Union.

"Q. And who was the man designated as Mervyn Rathborne?

"A. He was the secretary of the California CIO Council.

"Q. I ask you, Mr. Wilson, was this meeting a labor meeting or a meeting of a group of the Communist Party to discuss a [8636] labor problem?

"Mr. Hallinan: Just a moment, if the Court please. Now that is calling for an opinion and conclusion. The gentleman has already stated the persons present, the nature of the discussion, and there is no reason or no logic and no sanction for him now putting a designation upon it, no reason why the witness should be either required or permitted to put any designation on it at all. He has described the meeting, he has stated what the subject was, the persons was and where it took place. The jury and the Court can draw their own conclusions on it.

"Mr. Donohue: Once again I say to Your Honor here is a witness who was prominent in the——

"Mr. Hallinan: Now, I object to arguing that.

"The Court: Yes, I will overrule the objection. Objection overruled.

"Mr. Donohue: Would you read the question to the witness, please?

"(Question read.)

"A. It was a group of Communists discussing the labor problem.

"Mr. Donohue: I have no further questions of the witness.

"Cross-Examination

"Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, Mr. Wilson, before you joined the Communist Party you had attended numerous meetings at which [8637] Communists were present, had you? A. I had.

"Q. And——

"A. I had attended several, yes.

"Q. I beg your pardon?

"A. I had attended——

"I guess what I should do, your Honor, would be to say that I don't understand the question in its form. I could answer it many ways; it is obvious I could answer it many ways.

"The Court: Well, Mr. Hallinan, will you reframe it?

"Mr. Hallinan: Yes, surely.

"Q. I say, before you joined the Communist Party at all, and while you were in the labor movement in San Francisco from 1934 to 1940 or 1941, I take it you attended meetings at which Communists were present, is that right? A: Oh, yes.

"Q. And did you attend meetings at which Communists were present at which you were the only non-Communist? A. I don't know.

"Q. In other words, there wouldn't be—there might be people there who would or would not be Communists, so far as you know, is that correct?

"A. That is correct.

"Q. And you say that you never filed or signed or filled out any application? [8638]

"A. That is the best of my recollection.

"Q. But some time a membership card was delivered to you? A. Yes.

"Q. Do you know how long after you—well, withdraw that. And you say that you occasionally paid dues to the party? A. That's right.

"Q. Now, with relation to meetings that were attended by you, that is, meetings of Communists, before you became a member of the party, with relation to what subjects were those meetings being held?

"A. Well, I attended one out at Civic Auditorium where Browder made a speech one time, I think. That was a meeting, a public meeting.

"Q. Did you attend private meetings also where they were present?

"A. There were meetings of—many labor meetings at which Communists were in attendance, purely labor meetings. I have attended social affairs at which Communists have been present.

"Q. Now, you say that you met Mr. Robertson at the meeting—at several meetings that were held at North Beach; is that right?

"A. That was my——

"Q. You never saw any Communist Party book that was ever issued to Mr. Robertson? [8639]

"A. No, I have never seen one.

"Q. You never saw any application ever signed by him? A. No, I did not.

"Q. Never saw him pay any dues?

"A. I don't think I ever saw him pay dues.

"Q. And the same answers as to Mr. Schmidt, is that correct? A. That is correct.

"Q. And the same answers as to Mr. Bridges, is that true? A. Right.

"Q. The meeting that you say was called at the Governor Hotel related to matters, you said, of the State Council work—that is, the CIO; is that right?

"A. Yes; Rathborne asked me to go to it. I went with him.

"Q. Where is the Governor Hotel?

"A. Oh, it is down—it is right around the corner from where the ILWU building is now. The little red streetcar comes down the street there, just a block back of Golden Gate Avenue. The street—I don't know what it is.

"Mr. Hallinan: I beg your pardon. I missed the last——

"The Court: Read the answer.

"The Witness: I don't recall the name of the street, your Honor, it is on.

"The Court: Mr. Hallinan, would you like to take a short recess? [8640]

"Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

"The Court: We will take a short recess, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, the morning recess. May I again admonish you not to discuss the case under any conditions, nor to form nor express an opinion on this matter until it is submitted to you. You may retire for the recess.

"(Recess.)

"Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Mr. Wilson, after you—at any time in your career did you work for the United States Government? I mean, within recent years? A. I did.

"Q. When?

"A. From December, 1945, until the summer of 1947.

"Q. Was that a civil service job?

"A. It was.

"Mr. Hallinan: That is all. No further questions.

"Mr. Donohue: We have no further questions of the witness. May the witness be excused?"

(Page 7211, line 13, to page 7212, line 9:)

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Wilson, it has been testified here that when you heretofore appeared as a witness you did so under a threat by the United States that you were not to testify you would yourself be subjected to a prosecution? Is that true or false? [8641]

"A. Well, it is not true. I had committed no offense that I was aware of, and there was no threat of prosecution.

"Q. It has been testified here, Mr. Wilson, that you were told by one of your two employers that were you not to testify you would lose your position. Is that true or false? A. That is false.

"Q. When you testified here before, Mr. Wilson, was your testimony truthful? A. It was.

"Mr. Hallinan: I object to that as calling for the opinion and conclusion of the witness and ask the answer be stricken out.

"Mr. Donohue: I ask the question on the basis, if your Honor please, that it has been testified to by the defendants that the testimony Mr. Wilson gave was not true.

"The Court: The objection is overruled. Mr. Wilson, you may answer."

The Court: Does that complete the reading?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

The Clerk: If Your Honor please, may the record show that on yesterday, April 2nd, the jury asked that all the exhibits in evidence, both as to the United States and all the defendants, be given to them, and that I presented the matter to [8642] counsel for all parties, and that they stipulated that the same might be delivered to the jury, and they were so delivered.

Mr. Hallinan: That is so stipulated.

The Court: Is that stipulated?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen, you may now retire for further deliberations, if you so desire.

(Thereupon, at 11:13 a.m., the jury retired again to deliberate upon its verdict.)

(The jury returned into court at 8:55 o'clock p.m., and the following proceedings were had:)

The Court: Mr. Mitchell, will you read the note received from the jurors?

The Clerk: If Your Honor please, the following communication was received from the jury:

"May we have a clarification of the Court's instructions in regards to the first count of the indictment?" Signed Glenn Christensen.

The Court: In response to the request on the part of the jurors through your foreman, may I first address myself to the first count itself as contained in the indictment.

The indictment, as already indicated to you, contains three counts. The first count charges the so-called conspiracy, the second count is one against Mr. Bridges alone, and the third [8643] count is the so-called aiding and abetting count.

Departing from the language and getting to the meat of the first count, it is provided that on the 23rd of June, 1945, and continuing thereafter until on or about the first of October, 1945, and for some time prior thereto, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, within this division and district, the defendants, Mr. Bridges, Henry Schmidt and Mr. Robertson, did conspire with each other and with other persons to the grand jury unknown, to defraud the United States by impairing, obstructing and defeating the proper administration of its naturalization laws in the manner following, to wit:

Now, we come to what is called the charging part of the indictment in so far as the first count is concerned, and this is the language:

By having said defendant Harry Renton Bridges fraudulently petition for and obtain naturalization in a naturalization proceeding in the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco by falsely and fraudulently stating and representing to the court in said proceeding that he, Harry Renton Bridges, had never belonged to the Communist Party in the United States; that said statement and representation was agreed to be made and made as aforesaid as said defendants and each of them at all times herein mentioned well knew were false and fraudulent in this: that the defendant Harry Renton Bridges had in truth and in fact belonged to [8644] and been a member of the Communist Party in the United States from the year 1933 up to and including the 17th day of September, 1945; that the statement and representation were material to the naturalization proceeding; that in pursuance of the conspiracy and during the existence thereof and in furtherance and to effect the object thereof, defendants did and performed the following overt acts:——

Now, as I indicated to you in the instructions which I gave to you with more particularization at the conclusion of the trial, an overt act may be a purely innocuous thing; it may be a perfectly simple thing—walking across the street or telephoning, a purely innocent act. An overt act, in the very nature of things, is not required to be a criminal act. As in the instances depicted in the indictment, the overt acts in and of themselves are statements of facts and events which transpired which ordinarily would not be regarded as criminal conduct.

The first overt act charged is that on the 23rd day of June, 1945, defendant Harry Bridges—and Mr. Bridges is named in particularization as Harry Renton Bridges, but I will refrain from using that and I will refer to him as Harry Bridges—filed at the office of the Immigration and Naturalization Service in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, an application for a certificate of arrival and preliminary form for petition for naturalization. [8645]

Secondly, that on or about the 8th of August, 1945, the defendant Harry Bridges appeared before Lloyd Garner, a naturalization examiner of the United States at San Francisco, in the office of the County Clerk in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and gave testimony in the matter of the application of the defendant Bridges for naturalization.

Third: that on or about the 8th of August, 1945, defendant Henry Schmidt and defendant J. R. Robertson and each of them, at the office of the County Clerk in and for the City and County of San Francisco signed as witnesses a petition for naturalization in the case of the defendant Harry Bridges.

Fourth: that on or about the 17th day of September, 1945, the defendants Harry Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson and each of them appeared in the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco and gave testimony in support of the petition of the defendant Harry Renton Bridges for naturalization.

In so far as the overt acts are concerned there does not appear to be any material dispute in the evidence concerning the appearances and events depicted by the witnesses excepting, as I recall, Mr. Robrtson stated that he did not recall appearing before Mr. Garner. It was his testimony, and he so testified in cross-examination. He did recall, however, being at the final hearing. As to that matter, I will not assume to say whether or not he was there. It is a matter of your [8646] determination as to his credibility. The government contends he was there. Mr. Garner testifies that he was there. Mr. Robertson stated very frankly that he did not recall being there; that he recalled being at the final hearing.

So much for the particularization as to the indictment itself and the charging parts of the indictment. I shall hand Mr. Mitchell this indictment and it may be taken by the jurors to the jury room when they resume their deliberations for such perusal or consideration as it may deserve or they may wish to give it.

Now, adverting to the instructions again and retracing my steps:

First, what is a conspiracy? The crux of the offense charged in the first count of the indictment is conspiracy.

If the defendants did not conspire to do the unlawful things which the first count of the indictment charges them with having conspired to do, they are not guilty of the offense thus charged against them.

I instruct you that a conspiracy is a partnership in criminal purposes.

I instruct you that a conspiracy may also be defined as "a combination of two or more persons, by concerted action, to accomplish a criminal or unlawful purpose, or some purpose not in itself criminal or unlawful, by criminal or unlawful means."

If the above elements are not found by you to be present in [8647] the case at bar, no conspiracy will have been proved and you must find the defendants not guilty as to the first count.

Expressed in another way, a conspiracy is an unlawful agreement entered into by two or more persons to commit a crime against the United States, or to defraud the United States. To sustain a charge of conspiracy, it must be shown that one of the members of the conspiracy did some act, commonly called an overt act, in furtherance of the object of the conspiracy. The overt acts, as I have already mentioned, are set forth in the indictment, particularized as the first, second, third and fourth overt acts. The overt act need not be criminal in nature if considered separately and apart from the conspiracy; it may be as innocent as the act of a man walking across the street or driving an automobile or using a telephone. But, if during the existence of the conspiracy, the overt act is done by one of the conspirators to effect the the object of the conspiracy, the crime is complete, and it is complete as to every party found by you to be a member of the conspiracy, no matter which one of the parties did the overt act.

In order to find the existence of a conspiracy, it is not necessary that you find that all these defendants met together and formed an express agreement for probably when men enter into a plan of the character here charged, they do not expressly agree. Much probably is left to unexpressed understanding and it is not necessary that there should have been at any time at [8648] which all met and with any formal expression of words agreed upon a plan or conspiracy. They are usually entered into more or less secretly and carried out in a manner so as to leave as little proof or evidence for detection by anyone later. Rarely in conspiracies is there direct proof of the purposes and intentions of the parties; but direct proof is not indispensable. The object of a conspiracy and a defendant's connection with it may be partly or entirely revealed and shown by the facts and circumstances and the reasonable inferences and conclusions to be drawn from them. But every fact and every circumstance from which the inference is drawn and a conclusion based must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

If persons act together for a common purpose, and that purpose is the illegal act charged as the object to be accomplished, and the acts of the parties so fit together as to show a common understanding or concert of action as to things to be done, that shows a conspiracy.

I instruct you that there has been no direct evidence presented in this courtroom that the defendants or any of them met together and agreed or conspired with each other or with any other persons to defraud the United States Government in any manner as alleged in the first count of the indictment. The only evidence of such a meeting together, agreement or conspiracy is purely circumstantial, if it exists at all, and therefore the instructions I gave you with respect to the [8649] standards which you must apply to circumstantial evidence are to govern you in your consideration or whatever evidence there is of the existence of the alleged conspiracy.

I should further tell you, ladies and gentlemen, that all persons working together in the furtherance of a common design are members of the conspiracy, although the part anyone is to take is subordinate, or is to be executed at a remote distance. It is not necessary that each conspirator participate in each step or stage of the common general design. One of them may do one thing, another may do a different thing. Some may take major parts, while the participation of others may be in a minor degree. The mere knowledge, acquiescence or approval of an unlawful act, without cooperation, or agreement to cooperate, is not sufficient to constitute one a party to a conspiracy. It requires more than proof of a mere passive cognizance of a crime on the part of a defendant to sustain a charge of conspiracy to commit it. And you must find that the defendant did some act, or made some agreement showing an intention to participate in some way, in such conspiracy.

One who aids or abets a conspiracy, after its formation, with understanding of its purpose, becomes a party to it. One who comes into a conspiracy after it has been formed, with knowledge of its existence, and with a purpose of forwarding its designs, is equally as guilty as though he had participated in its original formation. [8650]

Since the defendants Mr. Schmidt and Mr. Robertson are charged with entering into a consipracy to defraud the United States, the question of whether or not they possessed any criminal intent becomes material to the discussions of the jury.

In any crime, as the Court has heretofore explained, there must be a necessary union of acts plus intent, and if one of these two elements be lacking, then no crime at all will have been proved.

That, I believe, may aid you, in the light of your request made, ladies and gentlemen of the jury. As I have indicated, you may take the indictment with you and return for further deliberations, if you wish.

The Foreman: We are very much satisfied by that, I know. Thank you.

(Thereupon the jury left the courtroom to continue their deliberations.) [8651]

Tuesday, April 4, 1950—11:50 A.M.

(During the deliberations of the jury in the case at bar, and at 11:50 o'clock a.m. this date, the jury returned into the courtroom and in the presence of the Court, jury, defendants and respective counsel, the following proceedings were had in open court:)

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, have you reached a verdict?

The Foreman: Yes, your Honor, we have.

The Court: Mr. Christensen, would you present the verdict or forms of verdict to the Marshal.

(Whereupon forms of verdict were handed to the Marshal by the foreman, and handed thence to the Clerk and to the Court.)

The Court: Mr. Mitchell, will you read the verdicts.

The Clerk: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, harken to your verdicts as they shall stand recorded.

"We the jury find Harry Renton Bridges, the defendant at the bar, guilty on the first count of the indictment, guilty on the second count of the indictment. Glenn Leo Christensen, Foreman."

"We the jury find J. R. Robertson, the defendant at the bar, guilty on the first count of the indictment, guilty on the third count of the indictment. Glen Leo Christensen, [8652] Foreman."

"We the jury find Henry Schmidt, the defendant at the bar, guilty on the first count of the indictment, guilty on the third count of the indictment. Glenn Leo Christensen, Foreman."

So say you all?

(The jurors indicated assent.)

The Court: One moment, please. Poll the jurors, please, on the behalf of the defendants.

The Clerk: Yick Kuen Wong, are the verdicts as read your verdict?

Mr. Wong: Yes.

The Clerk: Alfred Fletcher Buckman, are the verdicts your verdicts?

Mr. Buckman: It is.

The Clerk: Myrtle Murray?

Mrs. Murray: They are.

The Clerk: Curtis Schofield Gibbs?

Mr. Gibbs: Yes.

The Clerk: Leon Joseph Batch?

Mr. Batch: They are.

The Clerk: Anna Dagmar Lundgren?

Miss Lundgren: They are.

The Clerk: Charles Henry Williams?

Mr. Williams: They are.

The Clerk: Glenn Leo Christensen? [8653]

Mr. Christensen: Yes.

The Clerk: John Joseph Carey?

Mr. Carey: They are.

The Clerk: Morris Leslie Wolfsohn?

Mr. Wolfsohn: Yes.

The Clerk: Abbie Marian Stevenson?

Mrs. Stevenson: Yes, they are.

The Clerk: Mrs. Rae Strauss?

Mrs. Strauss: Yes, they are.

The Clerk: All jurors have replied in the affirmative, your Honor.

The Court: The verdicts and each of them may stand recorded.

Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I desire to say a few words to you. Not only has this case been the longest criminal trial in the history of these courts, but in addition it has been the most bitterly contested; and the length of the contest has been reflected in your deliberations and in the fervor and devotion that you have attached to your duties. In terms of discharging your obligations as jurors, I desire you and each of you to know, as well as your diligent foreman, Mr. Glenn Christensen, that you have evidenced an intelligent appreciation of the facts in the light of the legal principles applicable. You have finally found the golden truth shimmering in the fiery crucibles of this trial. Your deliberations have been marked by [8654] painstaking effort and a consciousness of the defendants' rights, as well as the rights of the Government of these United States.

I say to you, you have exemplified the finest traditions of a jury under our Federal system, and on my own behalf and on behalf of the Government of the United States, I desire to thank you.

May I also give recognition to the splendid services rendered this Court and this jury by the United States Marshal, Mr. Roseen, his deputies and attaches; and in particular Mr. Kennedy and Mrs. Cole, who have ministered to your wants and needs during these many, many hours of travail, who undertook to guard your privacy.

Also, and in finality, to my loyal friend, the Clerk of this court, Ed Mitchell, I say that he has given unsparingly of his waning energies in these many, many months of trial. On behalf of this court, and I know of this jury, the attorneys, the press and the thousands of interested observers who have witnessed these trial proceedings, I say to Ed Mitchell that his devotion to the service of the United States shall ever be an inspiration to this court, as well as to the judges thereof and to the attaches.

In discharging you as jurors, may I make one final suggestion as, perhaps, an aid to your welfare and your comfort in the next ensuing days—and your peace of mind. May I say to you, and this is a passing suggestion only, that you constitute [8655] Mr. Christensen, your foreman, as your spokesman, to the end that he may act as your conduit in speaking on your behalf to the members of the press. Bear in mind that the gentlemen of the press represent every service in the United States, and in fairness to them, they will no doubt address you on the subject, and I think it will serve their interest as well as your own that someone act as a spokesman. I pass that on to you as a suggestion merely; mindful, of course, that I cannot bind your individual conducts once you are discharged here.

I need say no more. You are now discharged.

(Whereupon the jury was discharged and retired from the courtroom at 12 o'clock noon.)

The Court: With respect to the matters affecting the defendants, I might suggest, Mr. Hallinan and Mr. MacInnis, that we take a brief recess period so that hereafter you may make such motions with respect to bail and such other motions as may be applicable.

Mr. Hallinan: Very well.

The Court: Is that agreeable, Mr. Donohue?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: I think it will aid in the matter and facilitate the interests of the press and courtroom observers; we will therefore take a 15-minute recess, and thereafter hear such motions as may be advisable.

(Recess.) [8656]

The Court: Will counsel and the defendants please step forward.

(Whereupon the defendants and counsel arose and stood before the Court.)

The Court: May the record show that the defendants, Mr. Harry Bridges, Mr. Robertson and Mr. Schmidt, and represented by their respective counsel, Mr. MacInnis and Mr. Hallinan, are present before the Court. Do you have anything to say at this time, gentlemen, why judgment and sentence should not be pronounced against you?

Mr. Hallinan: Well, we wanted to interpose, if the Court please, a motion in arrest of judgment and a motion for a new trial, and it might be that if the Court would defer sentence until we could prepare the formal motions, it would be more satisfactory.

The Court: Is there any opposition to that suggestion?

Mr. McMillan: No opposition, may it please your Honor.

The Court: Well, I suggest, Mr. Mitchell, that we set the matter down within the five-day period. That would bring it over until when?

The Clerk: Today being the 4th, your Honor, on Monday next, April 10.

The Court: The matter may stand over regularly until Monday next—and the date, Mr. Mitchell, please?

The Clerk: April 10, if your Honor [8657] please.

The Court: April 10.

The Clerk: May I suggest at ten o'clock.

The Court: At ten o'clock. Is that agreeable?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes. And may the defendants remain on bail, the same bail that is now posted, pending——

The Court: What is the amount of bail?

Mr. Hallinan: I think it is $5000 each.

The Clerk: That is true, your Honor.

The Court: I have no objection on behalf of the Court. You have no objection, Mr. McMillan?

Mr. McMillan: Well, may it please your Honor, I desire to call your Honor's attention to some matters in that regard. Rule 32 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure provides: "Pending sentence the Court may commit the defendant or continue or alter the bail."

There is no suggestion on my part at all, may it please your Honor, that the defendants be remanded to the custody of the Marshal pending sentence. But I do suggest, however, that now that these defendants have been convicted the bail be altered; that is to say, that the bail be raised. And in that connection, may it please your Honor, by the verdict of this jury in this case the public knows now that the defendant Bridges has, during all the years charged in the indictment, secretly been a Communist, a member of the Communist Party, while a top labor union leader. Now, the evidence and the verdict from this [8658] jury shows to the public that the other defendants have been members of the Communist Party.

Now, may it please your Honor, the Government has had a very unfortunate experience—it is a matter of common knowledge—in the case of Gerhard Eisler. He fled this country. We know that today he is a top leader in the Russian zone in Germany of the Communist Party.

Now, your Honor, I call your attention to this: As a result of the conviction of Mr. Bridges in this case, automatically at the time of judgment and sentence, may it please your Honor, your Honor could order his citizenship canceled and thereupon appropriate proceedings would be brought for his deportation.

Now, I call your Honor's attention to those circumstances, and I respectfully submit that bail should be altered; that is, increased in this matter. I said that I made no suggestion that he should be committed or any of these defendants remanded to the custody of the Marshal, and the reason I have suggested that the bail should be altered is, I am satisfied that at the time judgment and sentence is made here, a notice of appeal will be filed, and very likely, because of important legal questions involved which arose prior to the trial of this case, on motions made before the trial, the question would come up as to whether or not substantial questions are presented for determination on appeal. And if they are substantial questions, [8659] your Honor or the Circuit Court of Appeals would admit the defendants during the pendency of the appeal to bail. Now, being satisfied that your Honor would, by reason of those questions arising before trial—I know of no substantial errors committed during the trial—grant bail. And if not, they would take the matter to the Circuit Court of Appeals and there ask that bail be granted.

So that is the reason I make this statement. It has been almost traditional in this court, may it please your Honor, that upon a plea of guilty or a conviction, the defendants are remanded to the custody of the Marshal. In most all cases, no matter how small they might be or how unimportant, that has been the usual practice, as I repeat, almost traditional with the judges here, to remand the defendants to the custody of the Marshal. But for the reasons which I have indicated, I have made no such suggestion, and I do not make that suggestion.

I submit the matter.

Mr. Hallinan: Might I suggest, your Honor, that Eisler was a temporary visitor in the United States, a native of Poland. Bob Robertson was born in the United States, he has a wife and two children, owns his own home in Mill Valley. Harry Bridges is a naturalized citizen. His wife is an American-born citizen, he has three American-born children. Henry Schmidt, while naturalized, has an American-born child, owns his own home. They are all substantial citizens here; they have no [8660] intention of fleeing or doing anything else except continuing the matter of law.

Mr. McMillan: It is not a question, may it please your Honor, of inability to post the bail. I recall that before this case came on for trial, on an application made by the defendant Bridges to go to Marseilles at a convention to be held there, he, through the union, was willing to post $100,000 bail.

Mr. Hallinan: We can post additional bail if necessary, but if it is unnecessary, why put them to that expense and difficulty of going and raising the bail? Of course,——

The Court: Well, Mr. MacInnis, may I hear from you on behalf of your clients?

Mr. MacInnis: Well, I think, your Honor, that there is no good reason at all to compel an increase in bail at this time. If, as has been suggested, bail can be procured upon appeal, why, the matter will come before the court's discretion then as to what bail should be. But for the interim of four or five days, to compel these men to go to additional hardship would seem to be intemperate, and I am suggesting it would not help either the Government or the defense in this case.

The Court: I am inclined to permit the defendants to remain at large; the amount of $5000 is now impounded as and for bail, at least during the interval when these matters are taken up with the Court, preliminary matters. I might be advised otherwise hereafter by and as a result of a showing to the Court. [8661] Some of the matters which you now present to the Court, Mr. McMillan, were taken up either with Judge Goodman or with Judge Roche at an earlier stage of the trial, with respect to an increase in bail, and there the Judge saw fit, as I recall the record, to permit the defendants to remain at large on the amount of bail then posted, to wit, $5000. And I would see no immediate reason imminent to persuade the Court at this juncture, at least, during the preliminary matters affecting the judgment and sentence, to alter the amounts. However, Mr. McMillan, I do not foreclose you from renewing the motion hereafter.

Mr. McMillan: The matters to which your Honor refers about Judge Goodman and Judge Roche, an application to increase the bail; the only application for increase of bail was in the case in which the defendant Bridges sought to go to France, outside the jurisdiction of this court. That is the only application that was made.

The Court: Well, I believe at least presently the ends of justice would be served by permitting the defendants to remain at large, and the amount of bail may stand without any alteration or increase thereof, at this juncture at least, Mr. McMillan.

Mr. Hallinan: Thank you.

The Court: Now the matters of motion in arrest of judgment and new trial may regularly stand over until Monday next, as [8662] indicated by the Clerk of the Court, until 10:00 o'clock a.m., at which time I will hear the matters.

The Clerk: April 10.

The Court: That is all with respect to the defendants. They may be seated.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Now I have several matters affecting counsel. I might ask counsel to permit me without interruption to say what I have to say, and hereafter, at the conclusion, you may interpose whatever legal motion you may desire, or any individual request on your own behalf, or either of your behalves. I suggest you remain seated counsel, if you wish.

I approach these matters affecting the attorneys with considerable diffidence and no amount of reservation. For when I deal with the attorneys, I deal with officers of this court. I desire to address myself briefly to Mr. Hallinan and Mr. MacInnis. And I say to you that from the beginning of this trial you have embarked upon a course of conduct designed and calculated to contemptuously provoke the Court in the hope that such provocation would lead the Court to commit error or plunge the case into a mistrial.

That such was your purpose has been entirely manifest to me. Such conduct is not alone an affront to the dignity of the Judiciary of the United States, it is an affront to the dignity, good name and honor of a great profession. I said to [8663] you, and I repeat, that members of the bar are officers of the court. My experience has demonstrated that a vast majority of lawyers, in and out of court, conduct themselves with propriety, integrity, dignity and honor.

Your assault on this Court cannot go unchallenged, and I am determined, so far as I am able, in my humble capacity, that such behavior as displayed by you shall not be repeated in other Federal courtrooms. America is justifiably proud of its judicial system, and anyone who attempts to degrade it or weaken it is working an injustice.

With regard to you, Mr. Hallinan, I retrace my steps momentarily to remind you that on the 22nd of November, 1949, the Court adjudged you guilty of criminal contempt, and thereafter regularly filed a certificate under the provisions of Rule 42(a) of the Rules of Criminal Procedure. Thereafter, upon the request of your client, Mr. Harry Bridges, I permitted you to remain as counsel in the case and granted a stay of execution until termination of the trial.

The consent of the Court was obtained upon the belief, reliance and understanding that there would not be a repetition of such conduct. Unfortunately, within a comparatively brief period you deliberately launched into a series of acts and conduct again resulting in criminal contempt, which I have more particularly found and specified in a certificate. During the course of the trial and since the first adjudication, you have, [8664] as a pattern of deliberate misconduct and in flagrant contempt of this Court, the dignity thereof and the respect due to it, sought to and did malign and abuse Government witnesses, attorneys and agents in a loud, contemptible manner. It is difficult to portray by written word your intonation, gestures and deportment, as well as the belligerent tone, mode and manner created. It is difficult to portray by the written word the loud language used by you and the contemptible language used by you, both in and out of the presence of the jury; all of which conduct was designed to bring into disrepute this Federal Court, as well as the judge thereof, charged with the administration of justice.

Accordingly, I specifically find that you, Vincent Hallinan, have been and you are now guilty of contemptuous conduct and misbehavior in the presence of the Court, in the particulars specified in the certificate which I have filed herein; thus obstructing the administration of justice. I therefore adjudge that you have been guilty of contempt of this Court for such conduct in the course of this judicial proceeding. It is adjudged that Mr. Vincent Hallinan is to serve six months in an institution to be designated by the United States Attorney General or his authorized representative, said sentence, however, to run concurrently with the previous judgment and sentence heretofore regularly made and entered on or about the 22nd day of November, 1949.

I am advised that an appeal has been prosecuted and is now [8665] pending before the Court of Appeals with respect to the prior adjudication, and that that honorable Court has granted a stay. It would seem to me meet and proper, and in accordance with the ends of justice, therefore, to permit you, Mr. Hallinan, to remain at large with respect to the second adjudication which I have filed here and which I find herewith, upon your own recognizance.

With respect to——

Mr. Hallinan: Might I comment on that now, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Hallinan: You suggested that after——

The Court: Yes, you may make whatever legal motion you have.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, I wanted to file an affidavit to disqualify you from pronouncing the matter in the same form as the one that I have heretofore filed. Might that be considered as being filed prior to this adjudication?

The Court: Yes, sir.

Mr. Hallinan: And I might say, then, also, your Honor, I see that there is a considerable moderation in many of the things that you have said. I feel that in this case, as you have expressed yourself to the jury, a great deal of bitterness cam up and was reflected. I think, of course, one is a poor judge in his own cause; so a judge sitting on the bench thinks that certainly these passions and bitternesses do not reach to [8666] him and he is acting in an entirely judicious manner.

As far as I myself am concerned, I had no desire to procure a mistrial or anything of that kind. I was shocked at the verdict. I thought we were going to get a verdict of acquittal. I didn't think it was going to be possible for a conviction to be produced on the testimony that was adduced here. So the Court is mistaken in that.

I might say this: that in all the things that I did and said in this court, I was acting according to my best lights to properly protect the rights of my client. Your Honor must see the incongruity of supposing that a private lawyer, helpless, just alone by himself, coming in and for some purpose such as that affronting the power of the Court and the power of the representatives of the Government, for some purpose of doing mischief or making himself unpleasant or anything of that kind. Your Honor should realize, having practiced law yourself, the temptation that a lawyer is under to do exactly the contrary, to overlook what he thinks are errors of the Court, to keep quiet in the face of what he thinks to be erroneous and even tyrannical rulings of the Court, to bow to the powers of the representatives of the Government.

I can only say this, Judge, that Harry Bridges as he stood here with his two co-defendants, is a man with tremendous handicaps against him and against them. He has been maligned and prejudiced by newspaper articles, matters of that kind, [8667] for a great many years. He has had against him now special representatives and general representatives of large arms of the Government, and they have done all they could to procure a conviction.

To say that a private lawyer, then, got up and so conducted himself that his—well, let us say his—courage in attempting to defend his client could be construed by the Court into such a course of conduct as to put himself at loggerheads with the Judge, with the prosecuting department, with the whole Government, is to pay an unexpected and strange compliment, your Honor; and it certainly makes me feel that if this were the last case that I tried, the very words that you uttered here would make me realize and pass on to my children that at least my swan song was conducted in accordance with the highest traditions of a noble profession.

The Court: No response need be made on my behalf, for I stand on the trial record and the transcript of proceedings, with respect to any alleged or asserted bitterness that I may have been claimed to entertain.

With regard to James Martin MacInnis, this Court heretofore, and on the 28th day of February, 1950, regularly adjudged James Martin MacInnis guilty of contempt of this Court. The matter of judgment and sentence having been stayed and deferred until the completion and conclusion of the trial, and the trial having been concluded and terminated, now said James Martin [8668] MacInnis is sentenced to serve three months in an institution to be designated by the United States Attorney General or his authorized representative. Although, in my opinion, Mr. MacInnis' contemptuous conduct was just as studied and flagrant as that of Mr. Hallinan, nevertheless I feel he is entitled to a lesser sentence, for the reason that he appears to have been, to some extent at least, inspired by his senior colleague, Mr. Hallinan.

I hand to you, Mr. Mitchell, the original orders and documents, together with copies thereof, bearing upon the foregoing matters, for transmission to the Clerk's and Marshal's office, respecting Mr. Hallinan. The same order will prevail, that he may remain at large on his own recognizance pending whatever review he may desire to take from the adjudication of contempt.

Mr. MacInnis: I assume that I am invited to make a reply to the remarks of the Court as well.

The Court: Whatever legal response you may have.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes. Well, first of all, I suppose that the record may show the same motion which I have heretofore made, asking for the disqualification of yourself in passing upon any personal difficulty between this Court and me.

If this were not an atmosphere of grimness in which we now find ourselves, after what to me was a most astonishing verdict, I would be constrained to laugh—sitting, as I did, and listening to you tell us that we embarked upon a course of [8669] conduct calculated to provoke the Court into error that would in some way result in a mistrial, and telling me that my conduct was probably inspired by the contemptuous conduct of a greater degree as committed by my senior associate, Mr. Hallinan.

If I am invited to reply, as I feel I now am, I would like to point these things out. The matters in which the citation for contempt was issued against me grew out of the interrogation of the Court of a witness produced by the defense, Father Paul Meinecke, a priest of the Roman Catholic Church. We sat here, in fact the walls probably still echoed with the departure of Lawrence Ross, a Government witness who had confessed his own perjury. He received nothing but a benign smile from the prosecution, and not a word of reproof from the Court. But this simple priest, who said a word in favor of the defendant, Harry Bridges, was first put to a gruelling cross-examination by the prosecution. That was its right—it had the right to cross-examine witnesses. And then the Court turned on the witness. Your Honor mentioned gestures, words, looks in speaking of us. I have in mind your gestures and your words and your looks when you attacked that priest who testified here. Anything that I said I may have said in haste, but I said it in an effort to preserve a judicial atmosphere in this room.

When you speak of us further, generally, you speak of the two counsel for the defense as maligning and abusing Government witnesses and Government counsel. I have in mind that not a [8670] word of reproof passed your lips when the special prosecutor referred to the three defendants as "rats," not a word of reproof crossed your lips when he referred to Mr. Hallinan as a "goat"; apparently the special prosecutor was a person entitled to some greater protection within the purview of this sanctuary in which we now find ourselves.

Assaults upon the Court. I have one or two things I would like to say further, and then I will sit down. The course of conduct. I have been observing the course of conduct indulged in by the Court. It may be that I have deceived myself, it may be that I have been overanxious in this case; it may be that I am peculiarly susceptible, because of the biterness of this case, to arrive at conclusions which I might not otherwise embrace. I do not think so. I recall most vividly an occasion following the appearance upon this witness stand of the men Johnson and Crouch, those men who came here and said that Bridges was in New York upon a particular occasion—men who similarly left here without any word of reproof from the Court. Then a legal discussion came up as to whether or not a certain question could be asked of a prosecution witness. The witness was named Kessler; he was an agent of the Immigration Service. The examiner was Mr. Hallinan. He was attempting to cross-examine that witness upon his motives, and a dispute arose as to the propriety of the question, whereupon the Court took a recess, upon the asserted quest of some cases from our courts [8671] of last resort. The Court came back upon the bench, apparently with a prepared statement in his hand, and in referring to the argument over the testimony of the witness, said more or less as follows: "Your question, Mr. Hallinan, is reminiscent to the Court of a similar tactic engaged in by defense counsel in the case of Morton v. the United States, in which our court said"—And then you proceeded to read to the jury a disseration, saying that the defendants had no defense, that the guilt of the defendants was uncontradicted, that as a last desperate gesture, in effect, an attack was made upon the motive of the witness. And then when it was pointed out, your Honor turned to the jury and said, "Forgive the unfortunate language of the Court."

I say that it is ridiculous to claim that Mr. Hallinan and I embarked upon any studied course of conduct to provoke this Court into error. When I hear those words, I feel even more like a fool. I embarked upon our trial in this case with the hope that we would receive a fair trial in every particular, and I continued to believe that we were going to have a fair trial even after the episodes of the first few days. Even after that stormy day when Mr. Hallinan tried to make an opening statement and was continually interrupted by the Court and by the prosecution, I continued to argue, "Something has happened. If the Court thinks we are attacking him in some way, the Court's pride is involved. He is really not trying to hurt [8672] us." I believed that for awhile. I did.

Now when I hear that we embarked in this case in a studied effort to provoke this Court into error, I shudder at what must be the fate of people who, unlike ourselves, will not stand up and say what they think. That is all I have to say.

The Court: Mr. Mitchell, you may have the orders and certificates for transmission.

The Clerk: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: And with respect to your remarks, Mr. MacInnis, similarly I stand on the record of the trial in this case, without apology either to the attorneys or the defendants. The defendants have had a fair and impartial trial at my hands.

We may now stand in recess.

(Whereupon an adjournment was taken.)

Monday, April 10, 1950, 10:00 o'Clock A.M.

The Clerk: The case of the United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson.

Mr. Hallinan: At this time, if the Court please, I have a motion to make on behalf of the defendant Bridges, but we might as well have the same procedure that we had before: whatever is said on behalf of one defendant would be stipulated to be said on behalf of each. We will file separate motions at this time in arrest of judgment. I have here a motion in arrest of judgment on behalf of Harry Bridges. It moves the Court to arrest judgment for the reason the indictment does not constitute facts sufficient to state an offense against the United States.

I ask leave to file at this time a similar motion signed by Mr. MacInnis on behalf of the defendants Bob Robertson and Henry Schmidt. They are in the same precise language.

Those motions, if the Court please, are based upon points that have been raised before the Court preliminary to the trial, namely, that the indictment shows on its face that it is barred by the statute of limitations, and further, the indictment shows on its face that it does not constitute a public offense, an offense against the United States, principally for the reason that it does not constitute a fraud within the meaning of the statute. In other words, that the gist and content of the [8674] offense only is false swearing on a naturalization proceeding and should not have been brought in the form of a conspiracy to defraud the United States or in an effort to defraud the United States. That matter has been argued, I understand, at great length before you; you made a ruling upon it, and I will submit it upon the argument that has already been introduced.

We have at the same time, if the Court please, further motions. These are motions for a new trial. I will file the written motion, but I would like to state the effect of it orally for the record first. In this action, number, motion for a new trial, the defendant Harry Renton Bridges moves the Court to grant him a new trial for the following reasons:

"1. The Court erred in denying a directed verdict of acquittal.

"2. The verdict is contrary to the weight of the evidence.

"3. The verdict is not supported by substantial evidence.

"4. The Court erred in charging the jury and in refusing to charge the jury as requested.

"5. The defendant Harry Bridges was substantially prejudiced and deprived of a fair trial by reason of the following circumstances:

"A. Misconduct of Court.

"B. Misconduct of counsel for the United States.

"C. Fraud, corruption and bribery of witnesses by agents of the prosecution. [8675]

"6. The Court erred in denying the defendants' motion for a new trial.

"7. The Court erred in sustaining objections to the admissibility of evidence tendered by the defendants.

"8. The Court erred in admitting evidence tendered by the Government over the objection of defendant.

"9. The defendants' prosecution is barred by the operation of the statute of limitations."

I will ask that the written motion be filed and a similar motion in the identical language signed by Mr. McInnis filed on behalf of Mr. Robertson and Mr. Schmidt.

The Court: The several motions may be filed, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: As the matters involved in the motion for directed verdict were included in the instructions that were refused by the Court, there is no need in going into that at this time, or that the verdict is contrary to the weight of the evidence.

The matter of the Court erring in charging the jurors and refusing to charge the jurors as requested has already been presented to the Court after the instructions had been given.

I might say at this time, if the Court please, that of course in discussing any errors of law, that is, the admissibility of evidence, the failure of the Court to sustain objections to evidence offered, excluding evidence offered by the defendants, the misconduct of counsel in court, that the weight, the sufficiency of the evidence, the strength of the case is all material. [8676] Now, we have a case here in which the evidence produced by the prosecution was so inherently weak, so inherently corrupt as to provide an inference that almost any sort of additional evidence, any sort of ruling by the Court, would probably have swayed the jury, and hence that any error becomes material, becomes of substantial weight.

The Court will remember that there was not a single witness that was produced here, or hardly a single witness who stated anything of any materiality who was not open to the strong implication, if not the acknowledged fact, that he was bribed, that he had committed perjury, that he was part of a conspiracy to destroy the defendants. The testimony of the witness Krolek as to the attendance at so-called Communist Party meetings of persons who were not Communists, but labor leaders, would effectively destroy the circumstantial evidence, his testimony, that of the witness Hancock, Schrimpf and even Rathborne, as to the presence of these defendants at certain meetings, because the presumption would have to be given to them, and the inference given to them that they attended not as members of any Communist Party, but merely as labor leaders having a similar interest to that of the other persons who were present.

It seems to me that one of the great vices in the whole case was permitting the witnesses for the prosecution to testify that certain meetings were Communist meetings or that all persons who attended them were Communists. People like Hancock, for [8677] instance. He identified seven or eight of ten persons he saw at a meeting. Some of them he did not know their names or know who they were. And yet he was permitted without any further foundation, without any further proof, to give a blanket identification of all the people there as being members of the Communist Party. It was a meeting of Communists.

Similarly, the witness Wilson, without any preparation, was simply allowed to say they were meetings of Communists discussing a labor problem. Such loose identification, such loose evidence in a case of this kind, is such as to cast great doubt upon the validity of everything those witnesses said in that connection. In other words, the inference and presumption would be all against the inference and presumption that the witnesses were allowed to give.

The Government started out in this case by contending all through the preliminary proceedings, if the Court will remember, if you review the proceedings before Judge Roche, that this was just another criminal case, that the defendants were accused of committing perjury, and that there was no political implication, there was nothing special about it, there wasn't any effort to get rid of Harry Bridges. It was not a continuation of the persecutions that had existed during the prior ten years, and the Court expressed an opinion in the same way. I noticed in some of the matters that appeared before you, Your Honor expressed an opinion the same way. In other words, it was a contention of the [8678] prosecution and it was imposed upon the Court that this was just another criminal case. A criminal case involving false swearing on a naturalization charge is a rather common thing, and while it is an offense against the laws of the United States, and so forth, I do not think in general it is considered as having a tremendously grave aspect. In charging in this motion for a new trial, misconduct of the Court, Your Honor understands that we are charging that as a legal and technical matter. In other words, we state that the conduct of the Court was such as to deprive the defendants of a fair trial. When we started out to show that there was a conspiracy of the witnesses and agents of the prosecution to procure the ruin of Harry Bidges, the Court became indignant at that contention. Your Honor expressed early in the trial the opinion and the feeling that any effort to prove any such conspiracy was preposterous, ridiculous, that there was no reasonable basis upon which such conspiracy could be alleged. Yet out of the mouths of the prosecution's own witnesses, particularly the witness Rathborne, we find conclusively established the beginning of the portion of the conspiracy that ended in this court when by his testimony, uncontradicted and not questioned, he was taken back by Mr. Bruce Barber to meet the Attorney General of the United States almost two years ago, that is to say, back in 1948, and according to his statement that officer stated to him, not that they had any intention of prosecuting Harry Bridges for some crime that he had committed, [8679] not that it was their contention that he had committed perjury upon his naturalization proceedings, and that they intended to move the court against him under the ordinary proceedings by which ordinary people are moved against, but only that they were convinced that Harry Bridges was—now, not a member of the Communist Party, but a Communist—that he was harmful to the labor movement, and that they desired to remove him from the labor movement.

There you have an outside, exterior cause assigned for the proceedings against Bridges that led him to this court. In other words, Your Honor, regardless of how one would like to close his eyes to the possibility and the probability that a series of political trials are under way in this country, here is designated at the start a political campaign, employing the courts to get rid of a man because, it is stated, his economic and political convictions are different from that of the officer who represents the administration. No other construction can be put upon it. In other words, the uncontradicted evidence and the sole evidence on that point in this case is that the officer of the government in charge of instituting this prosecution declared to a prospective witness for the government whom they were soliciting and whom they were endeavoring to bring into the campaign as follows—not that Harry Bridges has committed a crime, not that he has committed perjury or done any fraud in obtaining his naturalization—but only this: this [8680] man is a Communist. He is harmful to the labor movement and we desire to remove his influence from it. Nothing further than that.

The Court must concede that in taking that attitude the officer of the Government was entering into a wrongful campaign, that he had no right to attempt or endeavor or approve the employing of the courts of the United States to accomplish the political objective of removing from the labor movement or removing the influence of a man who differed with him in his political or his economic convictions. It is always a fact that when a person enters upon a wrongful campaign, when the very source of the entire proceeding is a wrongful one, a bad one, one that the officer has no right to employ, one that becomes in effect tyrannical, unconstitutional and illegal itself, then he is always willing to go the step further, or the people representing him or the people who then take up the campaign are always willing to go the step further to employ further illegal, unjust and unlawful means to accomplish that illegal and unlawful purpose. So the instant it becomes disclosed that a criminal trial is not a trial for a crime but it has become a political trial, then every witness who is put upon the stand should be looked upon with the gravest suspicion. The Court, the jury should inquire now whether or not this man who is on the witness stand swearing to tell the truth, is not part of an unjust campaign and procedure to do other than what appears to be done in [8681] the court and to accomplish a political motive. So that all witnesses, it being established that the origin of this case is a political and economic one, that every witness who takes the stand here should immediately become suspect and he should be suspect, Your Honor, before he takes the stand, and as soon as it is disclosed that is the purpose, as soon as witnesses are to be produced, one should look upon those witnesses with the gravest suspicion and one should suspect that the agents of the government who are putting him on the stand are not actuated by the motives that are supposed to actuate officers of the government who place witnesses upon the stand.

Now, what do we find next? That this conspiracy, so disclosed, to destroy Harry Bridges' influence in the labor movement had to be further implemented by consulting other people interested in that procedure. While it is not disclosed that the Attorney General consulted Murray, Carey, Ray or Curran, still the fact of Rathborne going to consult those four men raises the further suspicion of an involvement of those people, enemies of Harry Bridges, and at loggerheads with him in the labor movement, in the same conspiracy that we have here.

Now, what was the result? While we were satisfied that it was just a continuation of the original conspiracy to get Bridges, we did not know who were the identical persons involved or exactly what were the conversations or the things that had been said that resulted in bringing this case to the court. But [8682] we were satisfied that such was the fact. And, of course, it would be avoiding all the requirements of the duty of a lawyer not to call that matter to the attention of the Court and the jury and to show the jury and to show the Court the suspicion and the doubt that should attach to the credibility of any witness produced to bolster that.

This Court took the position that this conspiracy was preposterous, that it could not be a real basis for this prosecution, that it was so extremely unlikely that the Court set itself out to prejudge that portion of the case. Your Honor made up your mind early in the case that our attempt to show that every material circumstance was a sham, that it was not possible that such a fact existed. What you did in effect was abrogate and deny in advance the evidence that was afterwards introduced without contradiction of the facts that I have just narrated here, the circumstances that were stated and used to induce Rathborne to enter into this plan and this plot.

And then the case proceeded upon this basis, that the defendants by the Court were required to try the case on a purely criminal basis, as though it was just a contradistinction between witnesses produced by the prosecution and the defendants, but the prosecution were enabled and entitled to try it upon a political basis, and even to descend to trying it on a patriotic basis.

I think that you will not dispute the assertion that Your [8683] Honor made up your mind in advance, or at least during the making of the opening statement, that there could not be any such conspiracy as the defense was alleging and upon which it was relying as a background to display the real motives of the witnesses here. You so expressed yourself. I am not saying these matters in criticism, you will understand. I hope we have gotten above the point in a case as serious as this of personal bickering, charges or countercharges. What has been said will be said, and I only say this as I would if I had never encountered you before, never had talked to you before, and had no collision of any kind in or out of the courtroom. Your Honor made up his mind on that point, and I do not say made it up improperly. You probably had your sound reasons for feeling so. You probably had a trust in the officers who came in here and in the representations made to you by the attorneys who came from the east and proceeded with the preliminary matters in this case that it was just another case of some kind.

But then what is the duty of a lawyer confronted with the attitude that the Court was displaying? Does the Court take upon itself or arrogate to itself a sort of implacability where the Court will say, "Now, I am determined upon this point. Here is a point upon which I have made up my mind and I will not permit one more word to be said, I will not permit a pebble to be thrown into the placidity of these waters and to set up conflicting currents in it. Counsel will keep his mouth shut [8684] on that point. You shall not affront my dignity by questioning the validity of the conclusions I have arrived at." To merely state the problem is to refute it. You do not state that and no judge has stated that. It becomes the duty of the lawyer to attempt to persuade the Court to the falsity of his position. It becomes the duty of the lawyer to attempt to dissuade the Court from any such conviction and to persuade the Court to arrive at the conclusions that the counsel has himself, and I think you will agree with me upon that matter.

What was the Court's attitude, however? Right from the start of the case, Your Honor took an entirely different and even a hostile approach toward him. That would have been bad enough, but it could have been corrected when it was afterwards disclosed that exactly what I had predicted was going to happen in the case had indeed happened. When the statements that I had made of the nature of the evidence that would be brought here, personal animus of Harry Bridges, men who had been involved in bitter labor controversies with him, men who wished to get him out of the labor movement—when we showed afterwards that those were the types of people who had been brought here, when we showed afterwards there was an active conspiracy and that it was first proposed to get Harry Bridges out of the labor movement because the United States Attorney General or the people who induced him to believe it, felt that Harry Bridges was a bad influence in the labor movement, meaning that he was hostile to [8685] the policies of the existing administration, because that is all such things mean—then the Court should have changed his attitude. Then Your Honor should have come around to the position of at least being neutral on it.

The jury was out for four days. If we had had a fair and impartial trial—in other words, if the Court had not made up his mind on that point and then clung resolutely to the principle that the government was right, that its attorneys and agents were not trying to do anything bad or anything corrupt, and that the defendants were trying to mislead the jury by proving what was in fact proved, if your Honor had changed his position and at least had been neutral in it, I am satisfied we would still have had a verdict of acquittal. But with the weight of the Court's position clearly reflected in everything that was said or done in the case, with that plus the power of the government weighing against ordinary private lawyers and the defense, with the facilities that they had for procuring witnesses by paying enormous bribes, amounting in one case to $5,000, by the coercive pressure they were able to put against other witnesses, the attitude of the Court in this case is what turned the jury to a conviction. If your Honor had not at the start displayed the position that you have taken, or even after the case had developed, and showed what we predicted would develop, you had changed your attitude, and if you had taken only a neutral position—if you had not followed that high ecomium [8686] that Judge Goodman put upon the federal judiciary at the time of your induction as a federal judge that the federal judge stands as a guard between the defendants and the excesses of the government but only taken a purely neutral attitude—I am satisfied that there would not have been a conviction.

Your Honor has said on some occasions throughout the case that you considered the trial was fair and impartial, and that you considered that you had given the defendants a fair trial. Those things add little. In fact, they only heighten, when expressed in the presence of the jury, any injury that has already been done. You will concede yourself that even very bad judges, even notorious judges—the Jeffries, Braxforths, and the Hathornes of the past, expressed, where they had unfair trials, that they had given fair trials. And I have no doubt but those gentlemen even have felt in their own consciences that they had done their duty, at least by the state. But your Honor should review your own convictions, not only what you felt, what conclusions you arrived at, but the judgment that should be exercised about your own conduct in the light of what has happened in the entire case. In other words, you should not take the position of having adopted a certain attitude in the case, that you were right in that, irretrievably bound to it, and that anything we did to dispute it was something where we were acting falsely, corruptly, or were not observing a proper attitude toward the court, because that would be a small, mean attitude [8687] that you would take. I do not think that you would arrive at any position where you would say, "I might not have been wrong in the matter."

Let us take an early episode to show that this is not an afterthought, and this is something that is being said now in view of the consequence of the case, but to show what our attitude was right at the beginning and to show what the Court's attitude was on it. At the inception of the case, here are some of the statements the Court made, and I wouldn't raise them—I might raise them in a subsequent matter, but I wouldn't raise them now except, as I say, we have clearly shown a conspiracy. The word "conspiracy" might have an ugly sound, so let us say a plan or design on the part of the officer of the Department of Justice to get Harry Bridges out of the labor movement because he considered him detrimental to it. Let us suppose he is entirely honest in that belief. Let us grant he would be justified in believing that Harry Bridges, contrary to everything that has been shown here, could honestly be conceived to be a detriment to the labor movement. Still, that is using the courts as a political weapon, and that is a conspiracy to do exactly what we said was to be done. And yet, what did the Court say about that? At the very inception of the case, while the first witness produced by the government was on the stand, your Honor described the charge that there was a conspiracy as unbelievable, incredible, preposterous. You said it was preposterous to [8688] cross-examine the witness produced by the prosecution and attempt to show bias against Harry Bridges.

The Court: That was Mr. Garner?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, that it was preposterous to show bias on the part of that witness. When they afterwards called the witness Kessler to the stand, the Court stopped us from showing or attempting to show an activity of the agents, of whom he was a member, of going out to the house of a prospective witness and offering the man to get his wife into a cancer clinic if he would come in and testify against Harry Bridges. In other words, your Honor not only held it was preposterous to attempt to show bias on the part of the first witness called by the prosecution, but later on, and almost at the end of the prosecution's case, you maintained that same attitude as to the prosecution's witnesses, as to the witness Kessler.

Here is some more of what the Court said. When I said that as fantastic as it may seem, such conspiracy existed, the Court seized upon the term "fantastic" and used it in the same sense as preposterous and unbelievable to hold that. It was incredible to contend that such conspiracy could be. And here are some of the things that the Court said. Now, in good faith we had the decision of the Supreme Court offered in evidence. We felt from the very inception that the decision of the Supreme Court was conclusive on the guilt of Henry Schmidt and Bob Robertson, that where they were accused of fraud, and where [8689] their intention at the time they took the stand and testified or at the time they vouched for Harry Bridges' right to be a citizen was in question, that they were entitled to rely upon that decision of the Supreme Court, and that that decision of the Supreme Court should be introduced in evidence. A long argument was made to you subsequently upon the admissibility of that. You ruled against it. But the decisions which were produced by the defense were at least strong, if they were not conclusive, or if they were not even persuasive, at least they were such as to lead a person of average intelligence, a lawyer of average practice, to the belief that they did sustain the right for the introduction of the document in evidence. But your Honor set out with the notion that any effort to introduce that document in evidence was some attempt on the part of the defense to impose upon the Court. We had in mind all the time this point, and we had in mind this conclusion, that the witness Garner could not have been telling the truth about his examination of the co-defendant, if he had read the Supreme Court decision, because he ordinarily would have come to the conclusion that the Supreme Court decision finished the matter and that the question as to whether Harry Bridges was a member of the Communist Party or not was concluded by that decision.

So we wanted to put the decision in evidence. Now, it may be said, and your Honor probably believes, and we concede that—we consider the language of the decision important in this [8690] case, and we did want to bring the language of the decision before this jury, we did want to bring the language of Justice Murphy before the jury—but if the decision was admissible for any purpose, we were under no obligation to cut out the parts that would be beneficial to us or be beneficial over and above the conclusion of the Court that Bridges was not a member of the Communist Party and leave all of that out. I concede we wanted to say to this jury something to this effect, that when Justice Murphy said that the record in this case would forever stand as a monument of man's inhumanity to man, and that for ten years private agencies associated with officers of the government had maintained a persecution of Harry Bridges in an attempt to have him removed from the government unjustly, wrongfully, and that the Constitution of the United States and the Supreme Court of the United States stood as a guard against such efforts, that we did want to read that to the jury, that we wanted to say to them something substantially like this, that Justice Murphy was no longer alive, that these words of his were uttered at a time when he had no reason for saying other than what he felt to be true, that we felt they were perpetual and they were eternal, that Justice Murphy was uttering these words in effect from the heaven to which he had attained, because if Jean Murray is wrong and there is a heaven and a hell, I would say that Frank Murphy went to that heaven, and I will say this, that we would also have been willing to argue that we would give [8691] the prosecution, in addition to Schomaker, Rathborne, Manning Johnson and Crouch, Benedict Arnold, Judas Iscariot, and a lot of other of the same ilk and take Frank Murphy's statement of what this case was really about.

But aside from that and above that, we were entitled to put in that decision both as refuting the contention of Garner's that he had asked such questions, which he must as a lawyer have felt were concluded by the decision of the Supreme Court, and, further, that the decision of the Supreme Court constituted in and of itself sufficient reason why the co-defendants should have felt justified in going before Garner and vouching for Harry Bridges' right to become an American citizen.

But forthwith, upon our offer of these matters, the Court started to ascribe to us some sort of malign and improper motive, and your Honor criticized and condemned my action stating to the jury in advance that we would show that the witnesses to be produced by the prosecution were precisely the kind of witnesses that the prosecution did in fact ultimately produce. There was nothing that was said in the opening statement that was not exceeded and multiplied by the infamy of the men who were produced on the witness stand by the prosecution. And your Honor condemned as an improper assault upon the subsequent credibility of the witnesses and as an attempt to prejudice the jury in advance against the witnesses and against the prosecution my statements in that behalf. But your Honor saw nothing wrong in [8692] prejudicing the jury in advance against the defense by characterizing the efforts that we were making to introduce this evidence as being in bad faith. In other words, your Honor started out by telling the jury, "These defense counsel are acting fraudulently. They are attempting to impose upon you. They have no right to do that." It was in effect telling the jury, "Be on guard against them." And that would have been all right, if you had not told them also, "Don't be on guard against the prosecution's witnesses."

Here are some of the things that were said in those connections. This is page 714 of the record. "Right here let us pause. How could that decision in any manner foreclose subsequent inquiry as we have at bar or subsequent inquiry by this witness in a naturalization proceeding? Pro forma questions are asked. Those formalities are engaged in, I would say, through routine process. That process is asked as a matter of routine, whether a man is a Communist, whether he has an intention to overthrow the government and the like."

In other words, the witness was now being stated to be telling the truth on the witness stand. In other words, he was removed from cross-examination and his credibility was taken as an established fact.

By the Court: "Yes, but if the witness did not ask those questions, I assume he would be derelict in his duty."

The argument might not have been a good one. This jury may [8693] have rejected it. But certainly we were entitled to contend to the jury that Garner, being a lawyer and reading the Supreme Court decision, and the Supreme Court decision being interpretable at least as a decision that Harry Bridges was not a member of the Communist Party, that the witness would not have asked him the questions. That is something that we should have been entitled to urge upon the jury.

Then the Court continues: You asked about Garner sardonically: "You assert that he is one of the 125?" That question is put in the presence of the jury.

The Court: 125?

Mr. Hallinan: The 125 witnesses who were witnesses in the preceding hearing that I said were part of the conspiracy.

The Court: None of those witnesses testified here.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, but they had faded out just as though there had been another trial against Bridges. Rathborne, Schomaker, Johnson and Crouch were here testifying instead, but would that mean they had never been a part of this conspiracy? Your Honor says this:

"Now, what would it serve this case to pry into all of these prior matters, the determinations therein, legal, extrajudicial, or however it appear? It would not be binding upon the jury or the Court as a factual matter. Now, to say that this man, to paraphrase or adopt your reasoning, did not ask Messrs. Robertson and Schmidt whether or not they were Communists, and [8694] to say that the government did not include that reference in the indictment—perforce there was no reason to include it in the indictment as a matter of charging part—and it would probably be immaterial if the government did." Page 730.

I gave this explanation to the Court, in asking if this witness had participated in any wiretapping or dictographing of Harry Bridges. Now, the Court, I think, will concede that it is proper to know whether or not a witness has been part of an effort to gain illegal evidence against a party or at least the extent to which the witness participated in a legal though over-diligent effort to procure evidence against a party.

The Court: At this juncture you are mindful of the date when Mr. Garner first entered the proceedings?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, your Honor, surely, but that is the whole trouble. You anticipated the entire case. You anticipated, and then when the evidence came in you did not change your attitude. I grant that. But, you see, we knew more about it than the Court did. Your Honor could not know that this kind of evidence was going to come in. But we knew it. We knew it was inherent in the case. What I am talking about now is not the Court's ruling on the matter, but the characterizations that were given the defense's efforts to prove the fact or ask the questions. Here is what your Honor said about this:—

The Court: In point of time, Mr. Hallinan, for the record, when do you claim Mr. Garner tapped the wires? 1932, 1933 or [8695] 1934?

Mr. Hallinan: I wanted to know if Mr. Garner was present in 1937 and 1941 when the wires were tapped. Mr. Garner said he entered the Immigration Service in 1941. I submit we are not foreclosed by that answer from finding out whether Mr. Garner was in some other branch of the government, if he was participating with the Immigration Department in some other activities, or whether, in fact, he did enter the Immigration Service in 1941. We were not foreclosed in that. The witness was not sacrosanct.

I said, "I want to know if this gentleman indulged in any illegal activity in connection with procuring a verdict in this case." Your Honor said, "You had it in a two-way thrust before."

Then Mr. Garner being asked if he had any knowledge or information concerning illegal wire-tapping in the two previous cases, Mr. Paisley says, "If your Honor please, if this is not contempt of court, I have never seen it in my career."

And the Court said, "The statement made by counsel may well be within the realm of his province to make. I shall not instruct the jury to disregard his statement. And I say to you, Mr. Hallinan, your persistent conduct along this line, studied as it appears to be, may well eventuate in the situation that counsel refers to."

There, as your Honor correctly says, "At what point was this question asked?" And it is true that the question was [8696] asked before the evidence which later developed of the dictograph thing of Harry Bridges came in. But the vice is in the Court taking an a priori position and saying to the counsel in advance, "You are trying to do something improper. You are not in a position to make any such charges, and you know perfectly well that there is going to be no such proof in this case." But then what is ten times worse, telling that to the jury and saying to the counsel, "Your attempts now to advance this may very well bring you into contempt of court at the very outset of the case." I think the burden of relieving ourselves from that odium could have been accomplished if the Court had afterwards changed that attitude and had said or done one thing throughout the case that showed a lack of hostility toward the defense. But your Honor unfortunately, whether it was my fault or what it may be, I don't know—let us concede it was entirely my fault, that I simply used improper tactics in the matter, my approach to the case was a faulty one, that I should have taken into consideration what your attitude might be and had a different approach on the thing—but at any rate, from the beginning to the end of the case, you maintained that same attitude of suspicion and hostility toward the defendants' case and you never did correct the impression that was made upon the jury by the remarks that were made even in the early part of the case.

I asked then, "Prior to the deportation proceedings, which were tried in 1939 before Dean M. Landis, did you personally [8697] have anything to do with installing a wire-tapping device in Harry Bridges' room in the Hotel Multnomah in Portland?" So there it was obvious we had evidence to that effect, and certainly it was perfectly pertinent to ask the witness if that was so or not. If we felt we could not put on any proof such as that, then there may be misconduct, but your Honor will remember I stated to the Court and jury that one of the things that would prove Harry Bridges had not gone through the actions and statements that were to be ascribed to him by these witnesses is that he knew from way back in 1933 he was under surveillance by the United States Department of Immigration, and he had discovered a dictograph on at least two occasions in 1939 in his room in the Multnomah Hotel and again in 1941, and though that may lack persuasive value, even though you may think the fact that he knew he was being dictographed, would not ordinarily prevent him from further activities in connection with the Communist Party and the Communists, still I contend it was a perfectly tenable argument and one that I was entitled to argue to the jury, and one that I think would weigh with them. But, no, you took that out in advance, and your Honor should have recognized from my opening statement and from this question that we did propose to introduce such evidence, and as a matter of fact, it was subsequently introduced in evidence without objection from the prosecution's own attorneys.

But what was said on it? [8698]

> "Mr. Paisley: To show how ridiculous or how uninformed or insincere the remarks of counsel are, I am told this witness did not come with the government until 1941.
>
> "Mr. Hallinan: Well, I don't know.
>
> "The Court: He so testified."

There we were again. The jury is being informed that I am bound by the statement of this witness that he came into the government's service in 1941.

Does Your Honor want to take a recess at this point?

The Court: We will take a short recess.

(Recess.)

Mr. Hallinan: I trust Your Honor does not think that I point out these matters from any improper motive or to annoy or vex you or anything like that. As I say, I hope we are above and beyond that matter. But ultimately, if this case goes on appeal, these will be very important matters that will have to be brought before an appellate court, and the trial court is at least entitled to have the matters pointed out.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, I might interpolate that I have neither during the course of your more recent remarks nor at any time during the trial shown any attitude of annoyance on my part. At least I humbly feel I have not. Nor have I been vexatious. I have permitted lengthy arguments. I only advert to this because I feel perhaps we may be launched into the same situation we had at the very close of the trial, when we sought [8699] to place a limitation upon the then rather lengthy argument. I think we had extended into the fifth or sixth day. I called counsel into chambers. I asked if you could conclude your arguments that day, which, of course, you did. You said, "Mr. Hallinan: You have been very fair on the time."

Now, I never seek encomiums of praise nor do you, but at the same time I feel that we should have some definite lines of demarcation on our argument this morning. This is a motion for a new trial. I do not intend to retrace all the steps of this trial, nor do I intend to retrace the steps with respect to any contempt matter that may have followed in the wake of the trial either affecting you or Mr. MacInnis.

Mr. Hallinan: I did not intend to raise that.

The Court: I certainly will not foreclose you, Mr. Hallinan, within the bounds of the record and within the bounds of time, but we both realize——

Mr. Hallinan: I will not use an excessive time. As a matter of fact, it is relatively short and I think the major part of it is probably finished. But in going back to the original premise, Judge, here is my position on it. As I said before, one can not be blamed for adopting a particular attitude or outlook on a thing and even expressing himself so. In the original concept of the trial, during the opening statements, and so forth, I did not take exception or quarrel with the Court, because I realized it was a peculiar and a strange sort [8700] of case. In the three weeks I had been studying the case I was surprised and shocked at the developments that had come in through the case, and it was not likely the Court would be familiar with them. I did not even express any surprise that you took the attitude that you did. By my contention is that as the case progressed, I thought there was enough that came in here to convince the Court at least that the defendants were offering what they had offered in good faith, and that the thing should have been given to the jury without any coloration or any expression of opinion by the Court, and that that is where the gravest error came in. That is where the Court fell into grave error, and that is what deprived the defendants of a fair trial, because it is my firm belief that in view of the statements that the Court had made and continued to make throughout the case—in a diminished degree, yes, and with a great deal more neutrality as the case progressed, but still not correcting the original impressions, and still saying enough to make the jury believe that the Court did entertain its original notion of it, that that deprived the defendants of a fair trial.

To continue on these matters, if the Court please, because that was five months ago when some of these things took place, Your Honor stated that the remarks in my opening statement—and I now submit to you, Judge, that everything that was promised in the opening statement ultimately came in, everything that was promised in the opening statement was ultimately introduced, and [8701] a great deal of it by the direct action of the prosecution itself—you said, "In addition, Mr. Vincent Hallinan, by his studied, persistent and inflammatory course of conduct in flouting the authority and orders of the Court, has attempted to impair the effectiveness of this Court as an instrument of the judicial process; that he was wilfully attempting to evade the rulings and orders of the Court is manifest. Vincent Hallinan would, unless prevented by prompt and firm judicial action, run unbridled and roughshod in the further progress of this trial."

Quoting from page 775:

> "There is an anomaly apparent throughout the country today and exemplified perhaps in some of our more recent trials, in that those who cry so earnestly for protection under the mantle and cloak of our Constitution of the United States would at the same time destroy and seek to destroy every vestige of decency and judicial goodness and sanctity inherent in the federal judicial system."

Those last three statements were made outside the presence of the jury, and the Court did instruct the jury not to read any newspapers, but I submit it would be flying in the face of our ordinary experience with human nature to assume that twelve or fifteen persons from ordinary walks of life, suddenly projected into one of the most important and dramatic events that they had ever experienced, would have been so careful, so conscientious in observing the Court's rulings that they would not read [8702] the papers and learn those things, and as time went along, I think it is inconceivable and certainly unrealistic to assume that the jury did not know the characterizations that were made by the Court on these matters, and the charge of an improper attempt to bring in immaterial matters was then submitted by the instructions of the Court pointing out that immaterial matters had been brought in and instructing the jury to ignore them. They had been characterized before as what amounts to an attempt to defraud the jury.

The Court went on:

> "Vincent Hallinan was not making an opening statement, but was using it as a medium and sounding board for dragging in before the jury irrelevant, incompetent and inflammatory matter, with the studied and avowed purpose of prejudicing this prosecution."
>
> And you said, "I am satisfied, knowing how zealous Messrs. Gladstein, Andersen, Resner & Sawyer were in behalf of Mr. Bridges—I am satisfied that they are shoulder to shoulder with you."

Subsequently, and every time that the name of one of these gentlemen was mentioned, particularly Mr. Norman Leonard, either the Court or the prosecution would ordinarily call to the jury's attention that that gentleman was employed in or a member of the firm of Gladstein, Andersen, Resner & Sawyer, and it went along until it came to an amusing situation where Harry Bridges [8703] himself filled in the names as the prosecution started to enumerate them. But then in the closing argument counsel for the prosecution disclosed the purpose of having called this to the attention of the jury repeatedly by saying that the Gladstein who had represented Mr. Bridges in the preliminary proceedings was the same Mr. Gladstein who had represented the eleven Communists recently convicted in New York, so they could build that in, the assistance that firm was giving to our office, so that the jury would think someone who represented the eleven Communists in New York had done something improper.

The Court went on:

> "If such a conspiracy exists, it is one of the most fantastic defenses that I have had presented to me. This is not a matter in which the Supreme Court has anything to do. This matter has never been reviewed by the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court has never heard any of the witnesses. I am not bound by the assertions, by the pronouncements nor by the opinion of any member or members of the Supreme Court."

Then on page 779:

> "We were then trying to adjust ourselves in the light of Mr. Hallinan's rather broad, somewhat intemperate views of an opening statement."

The Court: Is this the certificate of contempt?

Mr. Hallinan: No, this is an excerpt from an affidavit [8704] made subsequently, but it contains excerpts from the record. It is not the certificate.

"We then settled down, hopefully expecting > that some recognition would be given to the Court's orders, which I had so painstakingly and carefully prepared and made."

Here is a statement the Court made:

> "There is no question involved in this case of wire-tapping. I take it from assurances given to me on the motion to dismiss there will be no efforts made on the part of the government to introduce any evidence as to the result of any unlawful enterprise?"

Mr. Donohue then did get up and confirm to the Court they had no intention of introducing any statements obtained by wire-tapping. The Court was then binding not only yourself but the jury and the defense to the acceptance of Mr. Donohue's statement and the government's statement on preliminary proceedings that there would be no effort on the part of the government to introduce any evidence obtained as a result of any unlawful enterprise. I submit, Your Honor, that bribery of the witnesses is as much an unlawful enterprise as is wire-tapping, and that the obvious effort of the government agents to deceive the Treasury of the United States by pretending that the monies paid to Rathborne were for some other kind of services, instead of disclosing exactly what they were, constituted that an unlawful inducement and an unlawful enterprise. [8705]

Another matter that undoubtedly came before the jury and that was accentuated by subsequent references by Mr. Donohue to another lady who was mentioned here. I submit in trying a case we do not have to be overmeticulous in seeing that we do not offend the niceties and do not upset the sensitivities of the people who are involved. We had some information, and believed, that a certain woman would be brought into this case as a witness who had in fact been the mistress of a man who was a bitter enemy of Harry Bridges. If she had been produced, it would have been proper to show that. It might have been ill taste to disclose that exact thing, but we are entitled to show it. In making a statement the Court said this:

> "Reference is made to the alleged mistress of Harry Lundeberg. At this juncture Mr. Hallinan was stooping to an all-time low."

As I say, I feel satisfied the jury read these things.

The Court: This again was part of the certificate on contempt?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, these are some of the comments you made.

The Court: Out of the presence of the jury and as part of the certificate.

Mr. Hallinan: That is right, but it shows Your Honor's attitude toward this thing. What we are disclosing now is what your attitude was throughout the case. I also suggest that [8706] those matters were read by the jury. This thing was recited in the papers. Then we have a letter from Schomaker's wife addressed to B. B: Jones. It might not be open to the interpretation that I put upon it that it was an effort to induce Jones to come down and see her, implying a certain friendliness or a certain romantic interest—I do not say there was anything that went on between them—I say this woman apparently felt she had some kind of hold upon Jones, and that letter was couched in such language that at least to my interpretation, showed that. It might not be so. It might not be open to that interpretation. But counsel, without criticism from the Court, was permitted to say that, by raising that inference, I had degenerated to a point as low as any creature that calls itself a man could degenerate. That is consistent with the statement of the Court, that by suggesting that some woman who was a prospective witness, a mistress of Lundeberg—as though people do not have mistresses—the Court's criticism of that that I was stooping to an all-time low was an encouragement to the prosecution to go ahead and make that sort of characterization upon a perfectly honest effort to give the jury my interpretation of the letter and what the Schomakers were up to with regard to Jones, as showing an unwholesome interest in the success of the prosecution in the case.

Your Honor said this:

> "You might well in the same breath condemn, indict, destroy, [8707] burn at the stake, any person in the City and County of San Francisco, by a bland statement.
>
> "Mr. Hallinan, am I entirely obtuse in the trial of this case? Or have we descended into another strata of judicial process?
>
> "You characterized wholesale all of these witnesses as perjurers, low people, characterized them with vile, vituperative terms. I do not know at the present time the identity of any > witnesses about to be called for the United States Government, and I daresay that in large part you do not. Now, I think it highly unfair to this Court, indulgent as I have been with you, to continue on that line or that particular vein."

That is from one of the comments made in the course——

The Court: In the course of the certificate?

Mr. Hallinan: No, while it was mentioned in the certificate, it was in the course of the proceedings before that matter opened. That was said in the course of the opening statement. During one of the recesses Your Honor made the statements.

The Court: Again out of the presence of the jury.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, but all published in the papers, and we have to be realistic in the matter. As I say again, I do not say you were not justified. I am not criticizing that. What I am saying is that the original attitude you adopted on it you [8708] maintained throughout the case, even when these suspicions you had of my good faith must have been refuted by the evidence which was introduced.

The Court: Pardon one interruption. I am not inclined to interrupt you. It is not your contention that I made any assertion concerning your conduct with respect to Mr. Schomaker's wife? I made no such assertion. I think Mr. Donohue said you had sunk to an all-time low in that instance.

Mr. Hallinan: He used language encouraged by Your Honor's conduct on a previous occasion.

The Court: Is it your logic, Mr. Hallinan, that in some fashion or through some chain of causation that is certainly not clear to me, a remark that I may have made in connection with I think the alleged mistress of Mr. Lundeberg had by some remote or in some remote manner become associated with the wife of Mr. Schomaker?

Mr. Hallinan: No, but it was certainly an invitation to counsel to hop on.

The Court: I can't follow your reasoning.

Mr. Hallinan: That may be. As I say, we may disagree. You might arrive at different conclusions from what I arrive at but that does not mean my conclusions, even if faulty, are not asserted in good faith. All the way through that was the charged assertion and the attitude of the Court.

The Court: Counsel, these statements were your statements [8709] —not my statements, not Mr. Donohue's statements, not Mr. Paisley's—they were your statements.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, but what I am talking about is Your Honor's characterization of the statements.

To go again to Your Honor's attitude on the prosecution witnesses, you say:

> "This barrage had only died in its echoes off the walls and its reverberations through the courtroom when Mr. Lloyd Garner took the stand. A very significant mention of a date at the very threshold of his testimony, and this date may prove, and is, a focal point around which my comments hereafter hinge—mark you, for the record—from April, 1941, he was em> ployed in the San Francisco office of the Bureau of Immigration. There is a complete lack of good faith——"

So you take the point that Garner stated he came to the Immigration Department in 1941 as the hinge upon which all this proof of bad faith on my part in inquiring further of the man should depend.

> "There is a complete lack of good faith, fair dealing, on Mr. Hallinan's part in attempting to lug in or haul by the ears the Supreme Court decision or Mr. Landis' decision. . . . Questions addressed to the prior record would not be proper under any theory concerning Messrs. Robertson and Schmidt. So where is the good faith in asking the questions? [8710]
>
> "The same persistent theory, the same persistent apparent lack of good faith.
>
> "Bear in mind again, keep it ever present in mind, that Mr. Garner, on the testimony before the Court, first came into the government service in 1941."

And then on the examination of Mr. Garner:

> "Now the thread is drawn closely. Now the thread is woven. Now Mr. Hallinan's adroitness is being felt. He is completely dethroning this witness. He is stabbing him in the back."

And the stab in the back, according to the attitude Your Honor took, was made on my part in questioning Mr. Garner's good faith, and to question the time he was employed by the government, and to question his activities in the matter. What I am getting at is the Court adopted early that same attitude of questioning the good faith of the defense and kept it up throughout the case.

> "The questions, the manner, the deportment and the decorum represented a studied plan to destroy in advance the effectiveness and the asserted truthfulness of the witness."

We were not under any obligation to preserve the veracity and truthfulness of the witness. The prosecution's witness, because he was a government agent, was no more immune from having his veracity attacked than any other witness. And then, as I suggested, Your Honor took the same attitude towards Kessler, [8711] but we dropped the matter. As soon as you sustained the objection, we made no further effort to prove it.

> "Again I say for the record, and so that our mental equanimity may not be disturbed, that Mr. Lloyd Garner first came into the government service in April, 1941. Where is the good faith? Where are the dulcet tones of tying this man into an alleged conspiracy?
>
> "No one in this courtroom ventured to suggest that Mr. Garner did not come in the government service prior to that time."

Then you said this:

> "He questioned again Mr. Garner, driving him now, in the vernacular, with rights and lefts, trying to destroy him, to beat him to the ground, beat him over the head, stab him in the back.

> "Here is Mr. Lloyd Garner, the mild-mannered deputy, an administrative officer of the United States Government, whom Mr. Hallinan has translated into an alleged nefarious trafficker in installing dictographs in hotel rooms in New York City. Absurd, preposterous."

Now, other agents of the Immigration Department as good as Mr. Garner installed dictographs in the New York hotel. There was nothing absurd and preposterous in trying to determine if Mr. Garner had participated in it.

> "A persistent, studied continuity of conduct, not bordering [8712] on contempt, but contemptuous in every form and degree.
>
> "Mr. Hallinan, dissembling with the Court, seeking to justify a non-existent reason for his course of studied conduct, seeking to jettison the witness."

So that the Court entertained the notion now; as I say, that we were trying to deceive the jury and we were trying to deceive the Court, and having arrived at that conclusion, it would logically follow that the Court would then look with suspicion on everything we did, which I think in fact the Court did all through the case. You formed the notion that we were trying to do something improper, that the government was lily-white, that those agents would do nothing improper. Every question we put to their witnesses was looked upon as being something improper, construed as fraudulent on our part, and every attempt we made to show what the government was doing, that was acting fraudulently and you characterized it as an assault upon the government, improper and unfair.

In the matters that accompanied the contempt proceeding, on which, as I say, the jury was instructed not to read, Your Honor will remember that you not only characterized my conduct in the most invidious and harsh terms, about as harsh as a person could make them, and while they were outside the presence of the jury, and while the Court instructed the jury not to read them, it is incredible that the jury should not know them. But you also invited the three attorneys for the prosecution to [8713] participate in the matter, and in doing so, you used terms describing them, which, contrasted with the designations that you had affixed to me, would glorify them in the eyes of the jury and would lead the jury to believe that while what I would say was certainly fraudulent, certainly wrong, and they should pay no attention to them, that such gentlemen as the Court would call upon to reinforce its own judgment or give it advice in the matter, and whom you characterized by very good terms, should carry more conviction with them.

For instance, matters like this:

> "I am going to look to Mr. McMillan. I have always found him a very considerate, fine gentleman. I have seen him in the trial of criminal cases here when he has leaned over backwards to give defendants a fair and square deal. Mr. Paisley, may I address myself to you?"

The Court: That was at the time I was trying to explore the suggestion of providing Mr. Bridges with counsel.

Mr. Hallinan: And I will say this in justice to you, that I think what you were inviting these gentlemen to do was to come in and act like gentlemen and make the suggestion that I be allowed to continue. I think that is what you had in mind, though they did not do it. But it is my belief that is what the Court had in mind, that you did not have the desire to deprive Mr. Bridges of my help, however insufficient it might be, and you did not desire to refuse me a stay of execution so I could [8714] proceed in the case, and it is my belief—you can affirm it or not as you wish—that what you wished to do was to afford these gentlemen the opportunity to participate with the Court in granting such extension. I do not know if that is what you had in mind, but I give you the credit of believing that that is what it was. I believe you were sufficiently magnanimous to both myself and Mr. Bridges and you did not wish at any part of the proceedings, even though you were at first wrought up and ordered me into custody immediately, it was not your intention to deprive him of the counsel who had some preparation in the case, that when you called upon these gentlemen to participate, they were not as magnanimous as you were, and instead of agreeing that that should be done, they took a contrary position and put you into what is good in the long run. They put you in the position of making that decision yourself, that you would not exercise that injustice against Mr. Bridges. But inviting them to participate in it, you stated things like this:

> "I am going to look to Mr. McMillan. I have always found him a very considerate, fine gentleman. I have seen him in the trial of criminal cases here when he has leaned over backwards to give defendants a fair and square deal. . . . Mr. Paisley, may I address myself to you? You have participated in some rather outstanding trials, including the United States v. May, the Congressman, the Garsson trials. I feel that you are a pretty temperate fellow. I have [8715] seen you in court here. We are dealing with a brother lawyer. In effect, we are all lawyers. How do you feel toward the situation?"

But even with the characterization that was given Mr. Paisley, he then got up and rejected Your Honor's invitation by saying that I was desecrating this temple into a bawdyhouse, and he would not refer to Mr. Hallinan as counsel, that he was not going to prostitute the term by using it in relation to this matter.

Other matters I culled from the transcript around this time. At page 793 I speak of Mr. Garner being employed in April, 1941:

> "Bearing that date in mind, we examined painstakingly, carefully, assiduously, the tran> script. What do we find? The same tactics, the same studied performance, the same desire to introduce irrelevant, incompetent and inflammatory matters before the jury."

And then I said, and it was only partly in jest, because we had not arrived at the place where I considered Mr. Donohue other than a gentleman—I said:

> "Mr. Donohue sits elegantly and urbanely by and Mr. McMillan makes the objection."

Certainly that was not a matter of any great force, and Your Honor said this, speaking of the word "urbanely," which, as I suggest, means only civilized or an inhabitant of a city and it [8716] certainly is not an invidious term:

> "Now you have stooped to the level of indulging in personalities at the expense of government counsel."
>
> "Mr. Hallinan had launched into a dissertation upon the deportation proceedings. I have not counted the number of times, but I dare say the record is replete with my rule that the deportation proceedings had no bearing in fact or in law upon this trial or any part thereof; and the record is replete with Mr. Hallinan's acquiescence as a matter of law. Yet we find his transgressions:" (Page 794.)

This bears out what I have said about the Court taking a wrongful view of our efforts in the case:

> "We now attempt—and I sought to find it, if I could, before reaching a determination—to > find Mr. Hallinan's good faith. Good faith—with respect to his conduct in his asking the questions; because behind these matters and behind the pages of transcript, in making a determination of this character, we must perforce look for good faith or the absence of good faith. So I sought it, if it did exist."

And Your Honor professed to be unable to find it, any evidence of good faith. When Mr. MacInnis interposed some statement on it, you told him I was trying to make a shambles of the case. If that had ended there, then one would say, well, in the months that passed by the Court may have entertained a different notion on the matter. The Court may at least have [8717] thought that counsel was trying to do in good faith what he was improperly seeking to do. He might have been in error. He might have been wrong. He might have been stupid. But he was acting in good faith. The facts of the case as they developed I think bear that out. I think the background, the facts and circumstances that came in here were a necessary part of the case. But the Court, by stressing to the jury, the fact that matters had come in, and instructing the jury to ignore them, showed that the position of the Court was just the same as at the beginning.

As the witnesses progressed, the witness Crouch—and I am only selecting one or two instances here—the witness Crouch took the stand and I asked him, "Have you ever been in any institution for nervous or mental disorders?" I thought and I still think Crouch is an insane man. I think his talk about his experience with the Russian army and I think his requirement that they have agents posted one, two, three around his room are at least some evidences of delusions of grandeur and persecution. I think the man's whole appearance and attitude is that of a man either insane or bordering closely upon insanity. I may be wrong. It might be bad taste if it were not so to inquire. But it was a proper question. We were entitled to ask it. The objection was made by Mr. Donohue. The objection was sustained.

The Court: Mr. Crouch answered the question.

Mr. Hallinan: No. Later at another period he was asked if [8718] he had received any treatment for insanity and he answered the question before the objection was made, but the Court sustained the objection then.

Michener was asked if he knew a Dr. Ernest Cohen, who is a psychiatrist in Beverly Hills, and then Michener was asked if he had been treated by Dr. Cohen for a mental illness in 1944. Objection was made and the Court sustained the objection, page 3914. It seems unfair to press a point that was pressed so far before, but it illustrates the attitude Your Honor took towards the defense of the case, and all I am trying to do is to persuade the Court to look into your own conclusions and your own mind on the matter and see if in effect and in fact you did not have from the start a non-judicious attitude toward the defense of the case and if you did not have and preserve through the case a prejudice and hostile attitude toward the defense. If I thought you were the sort of man it would be worthless to make that appeal to, I would not brother to make it, but I think it may be that Your Honor will conclude that you did in fact put the weight of your standing and your dignity, the dignity of the court itself with the jury, into the scales against the defense.

Here is an illustration to show how the Court's feeling ran on that matter. Having sustained the objection to the question asked of Crouch, having sustained the objection to the question asked of Michener, the Court itself asked Father [8719] Meinecke, page 4974, "Do you have difficulty, Father, with your memory or recollection under ordinary conditions?"

And another question or two later: "Have you recently been subjected to medical treatment?"

Then we made a motion for a mistrial on the matter and an objection to the questions. The Court may not have intended, and the Court stated afterwards it had no intention of questioning the mental caliber of Father Meinecke or his mental processes, but certainly that is the impression that we gathered and I think it is the impression that a jury would gather. Now, whether the harm was undone by the subsequent admonition of the Court is of academic importance at this time, but the attitude of the Court itself and those three witnesses shows a continuance of that hostility toward the defense which the Court unfortunately fell into at the inception of the case. It may be the Court's hostility towards the defense was due to my improper tactics upon the case and to my supposition that it was necessary to bring before the jury the background of the entire matters involving the previous efforts to deport Harry Bridges and the conspiracy we felt sure existed against him. It may be a different approach toward the matter would have put the Court in a different situation. But the question is not who was to blame; the question is, Did the Court have, throughout the case, a certain hostility or bias toward the defense, and was that so expressed as to result in the defendants [8720] procuring an unfair trial?

It is 12:00 o'clock.

The Court: I thought we might run a little longer.

Mr. Hallinan: I have some matters I would like to read. I would ask another hour to finish the matter.

The Court: Mr. MacInnis, do you have additional argument?

Mr. MacInnis: I would like approximately a half hour.

The Court: We will resume at 2:00 o'clock.

Mr. Hallinan: I will try to finish in shorter than that, but I do not want to mislead the Court.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to 2:00 o'clock p.m.) [8721]

Monday, April 10, 1950, 2:00 o'Clock P.M.

Mr. Hallinan: If Your Honor please, to complete this phase of the matter, and thereby practically all that I have to say on the motion, as I said, these are no afterthoughts of ours, because in the early part of the case, back on page 815, after the remarks that were read to the Court, there was this motion made:

> "Mr. Hallinan: I want to make another motion, Your Honor, and this one now relates to the case, and I think the slightest reflection will convince Your Honor of its force or validity. I now move to disqualify you from further participation in this case and to ask you either to declare a mistrial, or, better yet, substitute another judge . . ."

Now, this will help bear out our contention that we were not trying to get a mistrial, even when we thought that the Court was acting in a fashion beyond what it should have done. We did not ask for a mistrial, but that another judge be substituted. We had no opinion on the matter. And this was way back in the early part of the case, on page 815.

> ". . . because the statements you have made in reading out this document that you went through, or the record that you went through, having in it every intendment of vigor and intemperance, shows that you prejudged the case of the defendants. You have said that the attempt to show that a [8722] government witness was a part of the conspiracy, which is an essential part of the defendants' case, is preposterous. You have characterized him as 'this quiet gentleman,' and you accept without question of the possibility of impeachment, his statement that he took no part in the case until 1941. You desire to preclude the defendant from establishing that that witness is capable of telling an untruth upon the stand. As far as other statements concerning whether or not a woman was the mistress of an enemy of M[illegible] Bridges, you called that 'descending to a new low.' How do you know if she was a mistress or not, the mistress of another man who is the enemy of Mr. Bridges? You have disqualified yourself upon the statements that you have read off this morning completely.

"If Your Honor will not do that, which you should do, now you have found a place where your duty is clear, you will concede, I think, that the defendants are entitled to be tried not only before a fair and impartial jury, but a fair and impartial judge. You are supposed to be a thirteenth juror here. You are not supposed to have your mind made up as to who is right or who is wrong or what witnesses are telling the truth or what witnesses are immune from impeachment or above impeachment merely because they are government witnesses. So I ask you now to disqualify yourself, to substitute another judge, or to declare a [8723] mistrial, and if the Court will not do it, then this afternoon

I will prepare and file a formal motion to that effect."

Which was done.

The Court: I made a statement in response to that, as I recall.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, you made a statement that you had been fair and dispassionate in the matter. No, you just said, "The motions, all and singular, are denied." But you have stated throughout the case that you were fair and judicial in the matter.

However, I suggest, Your Honor, as I said before, that a person is not a good judge in his own cause, and that subconsciously we all feel certain hostilities and certain sentiments that we don't even admit to ourselves. That comes into a person's mind, and a person who wants to be entirely fair with himself will examine as to whether or not such unwanted matters may have crept into his feelings. Certainly you do not contend that you would be above the ordinary weaknesses to which flesh is heir, and that some bias or some prejudice might not have crept into Your Honor's mind, quite honestly, without any willingness to be unfair at all, but with the full intention of being entirely fair.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, may I interrupt you? Do you recall on how many occasions you stated to the Court, either in the presence or absence of the jury, that I had been fair or [8724] was fair? Do you recall how many instances there were? I am not seeking encomiums of praise; I merely want the record to reflect the fact.

Mr. Hallinan: It happened on numerous occasions. It did happen on several ocasions. Now, may sions. It did happen on several occasions. Now, may rulings were entirely fair. But I can only recall one major ruling that this Court made which sustained an objection of the defendant or overruled an objection of the prosecution—only one major matter. In every other one you ruled against us. The major one that I have in mind is that on Crouch's testimony, where you permitted me to read in the entire speech that Mr. Bridges made in Oakland, which contained the resolution about which we were questioning Crouch. But on every other matter it was quite the contrary.

Now, I will say this also. Far from trying to procure a mistrial or trying to antagonize you, or trying to get you to feel any hostility to us, the least reflection should convince you how foolish that would be. We did endeavor from the start, and I endeavored from the start, to adopt toward you as amiable, as friendly and as conciliatory a manner as it was possible to do. I said things in the opening statement concerning you and regarding you that certainly were encomiums and reflected to your credit. I did nor said anything that I thought would antagonize you the slightest bit. I recognized immediately that you either had formed or were forming a prejudice against the case [8725] as we proposed to introduce it. I thought that I could rely upon your native fairness, because I have known you for many years and had reason to believe that your character is such that you wouldn't be unfair in a case. I thought that we could lead you to feel that at least you should open your mind to the defense that we were putting in. And we went along in that fashion.

It is only in the totality of it, in the final weight, that the Court's continuous attitude toward the defense, that the injury and the harm which was done is apparent.

As far as stating that you have been fair in the matters; yes, I did that on several occasions. Many of them, you merited it. Some of them I said in the hope of mollifying you—to be entirely frank with you.

Now, then, the matter continued on, and with witnesses like Manning Johnson, who are trained and clever, fellows who have been on the witness stand for many years, they have the device on cross-examination of answering a question and then immediately insisting upon the right to explain. Then under the guise of such explaining or under that subterfuge, they immediately launch out into tirades of hearsay, evidence that would be entirely inadmissible under any pretext, and thus get all these masses of hearsay evidence in—very damning to the defendants—statements of people in far distant places and at other times, claiming that Harry Bridges was a member of the [8726] Communist Party. Such things came in time after time, repeatedly, upon the pretext that they were explanations of the answers. On every occasion Your Honor gave the witness full scope to say that; you made no effort, even over the strenuous objections or in the light of the strenuous objections of counsel for the defendants to protect the defendants against such matters.

Now, without going into those and repeating them, I will read one more motion that was made at the conclusion of the testimony of Johnson: (Page 2566, Vol. 22)

> "Mr. Hallinan: Particularly with regard to the testimony of this witness and other witnesses on the matter of cross-examination, Your Honor, we have a motion to make.
>
> "The witnesses by the rulings of the Court have been so protected, shielded from examinations as to deprive the defendants of that necessary weapon, so that it has been in effect a matter that the defendants have been prevented from properly cross-examining the witnesses, and particularly this last witness, were allowed to make speeches and arguments, bringing in hearsay and inadmissible matters that could not have been introduced on direct examination. The defense attorneys have been constantly assailed, quarreled with, argued with by the witnesses, assailed by the prosecution, and when we turn for relief from the bench, far from procuring it, we are assailed by the bench. We have been constantly on the defensive defending ourselves. [8727] We have had to apologize, to make explanations on perfectly proper lines of cross-examination we have endeavored to open. Under the criticism of the Court, we have been required to abandon whole lines of inquiry, to permit witnesses to leave the stand without being discredited by things that ordinarily tend to discredit them.

"Now, we know that the jury is fair and impartial, that it wants to give a fair and impartial hearing, but the jury is influenced and always is influenced in such matters by the attitude and demeanor of the Court. They look to the Court for fairness and impartiality, and they base their own judgment to a large extent upon what the Court says and does.

"Now, throughout the progress of the case, and especially the testimony of this witness, the situation has so deteriorated that it is obvious that it is no longer possible to obtain a fair and impartial decision of the case. The statements made by the Court to counsel on cross-examination, the protection that has been afforded the witnesses, the permission given the witnesses to make speeches, the witness seizing upon a pretext of explaining an answer that did not call for any answer, are such as necessarily prejudice the jury against the case of the defendants.

"Now, we have spent five weeks in trying the case and I dislike exceedingly to be driven into the situation that [8728] I am now required to adopt, that is, that we now move, if the Court please, that a mistrial be declared in this case, and that the case be remanded for retrial before another court and another jury."

In answer to that, Mr. Donohue said in part:

> "His plan or scheme is apparent. The United States has produced at least seven major witnesses in this prosecution. The testimony of these witnesses was not known and could not have been known by the defendants."

Now, there is quite a boast, too, Your Honor.

> "They now have the advantage of knowing a major portion of the United States Government's case. They are unhappy about it, and of course it is their hope that Your Honor would be misled by the unfair and untrue characterization of the conduct of the trial by Your Honor, as stated by Mr. MacInnis."

And then passing over some similar matters, which I replied to, saying that any statement made by Mr. Donohue,

> ". . . such as he just made, constitutes further grounds to support the motion that I made on the basis of the unfair and the untrue characterizations, the plan, scheme and so forth. Now, we have been anxious to finish this case in as calm and judicial a manner as possible."

And then, following that:

> "Mr. MacInnis—I will not speak for myself, although I must [8729] say that I have never come in for such criticism as I have heard in this matter—Mr. MacInnis has a high reputation for integrity, for ability, conducting his cases in a calm and dispassionate way. I think > he showed it under great stress and difficulty throughout this trial, and yet——";

and now I call Your Honor's attention to this description of the sort of criticism and the attitude of the Court toward Mr. MacInnis is not an unjust one, that this is fairly merited:

> "——and yet there has been that same overlying menace by the Court. Questions which he asked, which if objectionable would ordinarily be disposed of by a mere suggestion of the Court that the question was not proper or sustaining an objection, or even going to the extreme of directing the jury to disregard it, have been characterized by the Court in the presence of the jury in terms that, to say the least, were not deserved. Mr. MacInnis has not made any strong effort to defend himself from the statements. The Court has constantly, even in passing by my situation, made statements that contained very thinly veiled threats, so that the net effect, if the Court please, is that the independent presentation of the case by officers of the Court, which we are, is so hampered and has been so hampered that it is my opinion at this time that it is no longer possible to obtain a fair and impartial trial in this case. We haven't any regard for these witnesses [8730] that counsel suggests. Under ordinary circumstances we would be inclined to treat the entire case that they have presented with the greatest contempt. But under the circumstances their > statements, their actions, supported and bolstered by the attitude that the Court has adopted toward us, is such as to compel us, in the interests of our clients, to make the motion that I have addressed and to move for a mistrial."

Now, at the conclusion of the case and when the Court criticized me with the vigor that it did, it had occurred to me that the Court was in fact venting—humanly, but wrongly—a personal spite against me. The Court disclaims that. The Court says no, that no such thing has happened. Then what is the answer to it? Now, if the characterizations that the Court made were not directed against me personally, then were they directed against us as officers of the court? Were they directed against us as lawyers? The Court,—I feel sure,—and your own experience should bear me out in this—does not think that the dignity of courts is sustained by creating a subservient and truckling bar. That a court may be able to intimidate lawyers, particularly in cases of this kind, into relinquishing the rights of their clients, into adopting a timid or frightened attitude may be possible. I hope not. I hope it can not be done. I hope that the independence of the bar is superior to that. But if it should succeed in doing so, your Honor, it would reflect credit and it would reflect glory neither upon the bar nor upon the [8731] bench. I therefore feel sure that the Court can not be actuated by any desire to suppress the bar of this city or of this nation, to tell lawyers that anything that they say which disagrees with the bench's opinion or statements, or which flies contrary to opinion which the bench has created, should be adjudged contempt of court and that a lawyer should be punished or injured by that. I can not conceive that the Court should have that opinion.

Where does it come from, then? Does it come from a resolution upon the Court's part that, because the Court has been misled by the government into thinking that they have an open and shut case, an unanswerable case, there should be a conviction in the case? Does it stem not from any personal animus against a party nor even a desire to suppress attorneys as such, but from some dislike or hatred of the defendants or some previous conviction that they should be, or that a verdict should be returned against them?

After the verdict came in in this case, the Washington Post, which is a reactionary organ, published an editorial on Bridges' conviction; and I just want to read one sentence from it. It says: "From beginning to end, the Bridges case has placed a very severe strain upon traditional American concepts of justice."

Now, these men, your Honor,—Harry Bridges particularly—are accused of the crime of perjury, a crime that is committed [8732] a great many times in our courts; a crime that we do not attempt to condone or to deprecate. But that is all they are charged with. Yet it is obvious that not only was the government intent upon procuring, by fair means or foul, a conviction—but that the Court was leaning the full weight of its dignity and its prestige and its honor, on that side. Why? Why? What have we here? Professional criminals, making a living by preying upon the public? Have we holdup men or people that destroy the morale of the community? Not at all. We have three good men, three men that have devoted their lives toward bettering the conditions of their fellow men. That is the crime, that is the characterization, and that is the character they bear that should turn anyone against them! In other words, their virtue has become a fault and in a court where we see the commonest kinds of criminals, the worst kind of people having their rights sedulously protected by the court and by you as one of the judges—because you have that reputation for fairness in the ordinary criminal case, leaning over backwards, as you expressed it of Mr. McMillan, to see that they get a fair trial: Yet here we see these three men who have never done a bad or a vicious thing in their lives, but have devoted their time, their safety to bettering the condition of their fellowman—as high and exemplary a profession and ambition as one can devise. Yet against them the Court must lean its weight. Against those men this Court must put the stress of its own dignity, to the detriment [8733] of these men.

Now, they have been talking about it being an ordinary criminal case. Yet counsel did not stop himself from getting up here and talking about Communists, "rats scurrying to their holes," or pointing to the folds of the flag, making of it a political argument, an economic argument, in a case that they have been contending is only an ordinary criminal case. That they should take the folds of the flag, Your Honor, and plant it in the foul and rotten corruption that they heaped up in this court is descending to a new low. That they should take the folds of that banner and use it to mask and cover the imperfections, the obscenities of their case is descending to a new low. And I say to you, Judge Harris, that you should go out of your way now to examine whether or not your own conduct hasn't been such as to lend just a little impetus that was necessary to overturn the balance of justice and to bring in an unjust verdict against these men—and undo the matter at this time. I think that is the duty that this Court should perform at this time.

And I say this further, that it has now become apparent that in a political trial a lawyer runs risks even in entering a court. In contending against case of this kind, prepared as these are, where does he stop and what position now can he take where he can say, "I have gone far enough; my own safety and my own standing now prevent me from going further."? There isn't [8734] any place: He has to carry along as far as he can.

So, without taking any special impetus or without any special rancor for the Court, the situation is already sufficiently dangerous when the lawyer enters the court. As far as I am personally concerned, I say this. I have never represented clients whom I have been prouder to represent. I have never before in the trial of a case felt that I was performing the duty that is imposed upon lawyers theoretically and seldom carried out. I never felt before that I was observing that portion of the oath that we took when we were admitted to the bar, to never refuse for causes personal to ourselves the cause of the downtrodden and oppressed. I am very proud of representing these people. In all my contact with them, I have been unable to discover in any one of them any of those imperfections or blemishes which would seem to have impelled this Court to have given them less than the most meticulously fair trial, that was within the power of the Court to give. And I submit, your Honor, they did not receive a fair and impartial trial, and they are entitled to a new trial.

Mr. MacInnis: Well, Judge Harris, before speaking with you, as I will in a moment, about Mr. Robertson and Mr. Schmidt alone, abstracted as far as is possible from the companion case of Harry Bridges, I want to bring one technical matter to your attention because I think that if I fail to mention it now, the record may be silent upon a matter in which I thought I had [8735] made an adequate exception.

In making the objections to the instructions which the trial court read to the jury, I thought that I had taken the statutory exception to your failure to read our instructions Nos. 78-A, 78-B and 78-C. I thought I included them, but I see, in reading the record that there is no mention in it. Now, I can not swear that I did use those numerals. I thought that I did.

The Court: Well, I will examine the record, Mr. MacInnis, and whatever the fact is, the record may be maintained.

Mr. MacInnis: I think you will find they are not mentioned, according to the record. 78-A, 78-B and 78-C. I think the interest of justice would be served if exceptions were noted to the failure to read those instructions, because I fully meant and I think I did make exceptions to those particular failures.

The Court: You proposed four or five supplemental instructions.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes.

The Court: That was at the termination of the case. I did give one of the No. 78 group, or two of the 78 group, according to my recollection. I had better check the record, however.

Mr. MacInnis: Very well. Now, in speaking with you, so far as I am able, on behalf of the request for a new trial, a request that you reexamine the evidence, the evidence posed against Mr. Robertson and Mr. Schmidt, of course I can not know what the perspective of the trial court is at this time. I [8736] mean by that since last Tuesday, after the passage of those days when we heard the doomful words from the foreman of the jury, when we saw that all that we had denounced as loathsome, as conceived in badness, as foreign to the light of day, was embraced and even vindicated by the trial jury, we stood here shunned and shocked and stunned. Now, I don't know what your perspective has been in the interim.

I approach the matter today still not without hope. I think that there is a great deal of hope. We haven't lost confidence in the judicial system. We haven't lost confidence in the integrity of our case. We haven't lost confidence in the innocence of the three men whom we strove to represent here.

We have been very gratified—we have received hundreds of letters from various parts of the country commending ourselves. But at the same time, I am conscious, I have read in the papers that the trial judge has received bales of letters commending him on his conduct. So as I say, I can not know what your perspective is at this time, whether you review your actions in the same light as pervaded the case during the trial itself.

In saying to you that I have hope still, of course I have in mind that hope is one of the phenomena of human life. It abounds with us always. Without it we could not survive. Away from its aura even now persons like ourselves, Mr. Robertson, Mr. Schmidt and Mr. Bridges would be trapped forever in the toils of despair. They would have despair in themselves, they [8737] would have despair in the other humans in whom they reposed so great a faith. They would have despair in the terrible and perfidious recitals to which we have listened here and which have now found an echo in the verdict of a trial jury.

So as I say, we still cling to that slender bulwark that hope provides for us. And I say this to you: After the indescribable bitterness in the trial involving the emotions and even the hatreds of many people—myself, yourself and others— I am still going to try to approach the matter at hand, bearing at least a lingering hope.

The Court: Mr. MacInnis, so the record will be clear, when you ascribe any hatred to this Court, I wish the record to show that I deny any such assertions, that I had no bitterness, ill will, hatred or venom of any kind toward any man, lawyer or principal in this case. I say that for the record, so that my silence may not hereafter be regarded as acquiescence in your remarks.

Mr. MacInnis: Well, looking at the past in the record which has unfolded itself, I wish I could accept the statement of the Court. But I can not do so, in justice to myself or in justice to our clients. But, as I say, I am going to try to approach this matter with a lingering hope that you can put aside, if only for this afternoon, the feelings that we think were attached to your activities in this case. I hope you can do it. I think you can do it. I don't see any reason why you [8738] can't do it.

The charges against Bob Robertson and Henry Schmidt are framed in the lips of the indictment. They are charges there quickly read, but not so quickly understood. They are charged, and I say this in the light of all the evidence in this case, with conspiring at times and in places to the grand jurors unknown and with persons to the grand jurors unknown, to obstruct justice in the obtaining of citizenship for Harry Bridges, a man who is not entitled to that beneficence. Now, we heard in this case for the first time out of the lips of Mr. McMillan, the prosecutor who made a very short opening statement, that Henry Schmidt and Bob Robertson, were both charged with being members of the Communist Party. We heard it for the first time. Without that statement we had no knowledge that that was to be the charge in this case. And I want to refer you at once, particularly in the light of the comment which you made a few moments ago, to the attitude you assumed at the very start of this case —not toward Mr. Hallinan or Mr. Bridges, because Mr. Hallinan has presented that matter already today, but towards me and toward the two people whom I am sure you didn't know at all. You may have known Harry Bridges from public utterances, from his appearances in public life in San Francisco, but I think that to you, as well as to the jury and to the prosecutors, to the other members of the public, Mr. Robertson and Mr. Schmidt were two new faces, whom you may have passed without knowing. [8739]

Now, after Mr. Hallinan made an opening statement, we still had as a signpost for what we might expect in the evidence against Mr. Robertson and Mr. Schmidt only the bare and skeletonized statement by the prosecution. About one sentence was uttered. I think Mr. McMillan told the Court and the jury that he would show that Mr. Robertson and Mr. Schmidt were members of the Communist Party and that they knew Harry Bridges was a member of the Communist Party, and that in that capacity they entered into the conspiracy. So, after Mr. Hallinan finished his opening statement—certainly a statement which could well have been made because of our knowledge because of the previous Bridges deportation hearings—I arose before you and I told you that we still didn't know what the nature of the case would be against Mr. Robertson and Mr. Schmidt, that I would like to ask leave to reserve the opening statement on their behalf. Do you remember what your reply was? You turned to the jury with the same bitterness that we say characterized your demeanor with Mr. Hallinan, and you said this:

> "Mr. Hallinan knows the names of all the witnesses; Mr. MacInnis knows none of them."

Shrugged your shoulders. Now, examine your own conscience and recall whether or not you did precisely that. And recall what the motivation was when you said those words—whether you uttered those words in a spirit of judicial calm or whether you said those words out of some vexation, whether small or great. [8740] I think you will come to the same conclusion that I embrace.

Now, what shall be your attitude now? You may say to yourself, "If these men think so ill of men, if they think I am biased and unfair, why do they approach me now?" Well, if you approach our present entreaties much as we say you regarded our efforts during the trial, we might as well stand silent. But on the other hand, if you listen to us now in the same frame of mind that you must have possessed back in 1943, when you asked for and obtained the endorsement of Harry Bridges and the ILWU for your own reelection as municipal judge, I think then you would weigh our words, and I think you would pass upon them without any degree of impartiality. In those days when the world was young, back in 1943, Harry Bridges was under a deportation order. There was a finding of fact against him by an Immigration examiner. But you, along with many other high-minded people in this community, apparently refused to accept the verity of that decision until it was passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Now, the Supreme Court of the United States' decision is a matter which has come before you in all sorts of guises during the course of this proceeding. It came before you from the perspective of the law alone in the motions which preceded the impanelment of a jury here. It came before you by way of cross-examination of prosecution witnesses. It came before you as a substantive matter in the defense case. [8741]

I am convinced—and as my partner, Mr. Hallinan, said, I may be wrong just as he may be wrong in the conclusions that we have reached; perhaps we have reached them out of some of the same bitterness that we attribute to you, I don't know. But I have reached this conclusion: I think that you got the idea somewhere in the start of the case, and I have said this before in one of the legal arguments which we had over the admission of evidence, that we were going to try to bootleg the Supreme Court decision into evidence by hook or by crook, by one means or another; and making up your mind that that was a wrong thing to do, you decided that your decision was a final one and that no matter what the facet of approach might be, you were going to hold that the Supreme Court decision in the Harry Bridges case had no bearing either in law or in fact.

Now, the only matter concerning the decision of the Supreme Court, the only facet of the matter which I would mention to you now, is the substantive matter. Bob Robertson and Henry Schmidt gave testimony in this case. They were charged in the indictment with entering into a fraudulent conspiracy. By the very essence of that charge, their intent, the presence or absence of good faith, was a necessary ingredient in the whole picture. And what did they say to the Court and jury? Well, they both told the Court and jury that basically they believed that what they said was true at the time that Harry Bridges' application for citizenship was made, because they had known the [8742] man over the years and they had bolstered that opinion by reading the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. I will read to you what Mr. Schmidt said, on page 4629 of the record. I think I was examining him, and I asked him what his reasons were for recommending Harry Bridges for citizenship.

He said:

> ". . . and, secondly, I had read the decision of the Supreme Court, and I thought, well, as long as the highest tribunal in the United States of America has made a decision with respect to this case, the matter is now settled for > all time; and I had no hesitation to recommend this man for citizenship."

Then I asked him this question:

> "Q. Well, did you rely, in making the answers that you gave, upon all the matters which you have just now mentioned?"

And he said:

> "A. Yes; on the fact that I had read the decision and also because of my association with the man through the years."
>
> "Q. In other words, (I asked) you relied upon two things: Your own knowledge and association with Harry Bridges over the years, and secondly, your own reading of the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the matter involving Bridges, is that correct?
>
> "A. Yes, and I thought that that was [8743] sufficient."

Then there was a legal objection when I offered to introduce the bulk of that opinion itself into evidence, and of course the Court will remember that the objection was sustained. I submitted to the Court at that time a memorandum of cases, a variety of cases, dealing with the substantive rights of defendants charged with various kinds of fraud against the United States of America, and the cases, in my opinion, were uniform. I have yet heard no one propose a case to the contrary of the proposition that where the good faith of any man charged with crime is in issue, he may offer to the Court and jury anything upon which he relies to show that good faith.

We made the same offer in the testimony of Bob Robertson. He said this, at page 5043:

> "A. Well, as I started to say, discussions with others, actions taken by organizations, studying the transcript of the various trials, particularly the Landis trial and the Sears trial, and all of the stages from the Sears trial up to the Supreme Court decision—all of these things had a bearing in making up my decision on this matter. * * * And finally, a decision of the United States Supreme Court came out. I studied that decision. I studied the majority decision and I studied the concurring decision, and I made up my mind then and there that President Bridges was not, had never been and was never affiliated with the Communist Party; and the Supreme Court of the United [8744] States is something that I think speaks with authority."

Now, that was the testimony upon which the element of good faith or bad faith must necessarily have depended. If the jurors inquired of themselves, forgetting all about the merits of the controversy over Harry Bridges, "I wonder, were these men honest? I wonder, were they sincere? I wonder, did they possess the requisites of good faith? I wonder if they are telling the truth when they said they relied, at least in part; upon the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. What was that decision? What did it hold?"

Our mouths were stopped by the objections of the prosecution. Whenever we mentioned that document, the jurors were never permitted to read the document. In fact, when the argument was renewed, while the defendant Robertson was upon the witness stand, Mr. Donohue, the special prosecutor, made this very interesting observation when I proposed that the Supreme Court decision, for a new reason, had now become material to the case. He said this to you and to all of us. He said the fact that Mr. Robertson, along with many other misguided people, may have falsely interpreted the meaning of the United States Supreme Court decision is not material here. Ignorance of the law is no excuse. Now, that is the very point which the cases of our courts of last resort have decided—that even if a person who is charged with fraud relies falsely, relies to his own detriment, relies foolishly, relies without the logic of a trained [8745] lawyer, upon some document; if he relies upon that document in good faith, it is a complete defense to the charge.

Now, with that particular argument in mind, I wanted to ask you briefly to review with me the nature of the evidence against Henry Schmidt and Bob Robertson. I think this: the evidence against Henry Schmidt exceeded in quantity the evidence against Bob Robertson. It hardly exceeded it in quality. It was all evidence of the same sort. Henry Schmidt was mentioned in twelve separate instances by the testimony of various witnesses. I think it won't take very much time for me to review those.

On Page 1035 the witness Schomaker says that Henry Schmidt was present some time in the year 1938 at a party at the home of a man named Jack Shaw. That was the meeting in which Harry Bridges is supposed to have mentioned his own membership in the Communist Party.

At page 1046 he is mentioned as having various undescribed meetings with Communist Party members.

At page 1051, a settlement of the 1934 strike being effected, there is a discussion with men like Darcy mentioned. Darcy, whom Schmidt never knew. And then a later discussion in 1935 with Schneidermann, whom he has met twice in his life.

On page 1068 we were told that Henry Schmidt attended a meeting to discipline a woman called Norma Perry.

At page 1090 he is alleged to have been present at a meeting [8746] at Sokol Hall here in San Francisco, to hear William Schneidermann make some speech.

At page 1095 he is named as one of those persons present at a prune orchard meeting in the 1934 strike, said to be for the purpose of meeting Earl Browder.

On page 1498 Henry Schrimpf said that it was Henry Schmidt who handed him an application card to the Communist Party.

At page 1981 he is said to have been present at a meeting in the Sumner Apartments in San Diego in 1935. A man named Hancock, who saw Mr.

Schmidt that once, he says, and never thereafter, gave that testimony.

On page 2142 he is placed by the witness Krolek in the Venetian Square Apartments in Long Beach in May of 1936. And the same witness says a few pages later on that he saw Henry Schmidt inside of the office of William Schneidermann upon one morning in 1936.

At page 4010 the witness Wilson says that he attended more than one Communist Party meeting with Henry Schmidt. He doesn't describe the meetings nor tell us the place.

And lastly, the witness Rathborne makes one mention of Henry Schmidt, on page 6349. He said that Henry Schmidt was a member of some waterfront section committee of the Communist Party.

So far as Bob Robertson is concerned, there are three occasions in which he is mentioned in the evidence. At page 4009, [8747] the witness Wilson says that he attended, to quote him, "more than one Communist Party meeting with Bob Robertson." And he says that that was his understanding, that Bob Robertson was a member of the same unit as himself.

The witness Rathborne adds two references concerning Bob Robertson. On page 6332 he says that Robertson was a member of what he called "God's Committee," and on page 6420 he says, "I believe, but I am not certain that Bob Robertson was at a meeting held in December, 1943." That was the meeting which he said followed the CIO convention at Philadelphia, in which it was discussed that Mr.

Connally should be replaced by Mr. Thimmes. Of course, so far as that last meeting was concerned, the evidence was uncontradicted that Robertson was not in San Francisco during any period of time close to that particular month.

Now, in reviewing the evidence about these two men, I know of course that upon any matter of fact the verdict of a jury is ordinarily regarded as conclusive. The question that the Court must determine now is, what is the sum total of that evidence? Well, I think this: I think the evidence, whether it is slight or whether it is strong against Robertson and against Schmidt, is some circumstantial evidence of membership in the Communist Party. Now, that is not what they are charged with in this case. That is not the accusation which they came in here to defend. It has been made the illusory charge, as the case has progressed. But as a matter of law, I don't think you can look at the [8748] record in this case and find a scintilla of proof, even of a circumstantial nature, that either Bob Robertson or Henry Schmidt knew or should have known that Harry Bridges was at any time a member of the Communist Party. At least, I don't think any shred of circumstantial evidence to that effect can be found, sufficient to outweigh not only the presumption of innocence but the instruction on circumstantial evidence which the law demands be given in this case.

The jury was instructed that if the evidence is consistent with the theory of innocence as well as with the theory of guilt, that the benefit of the doubt must be given to the defense. Now, looking at the evidence, particularly against Robertson, in the light of the well known state of our law on circumstantial evidence, it is incredible to my mind that the verdict can be allowed to stand such as this. If the Court even believes that there was circumstantial evidence out of which it could probably be inferred that either of these men should have known about any alleged Communist Party membership on the part of Harry Bridges, we have this further question, as a matter of law: Would that knowledge cause them to realize and to state that Harry Bridges was unfit to become a citizen of the United States? The person whose name I can best cite to your Honor in that respect is Mr. Donohue. Mr. Donohue told the Court and jury in reference to a document which had been signed by George Wilson that as late as 1945 the Communist Party was not a proscribed [8749] organization, that it had not then been denounced as subversive by the Attorney General of the United States.

Henry Schrimpf. It would be idle, I think, to review the matters concerning his naturalization. Both Henry Schrimpf in 1943 and George Wilson in 1945, signed affidavits stating that they had never been members of any organization having for its end the overthrow of the government by force and violence. When we contended that those signatures made those men chargeable with perjury, the special prosecutor at once made reply that in those periods of time the Communist Party was not a proscribed organization. Well; if that is true, if we accept that statement as a matter of law, any knowledge that Bob Robertson and Henry Schmidt might have had at that time, that particular time, about Harry Bridges or any suspicion that they might have had, could not possibly as a matter of law have entered into their opinion of the fitness of Harry Bridges to become a citizen of the United States.

If we are speaking upon the premise that ignorance of the law is no excuse for anything that they might have said or done, why, we would have the further fact that in the year 1945 there was in existence another decision. I don't claim that these men have read the decision, and I don't think they have. It has not been brought into evidence in this case. It was, however, the law in the very case of William Schneidermann, that membership in the Communist Party did not disqualify any [8750] particular person from becoming a citizen of the United States.

Over and above all of those matters, where would we find conspiracy? Where would we find unlawful agreement? Robertson, coming in at the last minute to endorse the application for citizenship of a man he revered and admired. Robertson, who had walked over to the City Hall just as a matter of companionship and knew nothing about it. Robertson, to whom nobody had spoken. I can not, although I confess that my own eyes are perhaps biased—I can not, in examining this case, find any evidence that would link either Mr. Robertson or

Mr. Schmidt with the intendments of the indictment.

Now, much has been said about the prejudice that resulted against Harry Bridges. I think that the prejudice resulted in even greater degree against Mr. Robertson and Mr. Schmidt. They were private citizens, men whose names were not upon the lips of every member of the reading public. They were brought in here to stand trial in the shadow of Harry Bridges. There is one thought—it is a thought off the streets, it is not a thought based upon any legal document—that comes to my mind today. When I was given the opportunity last week of rising before you and taking exceptions to the charge which you had read to the jury, I commented that the atmosphere of the charge itself was one which cast a further bias upon the defense. I charged in making the objections that great emphasis had been placed upon those rules of law which ordinarily would seem to [8751] favor the prosecution, and that very little stress had been placed upon the ordinary safeguards which surround the defense. I find that very criticism corroborated by the writings in our current periodicals of today. The daily papers carry a story of an interview with the foreman of the trial jury. He said this, that matters involving the credibility of witnesses they regarded as immaterial, that the matters involving the character of testimony they regarded as immaterial. Of course, even if we had an affidavit from that gentleman, the affidavit of a trial juror could not be used to impeach the verdict. But it lends substance to the criticism we made at the time that you read your instructions to the jury.

If this case has been a political case against the defendant Harry Bridges, it has been a political case in even greater degree against Bob Robertson and Henry Schmidt. I can remember, in reading over some of the early transcripts in this matter—I don't recall at the moment whether the matter I have in mind was before you or before His Honor Judge Roche, but I remember, when the charge of a political case, or words to that effect, was made by those representing the defense, Mr. McMillan and Mr. Donohue rose and said to the Court, "Why, this is just a simple case of violation of law. There is nothing political about this case." Now, I ask you to contrast, if you will, that statement with the admitted state of affairs which brought Mervyn Rathborne back to Washington to meet the Attorney General of the United [8752] States, a meeting in which a discussion was had to the effect that some action must be taken to get rid of the influence of Harry Bridges in the labor movement. There was not a word about perjury, there was not a word about conspiracy with other people. Nothing of that kind was mentioned—except that some action of some kind must be taken. The vehicle had not yet been selected.

In 1932, when President Roosevelt was making his first great efforts to lift this country out of the morass of the depression, he said some words that have been repeated very often. He said, "We have nothing to fear except fear itself." In this case the defendants, to my notion, have not been convicted upon evidence, but they have been convicted out of fear; they have been convicted out of nameless and senseless kinds of fear, but a fear that was all-pervading in the course of this trial. And as I said the other day, if there is a price for perjury, if there is a bounty for lies, if there is a bonanza for perfidy in this case, we know where those accolades of applause will belong. We know from what we have seen in this case that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong.

I have one more thing that I would like to say to the Court. You will have to live the rest of your life with the decision in this case. You will have to live the rest of your life with your own conscience and what you have done. Bob Robertson and Henry Schmidt are two men who were singled out of [8753] private life because of their association with Harry Bridges. Let me recall this thought to your mind as a practical example. When the Supreme Court decision was handed down from Washington, when Bridges was joyful because at last he could achieve his ambition to become an American citizen, a citizen of the United States, there were many other people in those years at the very close of the war who rejoiced along with Harry Bridges. They were public-spirited citizens, wealthy citizens, employers, men of renown. Hundreds of people offered to become his sponsors, sponsoring witnesses, in his application for citizenship. Harry Bridges said, "No, I am going to have a couple of old-line trade unionists along with me."

He chose Henry Schmidt, who had been with him since the days of the strike of 1934 and prior to that, and he chose another man, Paul Schnurr—another man, an elderly man who had been in the union for many years. When Paul Schnurr failed to qualify for some technical reason before the Immigration or Naturalization examiner, Bob Robertson, who was at this time titular head of the Warehousemen's Union of the ILWU, was there, and Robertson stepped forward and said that he would be glad to endorse the citizenship and the application for citizenship of Harry Bridges.

Now, in that brief moment those men could not have known that in later years they would be charged with a criminal conspiracy. They could not know that every errant thought, every act, everything committed, every conference had by them in the [8754] course of trade union business, were later to be interpreted with the stamp of Communism and brought before a trial court and jury.

Mr. Hallinan has told you, as he told the jury, that these are good men, men of unblemished character. I wouldn't say that to you and ask you to accept that because I make the remark, because I think the evidence shows something far more eloquent. We produced character testimony on behalf of all three defendants. There was not a single person in this community who could arise with one word that would cast disrepute upon any of these three men. Moreover, in the cross-examination of the character witnesses, the whole lives of each of these three men were laid bare. What developed?

The Court knows the answer as well as I. If this is a matter for your conscience, and I am sure it is, I think you could rest a lot better satisfied in the performance of your duty if you regarded for just a few moments the kind of evidence against Bob Robertson in this case. As I say, the evidence against Henry Schmidt is a little greater in quantity, but certainly not better in quality.

Bob Robertson, upon three incidents in his life—undescribed incidents, incidents in which we are not even told who were present—has now been convicted of a felony. A man of whom you never heard, whom I never met until last fall, whose name was scarcely known to the public of San Francisco, finds himself now upon the brink of every kind of public forfeiture. [8755] Why? Because George Wilson said that it was his, to quote him, "understanding that Bob Robertson was a member of the same Communist Party unit as" himself—an opinion which was allowed to stand in the record over objection. Why, again? Because Mervyn Rathborne uttered two sentences about Mr. Robertson, called him a member of a group called "God's Committee" and said he was present at a meeting in San Francisco at the end of 1943. Upon those three incidents the trial jury was asked to believe, and it obviously did believe, that Bob Robertson entered into a conspiracy as described by the indictment in this case. I don't think you believe that Robertson entered into any such conspiracy. I don't think you believe that Schmidt did, either. I know they didn't. But as to those two men, I would ask you, forget the atmosphere of what I have said, forget the feelings that I have for you and that you have for me, whatever they may be; but just think about the evidence on Mr. Robertson and Mr. Schmidt and ask yourself this: Will you be content for the rest of your life to know that as a trial judge you allowed two men to be convicted of a crime of felony upon evidence of that sort? I ask you to do that.

The Court: We will take a short recess, at this time, if that is convenient?

Mr. Donohue: Yes.

The Court: We will take a fifteen minute recess.

(Recess.) [8756]

Mr. McMillan: May it please Your Honor, I shall be extremely brief. With reference to the motions made in arrest of judgment——

The Court: First, Mr. McMillan, may I ask you to address yourself to the suggestions made by Mr. MacInnis concerning the failure or asserted failure on his part to note exceptions in connection with certain proffered instructions, to wit, number 78-A, B and C submitted by the defendants? If in fact that situation should be noted in the record, I am perfectly willing that they reflect whatever the situation may be.

Mr. MacMillan: If exceptions were taken in the presence of the jury, that is, before the jury retired, or even while they were in retirement, the record discloses that those instructions were requested and exceptions were regularly taken, yes, Your Honor.

The Court: May I ask Mr. Donohue and Mr. McMillan to address themselves to the record, perhaps at the conclusion of the matters today, so a stipulation may be entered into, or in the absence of a stipulation the Court might make an order? I have not had an opportunity to go into the matter to the extent it may deserve, and I do want the full rights or the rights of the defendants to be preserved in all matters, but frankly, I have not had an opportunity to go into the record. I have asked my law clerk to do it, but I want confirmation of it.

Mr. McMillan: We shall be pleased to do that, Your Honor. [8757]

The Court: All right.

Mr. McMillan: In connection with the motion in arrest of judgment, all matters with the exception of one matter before this trial began were passed upon. Motions were made and they were considered and Your Honor decided those matters, every one of them, as shown by Your Honor's decision in United States v. Bridges and others, reported in 86 Fed. Sup., pages 922 to 931. Every one of them has been decided with the exception of one, and that is this: Counsel in the motion in arrest of judgment, one of the grounds given was that the Court erred in having denied their motions for a directed verdict. In the first place, under Rule 29, under the new Criminal Rules of Federal Procedure, motions for directed verdict are abolished and motions for judgment of acquittal shall be used in their places. Now, at no time was a motion for a judgment of acquittal made or, for that matter, a motion for a directed verdict. The only time it appears in an instruction, Your Honor, it was requested that Your Honor instruct the jury to find the defendants not guilty, but that is altogether different from a motion for judgment of acquittal or a motion for a directed verdict. The motion for a judgment of acquittal could have been made at the conclusion of the government's case in chief or at the conclusion of all the evidence in the case and in neither took place. Neither a motion for a judgment of acquittal or a motion for a directed verdict was made at either stage. [8758] with reference to the motions made for a new trial, may it please Your Honor, nothing occurs to me in any legal argument made that is worthy of a reply. All those matters, may it please Your Honor, were argued during the course of the trial. This trial consumed 81 days, and counsel, Mr. Hallinan, spoke for six days; Mr. MacInnis spoke for two days. Every one of those matters was covered during the trial. This was just another one of those paroxysms of scurrility, rancor and an attack made against Your Honor and it just represents—I was listening to Mr. Hallinan—it represents an effervescence of his spleen in an attack upon Your Honor, a clutter, as it were, an exhaustless clutter of indignities and rancor against Your Honor. He complains of your attitude as being non-judicial, the Court prejudged the case, made up its mind in advance, approached the case with hostility, suspicion and prejudice, and much to my surprise, there was much more blasting effect. For example, the Court leaned its full weight of authority and prestige upon the side of the government. That is simply amazing to me, may it please Your Honor, amazing! He made many such statements, sort of Sunday supplement stuff, I suppose, for publication; but all that went before. It seems he is still, as it were, writhing under this contempt case, still whimpering and whining about this contempt matter. This is not the case of United States v. Hallinan; it is the case of United States v. Bridges and others. The Hallinan case will come up in the Circuit [8759] Court of Appeals next Friday.

Now, may it please Your Honor, repeatedly during the trial of this case counsel has stated to Your Honor that this case was fairly and impartially tried. He thanked Your Honor. He conceded that here today. He speaks about the major decision. I do not believe there has ever been anything in this Federal Building like the wide latitude that Your Honor gave the defense upon their examination of the witnesses, over our objections on many occasions.

The Court: You objected very strenuously.

Mr. McMillan: I did, many times. I did object to the wide latitude and urged under Supreme Court decisions that Your Honor should confine it within reasonable limits. Your Honor said, "No, I am going to grant the widest latitude in this case. I am not going to allow any unbridled latitude." But, respectfully, I think Your Honor did on many, many occasions allow unbridled latitude in this case. I never saw an examination, again respectfully, take such wide course and go so far afield and travel all over creation upon the ground that they were testing the qualifications of the witnesses. At no time did Your Honor stop them.

He speaks of these matters not being afterthoughts. No, they are not afterthoughts. But I can not overlook the fact, as I say, that his real complaint seems to be his contempt matter, and it is an interesting thing to me. Mr. Hallinan [8760] stands here. He makes a sort of insidious, clever attack upon this court. But he is not by any means as clever as he thinks he is, Mr. Hallinan, by no means. He will rise to lofty thoughts at times, and he talks about Your Honor's fairness, your native fairness, and how he has been so amiable, friendly and conciliatory and all that. And then in quick transition he charges you with personal spite —these vicious, fraudulent charges he makes against Your Honor. Flying fishes can stay in the air for a while, but they soon have to splash back into water and return to their true element. Counsel rises loftily in the air. Nice things he says, and then he makes the transition.

Your Honor, this motion for a new trial is astonishing to me. What questions did he argue? What legal grounds are there in his motion for a new trial? Hasn't it been in the main nine-tenths of it a personal attack upon Your Honor? Wasn't that made all throughout the trial? And as he says, it is no afterthought. Let me read something that is very clever, very insidious, but thought to be very clever by counsel. Let me read this to Your Honor in his argument to the jury. Let me read this and you will see it is no afterthought and see who you think he has in mind when he says this to the jury. The point of the matter is that everything that has been taken up here the jury has considered. The attacks upon this Court, obliquely, clever, have been heard by the jury in this case. Let me read this to [8761] you, and in the light of what is said here today by Mr. Hallinan, by Mr. MacInnis, think of Mr. MacInnis standing here and admonishing this Court, standing here, and Your Honor having to live with this through the rest of your life. Consult your conscience, the admonitions of this young lawyer to a federal judge on the bench! To me it is execrable. Let me read this to you:

> "If there is any figure, any historic figure that is vested with the contempt of humanity, it is the unjust and biased judge, the judge who, elected or appointed to high office, sits upon the bench with his mind made up in advance"—— the very words he used here today—

> "as to what he is going to do in a particular case and how he is going to rule before he has heard the evidence, and then conducts himself in accordance with that resolution."

Did you hear that today, Your Honor?

> "From time immemorial, from the earliest writings of the Talmud, the Koran, the Bible, and from the tomes of ancient Asiatic countries, history and tradition have recorded the > contempt and the hatred that mankind has felt for the unjust judge, the judge who acts upon prejudice and a bias, upon some motive or some consideration foreign and alien to what he has heard in the court."

That is what you heard today. The jury heard that and they have decided this case. In other words, they have had all this matter before them. It appears to me, Your Honor, that counsel [8762] just could not forego the opportunity on this occasion to strike one last blow at Your Honor for publication. I know nothing to add here. And I repeat, Your Honor gave them the widest latitude. Repeatedly he announced to you he had a fair and impartial trial. The jury considered this case, 81 days of trial. There is not a matter that I have brought to Your Honor's attention except with reference to the motion for a directed verdict that was not fairly considered by Your Honor and by the jury, and the verdict of the jury in this case was not guilty.

I have nothing further to add, may it please Your Honor.

The Court: Mr. McMillan, addressing yourself to Mr. MacInnis' argument concerning Messrs. Schmidt and Robertson, the two co-defendants, have you any observations to make in that connection?

Mr. McMillan: I have this observation to make: Mr. Robertson took the stand in this case, and after that testimony in came the testimony of Mr. Wilson, in came the testimony of Mr. Rathborne. Now, at the conclusion of the government's case in chief, I wondered why a motion was not made for a directed verdict. I have some doubts in my own mind. But having put him on the stand, and Mr. Wilson having testified and Mr. Rathborne, and in the face of no motion having been made for a directed verdict at the close of the government's case in chief, they were content to stand that way and had Mr. Robertson brought right in with a bang. That is the only observation I have to [8763] make about that.

Mr. Hallinan: I would like to say, Your Honor, that, of course, Mr. McMillan's argument is the same one he has made all through the case. In other words, in talking about regard for the Court, it is much more contemptuous of the Court to assume that the Court has such vanity that it would not change its mind under any circumstances, that is, you rule upon the point and that forecloses it. All throughout the case, whenever a point was raised, the great argument was, "It was raised before and the Court has decided it," and you would take to yourself some content of infallibility and never change your mind. That is the same point he makes here.

So far as the argument to the jury is concerned, and the matter of unjust judges, I assume many of the jurors had some sort of prejudice or bias before they came into the box. One of them frankly admitted he had. It was an argument to the jury that history has always condemned the unjust judge. They should not make of themselves unjust judges.

Now, on a motion for a new trial particularly, the trial judge is always on trial. That is an aphorism of the law. Then, at any rate, counsel is entitled to point out to the Court what his conduct was and what his attitude was and state whether or not in their opinion it constitutes fair or unfair treatment. To fall short of that is to neglect one's duty, and for the sake of currying favor with the Court or out of fear of neglecting [8764] one client's interests, I do not propose to do any such thing. Instead of arguing this very strong point Mr. MacInnis makes, Mr. McMillan gets up and meanly attempts to point out that the defendants' counsel neglected something—I suppose for the purpose of doing what he says we are trying to do, and that is to get some notice in the papers on the thing. What Mr. McMillan thinks is exactly what could be expected of a lawyer who devoted a large part of his original presence in this court in an attempt to have the person who was opposed to him put in jail for contempt of court and removed from the trial of the case.

Mr. McMillan: I never attempted to have you put in jail.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, he endeavored to have me removed. Mr. McMillan has always been distinguished, at least so long as I have been able to learn, by his smallness and meanness. His advancing years apparently show no trend toward amelioration.

Mr. McMillan: Your Honor knows I made no attempt at any time to have him sent to jail. If anyone knows that, it is Your Honor. I concede as I grow older I do get meaner and smaller.

Mr. Hallinan: You did not start in very big.

Mr. McMillan: No. Others overtake themselves, too.

Mr. MacInnis: I will not pursue the point as to whether Mr. McMillan has grown meaner, but I want to offer you just a few words on the matter of Mr. Robertson. Mr. McMillan was not [8765] present in this courtroom continuously after the day of the exposure of Lawrence Ross. His absence was announced upon that day and he was not here.

The Court: There is one statement I believe that should be corrected in this record, so far as the Court is concerned, with respect to the alleged or asserted departure of Mr. McMillan from the province of this court. The express charge was made, if not the inference to the jury that Mr. McMillan departed in the light of the Ross situation and that he failed to return. I know, I feel reasonably satisfied that Mr. Hallinan knew and now knows, and I feel reasonably satisfied that likewise you know his departure was the result of serious illness. That was a matter of more or less current knowledge in and about the court, and I think that advice was given to the court. I say that only in fairness to the record and in fairness to Mr. McMillan.

Mr. MacInnis: I do not say a word to the contrary. What I say is that it is the day upon which he departed, and from that day he was not in attendance here. Now, what the reason may have been I am in no position to dispute with the Court. We certainly will accept the statement if that was the reason. But he was not here. So he rises before you now, when you make a request that he reply to the point made concerning the defendant Robertson, and he says we should have made a motion at the end of the prosecution's case, and that after that the testimony of [8766] Wilson and Rathborne came in. Of course, that is not wholly accurate. The testimony of Wilson was in the record as part of the government's case in chief. The testimony of Wilson upon page 4009 of the record contained at that time the only reference to Mr. Robertson in the case and that was one statement that he attended Communist Party meetings at which Bob Robertson was present. The prosecutor then asked the question, "Was that one meeting or more than one?" And he answered, "More than one," and he added one line saying, "It was my understanding he was attached to the same unit as myself."

Skipping that inaccuracy for a moment, we turn to the testimony of Rathborne, which I suppose is the testimony which Mr. McMillan refers to as putting Mr. Robertson in the case with a bang. There were two lines in the whole testimony of Mr. Rathborne concerning Bob Robertson. One is that he was a member of this group, this so-called God's Committee, which Your Honor will recall had reference to the years 1943 and 1944; it had no reference to the year in which the alleged conspiracy took place. And then there was the additional statement that at a meeting late in the year 1943 he thought—he said as best he could recall although he was not sure—that Bob Robertson was in attendance. That is the whole testimony. Now, whether or not it is arguable now between Your Honor and the various counsel that that evidence would be circumstantial evidence of membership in the Communist Party is not the problem which we face. The problem which we [8767] face is this: Is that evidence, those three isolated lines of testimony, is that evidence of the entry of Mr. Robertson into a conspiracy to defraud the United States? Is it evidence that he knowingly and wilfully aided Mr. Bridges in a fraud? I do not know how strongly I can state the proposition. I see no such evidence. There is no such evidence. We are bound by the facts of the case, and the only facts against Mr. Robertson are those which I have enumerated.

The Court: Mr. MacInnis, may I interrupt you? In presenting your arguments to the jury, did you not state to the jury that if one be guilty, all three defendants are guilty?

Mr. MacInnis: I think I may well have made that statement. Does Your Honor consider that we would be bound by that at this time?

The Court: No, I recall that was the theory espoused by you on the argument.

Mr. MacInnis: Indeed, I thought that was the case. Indeed I did. I thought from my own knowledge of the case, knowing all three men were innocent, I thought if any one of those men could be found guilty, that any person in the world could be found guilty of a felony. But now you sit here, despite all that has passed, as the thirteenth juror in the case. Was there substantial evidence, was there evidence which you in a case which you might try, sitting as the court alone without the interposition of any jury, was there evidence upon which you [8768] would find a man guilty? Were the seeds of any conspiracy present? Was any guilty knowledge shown? Was any connivance, was any meeting between the defendants shown? There is not a fragment of evidence that points to that. Of course, I said what Your Honor has just quoted, to the jury. I meant it and I mean it now. That has nothing to do with the legal argument which I address to you. I think there is no evidence at all concerning Mr. Robertson that would point to his guilt or that would justify any adverse finding of fact as to him on the question raised on Your Honor's own understanding of the record, which I am sure is as clear as my own.

The Court: Is the matter submitted?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

The Court: Is the matter submitted by the government?

Mr. McMillan: Yes.

The Court: Mr. Donohue?

Mr. Donohue: Yes.

The Court: The matter stands submitted. With respect to the several motions interposed by the defendants, the motions in arrest of judgment interposed on behalf of the defendant Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson are and each of them is denied.

With respect to the motion for new trial interposed by the defendant Harry Renton Bridges, the said motion be and the same is hereby [8769] denied.

Similarly, with regard to the motion for a new trial interposed by the defendant Henry Schmidt, said motion be and the same is hereby denied.

Likewise, the motion for a new trial interposed by the defendant J. R. Robertson be and the same is hereby denied. Said motions, all and singular, are denied.

I might say that this marks the end of a long judicial journey, and looking back over the rather broad vistas of the case, it becomes increasingly clear to the Court that the evidence presented by the United States Government is convincing and direct that Harry Renton Bridges lied in the naturalization proceedings when he denied membership in the Communist Party. His guilt was established to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt by devastating and overwhelming testimony. Similarly was the guilt established of the co-defendants Mr. Henry Schmidt and Mr. J. R. Robertson, with respect to the several charges as embraced in the indictment. The jury addressed itself to the arguments made by Mr. MacInnis. The jurors heard the testimony of George Wilson and Mervyn Rathborne. They have passed upon that factual matter. There is no reason for this Court to set aside that mature finding. The evidence was credible, and with regard to Mr. George Wilson, the defendant or defendant's counsel did not see fit to cross-examine Mr. Wilson. The verdict was maturely arrived at by the jury after four days or four and a half days approximately of [8770] patient, painstaking and active deliberations, after four and a half months of trial, wherein countless witnesses were produced by the government as well as the defendants, after arguments upon every phase, facet and scintilla of the case, to the extent that Mr. Hallinan argued some six days or six and a half, and his colleague, Mr. MacInnis, a day and a half, in presenting their contentions and views to this jury.

I pause momentarily to advert to these considerations as demonstrative that the judicial process herein was not hurried, and full opportunity and scope was given to the defendants and to their counsel in providing and safeguarding every constitutional privilege and prerogative. The charge is made herein that the verdict was the result of hysteria or errors on the part of the Court, or that the verdict represents an oblique attack upon militant trade unionism or from some alleged external pressure exerted by the United States government or some department thereof. Those contentions represent distortions of fact, misconceptions and untruths. I say that the verdict and the verdicts herein are fair and just and each of them is fair and just. The verdicts will stand as a courageous decision on the part of an intelligent jury after a long, painstaking and impartial trial, and in my opinion, the verdict herein will serve as a lasting memorial that the integrity of the nationalization laws and the naturalization laws of these United States must be upheld. [8771]

By lying and defrauding the United States Government, Mr. Harry Bridges was granted a certificate of naturalization. He was aided and abetted in this respect by the two co-defendants, Mr. Robertson and Mr. Schmidt. Thus and in that fashion Harry Bridges had bestowed upon him the most priceless heritage known to man, citizenship in these United States. In my opinion, his conduct can not invoke either sympathy or consideration on my part. The jury has spoken. The mandate of the law is clear. And the dictates of justice demand that the verdicts be carried out. The verdicts herein have been handed to me by the Clerk of the Court. They were read at the conclusion of the trial. The jury was duly polled. With respect to Mr. Bridges, the jury fonnd, "We, the jury, find Harry Renton Bridges, the defendant at the bar, guilty on the first count of the indictment, guilty on the second count of the indictment; signed Glenn Lee Christensen, foreman."

Similarly, with regard to Mr. Henry Schmidt, the jury found, "We, the jury, find Henry Schmidt, the defendant at the bar, guilty on the first count of the indictment, guilty on the third count of the indictment."

Similarly, with respect to the defendant Mr. J. R. Robertson, the verdict reads, "We, the jury, find J. R. Robertson, the defendant at the bar, guilty on the first count of the indictment, guilty on the third count of the indictment."

Accordingly, the mandate of the law is to be carried out. [8772]

Mr. Bridges and Mr. Hallinan, may I ask you to arise?

(Mr. Bridges and Mr. Hallinan arose and stood at the lectern.)

The Court: All and singular of the motions having been denied, that is, the motion in arrest of judgment, the motion for a new trial with regard to the defendant Harry Renton Bridges, the Court is now prepared to pass judgment and sentence. Is there any reason to assign at this time why judgment and sentence should not be pronounced?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, Your Honor, there is. As the Court has stated within its decision, this is no political case, this is no case in which there is any special pressure from any department of the United States Government. Therefore, Mr. Harry Bridges, a gentleman who has done nothing else, granting that he is guilty of this offense and that deserves any injury from the Court, a not unusual offense that happened five years before, we now move that he be granted probation.

The Court: The motion is denied.

Mr. Hallinan: We ask, Your Honor, that it be referred to the probation officer for a report.

The Court: The motion is denied.

Mr. Hallinan: Then we have no further suggestion.

The Court: Mr. Harry Renton Bridges, it is the judgment and sentence of the Court that you are hereby committed to the custody of the Attorney General of the United States and his [8773] authorized representative for imprisonment for a period of two years on the first count of the indictment.

Further, it is the judgment and sentence of the Court that the defendant Harry Renton Bridges is hereby committed to the custody of the Attorney General of the United States or his duly authorized representative for imprisonment for a period of five years on the second count of the indictment, the sentences and each of them to run concurrently. The defendant is remanded to custody.

Mr. Hallinan: We wish to file at this time, if the Court please, a notice of appeal.

The Court: One moment. Mr. Bridges, I merely wanted to indicate, not as part of the judgment or sentence, that I have not imposed a fine in this case. Ordinarily a fine might be indicated. If I felt a fine should be imposed, it might result in an assessment upon the rank and file and require them to pay it. I see no reason to add a burden to their already burdened situation.

Mr. Hallinan: Mr. Bridges has not the money himself.

The Court: No fine has been imposed, Mr. Bridges.

Mr. Hallinan: We have here a notice of appeal which requires me to fill in the sentence. Will Your Honor fix bail on the appeal? I think it will be conceded there are at least substantial grounds on which an appeal should be determined by the appellate court. We would ask that the bail remain the [8774] same as it is at present. I do not think there is any disposition on Mr. Bridges' part to avoid any sentence of the Court.

The Court: Government counsel, I should like to hear from you with respect to bail. Those are matters that are addressed to my discretion. At the same time I desire to have counsel's advice, if any, on the subject.

Mr. McMillan: If it please Your Honor, I have received instructions from the Attorney General to ask that the bail be increased in this matter and that it be submitted to Your Honor for appropriate fixing of the amount.

The Court: What is the suggestion as to bail, Mr. McMillan?

Mr. McMillan: As to the amount?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. McMillan: May it please Your Honor, I remember on one occasion when an application was made for the defendant Bridges to go to Marseilles to attend some international conference, it was suggested then that through the unions he could provide bail up to as high as $100,000.

Mr. Hallinan: I think that is incredible and impossible, Your Honor.

The Court: What was that amount?

Mr. McMillan: $100,000. I am not suggesting that amount.

The Court: I can't recall——

Mr. Hallinan: No such suggestion was ever made. It would be impossible for these men to get up that amount. With a bail [8775] suggestion of that kind, I suppose Your Honor would be expected to make it higher because such an enormous amount is mentioned, but the only purpose of bail is to insure the appearance of the defendant for sentence if the judgment should be affirmed.

Mr. McMillan: I am not asking Your Honor that the bail be fixed in the sum of $100,000. I am stating that for the reason that bail can be given in a higher amount.

Mr. Hallinan: No such bail as that was ever offered or suggested as an amount that could be raised.

Mr. McMillan: An application was made before His Honor Judge Roche. The written application is on file, in which it was suggested and offered that bail would be put up in the sum of $100,000.

Mr. Hallinan: Mr. Bridges says that the suggestion was that the government said if you let them go, they would fix the bail at $100,000.

The Court: I believe the ends of justice would be served in admitting the defendant Mr. Bridges to bail pending any appeal herein.

Mr. Hallinan: I will file the appeal, that is, the notice of appeal. It was necessary to write in the sentence.

The Court: I will set bail, then, in the amount of $25,000.

Mr. Hallinan: Very well, Your Honor.

The Court: With regard to the defendant Henry Schmidt, [8776] please, and counsel.

(Mr. Schmidt and Mr. MacInnis arose and stood at the lectern.)

The Court: Similarly, the motions for a new trial have been denied as to this defendant. The motion in arrest of judgment and all matters have been considered as offered and presented on his behalf. Have you any reason at this time, Mr. MacInnis, to assign why judgment and sentence should not be pronounced?

Mr. MacInnis: Yes. To paraphrase the Court's own words of a few moments ago, the only crime Henry Schmidt was that he lent his name in an appearance in court dedicated to bequeathing upon Harry Bridges that most priceless of human possessions, citizenship in the United States. That is his only crime, if it is a crime. We move that Mr. Schmidt be admitted to probation.

The Court: The motion is denied.

Mr. MacInnis: And we ask that the matter similarly be referred to the probation officer.

The Court: The motion is denied. Accordingly at this time it is the duty of the Court to pronounce judgment. It is the judgment and sentence of this Court that the defendant Henry Schmidt is hereby committed to the custody of the Attorney General of the United States or his authorized representative for imprisonment for a period of two years on the first count of [8777] the indictment.

Further, with respect to the third count of the indictment under which he stands convicted, it is the judgment and sentence of this Court that the defendant Henry Schmidt is hereby committed to the custody of the Attorney General or his duly authorized representative for imprisonment for a similar term and period of two years, the sentences and each of them to run concurrently. That is all.

Mr. MacInnis: At this time I would like to file on behalf of Henry Schmidt a notice of appeal, asking for the right to fill in the sentence within the next few minutes. We ask that bail be set. If the Court can in its discretion, we ask that the bail now posted be allowed to remain in the same sum.

The Court: The bail is $5,000. The Court will alter and increase the same in the amount of $10,000, and accordingly the defendant Henry Schmidt is admitted to bail in said amount, and the amount may be incorporated in the order or orders of this court.

Mr. MacInnis: You mean by that $10,000, do you?

The Court: Yes. The defendant is remanded to custody.

Now, as to the defendant J. R. Robertson, sometimes known as Bob Robertson.

(Mr. Robertson and Mr. MacInnis stood at the lectern.)

The Court: I indicate also with respect to the defendant Mr. Robertson that all motions have been disposed of, the motion [8778] for a new trial denied, motion in arrest of judgment denied. Do you have any reason at this time to assign why judgment and sentence should not be pronounced against the defendant?

Mr. MacInnis: Yes. We interpose on behalf of the defendant Robertson a motion for probation.

The Court: The motion is denied.

Mr. MacInnis: And we make the same request that the matter be referred to the probation officer.

The Court: The motion is denied. Accordingly, it is the judgment and sentence of the Court that the defendant J. R. Robertson, sometimes known as Bob Robertson, is hereby committed to the custody of the Attorney General of the United States or his authorized representative for imprisonment for a period of two years on the first count of the indictment under which he stands convicted, and on the third count of the indictment it is the judgment and sentence of this Court that the defendant J. R. Robertson, sometimes known as Bob Robertson, be and is hereby committed to the custody of the Attorney General of the United States or his duly authorized representative for imprisonment for a like term of two years, the sentences and each of them to run and operate concurrently.

Mr. MacInnis: With the same request, we file a notice of appeal as to the defendant Robertson. We ask that bail, if that be possible, be allowed to remain the same in this case.

The Court: With respect to the matter of bail, the Court [8779] will alter the same to the extent that bail may be deposited on behalf of this defendant in the amount of $10,000. Accordingly, the defendant J. R. Robertson is admitted to bail pending appeal in said amount of $10,000, and the amount may be included in any subsequent order presented to the Court.

Mr. MacInnis: With respect to the order of the Court remanding the three defendants into custody, I may state that the defendants are ready at this time to post bail and we would like to be allowed to do so in any manner that is convenient to the Court.

The Court: The Court has no objection to any procedure that may be adopted in consonance with practice and through the United States Marshal's office.

Mr. MacInnis: I say that only in reference to the Court's order remanding to custody.

The Court: I have no alternative but to remand the defendants to custody under the judgment and sentence of the Court. The matter of bail is one you can proceed with.

Mr. MacInnis: We are ready to post the bail with the Clerk at once.

The Court: The Court has no objection to that.

Mr. MacInnis: May we have about a two-minute interruption? I will have the money.

The Court: I have no objection, Mr. McInnis. Mr. Mitchell will undertake to accommodate the Clerk's office for the defendants [8780] and counsel.

Mr. Mitchell, may I return to you now for the record the three verdicts herein, the original indictment——

Mr. McMillan: May it please Your Honor, I have another matter to take up with the Court. Section 738-E of Title 8 of the United States Code, the Aliens and Nationality Code——

The Court: Mr. McMillan, may I suggest this to you? Counsel has requested a brief recess for the purpose of arranging bail and such other procedures as may be in keeping with my orders, and I think it would serve the ends of justice as well as the convenience of all to accord that privilege to them and hereafter, let us say within 15 or 20 minutes, I will hear such other motions as you may have.

Mr. MacInnis: I have cashier's checks, Your Honor, made out to the Clerk of the United States District Court in the amount of $30,000, which represents the difference between the amounts of money already posted and the total amounts of bail set by the Court, and if I may deposit these with Mr. Mitchell——

The Court: Whatever administrative or procedural matters have to be undertaken, I assign them to the care, custody and administration of Mr. Mitchell as well as the Chief Clerk of the Clerk, Mr. Calbreath. I will take a short recess.

(Recess.)

Mr. Hallinan: May I make a statement for the record, if Your Honor please: In the matter of posting the usual and [8781] customary forms of bond in this undertaking of the bail of the three defendants, the Commissioner is now, together with one of the counsel, Mr. Leonard, preparing such forms and will probably be some ten or fifteen minutes more before that is completed, and after talking with counsel, it is my suggestion that the matter be put over until tomorrow morning for hearing on this other motion.

The Court: What is this motion, Mr. McMillan?

Mr. McMillan: The motion that I have, so that counsel may be advised, is under Section 1, subdivision 1 of Section 746 of Title 8 of the United States Code dealing with aliens. Chapter 11 provides:

> "It is hereby made a felony for any alien or other person, whether an applicant for naturalization for citizenship or otherwise, and whether an employee of the government of the United States or not, (1) knowingly to make a false statement under oath, either orally or in writing, in any case, proceeding or matter relating to or under or by virtue of any laws of the United States relating to naturalization and citizenship."

It was under that section, may it please Your Honor, that the defendant Bridges was charged with the second count of the indictment, which count he has been convicted under, and subdivision

E of Title 8, Section 38, Chapter 11 of the same code reads as follows: [8782]

> "When a person shall be convicted under this chapter of knowingly procuring naturalization in violation of law, the court in which such conviction is had shall thereupon revoke, set aside and declare void the final order admitting such person to citizenship and shall declare the certificate of naturalization of such person to be cancelled. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon courts having jurisdiction of the trial of such offense to make such adjudication."

I had prepared an order that I was going to submit to Your Honor, but now, as I understand it, the matter is going over until tomorrow morning. However, there is one matter I think we can take up at this time and that is with reference to the instructions mentioned by Mr. MacInnis. Apparently Mr. MacInnis intended to take exceptions to your Honor's failure to give instructions 78-A, 78-B and 78-C. On page 8526 of the reporter's transcript of testimony, we find this, Mr. MacInnis objecting:

> "We object and we except to the failure to read instructions 71 to 74, inclusive, 76 to 78, inclusive, and 84."

Now, fairly it would seem to me, Your Honor, when that objection was taken or exception, and it was inclusive of 78, that would be inclusive of 78-A, 78-B and 78-C, and consequently we are willing to stipulate as counsel requested with respect to those instructions, that they took exceptions to Your Honor not having given them. [8783]

The Court: The stipulation then may be entered of record and it may be deemed to have the same force and effect as if the exceptions were duly and regularly entered at the time allotted to counsel when the jury was in recess under the Rules of Criminal Procedure.

Mr. McMillan: We so stipulate.

The Court: I assume, however, you have opposition to entry of such an order?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, Your Honor. In the first place, that is not the section under which he was convicted. There was two subdivisions, subdivision 1, which counsel read, and subdivision 2: "Knowingly to procure or attempt to procure the naturalization of any person contrary to the provisions of law," and that is not the section under which he was convicted, and that is the section that requires the denaturalization, and we can show from the legislative history that it accompanies that right along.

The Court: We have had a lengthy day. Let us have the matter stand over regularly until tomorrow at 10:00 o'clock.

Mr. Hallinan: Very well.

The Court: Have the matters of bail been completed?

The Clerk: They are in process now.

Mr. Hallinan: It will take about five or ten minutes more.

The Court: Would it be in order to keep the court open to the extent that there be no jurisdictional questions raised?

Mr. Hallinan: Very well. [8784]

The Court: I think that would be in order, for fear if the Court adjourns some question might be raised with respect to the custody of the defendants at this time. I am perfectly willing that the Court stand in recess until such time as all matters of bail be taken care of, and then when I am advised by representatives of the United States Attorney that appropriate amounts have been left in accordance with my orders, we may then have the record show the court regularly adjourns until tomorrow at 10:00 o'clock.

Mr. Hallinan: Very well.

The Court: So stipulated?

Mr. McMillan: That is agreeable.

The Clerk: May I make this one request of counsel? I am informed, Your Honor, during the last few days counsel for both sides have requested certain exhibits which are in evidence in their original form be withdrawn for the purpose of substituting photostats. May I ask that counsel wishing to have that done prepare forms of order setting forth the exact exhibits?

Mr. Hallinan: We have a stipulation here, if it is agreeable to counsel, to substitute photostats for those exhibits, and we will sign a similar one for you, if you wish to do that.

The Court: There being no further matters before the Court, we may then recess with the understanding that the Court will adjourn without the necessity of my resuming the bench at such time as Mr. Mitchell is advised that the bail has been deposited [8785] in the amounts and in accordance with the orders made by the Court.

(Thereupon a recess was taken until matters of bail were taken care of, after which an adjournment was taken to tomorrow, Tuesday, April 11, 1950, at 10:00 o'clock [8785-A] a.m.)

Tuesday, April 11, 1950—10:00 o'Clock A.M.

The Clerk: United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson.

The Court: You may proceed, Mr. McMillan.

Mr. McMillan: May it please Your Honor, yesterday afternoon as a matter arising in connection with the conviction of the defendant Harry Renton Bridges, I called to Your Honor's attention the provisions of subdivision (e) of Section 738.

The Court: Pardon me just a moment until I find the section, please. Section (e)?

Mr. McMillan: Subdivision (e) of Section 738, Title 8, United States Code, Chapter 11.

The Court: All right, I have the section.

Mr. McMillan: That section provides as follows:

> "When a person shall be convicted under this chapter——"

I am emphasizing that, may it please Your Honor.

> "——of knowingly procuring naturalization in violation of law——"

that is an all-devouring phrase.

> "——the court in which such conviction is had shall thereupon revoke, set aside and declare void the final order admitting such person to citizenship, and shall declare the certificate of naturalization of such person to be canceled. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the courts having [8786] jurisdiction of the trial of such offense to make such adjudication."

It will be noted that the statute reads, "* * * the court in which such conviction is had * * *," contemplating, of course, Your Honor, that the court having knowledge of this matter, then the court will observe, "shall" do thus and so. That "shall" appears twice, indicating that it is mandatory.

Now, in this case, No. 32117-H of the records of this court, the defendant Harry Renton Bridges, by a verdict of the jury, was found guilty, and thereafter your Honor duly pronounced judgment and sentence, yesterday, sentencing the defendant Harry Renton Bridges to two years under the first count of the indictment, and five years under the second count, the sentences to run concurrently.

I wish to read certain portions of those two counts to Your Honor, and it will be seen from those two counts that the defendant knowingly procured naturalization in violation of law, in that he made these false statements. The first count reads, naming the three defendants:

> "——on the 23rd day of June, 1945, and continuing thereafter until on or about October 1st, 1945, and for some time prior thereto, the exact time being to the grand jurors unknown, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, within said division and district, did conspire with each other and with divers other persons to the grand jury [8787] unknown, to defraud the Unted States by impairing, obstructing and defeating the proper administration of its naturalization laws in the manner following, and to ~~wit,~~ by having said defendant Harry Renton Bridges fraudulently petition (that is, in furtherance of a procurement of naturalization) for and obtain naturalization in a naturalization proceeding in the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco by falsely and fraudulently stating and representing to the said court in said proceeding No. 28152 in the records of said Superior Court, that he, said defendant Harry Renton Bridges, had never belonged to the Communist Party in the United States; that said statement and representation so agreed to be made and made as aforesaid, as said defendants and each of them at all times herein mentioned well knew, were false and fraudulent in this, that said defendant Harry Renton Bridges had in truth and in fact belonged to and been a > member of the Communist Party of the United States from the year 1933 up to and including said 17th day of September, 1945; that said statement and representation were material to said naturalization proceeding——" then follows a statement and allegations of the overt act.

Now, the second count charged a violation of Title 8, United States Code, Section 746, subdivision 1. It is now United States Code Section 1015, subdivision 1, Title 18: [8788]

> "* * * on the 17th day of September, 1945, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, Hon. Thomas M. Foley, Superior Judge presiding, there came on for hearing a naturalization proceeding, No. 28152 in the records of said Superior Court, on the petition of defendant Harry Renton Bridges for naturalization under the Nationality Act of October 14, 1940; that defendant Harry Renton Bridges then and there was called and produced as a witness in said proceeding then on for hearing, and took an oath before said court that he, the said defendant, would testify truthfully in said proceeding, and said court then and there had competent authority to administer said oath and did administer it; that defendant Harry Renton Bridges did then and there wilfully and know> ingly make a false statement under oath in certain matters which were material to the issue of said proceeding then and there being heard, giving the following answers to questions asked, to wit, 'Q. Do you now, or have you ever belonged to the Communist Party in the United States? A. I have not; I do not'; that said answers, so stated and testified to by defendant Harry Renton Bridges were, and each of them was, as said defendant then and there knew, wilfully false and contrary to his said oath; and said defendant did not then and there believe said [8789] answers or any of them to be true; and that said answers were, and each of them was, then and there believed and known by him to be false; that in truth and in fact said defendant at the time of so testifying, belonged to and was a member of the Communist Party in the United States and had belonged to and been a member of said Communist Party in the United States from 1933 up to and including said 17th day of September, 1945; that said statement and testimony of said defendant and said answers given by him as aforesaid, were upon a material matter and were material in and to the issues of said proceeding."

I can not emphasize too strongly, may it please Your Honor, that the section I read to you said, "* * * convicted under this chapter * * *"; that is to say, of any violation under the chapter.

Now, we have prepared a proposed order revoking, setting aside and declaring void the final order admitting defendant Harry Renton Bridges to citizenship, a copy of which I am handing to counsel for consideration and use in replying, which proposed order, may it please Your Honor, reads as follows:

> "Order revoking, setting aside, and declaring void the final order admitting defendant Harry Renton Bridges to citizenship.
>
> "Defendant Harry Renton Bridges having procured naturalization on the 17th day of September, 1945, in the [8790] Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, in a naturalization proceeding numbered 28152 in the records of said Court; and
>
> "Said defendant Harry Renton Bridges having been convicted on the 4th day of April, 1950, in this Court in the above-entitled action of violating Section 88 of Title 18 of the United States Code (now 18 U.S.C., Section 371) in that said defendant Harry Renton Bridges did conspire with defendants Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson to defraud the United States by having said defendant Harry Renton Bridges fraudulently petition for and obtain naturalization by false and fraudulent statements and representations to said Superior Court of the State of California in said naturalization proceeding, and defendant

Harry Renton Bridges having also been convicted on said 4th day of April, 1950, in this Court in the above-entitled action of violating Section 746(1) of Title 8 of the United States Code (now 18 U.S.C., Section 1015(1)) by wilfully and knowingly making a false statement under oath in said naturalization proceeding before said Superior Court of the State of California; and defendants Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson having been convicted on said 4th day of April, 1950, in this Court in the above-entitled action of wilfully and knowingly encouraging, aiding, advising and assisting defendant Harry Renton Bridges, not then and there entitled thereto, to obtain, accept, and receive a certificate of naturalization which was to be procured, and was procured by fraud, to wit: By false and fraudulent [8791] statements and representations made in said naturalization proceeding before said Superior Court of the State of California;

"It Is Hereby Ordered, Adjudged, and Decreed that the final order of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, made and entered on the 17th day of September, 1945, admitting said defendant Harry Renton Bridges to citizenship, be, and the same is, revoked, set aside, and declared void.

"It Is Further Ordered that said defendant Harry Renton Bridges surrender up and deliver to the Clerk of this Court certificate of naturalization numbered 6405274, which said certificate was heretofore issued and delivered to said defendant Harry Renton Bridges as a result of the aforesaid order of said Superior Court of the State of California, admitting said defendant Harry Renton Bridges to citizenship, made and entered on the 17th day of September, 1945.

"It Is Further Ordered, Adjudged, and Decreed that said certificate of naturalization number 6405274 be, and the same is, canceled.

"It Is Further Ordered that the Clerk of this Court forward such canceled certificate number 6405274 to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, Washington, D. C., for final disposition and that the Clerk of this Court also forward therewith to the said Commissioner of Immigration [8792] and Naturalization a certified copy of this order.

"It Is Further Ordered that the Clerk of this Court transmit a certified copy of this order to the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

"......................

"United States District Judge.

"Dated: April .., 1950."

I hand this to Your Honor for Your Honor's consideration. That form adopted, and I have taken it from, the language used in the case of United States of America v. Olga Manzi, 26280-S of the records of this court. This order was made by His Honor Judge Walter C. Lindley, United States District Judge of Illinois, who was sitting here at the time. And upon a conviction in this case, the order was then and there made in the language which I have adopted for the submitted order.

I submit the matter, may it please Your Honor.

Mr. Hallinan: If the Court pleases, it is conceded, at least impliedly by Mr. McMillan's argument that Mr. Bridges was neither tried nor convicted under the section that he makes reference to, nor under the section to which the subdivision (e) of Section 738 has any reference to.

Now, if Your Honor will turn to Section 746, which is the section under which this indictment is placed, you will see that there are two subdivisions under subdivision (a). One is, "Knowingly to make a false statement under oath, either orally or [8793] in writing, in any case, proceeding or matter relating to, or under, or by virtue of any law of the United States relating to naturalization or citizenship."

Not only in the language of the second count, but in the caption is the indictment stated under that subdivision. In other words, the subdivision says at the top, "Violation of Section 746(a) (1)," and then it says, "Knowingly to make a false statement under oath * * *"

Now, the second subdivision under which Mr. Bridges was not indicted and not tried is:

> "Knowingly to procure or attempt to procure—(a) the naturalization of any such person, contrary to the provisions of any law";

so you have two separate and distinct offenses. In other words, it would be an offense and a felony to make a false statement under oath in a naturalization proceeding, whether or not that was an attempt to procure or the procuring of citizenship.

All right. Then turning back to Section 738, subdivision (e), "when a person shall be convicted under this chapter of knowingly procuring naturalization * * *"

Now that finishes it. Not "of knowingly making a false statement under oath * * *" So obviously subdivision (e) applies only to section (2) of subdivision 746.

There would be some practical importance in that in this, that whether or not a false statement under oath procured the [8794] citizenship or attempted to procure the citizenship would then make it a material matter to be considered by the jury, and Your Honor will remember in this case, the materiality of the question was removed from the jury. In other words, whether if it was a false oath, its materiality would not be or might not be, or it could be argued, might not have been, of importance.

However, in looking at the history of these two sections, Your Honor will find this: There was a penal provision in the old nationality code which is carried into Title 18, which made it an offense under this language: "Knowingly to procure naturalization contrary to the provisions of law * * *" This is now found in this Section 746(2). In other words, the same language is repeated. And the first time this offense appears is in the statutes of March 3, 1903, and there were two subdivisions in that Section (2). Section 39 of that Act, which was the thirty-two statutes, twelve-twenty-two, provided in separate paragraphs as follows:

> "Any person who procures naturalization in violation of the provisions of this section shall be * * * and imprisoned * * * and the court in which such conviction is had shall thereupon adjudge and declare the order or decree and all certificates admitting such person to citizenship null and void."

So that in that section and in that subdivision any person who procured naturalization shall be fined and imprisoned, and [8795] the court shall declare his citizenship null and void.

Then the second paragraph provides as follows:

> "Any person who, in any naturalization proceeding, procures or gives false testimony as to any material fact, shall be fined and imprisoned."

So obviously the denaturalization only applied to the first paragraph.

So in the 1903 statute it is apparent that Congress put the additional penalty only on the violation of the first section.

Now, in the Act of June 29, 1906, which was enacted to provide for uniform rules to provide for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States, and was the first act to provide for a civil denaturalization, this section 23 of the Act of 1906 took over the provisions of the Acts of 1903, and provided in separate paragraphs also as follows:

> "Any person who knowingly procures naturalization in violation of the provisions of this Act shall be fined and imprisoned and upon conviction the court in which said conviction is had shall thereupon adjudge and declare the final order admitting such person to citizenship void."

Then follows the second paragraph:

> "Any person who, in any naturalization proceeding, knowingly procures or gives false testimony as to any material fact, shall be fined and imprisoned."

So again the denaturalization only applies to the procuring [8796] of the citizenship.

Now, in the Nationality Code of 1940 these two classes have been considered and were carried over and put under separate titles, so that the second point, the second one, about making false statements, is now embraced in the general chapter relating to false and fraudulent statements. It is paragraph 1015:

> "Whoever knowingly makes any false statement under oath, in any case, proceeding or > matter relating to or under, or by virtue of any law of the United States relating to naturalization, citizenship or registry of aliens"; then there are other paragraphs, and then:

> "Shall be fined * * * or imprisoned."

Then in a different heading, "nationality and citizenship," Section 1425, the first subdivision embraced:

> "Whoever knowingly procures or attempts to procure, contrary to law, the naturalization of any person, or documentary or other evidence of naturalization or of citizenship * * * shall be fined * * * or imprisoned * * *"

And still the provision that has been read off, 738(e), still applies:

> "When a person shall be convicted under this chapter of knowingly procuring naturalization * * *"

So there is an attempt now to impose a new penalty, to state, for instance—here is what the effect of it is: It is to state that, in effect (not actually, but in effect) Mr. [8797] Bridges was indicted and convicted of a violation of Subdivision (2) of Section 746, when he was in fact indicted and convicted of a violation of subdivision (1) of Section 746.

Where there is any question, if there should be a question (and I don't see how there can be one), then in a penal matter involving an additional and severe penalty of the nature indicated, the presumption would be in favor of the defendant and the construction would be against the imposition of the additional penalty. But I do not think that the Court has any jurisdiction to make the order that counsel suggests. As I say, it can be argued, you may argue that in effect it is arguable that the conviction under these two sections did show that Mr. Bridges procured his citizenship by fraud. But persons can not be tried, convicted and penalties assessed upon such constructions as that. It certainly can not be argued that he was indicted or tried under subdivision (1), which involves the additional penalty of denaturalization. So I submit that the Court has no jurisdiction.

The Court: Mr. McMillan, however, argues, Mr. Hallinan, that there are two controlling circumstances to be considered under subdivision (e), Section 738, as "when a person shall be convicted under this chapter—" which he contends is controlling— "knowingly procuring naturalization in violation of law * * *" a violation of law, to wit, "knowing to make a false statement under oath, either orally or in writing * * *" and so [8798] forth. As more particularly provided under subdivision (1) of Section 746. He argues that the effect of the false swearing and the concomitant elements led to the procuring of the naturalization.

Mr. Hallinan: I grant that, Your Honor, but that is not what he was tried and convicted under. Now, Your Honor will observe that in Section 746——

The Court: That, in sum and substance, is his overall argument.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes. Your Honor will notice that under subdivision 746 there are 34 subdivisions, under any one of which a person could be tried and convicted. But that is not to try and convict him of knowingly procuring the naturalization of a person contrary to the provisions of law. There are 34 separate subdivisions and the only one—they are all under the same chapter, but the only one that this subdivision (e) of Chapter 738 relates to, is when a person is convicted of knowingly procuring naturalization. In other words, when he is convicted of a violation of subdivision (2) of Section 746. That is what it amounts to.

The Court: Have you been able to find any adjudicated——

Mr. Hallinan: I could not find a single adjudicated case on it, although I searched to do so.

The Court: Mr. McMillan, have you anything on the subject in the nature of a case?

Mr. McMillan: Well, may it please Your Honor, most of these [8799] cases, on conviction the order was made and the matter was laid at rest there. There was a case, I think, during the war, before His Honor Judge Yankwich down in Los Angeles, in which a similar order was made. After an appeal had been taken and the case on appeal was reversed, of course that amounted to the reversal or the reinstatement of the citizenship.

The Court: May I ask you, apart from the propriety of the application, taking the order by and large and as proposed and submitted to this Court, the order is without any final effect until and unless the appellate process and procedure has been exhausted, isn't that true?

Mr. McMillan: I think otherwise, may it please Your Honor. I think this is a matter incident to the conviction. It is mandatory that the Court make this order. I grant you this, that if the case is reversed, the criminal case, it will of itself amount to a reinstatement; but otherwise, I think in its nature it is an independent proceeding. That is my view of it.

Now, in answer to Mr. Hallinan about——

The Court: Well, you disassociate the vitality with respect to this order as compared to the criminal matter, or do you regard this as an independent, isolated situation?

Mr. McMillan: I do.

The Court: When I say "this," I mean the order.

Mr. McMillan: Yes, Your Honor, I do. That is my view in the matter. As a practical thing, or what has taken place in [8800] cases, I just gave you on that was before His Honor Judge Yankwich, and in this district we have had these cases. But they were pleas of guilty, and upon conviction no appeal was taken. So I have no case that is a precedent here. I have this case where immediately upon conviction His Honor made that order which I call to your attention; because it would seem from the language of the statute that the judge, before trial was had, "shall" do thus and so, and it is a matter within his——

The Court: Another question. Let us assume the Court signs the order as proposed by the government. What, if any, right to appeal therefrom or to exhaust any review is available to defense counsel?

Mr. McMillan: I do not believe, and I can find nothing that indicates it is an appealable order. I suppose counsel will ask Your Honor to stay the proceeding, make some motion of that character until the determination of the appeal in the criminal case. But it is not an appealable order, in my judgment.

The Court: Well, let us assume that I sign the order.

Mr. McMillan: Yes.

The Court: Let us assume that counsel, Mr. Hallinan and Mr. MacInnis, jointly or severally ask the Court to stay the effect of the order which the Court would sign this order. Well, would that be regarded as a purposeless act at this time?

Mr. McMillan: No, if Your Honor made or signed the order [8801] staying the operation of that.

The Court: This order calls for the revocation, setting aside and declaring void the final order admitting Harry Bridges to citizenship. Now, it is all inclusive, all embracing, requiring production of, apparently, the certificate or paper evidencing naturalization to the Court or the Clerk, and impounding the same and delivering the certificate to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization for final disposition.

Mr. McMillan: Yes.

Mr. Hallinan: I had this thought——

The Court: What does "final disposition" mean?

Mr. McMillan: It means a final cancellation.

The Court: Well, how could it be finally canceled? The vitality of the order must be dependent upon, in some wise, the effectiveness of the pending appeal, or an appeal that may well be pending hereafter.

Mr. McMillan: Well, may it please Your Honor, that is why that order is in form and why I think it is a matter that is an independent proceeding. It has really nothing to do with the appeal at all.

The Court: Well, I approach this matter, Mr. McMillan, with some reserve; for I feel that it is the first time since I have been in these courts that I have entertained an application of this character. There appears to be no adjudicated case or cases. I certainly should like an opportunity, in view of the [8802] sweeping character of the order, to give it more mature consideration than would be permitted by a hasty reading of the code and a comparison, because the Nationality Code has now been recodified, and as it stood in 1906 and thereafter, through its various channels, very often courts as well as lawyers are somewhat confused. Now, I would not like to make an improvident order in this case.

Mr. McMillan: Yes.

The Court: And I would not like to make an order that would not reflect maturity of thinking. I certainly will not reflect on you in preparing it and presenting it to the Court. I think you do it with full knowledge of your duty and in the light of what you believe the section to reveal or disclose. But at the same time I think in fairness to the Court, I should have an opportunity to make a more thorough examination of whatever cases may be pending on the subject.

Mr. McMillan: Well, Your Honor, I expressed the view——

The Court: Now may I ask you one further question? I think out loud as we exchange some of these things, some of the questions may be entirely irrelevant to our consideration from a legal viewpoint. There is a civil case pending, is there not?

Mr. McMillan: There is, Your Honor.

The Court: And would it be fair on my part to ask you what, if any, action is contemplated with respect to the civil suit? [8803]

Mr. McMillan: Well, that matter is now under consideration by the Attorney General.

The Court: Now, if the civil suit should be pressed in one form or another, what would be the effect of the order which I might presently sign?

Mr. McMillan: I doubt very much whether the civil suit would be pressed upon the signing of that order. I expressed the view, may it please Your Honor, that it was not an appealable order. And in connection with that, it occurred to me that it would be discretionary with Your Honor on a motion being made by counsel to stay the operation of that order until the determination of the appeal in the criminal case. That is just a suggestion on my part.

Could I suggest this, may it please Your Honor, that so far as the judgment of the Court in this matter is concerned, that it stand over, say, for about two weeks, and that we brief the matter?

The Court: Well, now, there is one further thought on that score. Appeals are about to be filed in this case.

Mr. Hallinan: Have been filed, Judge.

The Court: Or about to be filed. Late last evening in the exercise of what I believed to be a regard for the rights of the defendants, I saw fit to permit the arranging of bail during the twilight zone in the proceedings, and bail of course would not be set or could not be set unless there be an indication of [8804] an appeal. Accordingly, Mr. Hallinan and Mr. MacInnis proffered to the Clerk notices of appeal. I do not believe that presently those notices have been filed.

Now, proceeding from that point, if the notices of appeal individually and severally should be filed forthwith or within an hour or two hours, where is the jurisdiction of this Court to make and enter the order that you apply for?

Mr. McMillan: The jurisdiction is this, may it please Your Honor: I think this is an independent matter, and certainly if they haven't filed any notice of appeal——

The Court: Well, the Clerk has the notice, but—

(To the Clerk) Mr. Mitchell, have you the notices?

The Clerk: Yes, I have, Your Honor.

Mr. McMillan: Have they been filed? We have not been served with copies of them.

The Clerk: I may state this for the record, Your Honor. I take full responsibility for their not actually having been filed, because in the haste and some confusion of the posting of bail, counsel did not fill out on two of the applications the written portions required as to the sentences in each instance. I felt that they ought not to be filed unless they were complete. They would mean nothing filed as they were. I took that responsibility.

The Court: You might tender them to counsel.

Mr. Hallinan: Thank you very much. [8805]

The Court: Now, I am only thinking out loud again on the subject, to bring us to a procedural finality here.

Mr. McMillan: Yes. Well, then, may I have the record show, may it please Your Honor, that there was no appeal on file, or notice of appeal, at the time that we made the motion for this order.

The Court: Well, so far as the motion is concerned. I entertain it in the exercise of jurisdiction.

Mr. McMillan: Yes.

The Court: And I do not feel that there is any technical requirement that would prevent me from taking jurisdiction.

The next question is: Assuming Mr. Hallinan and Mr. MacInnis, after they have completed the phase of those notices and in due course file the notices of appeal; where is the jurisdiction of this Court to make the order which you now apply for?

Mr. McMillan: Because it is an independent proceeding arising out of this conviction. I don't think it is a matter that goes on appeal at all in connection with this matter on appeal. Not at all. The Court wouldn't pass upon the validity of that order.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, may I make this suggestion on that, then, if the Court please?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Hallinan: Now, I don't suppose that there is any intention [8806] on the part of the government to do anything that would be, well, could be construed as treacherous, or to violate the rights of the defendants while the appeal was pending by taking some proceedings against Mr. Bridges based upon such order as is proposed here. Therefore, if that is not contemplated, if there is no reversal, the conviction becomes final, then there is plenty of time to come in with a motion of that kind.

I assumed from reading these matters that the subdivision under which the indictment was filed and the conviction resulted did not embrace the section, this subdivision (e), but if it is so, then it would seem to be that it should be construed upon a final conviction—that upon the conviction becoming final, that action should be taken. But there is no reason why the action should be taken now, even if it were justified under the construction of the two sections. That motion could be made at any time, after a conviction had become final, if it ever became final.

Mr. McMillan: Well, may it please Your Honor, we have no disturbance at all about what the result of this case will be on appeal. We believe the judgment will be affirmed. Now, here arises——

The Court: That is your viewpoint. That may well be the Court's viewpoint. But at the same time, a right of appeal is a substantial right, and the defendants have that right.

Mr. McMillan: In the criminal case. [8807]

The Court: Yes.

Mr. McMillan: May it please Your Honor, this is, however, an incident apart, independent from that matter.

Mr. Hallinan: I think not, because the section says, "where there has been a conviction * * *" So how can it be separate and apart from the criminal matter? Obviously it depends upon a criminal matter.

Mr. McMillan: As to the other matter, counsel has a way of using these ugly words, "assuming that there will be no treachery upon the part of the government." Why, I am simply calling Your Honor's attention to the matter of jurisdiction, that that wouldn't arise at all if this matter was filed, this motion made, before the notice of appeal was on file.

The Court: Counsel did not raise the point. Mr. Hallinan did not raise that point; I suggested it in the light of the fact that I do not want to find the Court in the labyrinth of mysticisms of the law. I want to proceed as orderly as I can. Now I raise it only in the sense that if the Court signs this order, in the light of a formal notice of appeal which had been filed formally, prior to the application, there might be a question raised herein. This order is apparently of moment to the government. It is of moment to the defense. I think we should treat it with the full dignity that it deserves.

Mr. McMillan: There is another point for consideration. There is a matter of jurisdiction, upon the affirmance of the [8808] judgment and sentence in this case, and the mandate comes down to this: Would not the Court have lost jurisdiction at that time to make this order suggested, in not making the order at this time?

Well, I can understand that they are perplexing questions, Your Honor, and I think that—and being in a way, so far as I am concerned, novel—since I have never had a case or know of no case like this in this district. I think it would be well for Your Honor to have each counsel, counsel on both sides, brief this matter.

The Court: May I address another question to you, Mr. McMillan? In connection with the civil suit which is pending, if the government offered in evidence in that suit a certified copy of the judgment of conviction which was had and obtained in this court before the jury, would not the effect of that proceeding be identical with the situation presented to the Court in the form of this order?

Mr. McMillan: I think not, Your Honor.

The Court: What is the distinction?

Mr. McMillan: They would have to produce evidence in a civil proceeding. It is an independent proceeding. And the degree of proof is altogether different in a civil proceeding than in a criminal proceeding.

The Court: I understand that, I understand that. Well, I should like some expression from Mr. Hallinan with respect to [8809] this matter of briefing. I do feel that——

Mr. Hallinan: We would be glad to file a brief.

The Court: I feel that a court should have an opportunity to proceed in a careful manner in light of any authorities that may exist. You may well find some authorities.

Mr. Hallinan: We would be glad to file a brief on it, because the history of the section, I thought, was pretty persuasive, and we may find something that would be an analogous to it. I might say on this matter that Mr. McMillan suggested, that if there were an affirmance of the verdict or of the judgment, then the Court would not have jurisdiction, that wouldn't be so because it has always been the rule that the Court at least has jurisdiction then for resentencing or modifying or carrying the sentence into effect, and as I say, this section depends upon a conviction in a criminal case. Certainly it goes right along with the verdict and judgment in the criminal case.

Mr. McMillan: I appreciate the importance of that question, Your Honor, and that is why I made the suggestion to Your Honor that counsel on both sides brief this matter. The matter might stand over until such time as agreeable with Your Honor —say for two weeks. I have no doubt, may it please

Your Honor, that if Your Honor signs that order, that counsel could make a motion that the operation of that order be stayed until the determination of the appeal in the criminal case.

The Court: I think apart from the motion of that character, [8810] as a matter of law, it would be stayed.

Mr. McMillan: I think not.

The Court: No?

Mr. McMillan: I am thinking about the case down in Los Angeles. True, we haven't any authority, but we may——

The Court: There might well be, in a conviction upon a plea of guilty, as was had in that case. But conviction, in the very nature of things, would contemplate a conviction with some degree of finality, I would think.

Mr. Hallinan: Particularly if that is not an appealable order, if he is correct in that.

The Court: Because the word "conviction" certainly implies finality, if, as Mr. Hallinan pointed out or the Court suggests, this is not an appealable order; because otherwise it would be quite apparent that the defendant at bar, Mr. Bridges, would be caught in the middle of the grinding forces.

Mr. Hallinan: Correct.

The Court: I think it deserves great consideration.

Mr. Hallinan: And certainly if the order should be finally entered, no harm would be done to the prosecution by waiting, under the circumstances, until a conviction did become final. That is, if they didn't care to proceed with the civil suit.

The Court: Well, what is the indication on the briefs, Mr. McMillan?

Mr. McMillan: Beg pardon? [8811]

The Court: What view do you take on the briefs, with regard to the time element?

Mr. McMillan: Well, Your Honor, of course I fly the flag of the Attorney General in these matters, and I will immediately submit it to the Attorney General for the Attorney General to overhaul the matter and send on his views. If I can do that, then he will give whatever authorities he has, and two weeks' time will be ample.

The Court: Two weeks.

Mr. Hallinan: Suppose we take ten days to answer.

The Court: Ten days to answer. And in the meantime, may the record show that the Court takes jurisdiction of the motion heretofore made for an order revoking, setting aside and declaring void the final order admitting defendant Harry Renton Bridges to citizenship. Said motion and application having been made prior to the filing herein of any notice or notices of appeal.

Mr. Hallinan: Very well, Your Honor.

The Clerk: Your Honor, may I suggest this——

The Court: Mr. McMillan, I will leave the original order as proposed with Mr. Mitchell. Will you please serve a copy of the proposed order on Mr. Hallinan so he may have the full text?

Mr. McMillan: I have already handed Mr. Hallinan a copy of the order at the time I handed it up to Your Honor. I wish we could get copies of those notices of appeal together with copies [8812] of the motion in arrest of judgment and also the motion for a new trial. We haven't any copies of those yet.

Mr. Hallinan: I will send you one immediately.

The Clerk: If Your Honor please, may the record show the government has 14 days, the defendants 10 days, to plead. The matter might be continued to May 9th for submission.

The Court: Very well. Are there any other matters? We will recess until 2:00 o'clock.

Certificate of Reporter

We, Official Reporters and Official Reporters pro tem, Certify that the foregoing transcript of 8813 pages is a true and correct transcript of the matter therein contained as reported by us and thereafter reduced to typewriting, to the best of our ability.

/s/ JOSEPH J. SWEENEY,

/s/ ELDON W. RICH,

/s/ W. A. FOSTER.

[Endorsed]: Filed April 13, 1950. [8813]

[Title of District Court and Cause.]

CERTIFICATE OF CLERK TO RECORD ON APPEAL

I, C. W. Calbreath, Clerk of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, do hereby certify that the foregoing and accompanying documents and exhibits, are the originals filed in this Court, or true and correct copies of orders entered on the minutes of this Court, in the above-entitled case, and that they constitute the Record on Appeal herein, to wit:

Indictment

Minute Order of June 16, 1949—Arraignment of Henry Schmidt, Plea of Not Guilty Entered by Each Defendant, Order Allowing Defendants to September 1, 1949, to File Motions for Bill of Particulars.

Motion of Henry Schmidt to Dismiss the Indictment and the First and Third Counts Thereof.

Motion of J. R. Robertson to Dismiss the Indictment and the First and Third Counts Thereof.

Motion of Harry Renton Bridges for a Bill of Particulars.

Motion of Henry Schmidt for a Bill of Particulars.

Motion of J. R. Robertson for a Bill of Particulars.

Motion of Harry Renton Bridges to Dismiss the Indictment Upon the Ground That the Grand Jury Which Returned the Indictment Was Not Selected According to Law, That Grand Jurors Were Disqualified, and Challenge to the Entire Grand Jury Array, and to the Individual Members of the Grand Jury.

Motion of Henry Schmidt to Dismiss the Indictment Upon the Ground That the Grand Jury Which Returned the Indictment Was Not Selected According to Law, Etc.

Motion of J. R. Robertson to Dismiss the Indictment Upon the Ground That the Grand Jury Which Returned the Indictment Was Not Selected According to Law, Etc.

Demand for Voir Dire Hearing and Inquiry Into the Composition and Method of Selection of Grand Jury Array, and Legal Qualifications of Individual Grand Jurors.

Motion of Harry Renton Bridges for an Order of Examination, for an Order Permitting Inspection of Grand Jury Minutes, and for Other Appropriate Relief.

Motion of J. R. Robertson for an Order of Examination, for an Order Permitting Inspection of Grand Jury Minutes, and for Other Appropriate Relief.

Motion of Henry Schmidt for an Order of Examination, for an Order Permitting Inspection of Grand Jury Minutes, and for Other Appropriate Relief.

Affidavit of Harry Renton Bridges.

Affidavit of Henry Schmidt.

Affidavit of J. R. Robertson.

Affidavit of Herbert Resner.

Affidavit of Harold M. Sawyer.

Affidavit of Roy A. Pyle.

Affidavit of Frank Slaby.

Affidavit of Herbert Resner in Support of Motions of Defendants Bridges, Schmidt and Robertson to Dismiss the Indictment Upon the Ground That the Grand Jury Which Returned the Indictment Was Not Selected According to Law, That Grand Jurors Were Disqualified, and Challenge to the Entire Grand Jury Array, and to the Individual Members of the Grand Jury.

Answer of the United States to Defendants' Demand for Voir Dire Hearing and Inquiry Into the Composition and Method of Selection of Grand Jury Array, and Legal Qualifications of Individual Grand Jurors.

Answer of the United States to the Motions of Bridges, Schmidt and Robertson for an Order of Examination and for an Order Permitting Inspection of Grand Jury Minutes.

Answer of the United States to Motions of Bridges, Schmidt and Robertson for a Bill of Particulars.

Answer of the United States to the Motions of Bridges, Schmidt and Robertson to Dismiss the Indictment Upon the Grounds That the Grand Jury Was Not Qualified to Sit and That Individual Members Thereof Lacked Legal Qualifications.

Answer of United States to the Motions of Defendants Bridges, Schmidt and Robertson for an Order Dismissing the Indictment.

Substitution of Attorneys.

Minute Order of October 28, 1949—Order Denying Motion for Continuance of Trial Date.

Minute Order of November 22, 1949—Order Adjudging Vincent Hallinan Guilty of Contempt of Court, Sentence.

Motion to Vacate Order of Contempt—Re Vincent Hallinan.

Memorandum Opinion and Order Overruling Objections to Testimony of the Witness, John H. Schomaker.

Minute Order of November 28, 1949—Order Denying Defendants' Motions for Disqualification of Judge George B. Harris.

Withdrawal of Motion.

Motion and Affidavit and Statement of Disqualification of United States Judge George B. Harris.

Minute Order of February 3, 1950—Order Denying Motion of James Martin MacInnis to Disqualify Judge George B. Harris.

Instruction Re Deliberation of Jury on Sunday, April 2, 1950.

Verdict as to Harry Renton Bridges.

Verdict as to Henry Schmidt.

Verdict as to J. R. Robertson.

Motion in Arrest of Judgment—Harry Renton Bridges.

Motion in Arrest of Judgment—Henry Schmidt.

Motion in Arrest of Judgment—J. R. Robertson.

Motion for New Trial—Harry Renton Bridges.

Motion for New Trial—Henry Schmidt.

Motion for New Trial—J. R. Robertson.

Minute Order of April 10, 1950—Order Denying Motions for New Trial and in Arrest of Judgment; Sentence.

Judgment and Commitment of Harry Renton Bridges.

Judgment and Commitment of Henry Schmidt.

Judgment and Commitment of J. R. Robertson.

Notice of Appeal by Harry Renton Bridges.

Notice of Appeal by Henry Schmidt.

Notice of Appeal by J. R. Robertson.

Instructions to the Jury Submitted by Defense—"Not Given."

Instructions to the Jury Submitted by Prosecution—"Given."

Association of Attorneys.

Designation of Record on Appeal.

Statement of Points to Be Relied on.

Supplemental Statement of Points to Be Relied Upon.

Supplemental Designation of the Record on Appeal.

Order Extending Time to File Transcript of Record.

Plaintiff's Exhibits Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 24, 27, 28, 29, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 43 and 44.

Defendants' Exhibits Nos. A, L, R, S, T, E-1, L-1, M-1, N-1, O-1, Q-1, R-1, S-1, T-1, U-1, V-1, W-1, X-1, Y-1, Z-1, A-2, C-2, D-2, E-2, K-2, P-2, Q-2, T-2, V-2, W-2, X-2, Y-2, Z-2, C-3, F-3, I-3, J-3, K-3, L-3, M-3, N-3, O-3, P-3, Q-3, S-3, T-3, U-3, V-3, W-3, X-3, Z-3, A-4, B-4, G-4a, G-4b, G-4c, G-4d, G-4e, G-4f, G-4g, G-4h, G-4i, G-4j, G-4k. G-4l, G-4m, G-4n, G-4o, G-4p, G-4q, I-4, J-4, K-4, L-4, M-4 and N-4.

Reporter's Transcripts:

Vol. I—October 4, 5, 6, 1949—Motions to Dismiss, et al.

Vol. II—October 4, 5, 6, 1949—Motions to Dismiss, et al.

Testimony of Father Paul Meinecke—February 1, 1950.

Vol. 10—November 29, 1949.
Vol. 11—November 30, 1949.
Vol. 12—December 1, 1949.
Vol. 13—December 2, 1949.
Vol. 14—December 5, 1949.
Vol. 15—December 6, 1949.
Vol. 16—December 7, 1949.
Vol. 17—December 8, 1949.
Vol. 18—December 9, 1949.
Vol. 19—December 12, 1949.
Vol. 20—December 13, 1949.
Vol. 21—December 14, 1949.
Vol. 22—December 15, 1949.
Vol. 23—December 16, 1949.
Vol. 24—December 19, 1949.
Vol. 25—December 20, 1949.
Vol. 26—December 21, 1949.
Vol. 27—January 3, 1950.
Vol. 28—January 4, 1950.
Vol. 29—January 5, 1950.
Vol. 30—January 6, 1950.
Vol. 31—January 9, 1950.
Vol. 32—January 10, 1950.
Vol. 33—January 11, 1950.
Vol. 34—January 12, 1950.

Vol. 35—January 13, 1950.
Vol. 36—January 16, 1950.
Vol. 37—January 17, 1950.
Vol. 38—January 23, 1950.
Vol. 39—January 24, 1950.
Vol. 40—January 25, 1950.
Vol. 41—January 26, 1950.
Vol. 42—January 27, 1950.
Vol. 43—January 30, 1950.
Vol. 44—January 31, 1950.
Vol. 45—February 1, 1950.
Vol. 46—February 2, 1950.
Vol. 47—February 3, 1950.
Vol. 48—February 6, 1950.
Vol. 49—February 7, 1950.
Vol. 50—February 8, 1950.
Vol. 51—February 9, 1950.
Vol. 52—February 14, 1950.
Vol. 53—February 15, 1950.
Vol. 54—February 16, 1950.
Vol. 55—February 17, 1950.
Vol. 56—February 20, 1950.
Vol. 57—February 21, 1950.
Vol. 58—February 22, 1950.
Vol. 59—February 27, 1950.
Vol. 60—February 28, 1950.
Vol. 61—March 1, 1950.
Vol. 62—March 2, 1950.
Vol. 63—March 3, 1950.
Vol. 64—March 6, 1950.
Vol. 65—March 7, 1950.
Vol. 66—March 8, 1950.

Vol. 67—March 9, 1950.

Vol. 68—March 10, 1950.

Vol. 69—March 14 and 16, 1950.

Vol. 70—March 17, 1950.

Vol. 71—March 20, 1950.

Vol 72—March 21, 1950.

Vol. 73—March 22, 1950.

Vol. 74—March 23, 1950.

Vol. 75—March 24, 1950.

Vol. 76—March 27, 1950.

Vol. 77—March 28, 1950.

Vol. 78—March 29, 1950.

Vol. 79—March 30, 1950.

Vol. 80—March 31, 1950—Instructions to the Jury.

Vol. 81—March 31, 1950; April 1, 2 and 3, 1950—Deliberations of the Jury.

Vol. 82—April 4, 1950—Verdict.

Vol. 83—April 10 and 11, 1950—Motion.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said District Court this 26th day of June, A.D. 1950.

C. W. CALBREATH,
Clerk,

[Seal] By /s/ M. E. VAN BUREN,
Deputy Clerk.

[Endorsed] No. 12597. United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, Appellants, vs. United States of America, Appellee. Transcript of Record. Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Southern Division.

Filed July 6, 1950.

/s/ PAUL P. O'BRIEN,
Clerk of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

In the United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit

No. 12,597, et al.

HARRY BRIDGES, et al.,
Appellants,
vs.
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Appellee.

APPELLANTS' STATEMENT OF POINTS ON APPEAL

To the Honorable William E. Denman, Chief Judge, and to the Judges of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit:

Come now the appellants herein, and pursuant to Rule 19(6) of the Rules of the above-entitled Court respectfully state the points on which they intend to rely in this appeal, as follows:

I.

Appellants were substantially prejudiced and deprived of a fair trial by reason of the misconduct of the Court.

II.

Appellants were substantially prejudiced and deprived of a fair trial by reason of the misconduct of counsel for the Government.

III.

Appellants were substantially prejudiced and deprived of a fair trial by reason of the fraud, corruption and bribery of witnesses by agents of the prosecution.

IV.

The Court erred in denying a directed verdict of acquittal for the appellants and each of them.

V.

The verdict is contrary to the weight of the evidence.

VI.

The verdict is not supported by substantial evidence.

VII.

The court erred in charging the jury and in refusing to charge the jury as requested.

VIII.

The Court erred in denying appellants' motions for a mistrial.

IX.

The Court erred in sustaining objections to the admissibility of evidence tendered by appellants and each of them.

X.

The Court erred in admitting evidence tendered by the Government over the objections of appellants and each of them.

XI.

The Court erred in denying appellants' motions, and each of them, to dismiss the indictment:

(a) The return of the indictment and the bringing of the prosecution denied to the appellants, and particularly to appellant Harry Renton Bridges, the due process of law guaranteed by the First and Fifth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

(b) The prior proceedings were res judicata of the issues involved in this proceeding.

(c) The indictment failed to state facts sufficient to constitute an offense against the United States.

(d) The prosecution was barred by the operation of the statute of limitations.

(e) The question to which the alleged false answer was given was not material to the naturalization proceeding.

XII.

That commencing during the opening statement of Vincent Hallinan, attorney for the appellant Bridges, which opening statement followed immediately upon the opening statement of the prosecution, and continuing thereafter throughout the trial to and including the time when the jury returned their verdict, the trial judge repeatedly and persistently derided, disparaged, and derogated counsel for appellants, appellants themselves, the witnesses called by appellants, and the defenses which appellants interposed and sought to interpose, and during all such periods the said trial judge repeatedly and persistently praised, applauded, and complimented counsel for the prosecution, the agents of the Government who had participated in the preparation of the case against appellants, and witnesses who testified on behalf of the prosecution, with the result that appellants, and each of them, were denied a fair trial and a trial by jury as guaranteed by the Eighth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and were deprived of due process of law in violation of the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

XIII.

The Court below erred in its opinion, order and decree revoking appellant Bridges' citizenship.

Dated: September 25, 1950.

GLADSTEIN, ANDERSEN,
RESNER & LEONARD.
By /s/ NORMAN LEONARD,
Counsel for Appellants.

Receipt of Copy acknowledged.

[Endorsed]: Filed Sept. 25, 1950.

[Title of Court of Appeals and Cause.]

DESIGNATION OF RECORD TO BE PRINTED ON APPEAL

Come now the appellants above named and pursuant to the provisions of Rule 19(6) of the rules of the above-entitled Court, hereby designate the following as the portions of the record to be printed on appeal in the above-entitled cause:

1. Indictment.
2. Pleas of the defendants, docket entries of Thursday, June 16, 1949.
3. Motion of Harry Bridges to dismiss the indictment and the first and second counts thereof, being the document marked No. 35, filed September 1, 1949.

4. Motion of Henry Schmidt to dismiss the indictment and the first and third counts thereof, being the document marked No. 36, filed September 1, 1949.

5. Affidavit of Harry Renton Bridges, being the document marked No. 46, filed September 1, 1949, together with the exhibits attached thereto, being Exhibit A, the affidavit of Harry Bridges dated August 29, 1941; Exhibit B, the affidavit of Leon Goodelman dated August 28, 1941, with three photostatic copies of the newspaper "PM" dated August 25, 26 and 28, 1941, attached thereto; Exhibit C, being the affidavit of Lawrence Kammett dated September 2, 1941; Exhibit D, being the affidavit of Virginia Gardner dated September 2, 1941; Exhibit E, being the affidavit of Carol King dated September 2, 1941; Exhibit F, being the application for certificate of arrival and preliminary form for petition for naturalization executed by Harry Renton Bridges on June 23, 1945; Exhibit G, being the petition for naturalization dated August 8, 1945; Exhibit H, being the reporter's transcript of the naturalization proceedings of Harry Bridges on September 17, 1945; and Exhibit I, being a photostatic copy of the "Milwaukee Journal" dated June 27, 1949.

6. Affidavit of Henry Schmidt, being document marked No. 47, filed September 1, 1949.

7. Affidavit of J. R. Robertson, being document marked No. 48, filed September 1, 1949.

8. Affidavit of Harold M. Sawyer, being document marked No. 50, filed September 1, 1949.

9. Memorandum opinion and order denying certain motions, being document marked No. 90, filed October 12, 1949.

10. Minute order of Tuesday, November 22, 1949, adjudging Vincent Hallinan guilty of contempt of court and sentencing him and ordering that his name be stricken from the roll of attorneys admitted to practice in the United States District Court.

11. Order of contempt and certificate, being document numbered 97, filed November 28, 1949.

12. Memorandum opinion and order overruling objections to testimony of the witness John H. Schomaker, being document marked No. 101, filed November 28, 1949.

13. Verdicts of the jury, being documents marked No. 173, 174 and 175, filed April 4, 1950.

14. Motions in arrest of judgment, being documents marked No. 179, 180 and 181, filed April 10, 1950.

15. Motions for a new trial, being documents marked No. 182, 183 and 184, filed April 10, 1950.

16. Minute entries of Monday, April 10, 1950, consisting of five unnumbered pages.

17. Judgments of conviction, being documents marked No. 184A, 184B and 184C, dated April 10, 1950.

18. Notice of appeal of Harry Renton Bridges, being document marked No. 186, dated April 10, 1950, and filed April 11, 1950.

19. Notice of appeal of Henry Schmidt, being document marked No. 187, dated April 10, 1950, and filed April 11, 1950.

20. Notice of appeal of J. R. Robertson, being document marked No. 188, dated April 10, 1950, and filed April 11, 1950.

21. Instructions to the jury by defense, not given, consisting of defendants' proposed instructions Nos. 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 11, 13, 15, 16, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 32, 33, 36, 37, 38, 40, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 50. 52, 54, 56, 58, 59, 61, 62, 63, 64, 66, 66A, 66B, 66E, 67, 67A, 71, 72, 73, 74, 74A, 76, 78, 78A, 78B, 78C, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83 and 84, collectively the document marked No. 194, and filed April 12, 1950.

22. Instructions to the jury submitted by the defense, given, being defendants' proposed instructions No. 4, 5, 8, 9, 10, 12, 14, 24, 28, 31, 34, 35, 41, 42, 49, 55, 57, 60, 65, 66C, 66D, 68, 69, 70, 75 and 77, collectively being a continuation of the document marked No. 194, filed April 12, 1950.

23. Instructions to the jury by the prosecution, given, being prosecutions instructions Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15 and 16, collectively being the first section of the document marked No. 195, and filed April 12, 1950.

24. Designation of record on appeal, being document marked No. 279, filed April 24, 1950.

25. Statement of points to be relied on, being document marked No. 280, filed April 24, 1950.

26. Supplemental statement of points to be relied on, being document marked No. 282, filed May 3, 1950.

27. Supplemental designation of record on appeal, being document marked No. 283, filed May 3, 1950.

28. Order extending time to file transcript of record, being document marked No. 284, filed May 16, 1950.

29. Certificate of clerk to record on appeal, being an unnumbered document consisting of seven pages, dated June 26, 1950.

30. Stipulation of Counsel dated September 25, 1950.

31. Reporters Transcript 477 to conclusion on June 20, 1950.

GLADSTEIN, ANDERSEN,
RESNER & LEONARD.

By /s/ NORMAN LEONARD,

VINCENT HALLINAN,

JAMES MARTIN MACINNIS,

WILLIAM F. CLEARY,
Attorneys for Appellants.

Receipt of Copy acknowledged.

[Endorsed]: Filed Sept. 25, 1950.

[Title of Court of Appeals and Cause.]

AFFIDAVIT, STIPULATION AND ORDER

State of California,
City and County of San Francisco—ss.

William F. Cleary, being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

That he is one of the attorneys for appellants above named. That there are many and bulky printed and written exhibits and appendices in the record of the above-entitled cause, including newspaper articles, minutes of union meetings, reports of Government administrative agencies, and other bulky documents. That much of the relevant portions of said exhibits has been read into the record of this cause and will therefore be printed with the Reporter's Transcript of the record on appeal. That in the opinion of counsel proper and expeditious prosecution of this cause on appeal will not be best served by printing said exhibits as part of said record on appeal, but by permitting said exhibits to be considered and referred to by the Court and the parties hereto as though the same were actually printed and incorporated in the record on appeal. That the expense to appellants will be materially reduced by permitting this to be done, and that the record on appeal will be materially shortened.

Wherefore, appellants pray that the aboxe-entitled Court grant its permission that all of the exhibits and appendices in the said cause may be deemed part of the printed record herein and may be referred to by the Court and counsel for the parties hereto as though printed in said record.

/s/ WILLIAM F. CLEARY.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 25th day of September, 1950.

[Seal] /s/ PAUL P. O'BRIEN,
Clerk, U. S. Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit.

Stipulation

It Is Hereby Stipulated that an order to the above effect may be made.

Dated: September 25, 1950.

GLADSTEIN, ANDERSEN,
RESNER & LEONARD.

By /s/ NORMAN LEONARD,
Counsel for Appellants.

/s/ FRANK J. HENNESSY,
United States Attorney,
Counsel for Appellee.

By /s/ A. B. McMILLAN,
Asst. U. S. Attorney.

It Is So Ordered.

/s/ CLIFTON MATHEWS,
United States Circuit Judge.

/s/ WILLIAM HEALY,
United States Circuit Judge.

/s/ WALTER L. POPE,
United States Circuit Judge.

[Title of Court of Appeals and Cause.]

STIPULATION

It Is Hereby Stipulated by and between counsel for the respective parties hereto that on September 1, 1949, appellant J. R. Robertson filed in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Southern Division, a motion to dismiss the indictment and the first and third counts thereof in the identical words as the motion filed by appellant Henry Schmidt.

Dated: September 25, 1950.

GLADSTEIN, ANDERSEN,
RESNER & LEONARD.

By /s/ NORMAN LEONARD,
Attorneys for Appellants.

FRANK J. HENNESSY,
U. S. Attorney.

By /s/ R. B. McMILLAN,
Attorney for Appellee,
Asst. U. S. Atty.

[Endorsed]: Filed Sept. 27, 1950.

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT, U.S.

Office-Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
JAN 14 1953
[illegible] Clerk

TRANSCRIPT OF RECORD
IN EIGHTEEN VOLUMES

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1952

No. 548

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT and J. R. ROBERTSON, Petitioners,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Respondent.

Volume XVIII
(Pages 8215 to 8435)

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI
TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

No. 12597

United States Court of Appeals

For the Ninth Circuit

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT and J. R. ROBERTSON,

Appellants,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Appellee.

Appeals from the United States District Court,
Northern District of California
Southern Division

Proceedings Had in the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

Phillips & Van Orden Co., 870 Brannan Street, San Francisco, Calif.

INDEX

[Clerk's Note: When deemed likely to be of an important nature, errors or doubtful matters appearing in the original certified record are printed literally in italic; and, likewise, cancelled matter appearing in the original certified record is printed and cancelled herein accordingly. When possible, an omission from the text is indicated by printing in italic the two words between which the omission seems to occur.]

PAGE

Appellants' Petition for Rehearing and Application That Petition for Rehearing Be Heard En Banc 8297

Certificate of Clerk 8435

Judgment 8296

Opinions and Concurring Opinion 8216

Opinions and Concurring Opinion as Amended November 18, 1952 8354

Order of Amendment 8349

Order Denying Petition for Rehearing 8434

Order Directing Filing of Opinions and Filing and Recording of Judgment 8215

Order of Submission 8215

United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit

Excerpt from Proceedings of Tuesday, March 18, 1952.

Before: Stephens, Bone and Pope,
Circuit Judges.

[Title of Cause.]

ORDER OF SUBMISSION

Ordered appeals herein argued by Messrs. Richard Gladstein, Norman Leonard and Vincent Hallinan, counsel for appellants, and by Mr. Robert B. McMillan, Assistant United States Attorney, counsel for appellee, and submitted to the court for consideration and decision.

United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit

Excerpt from Proceedings of Saturday, September 6, 1952.

Before: Stephens, Bone and Pope,
Circuit Judges..

[Title of Cause.]

ORDER DIRECTING FILING OF OPINIONS AND FILING AND RECORDING OF JUDGMENT

Ordered that the typewritten opinions this day rendered by this court in above cause be forthwith filed by the clerk, and that a judgment be filed and recorded in the minutes of this court in accordance with the opinions rendered.

United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit

No. 12,597

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT and J. R. ROBERTSON, Appellants,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Appellee.

Sept. 6, 1952

Appeals from the United States District Court, Northern District of California, Southern Division

Before: Stephens, Bone, and Pope,
Circuit Judges.

Stephens, Circuit Judge.

OPINIONS AND CONCURRING OPINION

On the 25th day of May, 1949, a single indictment was returned by a United States Grand Jury charging Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt, and J. R. Robertson with the crime of conspiracy to fraudulently secure Bridges' naturalization (Count I; 18 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] §88, now 18 U.S.C. [1948 Rev.] §371): charging Bridges with the crime of knowingly making a false statement under oath relating to his naturalization proceedings (Count II; 8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] §746a, now 18 U.S.C. [1948 Rev.] §1015(a)); charging

Schmidt and Robertson each with the crime of fraudulently aiding and abetting an alien (Bridges) to procure naturalization (Count III; 8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] §746(a)(5)). All of the charges contained in the indictment were submitted together to a jury which returned verdicts of guilty against each defendant as charged in each count; judgment and sentence followed; and each defendant appeals on numerous grounds as to each judgment.[1]

Count I.

Count I is laid under Title 18 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] §88, (now 18 U.S.C. [1948 Rev.] §371) in which Bridges, Schmidt and Robertson were charged with having conspired together to secure the naturalization of Bridges, an alien, by fraudulently representing that he had never belonged to the Communist Party of the United States. The applicable statute is as follows:

---

[1] Bridges was sentenced to:
two years imprisonment on Count I of the indictment and five years on Count II of the indictment, commencing and running concurrently.
Schmidt was sentenced to:
two years imprisonment on Count I of the indictment and two years on Count III of the indictment, commencing and running concurrently.
Robertson was sentenced to:
two years imprisonment on Count I of the indictment and two years on Count III of the indictment, commencing and running concurrently.

> §88. "If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each of the parties to such conspiracy shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both."

The text of the Count, together with the alleged overt acts, are set out in the margin.[2]

---

[2] Count I: "The Grand Jury charges: That Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt, and J. R. Robertson (hereinafter called 'said defendants') on or about the 23rd day of June, 1945, and continuing thereafter until on or about October 1, 1945, and for some time prior thereto, the exact time being to the Grand Jury unknown, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, within said Division and District, did conspire with each other, and with divers other persons to the Grand Jury unknown, to defraud the United States by impairing, obstructing and defeating the proper administration of its naturalization laws, in the manner following, to wit: By having said defendant Harry Renton Bridges fraudulently petition for and obtain naturalization in a naturalization proceeding in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, by falsely and fraudulently stating and representing to the said Court in said proceeding numbered 28152 in the records of said Superior Court, that he, said defendant Harry Renton Bridges, had never belonged to the Communist Party in the United States; that said statement and representation so agreed to be made, and made, as aforesaid, as said defendants, and each of them at all times

Count II.

Count II is laid under Section 346 of the Nationality Act of 1940, c. 876, 54 Stat. 1137, 1163, Title 8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] §746(a)(1), (now 18 U.S.C. [1948 Rev.] §1015(a)), in which Bridges, alone, is charged with having fraudulently made a false statement under oath in his naturalization proceedings in the Superior Court of California, as follows:

> Question by the Court to Mr. Bridges: "Do you now, or have you ever, belonged to the Communist Party of the United States?"
>
> Answer by Mr. Bridges: "I have not; I do not."

---

herein mentioned well knew, were false and fraudulent in this, that said defendant Harry Renton Bridges had in truth and in fact belonged to and been a member of the Communist Party in the United States from the year 1933 up to and including said 17th day of September, 1945; that said statement and representation were material to said naturalization proceeding.

"That in pursuance of such conspiracy, and during the existence thereof, and in furtherance, and to effect the objects thereof, said defendants, respectively, did and performed the following overt acts:

"1. On the 23rd day of June, 1945, defendant Harry Renton Bridges filed at the office of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, in the City of San Francisco, State of California, an application for a Certificate of Arrival and preliminary form for petition for naturalization.

"2. On or about the 8th day of August, 1945, said defendant Harry Renton Bridges appeared before Lloyd H. Garner, a Naturalization Examiner of the United States, at San Francisco, State

The applicable statute is as follows:

> 8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] §746(a). It is hereby made a felony for any alien or other person, whether an applicant for naturalization or citizenship, or otherwise, and whether an employee of the Government of the United States or not—
>
> "(1) Knowingly to make a false statement under oath, either orally or in writing, in any case, proceeding, or matter relating to, or under, or by virtue of any law of the United States relating to naturalization or citizenship."

The text of the Count II is set out in the margin.[3]

---

of California, in the office of the County Clerk in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and gave testimony in the matter of the application of said defendant Harry Renton Bridges for naturalization.

"3. On or about the 8th day of August, 1945, said defendants Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, and each of them, at the office of the County Clerk in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, signed as witnesses a petition for naturalization in the case of defendant Harry Renton Bridges.

"4. On or about the 17th day of September, 1945, said defendants Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt, and J. R. Robertson, and each of them, appeared in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and gave testimony in support of the petition of defendant Harry Renton Bridges for naturalization."

[3] Count II: "The Grand Jury further charges: That on the 17th day of September, 1945, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of Cali-

Count III.

Count III is laid under Section 346 of the Nationality Act of 1940, c. 876, 54 Stat. 1137, 1163, Title 8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] §746(a)(5). In this Count Schmidt and Robertson are accused of knowingly encouraging, aiding, advising, and assisting Bridges to secure his naturalization through fraud. The applicable statute is as follows:

> 8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] §746(a). "It is hereby made a felony for any alien or other person, whether an applicant for naturalization or citizenship, or otherwise, and whether an employee of the Government of the United States or not—— * * *
>
> "(5) To encourage, aid, advise, or assist any person not entitled thereto to obtain, ac-

---

fornia, in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, Honorable Thomas M. Foley, Superior Judge, presiding, there came on for hearing a naturalization proceeding, numbered 28152 in the records of said Superior Court, on the petition of defendant Harry Renton Bridges for naturalization under the Nationality Act of October 14, 1940; that defendant Harry Renton Bridges then and there was called and produced as a witness in said proceeding then on for hearing, and took an oath before said Court that he, the said defendant, would testify truly in said proceeding, and said Court then and there had competent authority to administer said oath, and did administer it; that defendant Harry Renton Bridges did then and there wilfully and knowingly make a false statement under oath in certain matters which were material to the issues of said proceeding then and > cept, or receive any certificate of arrival, declaration of intention, certificate of naturalization or certificate of citizenship, or other documentary evidence of naturalization or of citizenship——

>
> "(a) Knowing the same to have been procured by fraud; * * *."

The text of the Count is set out in the margin.[4]

---

there being heard, giving the following answers to questions asked, to wit:

> " 'Q. Do you now, or have you ever, belonged to the Communist Party in the United States?
>
> " 'A. I have not; I do not.'

That said answers so stated and testified to by defendant Harry Renton Bridges were, and each of them was, as said defendant then and there knew, wilfully false and contrary to his said oath, and said defendant did not then and there believe said answers, or any of them, to be true, and the said answers were, and each of them was, then and there believed and known by him to be false.

"That in truth and in fact said defendant at the time of so testifying belonged to and was a member of the Communist Party in the United States, and had belonged to and been a member of said Communist Party in the United States from 1933 up to and including said 17th day of September, 1945.

"That said statement and testimony of said defendant, and said answers given by him as aforesaid, were upon a material matter, and were material in and to the issues of said proceeding."

[4] Count III: "The Grand Jury further charges: That said defendants, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on or about the 17th day of September, 1945, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, within said Division and District, did wilfully and knowingly encourage, aid,

The Statute of Limitations

The acts which are the bases of the charges were performed within the period intervening between June 23 to October 1, 1945, and since the indictment was returned on May 25, 1949, the three year period provided by the general statute of limitations,[5] within which prosecutions could legally be advise and assist a person, to wit, Harry Renton Bridges, not then and there entitled thereto, to obtain, accept and receive a Certificate of Naturalization, which was to be procured, and was procured by fraud, as said defendants, and each of them, at all times herein mentioned well knew, said fraud consisting of false and fraudulent statements and representations made in a naturalization proceeding before the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco, numbered 28152 in the records of said Superior Court, and said Harry Renton Bridges did not belong to the Communist Party in the United States and had never belonged to the Communist Party in the United States, whereas in truth and in fact said Harry Renton Bridges then and there, as said defendants Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, and each of them, then and there well knew, belonged to and was a member of the Communist Party in the United States, and had belonged to and been a member of said Communist Party in the United States from 1933 up to and including said 17th day of September, 1945."

---

[5] Act of June 25, 1948, c. 645, 62 Stat. 828, Title 18 U.S.C. §3282:

Offenses Not Capital.

> "Except as otherwise expressly provided by law, no person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense, not capital, unless the indictment is found or the information is instituted within three years next after such offense shall have been committed."

instituted, had expired and the judgments must be reversed and the indictment dismissed if the prosecution is limited to such period.

The government thinks the prosecution is not so limited because the Congress, aware of the difficulty of prosecuting frauds committed against the government during wartime, enacted the so-called wartime Suspension Act[6] which provided that the three-year period would not begin to run until cessation of war hostilities had been officially proclaimed.

Appellants are of the opinion that neither one of the alleged offenses is a fraud against the government cognizable by the Suspension Act, and therefore institution of the prosecution for these offenses was not extended by it.

---

[6] Act of June 25, 1948, c. 645, 62 Stat. 828, Title 18 U.S.C. §3287:

Wartime Suspension of Limitations.

> "When the United States is at war the running of any statute of limitations applicable to any offense (1) involving fraud or attempted fraud against the United States or any agency thereof in any manner, whether by conspiracy or not, or (2) committed in connection with the acquisition, care, handling, custody, control or disposition of any real or personal property of the United States, or (3) committed in connection with the negotiation, procurement, award, performance, payment for, interim financing, cancelation, or other termination or settlement, of any contract, subcontract, or purchase order which is connected with or related to the prosecution of the war, or with any disposition of termination inventory by any war contractor or Government agency, shall be suspended until three years after the termination of hostilities as proclaimed by the President or by a concurrent resolution of Congress. * * *."

The first count of the indictment is under the substantive offense of conspiracy, and the second and third counts are offenses defined in the statute commonly referred to as the Nationality Act of 1940. The government is of the opinion that the statute of limitations of five years provided in the Nationality Act of 1940[7] applies to Counts II and III independently of the general statute of limitations, and the Suspension Act, while appellants claim that it does not apply and that the general statute of limitations of three years is the applicable limitation, we shall go immediately to the consideration of the latter problem.

The Saving Clause in the Repeal of Offenses Charged in Counts II and III

By Section 21 of the Act of June 25, 1946, revising the Criminal Code, Section 746(a)(1), (5) (Counts II and III), and Section 746(g) of Title 8 U.S.C., which prescribed five years as the statute of limitations for the crimes defined in Section 746, were repealed.[8]

---

[7] Nationality Act of 1940, Section 346 (g), c. 876, 54 Stat. 1137, 1167, Title 8 U.S.C. §746 (g) [1946 ed.]: Statute of Limitations.

> "No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any crime arising under the provisions of this chapter unless the indictment is found or the information is filed within five years next after the commission of such crime."

The repealing Act provided that "any rights or liabilities" existing under the repealed sections were, however, preserved. This retention of "rights or liabilities" is generally referred to as the "Saving Clause." Whether such preservation included the five-year limitation on the initiating of prosecutions we shall consider. If not included, then the general limitation of three years was applicable and had run as to Counts II and III, as appellants claim, unless the Suspension Act tolled the beginning of the three years to the date of the cessation of war hostilities. If either the Saving Clause or the Suspension Act applies, Counts II and III were laid in time. If the Suspension Act applies to Count I, it was laid in time. The Saving Clause has no relation to Count I.

We have said that the repealing Act provided that any "rights or liabilities now existing under [the repealed sections] or parts thereof shall not be affected by this repeal." The offenses under Counts II and III (8 U.S.C. §746(a)(1) and (5), supra) were repealed and at the same time, by the same Act, the five-year statute of limitations (8

---

[8] Section 21, Act of June 25, 1948, 62 Stat. 683, 862:

> "The sections or parts thereof of the Revised Statutes or Statutes at Large enumerated in the following schedule are hereby repealed. Any rights or liabilities now existing under such sections or parts thereof shall not be affected by this repeal."

U.S.C. §746(g), supra) applying specifically to the offenses defined in the same Act as that containing the five-year statute of limitations, was repealed.

We can see no other meaning as to what was done by the repealing Act with its preservation of existing rights and liabilities than that the government's "right" to prosecute and the appellants' "liability" to be prosecuted were expressly preserved, together with the rights and liabilities existing under the repealed five-year statute of limitations before its repeal.

We are, of course, aware that the second circuit has taken a different view of the problem in United States v. Obermeier, 1950, 2 Cir., 186 F.2d 243. In that case the court held that §746(a)(1), (the section under which our Count II is laid), was not repealed but was revised into Title 18 U.S.C. §1015(a). There are volumes written on the effect of revisions and repeals and, after considerable study, we find confusion perhaps worse confounded. As a matter of fact, the Congress used the following language in its repealing statute:

> "The sections or parts thereof of the Revised Statutes or Statutes at Large enumerated in the following schedule are hereby repealed. Any rights or liabilities now existing under such sections or parts thereof shall not be affected by this repeal." Section 21, Act of June 25, 1948, 62 Stat. 683, 862.)

The offense treated in Obermeier derives from the same section of the same statutes as the offense in our Count II. The offense treated in our Count III derives from another section of the same statute as also does the repealed five-year statute of limitations applying specifically to such offenses. All of these three sections of the statute were repealed by the same Act and are enumerated in the schedule.

We think as did the trial court in the instant case that Congress intended and used, apt language to that end, to retain the right to prosecute the offenses under which Counts II and III were laid within the time prescribed by the statute of defining them. It did not intend "a legislative pardon or amnesty" (United States vs. Obermeier, supra, at page 251) which would result if existing rights and liabilities under the statute of limitation set out in Title 8, U.S.C. §746(g) were not preserved.

Appellants suggest in their brief that the Saving Clause in section 21 was intended to apply only to charges already made with trials pending. Appellants are wrong.

The Supreme Court said in Yeaton vs. United States, 1809, 9 U.S. (5 Cranch.) 281, 283, "[I]t has long been settled, on general principles, that after the expiration or repeal of a law, no penalty can be enforced, nor punishment inflicted, for violations of the law committed while it was in force, unless some special provision be made for that purpose by statute." [Emphasis ours.] See also United States vs. Chambers, 1934, 291 U.S. 217, 223.

A special provision made by Congress need not, nor does it here, confine the content of what it saves to actions pending under the repealed statutes. 50 Am.Jur. §528; Coffin vs. Rich, 1858, 45 Me. 507, 71 Am.Dec. 559, 564.

There is good reason for the trial judge's statement in his opinion[9] that the Congressional intent was to preserve the status quo as to violation of and the prosecution for offenses which had been committed prior to the repeal. We think the wording of the Saving Clause is not ambiguous and, quoting Chief Justice Hughes' language in United States vs. Gilliland, 1941, 312 U.S. 86 at page 93, "[w]e see no reason why this apparent intention should be frustrated by construction.

The Applicability of the Wartime Suspension Act

The Wartime Suspension Act (62 Stat. 828) is cast in three numbered classes. The government views class (1), which suspends the running of the general limitation statute until proclamation of cessation of hostilities as to offenses "involving fraud or attempted fraud against the United States or any agency thereof in any manner, whether by conspiracy or not * * * ," as covering frauds to obtain rights and privileges from the government or which obstruct the government or its agencies in the due execution of law. And pecuniary[9a] loss to

---

[9] United States v. Bridges, 1949, 86 F. Supp. 922, 927.

[9a] For facility of expression in this opinion, we have expanded the meaning of the word "pecuniary" to include any and all property of value.

the government is not a necessary element. Classes (2) and (3) apply to frauds against the government or a government agency in specific instances which involve pecuniary loss to the government.

Appellants, opposing the government's view, seek to apply the rule of ejusdem generis to the Act and argue that since classes (2) and (3) refer to frauds of the same nature, class (1) is limited to frauds of the same nature. We pass this contention by quoting from United States vs. Gilliland, 1941, 312 U.S. 86, 93:

> " 'The rule of "ejusdem generis" is applied as an aid in ascertaining the intention of the legislature, not to subvert it when ascertained.' "

Appellants also argue that the legislative history supports the view that only pecuniary frauds were contemplated by the Congress. We think the government's view of the Act is supported by the face of the Act and that no ambiguity is present which requires reference to the legislative history. However, we think the history, some of which we set out in the margin,[10] does not support appellant's view.

---

[10] House and Senate Reports (No. 2051, House Misc. Rep. III, and No. 1544, Senate Misc. Rep. IV, accompanying the bill which became the Act of August 24, 1942, 56 Stat. 747, and which, when amended in 1944 became the Act here considered) referred to the need for time "to investigate, discover, and gather evidence to prosecute frauds against the Government." It alluded to the gigantic war program, to the fact that "[h]uge sums of money" were "being expended for materials and

We shall proceed to look at the case authorities. But before doing so, it is well to have in mind that not every fraud against the government, whether inherently pecuniary or otherwise, comes within the effect of the Suspension Act. There are offenses for which specific statutes of limitation apply and there are offenses which encompass acts inherently fraudulent as to the government but in which the fraud is not an ingredient and need not be proved. The Suspension Act does not apply in such circumstances if the decisions relative to the provisos considered in Noveck, McElvain and Sharton, hereinafter cited, are to rule. See our note 15a.

---

equipment," that these dealings would no doubt present opportunities for unscrupulous persons "to defraud the Government or some agency." These allusions suggest fraud causing pecuniary losses. On the other hand, the same report mentions the fact that "[t]he law-enforcement branch of the Government is also busily engaged in its many duties, including the enforcement of the espionage, sabotage, and other laws." This suggests that these agencies were currently too busy with war problems to be able to devote the time necessary to discover frauds against the Government, a condition which would be true of one character of fraud as another.

American Stevedores v. Porello, 1947, 330 U.S. 446, 451-2, demonstrates that when a statement made in Congress during the pendency of a bill mentions but one purpose to be served by an enactment of language broad enough to accomplish other purposes as well, it cannot be assumed, in the absence of express limitations in the enactment, that it was not intended to serve the other purposes as well.

It appears to us that the legislative history is too equivocal to be determinative here.

The Case Authorities

United States vs. Gottfried, 1948, 2 Cir., 165 F. 2d 360: Gottfried and others were involved in frauds to obtain more sugar than their legal ration. Gottfried and his corporation were indicted for making a fraudulent statement, and Gottfried and two others were indicted for conspiracy to defraud the government. The specific fraud alleged was that the government should be deprived of the services of one of its enforcement officers in order to accomplish the illegal purpose. No mention was made as to any pecuniary loss of the government. The court said in part, at page 368:

> "The argument [by appellants]—drawn from the Congressional debates—is that this language should be confined to frauds of those who contracted with the United States or supplied it with materials, and that it does not include interference even though fraudulent which results in no pecuniary loss. Textually, this reasoning has nothing to commend it, except so far as the word, 'fraud,' may imply pecuniary loss; and, whatever might be said as a new matter for so circumscribing that word, it has been the law, at least since 1910, that in the statute [§80, Title 18 U.S.C.A.] under which this indictment was drawn, 'fraud' includes any conduct 'calculated to obstruct or impair its' (the United States') 'efficiency and destroy the value of its operations and reports.' [Haas vs. Henkel, 1910, 216 U.S.

> 462, 479].[11] We see no reason for reading the words 'defrauding the United States' in the statute of limitations now in question less comprehensively; certainly there was not enough ground for that in the debates of Congress. Besides, the purpose of the amendment was not to let crimes pass unpunished which had been committed in the hurly-burly of war, an over-riding motive which perfectly fits the situation at bar."

We are in accord with these expressions.

Following World War I there was in effect a proviso to the statute of limitations which was to some extent the prototype of the Wartime Suspension Act. It is therefore useful to approach the scope of the present Act through decisions made under the former Act.

United States vs. Noveck, 1926, 271 U.S. 201: In this case the government was contending that the acts of defendant, the basis of the charge of perjury against him, were inherently fraudulent and therefore a proviso suspending the statute of limitations, was applicable. But the court held otherwise, giving the reason for its holding that fraud is not an ingredient of perjury, that perjury can be proved without proof of fraud, and that the proviso to the statute of limitations applies only to those cases in which fraud is an ingredient. The court went on to say that otherwise the same period of limtation would not apply to all offenses of perjury. Those in which the government was defrauded would be under the proviso and all others would be under the general statute of limitations.

---

[11] The court in Gottfried was referring to the following found in Haas v. Henkel, 1910, 216 U.S. 462, 479:

"The statute is broad enough in its terms to include any conspiracy for the purpose of impairing, obstructing, or defeating the lawful function of any department of the government * * *. That it is not essential to charge or prove an actual financial or property loss to make a case under the statute has been more than once ruled [citing many cases]."

As we have already seen, the basic reason for the decision in United States vs. Noveck, supra, was that the proviso to the statute of limitations then in effect applied only to crimes in which fraud against the government or any agency thereof is an ingredient and is a necessary element of proof. That is, since the crime in Noveck was perjury, a crime which may be proved independently of or in the absence of fraud against the government, fraud against the government is an immaterial incident.

United States vs. McElvain, 1926, 272 U.S. 633: The indictment was laid under Criminal Code §37. (35 Stat. 1088-1096) and the charge was conspiracy to defraud the United States in respect of its income tax. The general statute of limitations (§1044) for criminal offenses was three years and under a proviso to it the period within which the indictment could be returned as to certain offenses was six years. The government claimed that the proviso was applicable to the charge laid, but the defense thought not. The trial court and the Supreme Court held that the general statute of limitations without the proviso was applicable. For clarity, we shall refer to the section, minus the proviso, as the "main part." Section 1044, complete with proviso, is quoted in note [12].

The opinion of the Supreme Court in United States vs. McElvain, supra, is not easy reading and has had various constructions. Without very careful study it mistakenly appears that an inconsistency or miscitation of statutory section has crept into it. The court, it will be observed, says at page 639:

> "The crime of conspiracy to commit an offense is distinct from the offense itself," meaning of course that conspiracy is one crime and the performance of the illegal acts planned or "involved" in the conspiracy constitutes another distinct or, according to the court, "substantive" crime.[13]

---

[12] Rev. Stats. §1044: "No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense, not capital, except as provided in section 1046, unless the indictment is found, or the information is instituted, within three years next after such offense shall have been committed: Provided, however, That in offenses involving the defrauding or attempts to defraud the United States or any agency thereof, whether by conspiracy or not, and in any manner, and now indictable under any existing statutes, the period of limitation shall be six years. This Act shall apply to acts, offenses, or transactions where the existing statute of limitations has not yet fully run, but this proviso shall not apply to acts, offenses, or transactions which are already barred by the provisions of existing laws." 42 Stat. 220; see also Title 18 U.S.C.A. §582 (1927 ed.).

The proviso cannot relate to any offense not within the terms of the main part of the statute because the proviso is an excepting clause to the rule or law laid down in the main part. Without the proviso, the main part of the statute by its terms covers every offense except capital offenses and offenses arising from the revenue laws. The excepting clause (the proviso) takes all offenses, covered by the main part which "involve" fraud against the United States or its agencies, out of the three-year limitation and fixes instead thereof a six-year limitation.

The case is dealing with an offense of conspiracy but, says the court (page 639),

> "The language of the proviso cannot reasonably be read to include all conspiracies as defined by §37 [because the proviso contains the words 'whether by conspiracy or not' which establishes that it is the substantive offense or the object of the conspiracy which determines the scope of the proviso]. * * * [O]bviously it [the proviso] would be limited to those [conspiracies] to commit the substantive offenses which it [the main part] covers"

or, in the language of the proviso, which it "involves." The substantive offense to the conspiracy charged in the McElvain case is not covered or involved in the main part but by specific language it is excluded therefrom. But no "distinct" offense of conspiracy is excluded from coverage of the main part. It follows that the offense charged is within the terms of the main part and not within the excepting part—the proviso. All the rest of the opinion is intended to explain the reasonableness of the decision and the evident intent of Congress but, unfortunately, rather acts to confuse. See note [13a].

---

[13] See also Glasser v. United States, 1942, 315 U.S. 60, 66.

Under the doctrine of the McElvain case it is clear that since Count I of our case concerns conspiracy, the substantive offense of which is not excluded from the main part of the applicable statute of limitations, the proviso would apply.[14] The decision and opinion in United States v. McElvain, supra, is not authority for excluding our Count I from the Suspension Act.

United States v. Scharton, 1932, 285 U.S. 518: The statute of limitations with which Scharton was concerned was §1110(a) of the Revenue Act of 1926, applying specifically to offenses under the revenue laws. Differing from McElvain, the indictment was not for conspiracy, but for violating a "substantive" revenue law and was within the main part of the applicable statute of limitations. There was a proviso to the applicable statute of limitations, §1110(a), similar to the proviso in McElvain, hence, under the McElvain reasoning the offense was not taken out of the main part. But the proviso was held not to apply because of the principle announced in United States v. Noveck, supra, that fraud against the United States or any agency thereof was not an ingredient of the offense charged. The court sought to find the intent of Congress and in doing so called attention to the fact that the proviso was an excepting clause and therefore was to be strictly construed. The section under which the charge is made, §1114(b), makes an attempt to evade any tax under the Revenue Act of 1926, an offense without the mention of fraud. "There are, however, numerous statutes expressly making intent to defraud an element of a specified offense against the revenue laws." United States v. Scharton, supra, at page 521. Hence, under the Noveck doctrine, the proviso applies only to offenses which encompass fraud as an ingredient.

[13a] The gist of counsel's argument, which the court approved, was (p. 636): "If the proviso in the amendment of §1044 does not include within its terms frauds existing under the Revenue Act, then necessarily such proviso does not include conspiracies to commit frauds on the Government under the Revenue Act."

---

[14] See Miller v. United States, 1928, 24 F. 2d 353; Falter v. United States, 1928, 23 F. 2d 420.

The statute under which our Count II is laid, 8 U.S.C. §746(a)(1), has no specific mention of fraud and it can be argued from this fact that the Suspension Act would not be applicable thereto. However, we think the Suspension Act does apply for the reason we shall now set forth: The charge in Scharton was that the accused had made attempts to evade income taxes and the statutory offense, §1114(b), Revenue Act of 1926, made attempts to wilfully evade or defeat the tax, a felony. There is no specific mention of fraud in the statute defining the offense charged, and the proviso as we have seen is made applicable only to "offenses involving the defrauding or attempt to defraud the United States or any agency thereof," et cetera.

If the cited case must be construed to mean that "fraud" must be spelled out literally in the statute, then logically we must hold that the Suspension Act does not apply to Count II, for although fraud is specifically charged in the indictment, fraud is not specifically mentioned in the statute defining the offense under which the charge is laid.

We think we are not driven to this extreme conclusion. Noveck, McElvain, and Scharton do not foreclose the holding that where the very terms of a statutory offense require proof which necessarily involves fraud or attempted fraud against the United States or an agency thereof, and there is no special Act inconsistent therewith such as is found in McElvain and Scharton, the Suspension Act applies. After all, the Congress was enacting the Suspension Act to preserve the government's right to prosecute those who had tried, successfully or not, to defraud it during the war. It does not seem to be in harmony with Congressional intent nor does it seem otherwise necessary to construe the Noveck doctrine so strictly that it excepts the extension or suspension of statute of limitations from applying to acts which come directly under the offense and which cannot be committed without thereby committing fraud against the United States or an agency thereof. In the circumstances prosecutions under the same statutory offense could not be limited in one case to a certain period and to another period in another case—a strong point in Noveck. Both McElvain and Scharton were controlled by special statutes covering the revenue laws. The trial court held to the view we have suggested and the government adheres to it. We think it is supported by reason and therefore we are not constrained to broaden the Scharton holding to include the instant case. All we have said on this point is but a roundabout way of saying that fraud is an ingredient of the offense charged. Such in effect was the holding in Knauer v. United States, 1946, 328 U.S. 654. Hence, we hold that the Suspension Act applies to Count II of the indictment. We have already shown that the Saving Clause applies.

Since our Count III does specifically include fraud as an ingredient of the offense charged, it seems obvious that the Suspension Act applies and, for the reasons already given, the Saving Clause applies.

Marzani v. United States, 1948, (C.A., D. Columbia) 168 F. 2d 133: Appellant Marzani was indicted in 1947, tried, convicted, and sentenced for having made false and fraudulent statements in a matter within the jurisdiction of an agency of the United States government in violation of §80 of Title 18 U.S.C.A. (The False Claims Act). Factually, he was charged with having given false answers to questions as to whether he had ever been a member of the Communist Party, ever attended their meetings, etc. The general three-year statute of limitations had run before the indictment was returned and it would have to be dismissed unless the Suspension Act, hereinbefore considered, was effective. The court, after discussing Noveck, McElvain, Scharton, and Gilliland, supra, concluded that the Suspension Act did not apply to the False Claims Act. It gave as its reasons that the False Claims Act did not involve pecuniary frauds, whereas the Suspension Act applied only to offenses which involved pecuniary frauds against the government. We cannot agree with the reasoning in the Marzani opinion, nor consequently with the conclusions reached.

It is true that Gilliland held that the False Claims Act was not restricted to matters in which the government was defrauded in a pecuniary or financial sense. But, while each of the three cases—Noveck, McElvain, and Scharton—was a case involving pecuniary loss, none of these cases held that the proviso could be invoked only when the government had been defrauded in a pecuniary manner. The Suspension Act applies to every offense "involving fraud or attempted fraud against the United States." The word fraud as defined by the Supreme Court in Haas v. Henkel, 1910, 216 U.S. 462, 479, means the "impairing, obstructing or defeating [of] the lawful function of any department of Government." Gilliland reaffirmed Haas v. Henkel by holding that since Congress had removed the words "cheating and swindling" from the False Claims Act, Congress had in effect declared that a fraud need not be pecuniary in nature in order to be covered by the False Claims Act.[15] We therefore conclude that the Suspension Act applies to every offense involving fraud against the government whether pecuniary or not.

Appellants argue that since the Suspension Act applies to fraud "in any manner," whereas the conspiracy statute applies to fraud "in any manner or for any purpose," the two Acts refer to different types of frauds. In their argument they concede that the definition of fraud in the conspiracy statute applies both to pecuniary frauds and to frauds which obstruct the government in its lawful functions. However, they urge that the absence of the words "or for any purpose" in the reference to fraud in the Suspension Act confines the scope of that Act to pecuniary frauds. They rely upon the Cohn case (see our footnote 15, supra) for the conclusion reached. The Cohn case held that the term "fraud" in the False Claims Act, before its 1934 amendment, applied only to pecuniary frauds. However, a careful reading of the Cohn case, and the Gilliland case, shows that fraud in the Cohn case included those of a pecuniary nature only because it

---

[15] In United States v. Cohn, 1926, 270 U.S. 339, the Supreme Court had held that since the False Claims Act, Criminal Code §35, 18 U.S.C.A. §80 (1927 ed.) as it then read, applied to false claims made "with the intent of cheating and swindling or defrauding the Government of the United States" [emphasis ours], it related only to pecuniary frauds.

However, §35 was amended June 18, 1934, 48 Stats. 996, by deleting the words "cheating and swindling."

(fraud) was coupled with the words "cheating and swindling." And that once the words "cheating and swindling" were deleted, the word fraud, standing alone and without any help from the phrase "for any purpose," was held to extend to all frauds whether pecuniary or not. United States v. Gilliland, 1941, 312 U.S. 86. See note [15a].

We conclude as follows:

Count I.

Since fraud against the United States or any agency thereof was an ingredient of the offense charged and such fraud was not required to be of a pecuniary nature (conspiring to obtain the naturalization of Bridges) the Wartime Suspension Act applies.

[15a] The foregoing discussion as to the application of the Suspension Act to the offenses involved in this case is under the assumption that the proviso to the statute of limitations covering frauds against the United States during the first World War is in all respects the prototype of the present Suspension Act, and that the Supreme Court decisions under the proviso apply as well to the Suspension Act. We think there is reason for a different view.

In the Noveck, McElvain and Scharton cases the Supreme Court was dealing with provisos added to specific limitation acts. In each case the court gave the proviso a strict construction. This was primarily because they were enacted as provisos. We think the fact that the Suspension Act is cast in a separate independent Act rather than as a proviso to the general statute of limitations and is cast in very inclusive language indicates that Congress intended to avoid the limitations written into the Noveck, McElvain and Scharton opinions.

Counts II and III.

Since fraud is an ingredient of each of the offenses charged (Count II, false swearing; and Count III, aiding Bridges to obtain naturalization illegally) and it is not required that the fraud be of a pecuniary nature, the Wartime Suspension Act applies. And since the "rights or liabilities" of the repealed sections of the Nationality Act of 1940 (one of which repealed sections is the special statute of limitations for offenses under the Nationality Act of 1940) are preserved, the Saving Clause applies.

We therefore conclude that the statute of limitations had not run against either count of the indictment when it was returned.

Res Judicata

The Executive Department of the government has long been concerned with Mr. Bridges. And we take note of that concern solely because it is claimed by the appellants that the actions taken against Bridges effect a legal bar to the instant prosecutions. Because of this important legal point, we turn to the prior proceedings against Bridges.

It is contended by appellants that, prior to the return of the indictment, it had been adjudicated that Bridges was not, at the time of his naturalization and that he never had been, a member of the Communist Party; and that it is a denial of due process of law under the Fifth Amendment to refuse to apply the doctrine of res judicata to this case.

We think it sufficient to quote briefly from the Supreme Court opinion in Southern Pacific Co. v. United States, 1897, 168 U.S. 1, at page 48:

> "* * * a right, question or fact distinctly put in issue and directly determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, as a ground for recovery, cannot be disputed in a subsequent suit between the same parties or their privies; and even if the second suit is for a different cause of action, the right, question or fact once so determined must, as between the same parties or their privies, be taken as conclusively established, so long as the judgment in the first suit remains unmodified." [Emphasis ours.]

In 1938, the Secretary of Labor, then in charge of Immigration and related subjects, issued a warrant for the arrest and deportation of Bridges, an alien, charging that at the time he entered the United States he was a member of or affiliated with a defined class of aliens who advocated overthrow of the government by force and violence. Title 8 U.S.C. [1927 ed.] §137(c) and (g). Dean James N. Landis, acting as an official of the executive department of the government but not as an arm of the judicial department, heard the evidence and held that it established neither membership nor affiliation with the deportable class. The Secretary of Labor approved Dean Landis' report and dismissed the warrant.

We hold that the proceedings do not act as an estoppel to, nor res judicata of, the prosecutions in the present action, primarily because the cases which apply the rule of the Southern Pacific case, supra, do not extend the doctrine of estoppel by judgment beyond the findings of "a court of competent jurisdiction." Furthermore, the Supreme Court has specifically said that since an administrative board is an instrument of the executive power and not a court, the doctrine of res judicata cannot be applied to its decisions. Pearson v. Williams, 1906, 202 U.S. 281. An administrative decision does not preclude a subsequent administrative consideration of the identical matter, Mock Kee Song v. Cahill, 1938, 9 Cir., 94 F. 2d 975; Flynn v. Ward, 1938, 1 Cir., 95 F. 2d 742; therefore a decision of an executive agency cannot act as a bar to subsequent judicial proceedings.

Bridges v. Wixon

Bridges also cites his 1940 deportation hearing and the related Supreme Court decision in Bridges v. Wixon, 1945, 326 U.S. 135, as establishing that he was not a Communist at any time up to 1940, and that this issue in our case is res judicata. Of course, the issue in none of the former hearings was as to Bridges' being a Communist. Under the Smith Act[16] and under the applicable law in Schneiderman v. United States, 1943, 320 U.S. 118, an allegation that a person was a Communist was not per se an allegation of a crime, while the allegation that one conspired to destroy the government by force or violence stated a crime.

As for the administrative hearing, it would not be res judicata for the same reasons as assigned to the 1938 hearing before Dean Landis. Moreover, it would not appear that Bridges would want us to rely on the findings of Judge Sears (sitting as a hearing officer of the executive department) in the second administrative hearing, which were to the effect that Bridges had been both affiliated with and a member of the Communist Party, an organization which advocated the overthrow by force or violence of the government of the United States. Although Judge Sears' findings were reversed by the Board of Immigration Appeals, they were reinstated by the Attorney General. Regulations of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, 8 C.F.R. (1940 Supp.) §§90.3 and 90.12.

---

[16] 54 Stat. 670, 671; Title 18 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] §§10, 11, now 18 U.S. C.A. [1948 Rev.] §2385.

However, the 1940 hearing and resulting arrest for deportation led to a decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Bridges v. Wixon, supra. But even though we assume that Bridges and the United States were parties to both the Wixon case and the present case, the doctrine of res judicata is not applicable unless the two cases have a common question or fact which has been "distinctly put in issue and directly determined." Southern Pacific Co. v. United States, supra. The issue of whether or not Bridges was a Communist, and therefore made a false statement when he denied such party membership, is thus reduced to a determination of whether or not Bridges v. Wixon, supra, actually held that Bridges had never been a Communist.

Comparison of Bridges v. Wixon and the Instant Case

In Bridges v. Wixon, supra, Bridges sued for a writ of habeas corpus to compel the Immigration Director to release him from custody. In the instant case Bridges is under indictment for conspiracy to defraud the United States by defeating the administration of its naturalization laws for making false statements under oath in a naturalization proceeding. The causes of action in the two cases are different. Therefore, the second cause of action is not barred by the judgment in the first. However, under the definition of res judicata given in the Southern Pacific case, certain facts, having once been determined in a final judgment, cannot be relitigated in any subsequent action between the same parties.

After careful study of the Supreme Court's opinion, we have reached the conclusion that Bridges v. Wixon, supra, did not decide that Bridges had never been a Communist. The Supreme Court stated in the majority opinion, at page 149, that the administrative agency gave too loose a meaning to the term "affiliation" as proscribed by Title 8 U.S.C. §137(c) and (e), and had also improperly received evidence of Bridges' membership in the Communist Party in the form of an unsigned statement purportedly made by one O'Neil who denied making the statement. The Supreme Court, therefore, concluded that the administrative decision approving an executive order to deport Bridges could not be sustained since it was not supported by substantial evidence.

The matter in court was habeas corpus, and the Communist issue was not in the case. The holding of the Supreme Court was as follows, at page 156:

> "Since Harry Bridges has been ordered deported on a misconstruction of the term 'affiliation' as used in the statute and by reason of an unfair hearing on the question of his membership in the Communist Party, his detention under the warrant is unlawful."

In other words, while the administrative decision to the effect that Bridges was a Communist and deportable, was overturned, there was no judicial determination that Bridges was not affiliated with nor a member of the Communist Party. Bridges v. Wixon, supra, goes no farther than to declare what was the proper administrative procedure to be followed. It did not reach, and there was no need for the decision in that case to reach, the question of whether or not Bridges actually was a Communist. Therefore, we conclude that Bridges v. Wixon, supra, is not res judicata to the case here on appeal.

The Bridges v. Wixon Opinion by the Supreme Court as Evidence

The Supreme Court opinion in Bridges v. Wixon, supra, was offered in evidence by appellants Schmidt and Robertson to show that they, having read the opinion, relied in part thereon in reaching the conclusion that Bridges was not a Communist. However, the opinion was excluded as immaterial and incompetent. Since it was not negatived in that case that Bridges was a Communist, the trial court did not err in excluding it from evidence offered on behalf of Schmidt and Robertson to show their state of mind. The case was of no probative value on the point of Schmidt's and Robertson's knowledge or lack thereof regarding Bridges' membership in the Communist Party, and because of the nature of the issue involved in the case and the narrow scope of the decision, its introduction into evidence could not have been explanatory of Schmidt's and Robertson's beliefs, but could only have served to confuse and mislead the jury. The trial judge's decision to exclude Bridges v. Wixon from evidence was well within the limits of due exercise of his discretion.

Double Jeopardy

The next point raised by Bridges on this appeal is the issue of double jeopardy. The Fifth Amendment of the United States Constitution states that no person shall be > "* * * subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb. * * *."

It is in effect Bridges' contention that the two attempts which were made in the past to deport him as an undesirable alien in reality placed him in jeopardy of "life or limb," and consequently he is shielded by the Constitution from the present conviction for conspiracy to defraud the United States.

Bridges has not been subjected to double jeopardy. At no time during the deportation proceedings was Bridges subjected to peril of life or limb. He was detained solely for the purpose of deportation, not for punishment. Furthermore, the identity of "offenses," necessary for the invocation of the protection against double jeopardy, is lacking since conspiracy and the defrauding of the United States by making false statements to procure naturalization for one not entitled thereto, are distinct crimes which have no relevance to the deportation hearings. Cf. United States v. Williams, 1951, 341 U.S. 58, 62. For, as the Supreme Court said in Bugajewitz v. Adams, 1913, 228 U.S. 585, 591,

> "The determination [by an administrative body that an alien should be deported] by facts that might constitute a crime under local law is not a conviction of crime, nor is the deportation punishment; * * *."

See also Helvering v. Mitchell, 1938, 303 U.S. 391, 398, and footnote at page 399; Ex parte Bridges, 1943, 49 F. Supp. 292, reversed in Bridges v. Wixon, supra, on other grounds; United States v. Bridges, 1949, 86 F. Supp. 922, 928.

Of course, habeas corpus is not a criminal proceeding and a hearing for the writ or a decision upon such hearing cannot put a person in jeopardy. All that can come from a proceeding in habeas corpus of the type used in Bridges v. Wixon, is a determination upon the issue of the detention of a person.

Due Process

Bridges' contention that he has been denied due process of law by virtue alone of the several deportation proceedings and the present criminal indictment and conviction, is without merit. Whatever may be said as to the institution of the several proceedings, Mr. Bridges has been accorded every constitutional right in the instant case. The circumstance that phases of the former hearings and of this case are to some extent interrelated, afford no ground for the claim that due process had not been accorded each and every of the defendants-appellants.

Materiality

There was, at the time in suit, no statutory bar to any alien's naturalization on account of membership in the Communist Party,[17] and possessing such membership was not a crime. There was, however, a bar against naturalization of one who adhered to the belief that this government should be changed by force or violence, and such adherence was a legal ground for deportation. False denials of such membership at a naturalization proceedings were material. The Russian brand of Communism and works of Karl Marx and Lenin were well known and their teachings of the doctrine of overturning our government by force and violence was common knowledge. Had Bridges answered the court's question in the affirmative, the next line of questions which logically would have followed would have been as to whether Bridges believed in the violent overthrow of the government. From the answers received, the court would determine whether the applicant was devoted to the United States Constitution, and whether as a matter of fact and law Bridges qualified as a person entitled to citizenship.[18] The case of Schneiderman v. United States, 1943, 320 U. S. 118, is not in point.

---

[17] But see Amendment to Nationality Code, 1950, 8 U.S.C.A. §705, 64 Stat. 1013, and the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952, Act of June 26, 1952, c. 477, Public Law No. 414, §212(a)(28)(c).

---

[18] Harisiades v. Shaughnessy, 1952, 342 U.S. 580, a recent Supreme Court case dealing with the deportation of aliens under the Alien Registration Act of 1940, 54 Stat. 670, 8 U.S.C.A. [1942 ed.] §137, settles to a certainty that the questions of the court, as to Communist membership, were material to the naturalization proceeding.

The Alien Registration Act of 1940 provides for the deportation of any aliens who "believe in, advise, advocate, or teach, or who are members of or affiliated with any organization, association, society, or group that believes in, advises, advocates, or teaches: (1) the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law, * * *." 8 U.S.C.A. [1942 ed.] §137(c) and (g). The identical language is found in Title 8 U.S.C.A. [1942 ed.] §705(b) wherein the grounds for denying naturalization to an alien are set forth. Although Harisiades had been, but no longer was, a Communist, nevertheless he was ordered deported under the mandate of the Act. Therefore, if Bridges had confessed membership in the Communist Party at the time of his naturalization hearing, he too would have been subject to deportation. In view of the fact that Communist affiliation places an alien within the coverage of the Alien Registration Act, had Bridges spoken the truth at the naturalization hearing, it would have constituted good cause for the denial of the petition. For the statutory definition which makes an alien deportable also makes him ineligible for citizenship. 8 U.S.C.A. §§137(c) and 705(b).

The Third Count: Aid and Abet

Schmidt and Robertson present the theory that the third count of the indictment does not state an offense because there is nothing in the indictment which indicates that Bridges was not entitled to citizenship. The intent of the argument is that even if Schmidt and Robertson did aid and abet Bridges in his naturalization proceedings, the only fact alleged as disqualifying Bridges was that he was a member of the Communist Party, and that such membership was no offense, citing Schneiderman, supra. Hence, that there could have been no fraud.

The fallacy in this theory lies very close to the surface. It is true that as of the time in suit, membership in the Communist Party or being a Communist was not a crime. It was, however, a crime to commit a fraud against the United States or any agency thereof. Aiding and abetting an alien toward securing the great privilege of citizenship through misrepresentation of a fact, which could well be the basis of a refusal to grant it,[19] is well within the terms of the indictment. It is idle nonsense to argue that adherence to a plan of government as contradictory and inconsistent as Communism is to our plan of government would be an improper or inconsequential subject of inquiry in connection with a Naturalization proceeding.

---

[19] See Harisiades v. Shaughnessy, our footnote 18 supra.

Father Meinecke

Father Meinecke was called as a defense character witness to testify regarding Bridges' reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity. The court took part in the examination of the witness, and the defendant contends that the nature of the questions asked by the court were so phrased as to discredit the testimony of the witnesses before the jury.

While the questions of the court might be subject to misunderstanding, that danger was cured by subsequent instructions to the jury.[20] Furthermore, as the Supreme Court said in Glasser v. United States, 1942, 315 U.S. 60, 83:

---

[20] Record on Appeal, pages 4382-4387: "The Court: * * *. Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, * * *.

"Latterly, in my examination of Father Meinecke some mention was made by counsel concerning the asserted impropriety of a question on my part to the father. I might say to you that that was not born of any desire on my part, nor was it designed to inquire into Father Meinecke's mental processes. Nor was it to reflect upon his integrity. The question was born and conceived out of a desire on my part to accord fairness to the witness for the reason that mention was made during the course of this testimony that he left San Francisco for Nevada; an inference might be drawn from that departure that it had something to do with activities in trade unionism and the like. The father on the witness stand volunteered that he asked to be transferred. I merely wanted to inquire, ladies and gentlemen, a very simple question, not born of curiosity on my part, but born of a desire to provide you with all the facts surrounding the father, and it was to the end that I might inquire as to his health. Very many people have to leave large metropolitan areas to go to less burdensome parishes and that was the reason underlying my question."

> "Perhaps the court did not attain at all times that thoroughgoing impartiality which is the ideal [we intimate nothing of the kind here] but our examination of the record as a whole leads to the conclusion that the substantial rights of the petitioners were not affected. The trial was long and the incidents relied on by petitioners few. We must guard against the magnification on appeal of instances which were of little importance in their setting."

In any event, whether or not the court's conduct in regard to Father Meinecke constituted error, it was not so prejudicial as to warrant reversal. For Father Meinecke, in order to be a valid character witness, must testify as to the defendant's reputation in the community. Father Meinecke testified only as to his personal opinion, which is generally inadmissible. Wigmore on Evidence, 3rd ed., §1980. And in addition to Father Meinecke, there were eleven other character witnesses who testified in Bridges' behalf.[21]

---

[21] The testimony of each character witness is found at the page number of the Record on Appeal cited after his name:

Frank M. Andrews (page 4699),
Stanley Bailey (page 4483),
Hubert Brown (page 4049),
Walter E. Buck (page 3921),
Daniel F. Del Carlo (page 4199),
Dr. Leo Eloesser (page 3839),
Kenneth H. Fennesey (page 4058),

Limit on Scope of Cross-Examination

In the course of the trial the government put Lawrence R. Kessler, an agent of the Bureau of Naturalization, on the witness stand for the purpose of identifying a hotel registration card which the government wished to have placed in evidence. The evidentiary value of the card was to show that Lewis Michener, Jr., another government witness, was in San Francisco in August, 1940, to attend a Communist Party meeting at which, he testified, Bridges was also present. On direct examination Kessler's testimony was confined to identifying the exhibit. Counsel for defendant Bridges sought to attack Kessler's credibility on cross-examination on the ground that the only purpose of Kessler's testimony was to bolster Michener's testimony. The court limited the scope of the cross-examination to matters pertaining to the card and precluded impeachment as it is within the discretion of the trial court to do. Glasser v. United States, 1942, 315 U.S. 60, 83; United States v. Fotopoulos, 1950, 9 Cir., 180 F. 2d 631, 640; Chevillard v. United States, 1946, 9 Cir., 155 F. 2d 929, 935; United States v. Toner, 1949, 3 Cir., 173 F. 2d 140, 144.

Counsel for defendant challenged the court's right to limit the scope of the cross-examination in this

---

Augustin F. Gaynor (page 4207),
Robert W. Kenny (page 4258),
Dewey Mead (page 3998),
Oscar W. Pearson (page 4036),

all prominent men in their various vocations and professions.

instance. The court in reply read from a prepared memorandum on the point of law. And while reading the memorandum in the presence of the jury, the court quoted from Morton v. United States, 1932, 7 Cir., 60 F. 2d 696, 699, as follows [at page 3609 of the Record on Appeal]:

> "The battle continued, not to ascertain the truth, but in the evident hope that error might be injected into the record and ultimate conviction thereby avoided. But avoidance of a conviction upon uncontradicted evidence, establishing to a certainty the guilt of the accused, * * *."

The court prefaced its reading of the above passage from the Morton case with the statement addressed to defendant's counsel that

> "* * * the language used in this Morton case is somewhat reminiscent of your expectation or hope that some error might be created in the record."

Defendant labels the above-quoted language of the trial court as such flagrant prejudicial misconduct as to constitute reversible error. However, the court ordered the statements stricken from the record and in addition instructed the jury as follows:

> "During the course of the trial, the Court has been called upon to make comments in ruling upon objections of counsel and motions made by them. It has also occurred during the trial that the court has been called upon to admon> ish and reprimand counsel in connection with the conduct of the trial of this case. The jury shall not draw any inference from any such remarks or comments or rulings of the court that the court was intending to convey to the jury in any manner whatever its view or opinion as to what the verdict or decision of the jury should be. Such comments as the court may have made in that regard were only pursuant to the power and, indeed, the duty of the court to supervise the trial of the case and to expedite it."

It appears that the court recognized that the reading was in poor discretion and sufficiently admonished the jury to disregard it. The jury system would be faulty indeed if it must be held that jurors are so easily misled. There are few cases of long and tedious sessions with contentious counsel in which the judge has acted in true idealism. Moreover, since the criticism of counsel in connection with a technical point of evidence does not reflect upon the parties, the court's statement was not prejudicial to the defendants. Goldstein v. United States, 1933, 8 Cir., 63 F.2d 609, 612-614; Mansfield v. United States, 1935, 8 Cir., 76 F.2d 224, 231-323, cert. den. 296 U.S. 601. We see no reversible error here.

Instructions to the Jury

1. "Reasonable Doubt"

Appellant contend that certain of the instructions to the jury were plain error and seek a reversal of their conviction for that reason. The first of these concerns the court's definition of "reasonable doubt" as follows:

> "The term reasonable doubt means a doubt for which a good reason can be given, in the light of all the evidence." [Page 7885, Record on Appeal]

Appellants maintain that the instruction as quoted puts on them the burden of establishing a doubt. Appellants' analysis of the effect of the instruction is incorrect, especially when considered in connection with the succeeding part of the instruction:

> "It means a doubt which is substantial and not merely shadowy. It does not mean a doubt which is merely capricious or speculative. Neither does it mean a doubt born of reluctance on the part of a juror to perform an unpleasant duty, or a doubt arising out of sympathy for a defendant or out of anything other than a candid consideration of all the evidence presented."

Instructions may not be taken apart and a phrase here and a clause or even a sentence or a paragraph there used to find error. The criticized portion of the instruction, when read in its context, plainly informs the jury that "reasonable doubt" means no more or less than the plain meaning of those two words as used. Furthermore, while this instruction on reasonable doubt is not to be commended, it does not constitute reversible error.[22]

2. Credibility of Witnesses

Appellants charge error as to the instructions on credibility of witnesses. One part objected to is as follows:

> "If the witness has the appearance of attempting to the best of his ability to tell the truth, and other circumstances tend to establish that situation, then you give full credit to his testimony."

The court continued, and this portion of the instruction is not objected to:

> "But if you are impressed that the witness is attempting to hide something or is not telling the whole truth, then you have the right to give only such consideration to his testimony as you may think it entitled to receive."

This instruction is not unfavorable to appellants. It merely acts as emphasis to the obvious principle that because a witness testifies to a fact, a juror does not have to believe it. He should determine according to his best judgment in the circumstances.

---

[22] Owens v. United States, 1904, 9 Cir., 130 F. 279; Griggs v. United States, 1908, 9 Cir., 158 F. 572; Louie Ding v. United States, 1917, 9 Cir., 246 F. 80; United States v. Woods, 1933, 2 Cir., 66 F. 2d 262, 265; Young v. Territory of Hawaii, 1947, 9 Cir., 160 F. 2d 289, cert. den. 331 U.S. 849; United States v. Farina, 1950, 2 Cir., 184 F.2d 18, cert. den. 340 U.S. 875.

Objection is also made to the further instruction on credibility to the effect that the jury should consider the interest which a witness, particularly the defendant, might have in the outcome of the trial. Such an instruction was neither improper nor prejudicial. Reagan v. United States, 1895, 157 U.S. 301, 311; Frederick v. United States, 1947, 9 Cir., 163 F.2d 536, 550, cert. den. 332 U.S. 775. Moreover, there was no objection to the credibility instruction as required by Rule 30, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, 18 U.S.C.A.

3. Discrepancies and Inconsistencies in Testimony.

Appellants claim error in the instruction on discrepancies or inconsistencies in the testimony of witnesses. In effect, the jury was told not to be misled by discrepancies of a minor nature or discrepancies in the testimony inmmaterial to the issue of the guilt or innocence of the defendants. The trial was long in time and hard fought throughout and much testimony in great detail was introduced. The instruction was intended to advise the jury, in their deliberations, not to leave the ultimate question of guilt or innocence for questions which, when resolved, would be of no help in their main problem. The instruction was not erroneous.

4. Conspiracy

Two instructions on conspiracy are assigned as error. The first instruction is to the effect that conspiracies need not be proved by direct evidence, and it was both necessary in order that the jury not be misled and well established at law. Nye &

Nissen v. United States, 1948, 9 Cir., 168 F.2d 846, 852, affirmed 336 U.S. 613; Blumenthal v. United States, 1946, 9 Cir., 158 F.2d 883, 889, affirmed 332 U.S. 539; United States v. Manton, 1938, 2 Cir., 107 F.2d 834, cert. den. 309 U.S. 664. The second instruction, on the degree of participation necessary to make a person a part of a conspiracy, was not unfavorable to the defendants. It was, in part, [page 7900, Record on Appeal]:

> "It requires more than proof of a mere passive cognizance of a crime on the part of a defendant to sustain a charge of conspiracy to commit it. And you must find that the defendant did some act or made some agreement showing an intention to participate in some way in such conspiracy."

We find no error here. Moreover, no objection was made to the second instruction on conspiracy under Rule 30, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, 18 U.S.C.A., or otherwise.

5. Judicial Comment on Evidence

Error is claimed because the court said a certain number of witnesses, naming them had testified on the issue of Bridges' membership in the Communist Party for the government, and a certain number for the defendant on the same issue, naming the witnesses. Neither in what was said nor from the context in which it was said, was there any suggestion that the number of witnesses should be taken into consideration rather than the effect on the jurors of their testimony. The very full instructions given the jury as to the presumption of innocence, the burden of the government, and the weight and credibility to be given to testimony of witnesses negative any idea that the jurors might have understood that the mere number of witnesses to any point of fact should rule over their judgment in reference to it. See Erie Railroad Co. v. Fritsch, 1934, 3 Cir., 72 F.2d 766, cert. den. 293 U.S. 620.

6. Bridges v. Wixon

That the trial court was correct in excluding from the jury any consideration of the decision of the Supreme Court in Bridges v. Wixon, supra, was fully discussed in this opinion ante. We add here only that the court did not err in charging the jury that no inference was to be drawn from the many references to that case which were made by the defense counsel during the trial.

7. Elements of Third Count of Indictment

We see no merit in appellants' contention that the court in its instructions misstated the elements of the offense charged against Schmidt and Robertson in the third count. The indictment was phrased within the provisions of Title 8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] §746(a)(5)a. There was no reversible error in the court's explanation that the expression "to abet" means,

> "* * * knowingly and with criminal intent to aid, promote, encourage or instigate, by act or counsel, or both act and counsel, the commission of such criminal offense."

There was no objection to this instruction under Rule 30, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, 18 U.S.C.A., or otherwise.

8. Criminal Intent

As for the trial court's instructions on the intent necessary to convict defendants Schmidt and Robertson of any of the counts charged, they were favorable to the defendants. For while Schmidt and Robertson admitted aiding Bridges to obtain citizenship, the court charged that such aiding would not be a crime unless it was with an,

> "* * * intent upon the part of either of these defendants to deceive and defraud the Government of the United States."

9. Materiality

Appellants argue that the trial court's instruction that the false statements were material to the naturalization proceeding as a matter of law, was erroneous. The question of materiality is always for the court. Sinclair v. United States, 1929, 279 U.S. 263, 298; Travis v. United States, 1941, 10 Cir., 123 F.2d 268, 270. And that is also the rule in this circuit despite appellants' misconstruction of the holding in Luse v. United States, 1931, 9 Cir., 49 F.2d 241. For while it is true that in the Luse case this court said that what is material in a perjury case is a mixed question of fact and law, we also said that the question of fact is confined to what actually took place. Once it was determined what took place, the materiality of such facts to the issue was for the court alone. There was no error here.

Appellants are asserting that the evidence introduced at the trial does not support the verdicts returned by the jury. This claimed reversible error has been explored by each member of the court and the task of expressing the court's views on this subject has been assigned to Judge Pope. His treatment of our conclusions follows immediately.

Pope, C. J.:

We now proceed to state the reasons for the Court's conclusion that the evidence upon each count was sufficient to sustain the verdict.

As to the Second Count—The alleged false statement as to Communist Party membership.

The second count, by which Bridges was charged with knowingly making a false statement under oath, a statement that he did not and had not belonged to the Communist Party, is the key to the indictment. We consider the evidence upon that charge first.

The jury was instructed that in order to convict under this count it must find that there was proof, beyond a reasonable doubt, of Bridges' actual membership in the Communist Party; that "mere association between an individual and an organization does not constitute membership * * * A person may approve some or all of the aims or activities of an organization, yet this does not make him a member. Even sympathy for the program of an organization, or contributions of money do not create the legal status of membership * * * The law also recognizes that active cooperation with an organization in its activities does not create the legal status of membership * * *. Even affiliation, if you should find it to exist in this case, would not constitute the same legal status as membership, for the reason that membership refers to something more than, and different from affiliation."

This instruction had practical significance, for a very great volume of the testimony went no farther than to disclose that for a considerable period of time Bridges attended and participated in many Communist meetings, numbers of them "closed" meetings, that is, purportedly open to Communists only; that he presided at some of these meetings and that he frequently sought the advice and help of known Communist leaders and organizers, particularly in planning union activities and the strategy and tactics to be employed by his union during strikes. Similarly it was shown that he and his associates sought and made use of the Communist Party newspapers and printing establishments, and during the same time he frequently had occasion to give expression to opinions disclosing his close following of the Communist Party line. Ten of the Government witnesses who gave such testimony were themselves former Communists. Several of these were former longshoremen or engaged in related work, had been officials of unions in which Bridges had been active, and had been closely associated with him. Some had been engaged in editing Communist newspapers. Others of these witnesses had been organizers for the Communist Party who had devoted particular attention to forming Communist groups or "fractions" among labor unions, and particularly among the unions representing men employed along the waterfront.

The picture which these men drew was, in broad outline, that of a continued effort of representatives of the Communist Party to "infiltrate" the waterfront unions mainly by enlisting union leaders in the Party, and by placing Communist Party members in positions of influence in the unions. Beginning about 1933 there was a greatly increased drive for the organization of labor unions generally. The movement was stimulated, first by the National Recovery Act, and then by the Wagner Act. In 1934 a union known as the International Longshoremen's Association, which had been dormant for some time, was brought to life with the aid of the Communist Party. This union, known as ILA, called a strike. Bridges was chairman of its strike committee composed of some 50 members. The strike was a bitter one. The employers attempted to break it by opening the port, and violence ensued. Union strategy, it was testified, was first planned in closed meetings of Communist leaders, and Bridges and his committee carried into effect the plans thus formulated. In 1935 Sam Darcy, leader of the Communist Party's District 13,[1] conceived a plan to organize the Maritime Federation of the Pacific which united the maritime unions on the Pacific Coast. Its organization was promoted by Darcy, and to a lesser degree, by William Schneidermann, who succeeded Darcy. Bridges became president of the San Francisco council of that organization. That council became the joint strike committee for the San Francisco area during a strike which lasted from November, 1936, to February, 1937. In June, 1937, the Maritime Federation of the Pacific voted in favor of affiliation with the C.I.O. In July, Bridges attended a meeting of the National C.I.O. Maritime Committee in Washington, D.C. On the trip he, with the witness Rathborne, then president of the American Communications Association, and himself a Communist Party member,[2] went to New York to try to persuade the national president of ILA to go along on the affiliation with the C.I.O. Bridges and Rathborne, while in New York, visited the National Communist headquarters where they discussed the maritime setup in the C.I.O. with Stachel, Browder and Hudson, party functionaries, and reviewed what the policy of the C.I.O. maritime groups would be, and what the Communist Party policy was. In 1938, during the first constitutional convention of the C.I.O., held at Pittsburgh, Bridges attended a meeting in the William Penn Hotel composed of the members of the Communist Party who constituted the party's "top fraction" of the national C.I.O. Here was discussed the relations of the Party to the C.I.O., and also the possibility of securing the naming of one John Brophy as secretary-treasurer of the C.I.O.[3] Bridges attended other Communist meetings in connection with subsequent C.I.O. conventions.[4]

---

[1] Comprising California, Nevada, and parts of Arizona. District 13 later included Hawaii.

---

[2] Rathborne was later a member of the executive committee of the national C.I.O.

---

[3] Rathborne described this discussion as follows: "The only other matter that I recall being discussed there, after I got my hair combed, was the matter of the election of officers of the newly formed CIO, and the fact that there was no dispute or discussion hardly on who the logical choice would be for president. That was John L. Lewis. However, there was some discussion on the secretaryship, and if I remember correctly, it was decided that the Communist forces at that convention should try to prevail upon Mr. Lewis to accept Mr. John Brophy as the secretary-treasurer of the CIO, and subsequently Mr. Brophy was not elected, incidentally."

---

[4] The testimony was that at the 1939 C.I.O. convention at San Francisco, John L. Lewis made strong declarations against Communist influence and activity in the C.I.O. At the same convention he abolished the position of west coast director of the C.I.O., (held by Bridges) and ordered that the "present west coast director will be the California director, and I will appoint new directors for the rest of the area." Thereupon, at a Communist meeting held in the Whitcomb Hotel at San Francisco, attended by Schneidermann and others, Bridges advised against making any issue of his demotion, and advised an attitude of cooperation with John L. Lewis. His suggestion was that at the same time the Party's forces should be built stronger down below in the unions, so that, as Rathborne described his statement, "we can have a greater influence and be in a position to more effectively prevent Lewis and his henchmen from red-baiting and taking an anti-party position in the future."

At the 1941 convention Bridges read and intro-

When the various meetings at San Francisco, purportedly Communist Party meetings, and attended by Bridges, are taken into account, they add up to several score. They were described as held for two purposes: one, to plan a Communist-directed strategy of union activity; the other, to plan for the election of Communist members or duced a resolution, prepared for him by one Crouch, a Communist organizer, with the aid of William Schneidermann, which urged the then current Communist policy of all-out support of the administration program of aid to the democracies in the war effort.

---

Another witness, Michener, also a Communist, who had been chairman of the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council, attended the national C.I.O. convention at Philadelphia in 1943. He described a closed Communist Party meeting held during the convention and attended by Bridges and himself and other Communist Party members. At this meeting those present were informed by one Hudson, a so-called "top Communist," that Philip "Slim" Connolly, a Communist Party member who had but recently been elected California State President of the C.I.O., should resign and step down in favor of a non-Communist. The reason given for this proposal was that the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council, which was Communist controlled, had some members on the national C.I.O. pay roll, and that by making this concession as to Connolly, the Party would have a better chance to control those salaried positions. Michener and Bridges both opposed the proposal until Hudson pointed out that the decision had been made by the top leaders of the Communist Party at New York. Bridges and Michener then proceeded to make the arrangements to carry the decision into effect, and Connolly's resignation was secured.

sympathizers to various offices at union elections.[5]

Of course, under the instructions of the court, previously mentioned, Bridges' participation in these activities, taken alone, would fall short of proof of actual Communist Party membership. The only significance of such acts is what value they may have, circumstantially, as evidence of an opportunity, through frequent association, for Bridges actually to reach a decision to join the Party. One so situated would be more likely, as a matter of natural inclination, to join the group than would be the case of one having no such contacts.

---

[5] The activities of what the witnesses called Communist Party units, or "fractions," in assuming leadship in the trade union movements with which Bridges was connected, were described in much detail. In general these activities would be recognized by the jury as making a likely pattern of behavior, and fitting into what has now become generally recognized as the shape of Communist missionary enterprise. "In the countries outside Russia the Communists have posed as the champions of the under-dog; they have espoused democratic programs; they have indeed purported to be the faithful advocates of the cause of every exploited race and class. To be sure, they have followed the zig-zag of the Party Line—condemning Hitler, then praising him, then condemning him again; calling Roosevelt a fascist and a warmonger and later praising him as a great leader. But somehow the Communists have by their adroit exploitation of propaganda defied logic and tried to use each of their positions to strengthen their reputation as a champion of the poor and oppressed." From a review of Sidney Lens' "The Counterfeit Revolution" by Justice William O. Douglas in "The Progressive," V. 16, No. 6, p. 30, June, 1952. See, also, the statement of Mr. Justice Jackson in Communications Assn. v. Douds, 339 U.S. at p. 430.

It is true that a number of the witnesses described some of these meetings which Bridges attended, and at some of which he presided, as "closed" Communist meetings. The logical fallacy in concluding from this that Bridges must therefore have been a Party member is that it assumes the truth of that which is sought to be proven. If, in fact, Bridges was not a Party member, his presence at such a meeting would mean no more than that he attended a meeting at which every other person present was a Party member.

Bridges himself made no effort to deny his frequent attendance at meetings attended by Communist Party members, or his acceptance of aid and assistance from the Party and its leaders, or his sympathy with many of its objectives.[6]

---

[6] Bridges testified to the early efforts of himself and his associates to organize the waterfront workers, and in this connection told of the substandard working conditions which confronted the longshoremen, the inadequate pay, the lack of job security, the company-controlled unions, the unfair discriminations in respect to hiring, the "shape-up," the blacklists, the speedup, the system of "kickbacks" to bosses, required as a condition of employment. He said that it was to eliminate these and other claimed evils that the strikes were called, and that it required great effort on the part of the union leaders to hold the strikers together. In this situation, he and the other union leaders sought help wherever they could find it. He gladly accepted aid offered by the Communists. He said: "I am not going at this late stage to try to take away any

Bridges further stated that the union was offered the support of the Communist Party and of its paper "The Daily Worker" which printed a daily bulletin for the use of the union during its strikes. He and his associates accepted this offer of help.[7] of the credit they are entitled to, because they did contribute something towards helping the strike. We were grateful for it at that time; the men were grateful for it, and I just think it would be crawfishing and ingratitude to try to kiss it off now and say we never had anything to do with them, because they did help in the way I have said, not only with the helping to print the bulletin and with what financial donations as well as food donations they could get, as well as they—when we called upon all organizations, particularly labor organizations, to help us man the picket lines, the Communist Party responded to that call, too, and so did other parties, so did—not the Republican or Democratic Parties; they were darned conspicuous by their absence, but I mean the smaller minority political parties. I recall at that time there was the Proletariat Party around here, there was the Workers Party, the Socialist Workers Party; there were several. Most of those radical, left-wing parties, and they more or less vied with each other to try to prove to the longshoremen and the other strikers how much they were helping. And by and large, the role of all that was pretty much magnified, particularly, the role of the Communist Party was played up purposely by the shipowners and Industrial Association and the city departments, for a reason, and the reason was hysteria so that it was easier to break the strike under that smoke screen of hysteria."

---

[7] During the 1934 strike San Francisco had an anti-picketing ordinance in effect and the men on the union picket lines were charged by the police who attacked with clubs and tear gas. On July 5,

Bridges did deny being present at a few of the fifty or more meetings which various witnesses described with particularity, all of them Communist meetings. He denied the account of a meeting held at night in a prune orchard in Santa Clara County where a witness testified Bridges and others met Earl Browder. He denied that he attended a Communist convention at Fresno, and he denied attending near Grants Pass, Oregon, as to which some testimony was given. He made no effort to take issue as to numerous other meetings at which witnesses stated he was present, and which were described as Communist meetings.

The record also contains some evidence of the expression by Bridges from time to time of opinions on national and world affairs which are indicative of his sympathy with the Communist point of view. Such evidence, like the evidence of Bridges' attendance at meetings with Communist party members, would not in itself suffice to furnish

---

1934, the 30,000 men on strike undertook to mass on the picket line and this was followed by an all-day battle with the police in which many persons were shot and two men were killed. Some of the wounded men were taken to 128 Haight Street, San Francisco, which was a Communist headquarters and which was used as a hospital as it was made available to the strikers. The battle led to the calling out of the National Guard, but the union and the Communist Party proceeded to hold a mass funeral for the two men who were killed, a feature of which was a parade up Market Street and a grave-side speech by Sam Darcy at the burial of the man who was a Communist.

the required proof of Communist party membership.[8]

The danger of attempting to prove any person to be a Communist by evidence of his expression of views which happen to coincide with the program of the Communist Party, is too well understood to require comment here. However, it cannot be said that the evidence thus far described, the evidence of continued association and cooperation with Communist groups and the evidence of apparent adherence to the Communist Party line, is, although inconclusive and insufficient in itself, wholly irrele-

---

[8] In December, 1945, Bridge's union, the ILWU, called a one-day coastwise work stoppage for the purpose of propagandizing the hasty return of American troops from overseas. Bridges testified he did not know this was the Communist Party line, but said that he did not care, either then or now.

In an article written by him and published under date of November 14, 1947, Bridges said, "Thus stripped of all camouflage the Marshall Plan is a scheme to use money and food of the American people to purchase and turn over to Wall Street at practically no cost to the private interests, the basic industries and raw materials of Germany and all western European nations."

At a convention of the ILWU in San Francisco in April, 1947, a resolution was proposed which stated, among other things: "Communism is not an issue in the United States, nor are our economy, political democracy or civil liberties threatened by agents of the Soviet Union. The real threat stems directly from the greed and desire for imperialistic world control of American trusts and monopolies." Bridges, who was chairman of the meeting, made a long statement in support of the resolution in the course of which he said: "Communism is not a vant to the issue before the jury. For, as we shall shortly disclose, there was a substantial amount of evidence that Bridges in fact joined and became a member of the Communist Party. Obviously the likelihood of Bridges actually joining the party would be affected by the matters thus mentioned. If the Communist Party sought to plant seed which would result in a new member springing up, the success of the effort would depend a great deal on whether the seed fell upon fertile ground.

Schomaker, a former longshoreman, who had held numerous positions and offices in Bridges' union, form of government, it is a state of society, it is a system, and it is a system that holds that people cannot exploit other people for profit. It simply means you can't own a factory or a ship and do nothing and live on the fat of the land and clip coupons while somebody sweats and slaves for a living."

---

In 1948, when the ILWU and the Waterfront Employers Associati signed a contract, Bridges' union had demanded that the longshoremen would be under no obligation to serve any vessel or handle any cargo declared unfair by the World Federation of Trade Unions. In 1949 when the CIO withdrew from this World Federation of Trade Unions because it was a "communist-controlled organization," Bridges "bitterly opposed" this move by the CIO. At the trial and on cross-examination Bridges said of the CIO constitutional amendment adopted in November, 1949, prohibiting Communist Party members from serving as officers or members of the executive committee of the CIO: "But if you would ask me what I would term it, I would term it a racketeering, corrupt, crooked, cover up for a lot of dirty goings on, so that certain people could use a great organization like the CIO for their own personal political advancement."

and who had long been a close associate of Bridges, testified that he himself had been a Communist Party member since 1931. About Thanksgiving of 1933, Schomaker became editor of the "Waterfront Worker," a paper published by a group of longshoremen who were members of the Communist Party. Schomaker testified that on an occasion in November or December of that year he and one B. B. Jones, also a member of the Communist Party, met with Bridges and solicited the latter's membership in the Party. He testified that after considerable conversation, Bridges agreed to join, and after agreeing on a name which Bridges should assume as a member of the Party, Jones produced a printed application card. Schomaker temporarily left the room and after his return Jones exhibited the card to Schomaker who observed Bridges' signature thereon. Jones and Schomaker took the card to the Party headquarters at 37 Grove Street and turned the application over to Sam Darcy. Schomaker testified that on numerous occasions he saw Bridges pay his Communist Party dues to the unit secretary and that he had on occasion received Bridges' Communist Party book which was turned in to the Party headquarters at the end of each year so that a new book could be issued to "Harry Dorgan," which was Bridges' party name.

In the winter of 1935 Bridges and Schomaker were neighbors. Schomaker testified that on one evening during that year he saw a crowd in front of Bridges' home and that Bridges then told him that Bridges' wife had fallen out of the window and asked Schomaker to go to his house and get his Communist Party book "before the snooty reporters" got there.

There was also testimony that in August or September, 1938, Bridges made a talk at a meeting held at the home of one John Shaw in San Francisco which was attended by 30 to 35 people, including William Schneidermann, district organizer for the Communist Party, and other Communist Party members. Also attending were some persons who were not Communists. During the meeting, as it was described by a Mrs. Harris, a Government witness, Bridges made a speech. She testified: "He got up and talked about the conditions on the waterfront and how they were progressing and how the Communist people, Communist Party was helping, and that, and also about the editorials and writings in the People's World, and he made a plea for us that were there to become members of the Communist Party, and he also stated that he was a member of the Party, of the Communist Party * * * I was flabbergasted when I heard him say that, because he had been accused, and I had heard it denied. And when he made that statement, why, it made a very much impression on me." Substantially the same account of the affair was given by the Witness Schomaker, who was also present.

It is argued on behalf of appellants that the testimony respecting the recruitment of Bridges in the Communist Party in 1933, and the testimony concerning the speech made at the John Shaw residence, is inherently so improbable and so incredible that it must be discarded. The evidence as to the processing of the Bridges membership application was that it had to be submitted to a membership committee or group of persons for investigation and approval. It is pointed out that the claimed admission by Bridges in 1938 that he was himself a member of the Communist Party was made in the presence of a group of persons some of whom were not Communists and some of whom were unknown to Bridges. It is said that it is inconceivable that Bridges, who knew that the Immigration Bureau had for years been attempting to prove him a Communist and to deport him on that ground, would have laid himself open by making a public statement of that character before such an audience, or that he would have turned in an application in writing which, if it fell into the hands of a government agent, would put him at the mercy of those who had pursued him.

With respect to this contention, it must be observed that in 1933, when the application was said to have been signed, the series of efforts to prove Bridges a Communist had not yet begun. In 1938, at the time of the Shaw residence meeting, Bridges of course knew that the Immigration Bureau was after him. The question for the jury to determine was whether they would credit the testimony that the statement was in fact made. This would involve consideration not only of the reliability of the recollection of the witnesses and their general credibility, but a consideration of whether in the circumstances it could be believed that Bridges was so rash or so incautious as to make such a statement in those surroundings.

The question whether these events did or did not occur was typically one for the jury. In general this case presents no circumstances different from those which constantly appear where the testimony of witnesses is sharply in conflict. The special function of the jury, in our system, is to deal with such matters. No appellate judge is ever in a position to reconstruct for himself, from a printed record, the multitude of things which bring conviction to a juror's mind—the demeanor of the witness, his apparent candor or evasiveness, his assurance or hesitation, and even his facial expressions or the sound of his voice.

Even the cold record here discloses that at the trial, and in the presence of the very jury which was to determine whether he had or had not been a Communist Party member, Bridges was singularly lacking in caution, giving a demonstration which the jury might well consider more remarkable than the actions which Mrs. Harris testified "made a very much impression on me."[9]

---

[9] The circumstance was this: Bridges was on the stand, and his conduct was observed for a good many days during the trial. He knew that the Government was attempting to prove that he was or had been a Communist Party member; he knew that the jury who were observing him were his judges, and yet he apparently overlooked no opportunity during the process of cross-examination to make speeches to the jury in what they must have understood was an effort to prove to them the soundness of views generally expressed by World

That Bridges entertained the views he volunteered in comparing the Chinese Revolution to the American Revolution, or which he expressed in respect to the Russian satellites, or in regard to Phil Murray's effort to oust Communist Party members from official positions in the CIO, is not what seems significant at this point. We do not regard the circumstance here related as of controlling importance. Without it, the question would still be one for the jury. But it is worthy of note that without any apparent effort to confine himself to answering briefly, and to the point, the questions put to him on cross-examination, Bridges went on at great

---

Communism with respect to national and international affairs. Speaking of the Communist conquest of China he said to the jury: "I think the people have finally taken over and changed things, something like they did here in the United States in 1776. I think they have had a peoples' revolution down there, and if they are wrong, then the people of the United States were wrong in 1776."

Further in discoursing upon this subject Bridges stated: "We had the same thing occur after the American Revolution. Remember, after the American Revolution here in—17—this word 'revolution'—people seem to shy away from in these days. I didn't invent the word. But in the days of the American Revolution, like the French Revolution, America, the United States, went through the same thing. All the world was jumping on it and pointing out the Communists in the United States, meaning George Washington, Paine and others. The same thing was happening, and it will happen more and more. So our union can't bear any responsibility. And because we have advocated trade with China in the interests of getting more work for our longshoremen on the waterfront, who unless length with discourses which, we apprehend, must have caused the jury to wonder whether they were watching a man filled with missionary zeal for expounding the views commonly understood to make up the Communist Party line, or one who was supremely indifferent to whether he gave the jury the impression that if he was not a Communist Party member, he must at any rate be a fellow traveler. We connot say that in these circumstances a jury would be obliged to disregard as impossible or incredible the testimony of what Bridges said and did on the occasions described by these witnesses. Per-they get work, of course, they can't have a union, the union will fall apart, and maybe I will have to do something else, even myself,—that is not so much what I am thinking of—but it is as simple as that. The port here, the City of San Francisco, believe me, lives by its waterfront. That is a matter of simple economics. And the bulk of our trade, fifty per cent of the foreign trade that moves through the port of San Francisco was China trade. We have got to re-establish that trade, otherwise we can't have prosperity and employment here in the United States, particularly in the port of San Francisco, and a lot of people around here would be out of a job, and if people are out of work around here, our city, of course, will not have prosperous times and will not have security."

---

After he had volunteered his views about China, he was invited to express an opinion on the "rape of Poland" and the seizure of Baltic and Balkan countries by Russia. As for Poland, he said, "Here was a country where the government collapsed, and the way I looked at it, the country of Russia she took steps to prevent or to meet what eventually transpired, namely, she figured her country was to be invaded and she took certain steps." As for the haps a man who lacked caution when before the jury, was but acting in a similar manner at the John Shaw home in 1938.

There was other evidence which, if credited, would tend to show Bridges' actual membership in the Communist Party. Three witnesses testified that they attended the national convention of the Communist Party at New York in 1936, and that at that meeting Bridges was elected to the national committee of the Communist Party under the name of "Comrade Rossi." Two of these witnesses testified that he was reelected to the same committee at the national convention of the Party in 1938. There was no testimony that Bridges was present at the 1938 convention but two of the witnesses as other countries mentioned, he said, "I would say that there is more democracy in those countries now than before they were seized by the Soviets. Prior to that they were all dictatorships."

---

Explaining the position he had taken when he "fought bitterly" against a resolution calling for the resignation of executive board members who were unwilling to abide by the anti-Communist amendment to the C.I.O. constitution, he said: "The C.I.O. doesn't elect me to the executive board. My union elects me. I am instructed by my union that elects me and pays my wages to carry out certain policies to this board. I am the voice, the representative of my union on this C.I.O. board. You come in with a resolution now and say that unless I take orders from you, Mr. Murray, notwithstanding what my membership tells me, I am not eligible to serve on this board. I said, 'That is a violation of the CIO constitution, that is a phoney, it is a racket, and if you are going to carry through a policy like that, you are going to destroy CIO.' And that is what is happening to CIO toto the 1936 election testified that Bridges was present at that meeting. The third said he did not see Bridges there.

Of course, if Bridges in fact became a member of the governing body of the national Party this would permit an inference that he was a member of the Party. Considerable doubt is thrown on this aspect of the case by reason of the fact that it was established, apparently beyond controversy, that at the very time the 1936 convention was being held, Bridges was in Stockton, California, making a speech at a union meeting. If he was there he could not have been present at the 1936 convention, as two of the three witnesses said he was.

We do not feel called upon to speculate as to day; it is being destroyed because of those types of policies."

---

Bridges continued: "So I took this resolution, I came back, I called meetings of my own local union and I said, 'Listen, fellows,' I said, 'Look, here's the way the National CIO wants it. In order to get along with them, let's say we do this. Let's let Phil Murray appoint from the ILWU anyone he wants to represent the ILWU on the board, and let Bridges resign. And let us furthermore instruct the representatives of the ILWU on the CIO executive board that any time Murray says, "Vote yes," to vote yes; any time Murray says, "Vote no," vote no; any time Murray says, "Abstain," to abstain. Let them have that.' And my membership said, 'Look, Bridges, if that is the way you feel, if you carry out a program like that, we will get ourselves another president. We didn't elect you for a program like that. Now, if you haven't got the guts, if you haven't got enough in you to get in there and fight, we will find someone who will do the job for us.' ".

whether these two witnesses might have been mistaken as to his presence there, or whether the definite proof of Bridges' presence in Stockton conclusively demonstrates that the testimony relating to the 1936 convention, and perhaps, as to the 1938 convention, was false. We think, for the reasons we have previously mentioned, that there was sufficient other evidence to warrant the jury in finding that Bridges was in fact a member of the Communist Party.

Appellants contend that as a matter of law the evidence was insufficient to satisfy the rule that in perjury cases there must be at least the testimony of two independent witnesses or the testimony of one witness plus independent evidence which is inconsistent with the innocence of the defendant. Cf. Weiler v. United States, 323 U.S. 606. Appellants assert that the evidence that the sworn statement of Bridges was false does not measure up to the standards required by this rule.

The second count of the indictment is not based upon the general perjury statute but upon section 746 (a) (1) of the Nationality Act of 1940, now codified at 18 USCA 1015. We need not consider whether the two witness rule applies to a prosecution under this section. Cf. Todorow v. United States, (9 Cir.) 173 F. 2d 439, 443, c.d. 337 U.S. 925, for we think that, assuming that the same rule applies as in prosecutions for perjury, the rule was satisfied here.

The falsity of the statement made under oath was testified to by the witness Schomaker who told of the application for membership in the party and the subsequent payment of dues. Mrs. Harris, an independent witness, testified to Bridges' admission of party membership made by him at the public meeting at the Shaw residence. It is to be noted that this admission was made prior to the date of the alleged crime and there is authority to the effect that admissions so made do not require corroboration to the same extent as others. Warszower v. United States, 312 U.S. 342, 347. In any event, in this case, where the Government did not rest upon the uncorroborated testimony of one witness, but brought forward an accumulation of evidence, circumstantial and otherwise, which supplemented the direct evidence of joining the Party and the evidence of the 1938 admission, we think that the rule was fully satisfied. Maragon v. United States, (CADC) 187 F. 2d 79, c.d. 341 U.S. 932.

Appellants enumerate sundry reasons why they think we should hold that the evidence offered on behalf of the Government is unworthy of belief. Thus they point to the fact that some of the Government witnesses who admitted having been former Communists also admitted that on prior occasions when under oath and testifying before the un-American Activities Committee or the Tenney Investigating Committee of the California Legislature they had denied being members of the Party. The contention is that one who admits perjury on prior occasions, cannot be credited now.

Again it was developed that some of the Government witnesses had given testimony as Government witnesses in a large number of other cases involving issues similar to those in this case. It is said that such witnesses were professional witnesses as to Communist activities in various places and that hence they were not worthy of credit. Attention is called to the fact that a number of the Government witnesses were naturalized citizens and it is argued that since some of those witnesses had themselves obtained citizenship at a time when they themselves falsely denied Communist Party membership, they were subject to prosecution and hence subject to pressure on the part of Government agents who, it is asserted, held threats of such prosecution over the heads of these naturalized witnesses. Some witnesses received substantial sums of money on account of witness fees and expenses in connection with their attendance at the trial of this case. In the case of one witness not only he but his wife were paid witness fees covering a long period of time. It is argued that the sums thus paid were so substantial that it must be inferred that the recipients would be willing to testify to anything in order to maintain their positions as witnesses.

All of these matters were brought out on cross-examination and developed at great length during the trial. They were the subject of much argument by counsel for appellants at the time the case was argued to the jury and, of course, they are matters in respect to which the jury was the final judge. None of these circumstances would, as a matter of law, require us to throw out the testimony of these witnesses in its entirety.

As to the First Count—The alleged conspiracy.

We next proceed to the question of the sufficiency of the evidence as to the first count of the indictment.[10] This charges that Bridges, Schmidt and Robertson conspired to defraud the United States by impairing, obstructing and defeating the proper administration of its naturalization laws by having Bridges petition for and obtain naturalization by falsely and fraudulently stating and representing that Bridges had never belonged to the Communist Party; that in pursuance of the conspiracy the defendants did and performed four overt acts: 1, the filing by Bridges of his application for a certificate of arrival and preliminary form of petition for naturalization; 2, his appearance on the 8th day of August, 1945, before the naturalization examiner where he gave testimony in the matter of his application for naturalization; 3, the signing on the same day, by Schmidt and Robertson as witnesses, of the Bridges' petition for naturalization; and 4, the appearance of the three men named, on September 17, 1945, in the Superior Court, and their then testimony in support of Bridges' petition for naturalization.

It is contended that there is neither direct nor circumstantial evidence of any such conspiracy; that until June 18, 1945, when the Supreme Court in the case of Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U.S. 135, reversed the decision of this court, a warrant of deportation based on Bridges' alleged membership in or affiliation with the Communist Party was outstanding against him. This reversal was but five days prior to the filing of Bridges' application for citizenship on June 23, 1945. Hence, it is said, up to five days before the application was made, the warrant of deportation was a bar to Bridges' naturalization and therefore there could be no conspiracy up to that time because naturalization was then impossible. It is argued that there was nothing to show that either Bridges, Schmidt or Robertson had any reason to anticipate questions concerning Bridges' membership in the Communist Party at any time prior to the actual hearing on September 17, 1945, at which time the naturalization examiner was prompted to make the inquiry as to party membership because he had received, a few days previously, an affidavit of Bridges' estranged wife, from whom he was then obtaining a divorce, which stated that Bridges was a member of the Communist Party under the name of "Dorgan." It is contended that the mere fact that the question was then asked was insufficient to bring about a conspiracy to obtain naturalization through the unlawful giving of false answers to such a question.

---

[10] In dealing with the first and third counts, under both of which Schmidt and Robertson were convicted, and on which they received sentences of equal length, to run concurrently, it must be borne in mind that if the evidence is sufficient to sustain conviction on either count, the sufficiency of the evidence on the other count need not be considered. Sinclair v. United States, 279 U.S. 263, 299."

It is true that the evidence of the alleged conspiracy was entirely circumstantial, as is almost invariably the case where conspiracy is charged.

There is evidence sufficient to show the existence of a long-standing and close association between Schmidt, Robertson and Bridges in two respects. In the first place all three were long and intimately associated as officers in the I.L.W.U. labor union. There was also evidence sufficient, if believed, to demonstrate that all three of them were associated as members of the Communist party. Not only was there very extensive evidence that Schmidt and Robertson, as well as Bridges, had attended many of the numerous Communist meetings to which reference has been made, but there was testimony that Schmidt had himself solicited the witness Henry Schrimpf to join the Communist Party, and had handed Schrimpf the membership card which he executed. It was testified that Robertson was a member of a top Communist fraction of the State C.I.O. consisting of Communist Party members who were members of the C.I.O. executive board, a group facetiously known in Communist circles as "God's Committee."

The jury could infer from the evidence that Schmidt and Robertson not only knew that Bridges was a Communist and a member of the Communist Party but that there had long existed a controversy between Bridges and the Government officials in charge of matters relating to citizenship and naturalization characterized by repeated attempts to deport Bridges on the ground of his alleged membership in or association with the Communist Party. Schmidt and Robertson therefore knew that if the fact of Bridges' membership in the Communist Party were developed in the course of his naturalization proceedings, it would be fatal to his application. Both of these defendants testified that they knew of the handing down of the decision in the Wixon case[11] on June 18, 1945, and the testimony of both of these defendants discloses that they had the decision in that case very much in mind when they first proceeded to give testimony on Bridges' behalf and otherwise assist him in procuring his citizenship.[12]

The evidence warrants the inference that all of these defendants knew that now that the decision in the Wixon case had come down the day was about to arrive when Bridges could finally sew up his citizenship, and that Schmidt and Robertson were then proceeding to permit him to do so and that they did undertake to assist by testifying, falsely, that Bridges was not a member of the Communist Party.

---

[11] The opinion in that case was not a part of the record, for it was excluded, as we have noted. What is here referred to is the fact that the case had been decided, and favorably to Bridges, matters which were in evidence.

[12] Thus Robertson testified in enumerating the bases for the answers he gave concerning Bridges at the citizenship hearing, that he had read transcripts of the Landis trial, the Sears trial, and of other investigations and then said: "And finally, a decision of the U. S. Supreme Court came out. I studied that decision. I studied the majority decision and I studied the concurring decision, and I made up my mind then and there that President Bridges was not, had never been, and was never affiliated with the Communist Party; and the Supreme Court of the United States is something that I think speaks with authority."

In the course of his answer to a similar question Schmidt testified: "Secondly, I had read the decision of the Supreme Court, and I thought well, as long as the highest tribunal in the United States of America has made a decision with respect to this case, the matter is now settled for all time; and I had no hesitation to recommend this man for citizenship."

Under these circumstances it is clear that there was sufficient evidence to warrant a conviction under the conspiracy count, and that the charge of a conspiracy was sufficiently proven.

As to the Third Count—The alleged aid and assistance by Schmidt and Robertson.

The evidence to which we have just referred sufficiently discloses that there was an abundance of proof to sustain the charge of the third count to the effect that Schmidt and Robertson did wilfully and knowingly encourage, aid, advise and assist a person, namely, Bridges, not then and there entitled thereto, to obtain, accept and receive a certificate of naturalization, which was to be procured and was procured by fraud, said fraud consisting of false and fraudulent statements made in a naturalization proceeding.

It is contended that there is no evidence that a certificate of naturalization was in fact issued. There was introduced in evidence a certified copy of the judgment of the Superior Court reciting that Bridges and other persons had complied with the naturalization laws and that each was entitled to be admitted to citizenship, and reciting that "It is hereby ordered that each of said petitioners be and is hereby ordered to become a citizen of the United States of America." There was no evidence that the clerk of that court performed his ministerial duty to issue and deliver to Bridges the certificate of naturalization described in §736 Title 8 USCA. We think that in view of the fact that the issuance of the certificate by the clerk is a mere ministerial act following the judgment, as soon as the judgment admitting Bridges to citizenship had been entered there had been accomplished all that was required "to obtain" a certificate of citizenship within the meaning of Title 8 §746 (a) (5) under which the third count was laid, and that in truth the certificate mentioned had then been "obtained." The argument that the evidence as to the third count is insufficient is without merit.

As stated in Glasser v. United States, 315 U.S. 60, 80, "It is not for us to weigh the evidence or to determine the credibility of witnesses. The verdict of a jury must be sustained if there is substantial evidence, taking the view most favorable to the Government, to support it. United States v. Manton, 107 F. 2d 834, 839, and cases cited. Participation in a criminal conspiracy need not be proved by direct evidence; a common purpose and plan may be inferred from a 'development and a collocation of circumstances.'" This court has followed the same rule. Henderson v. United States (9 cir.) 143 F. 2d 681, 682.

Generally, with respect to the jury's function in weighing testimony and determining the credibility of witnesses this court has said: "With regard to the foregoing testimony, as well as much of the other evidence discussed by the appellants, it should be borne in mind that the question of weight and credibility is for the jury and not for the court." Coplin v. United States (9 cir.) 88 F. 2d 652, 664. Accord: Pasadena Research Laboratories v. United States, (9 cir.) 169 F. 2d 375, 380. Tested by these rules, which this court has long followed, Craig v. United States, (9 cir.) 81 F. 2d 816, 827, c.d. 298 U.S. 690; Hemphill v. United States, (9 cir.) 120 F. 2d 115, c.d. 314 U.S. 627; Stillman v. United States, (9 cir.) 177 F. 2d 607, 616, the evidence here was sufficient to sustain the convictions on all counts.

Bone, C. J.:

I am in complete accord with all that has been said by my associates. Their exhaustive opinions reflect unanimous conclusions reached only after thorough discussion in conference and after independent consideration of all issues by each judge of this division of our court.

Judgments affirmed.

[Endorsed]: Opinions and Concurring Opinion. Filed Sept. 6, 1952. Paul P. O'Brien, Clerk.

United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit

No. 12597

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT and J. R. ROBERTSON,

Appellants,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Appellee.

JUDGMENT

Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Southern Division.

This Cause came on to be heard on the Transcript of the Record from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Southern Division, and was duly submitted.

On Consideration Whereof, It is now here ordered and adjudged by this Court, that the judgments of the said District Court in this Cause be, and each of them hereby is affirmed.

Filed and entered September 6, 1952.

Nos. 12,597 and 12,607

IN THE

United States Court of Appeals

For the Ninth Circuit

Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt,
and J. R. Robertson,
Appellants,
vs.
United States of America,
Appellee.

APPELLANTS' PETITION FOR REHEARING AND APPLICATION THAT PETITION FOR REHEARING BE HEARD EN BANC.

Gladstein, Andersen & Leonard,
Norman Leonard,
240 Montgomery Street, San Francisco 4, California,
Attorneys for Appellants and Petitioners.

FILED

OCT 3 1952

PAUL P. O'BRIEN
CLERK

Subject Index

Page

The statute of limitations 4

A. The saving clause 4

B. The wartime suspension of Limitations Act 15

Res judicata and related problems 26

Bridges v. Wixon as evidence 28

The other errors of the trial court 30

1. The Father Meinecke incident 30

2. The Kessler incident 32

3. Reasonable doubt 34

The opinion on the evidence 38

The revocation of citizenship 41

Conclusion 42

Table of Authorities Cited

Cases

Pages

Alford v. United States (1931), 282 U.S. 687 34

Bihn v. United States (1946), 328 U.S. 633 .... 34, 36, 38
Bollenbach v. United States (1946), 326 U.S. 607 .... 35, 36, 38
Bridges v. Wixon (1944, 9 Cir.), 144 F.2d 927 3
Bridges v. Wixon (1945), 326 U.S. 135 .... 28, 29
Bridges v. United States (1950, 9 Cir.), 184 F.2d 881 3
Buchanan v. United States (1916, 8 Cir.), 233 F. 257 30

Campbell v. Holt (1885), 115 U.S. 620 6
Chase Securities Corp. v. Donaldson (1945), 325 U.S. 304 6
C.I.T. Corporation v. United States (1945, 9 Cir.), 150 F.2d 85 29
Coffin v. Rich (1858), 45 Me. 507 .... 14, 15

DeJonge v. Oregon (1937), 299 U.S. 353 41
Drossos v. United States (1924, 8 Cir.), 2 F.2d 538 39

Far East Conference v. United States (1952), 342 U.S. 570 26
Fiswick v. United States (1946), 329 U.S. 211 37

Glasser v. United States (1946), 315 U.S. 60 31
Great Northern Ry. Co. v. United States (1908), 208 U.S. 452 6

Haigler v. United States (1949, 10 Cir.), 172 F.2d 986 30
Hallowell v. Commons (1916), 239 U.S. 506 6
Harrison v. United States (1912, 6 Cir.), 200 F. 662 30
Hersch v. United States (1934, 9 Cir.), 68 F.2d 799 29
Hertz v. Woodman (1910), 218 U.S. 205 6
Holmberg v. Armbracht (1946), 327 U.S. 392 6
Hyde v. United States (1926, 4 Cir.), 15 F.2d 816 30

Kavanagh v. Noble (1947), 332 U.S. 535 6
Knauer v. United States (1946), 328 U.S. 654 .... 16, 17
Kraus v. United States (1946), 327 U.S. 614 .... 35, 36, 38
Keogh v. Chicago & Northwestern Ry. Co. (1922), 260 U.S. 156 27

Pages

Kotteakos v. United States (1946), 328 U.S. 750..32, 34, 36, 37, 38
Krulewitch v. United States (1949), 336 U.S. 440..........37, 38

Marzani v. United States (1948, C.A., D.C.), 168 F.2d 133..20, 25
Mattson v. Dept. of Labor (1934), 293 U.S. 151............ 6
McFarland v. United States (1949, C.A., D.C.), 174 F.2d 538 ....35, 40
Meeks v. United States (1947, 9 Cir.), 163 F.2d 598....... 37
Miller v. United States (1941, 8 Cir.), 120 F.2d 968 30
Miranda v. United States (1952, 9 Cir.), 196 F.2d 408..... 11

Northern Securities Co. v. United States (1904), 193 U.S. 197 2

Order of Railroad Telegraphers v. Railway Express Agency (1944), 321 U.S. 342............................... 6
Orr v. United States (1949, 2 Cir.), 174 F.2d 577.......... 6

Pearson v. Williams (1906), 202 U.S. 281..................26, 27
Peftine v. New Mexico (1912, 8 Cir.), 201 F. 480.......... 36
Potter v. United States (1894), 155 U.S. 483.............. 30

Riddlesbarger v. Hartford Insurance Co. (1869), 7 Wall. 386... 6

Schwinn v. United States (1940), 311 U.S. 616............ 16

United States v. Anzalone (1952, 3 Cir.), 197 F.2d 714.....21, 25
United States v. Brandt (1952, 2 Cir.), 196 F.2d 653...... 31
United States v. Chambers (1934), 291 U.S. 217........... 14
United States v. Donelly (1950, 7 Cir.), 179 F.2d 227...... 40
United States v. Gottfried (1948, 2 Cir.), 165 F.2d 360.... 19
United States v. Levi (1949, 7 Cir.), 177 F.2d 833......... 37
United States v. McElvain (1926), 272 U.S. 633...........24, 25
United States v. Morgan (1939), 307 U.S. 183............. 27
United States v. National City Lines (1949), 337 U.S. 78... 10
United States v. Negro (1947, 2 Cir.), 164 F.2d 168....... 35
United States v. Noveck (1926), 271 U.S. 201.......22, 23, 24, 25
United States v. Obermeier, 1[illegible]6 F.2d 243 ....17, 18, 25
United States v. One Airplane (1927, D.C. Cal.), 23 F.2d 500 13
United States v. Remington (1951, 2 Cir.), 191 F.2d 246... 38

Pages

United States v. Scharton (1932), 285 U.S. 518...13, 22, 23, 24, 25

United States v. Showalter (1952, D.C. Cal.), 103 F.Supp. 806...19, 21

United States v. Smith (1952), 342 U.S. 225...18, 21

United States v. United Mine Workers of America (1947), 330 U.S. 258... 2

United States ex rel. Girard v. Helvering (1937), 301 U.S. 540... 27

Yeaton v. United States (1809), 9 U.S. 281... 14

Statutes

Criminal Code, 1909, Sections 533 and 534... 8

Nationality Code of 1940 (8 U.S.C.A. (1940 ed.) 746(a)) ...4, 5, 10, 12, 42

The Naturalization Act of March 3, 1903, 32 Stat. 1213 1222, Section 39... 41

The Naturalization Act of 1906, 34 Stat. 596, 603, Section 23 42

1 U.S.C.A., 109 and 110... 9

8 U.S.C.A. (1940 ed.) 746... 21

18 U.S.C.A. 911... 21

Chapter 47 of Title 18, 18 U.S.C.A. 1015(a)... 42

Chapter 69 of Title 18, 18 U.S.C.A. 1425(a)... 42

The Revised Statutes of 1874:

- Section 13...7, 8, 9
- Section 5598... 7, 8
- Section 5999...7, 8, 9

Public Law 65, 82d Cong., 1st Sess., H.R. 167, S.R. 384... 12

Nos. 12,597 and 12,607

IN THE

United States Court of Appeals

For the Ninth Circuit

Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt,
and J. R. Robertson,
Appellants,

vs.

United States of America,
Appellee.

APPELLANTS' PETITION FOR REHEARING AND APPLICATION THAT PETITION FOR REHEARING BE HEARD EN BANC.

To the Honorable William Denman, Chief Judge, and to the Honorable Associate Judges of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit:

Come now appellants above-named and petition for a rehearing of the above-entitled cause and further apply for an order that said rehearing be heard en banc, and in support thereof respectfully allege as follows:

I.

No good purpose can be served by ignoring the obvious fact that from the moment this case began it was a cause célèbre—a great case; and that as such it made appeal to feelings and emotions which tend to distort judgment and to exercise the kind of hydraulic pressure before which even well-settled principles of law bend.[1]

It is appellants' contention in this petition that this case—because of this fact, because of the history of its principal figure and the union he has long headed, and because of the circumstances under which it was brought and prosecuted[2]—has been one of those "hard cases [which] make bad law",[3] about which so much has been written in the history and philosophy of American jurisprudence.

---

[1] In the recent contempt case involving the United Mine Workers, Mr. Justice Rutledge said:

> "This case became a cause celebre the moment it began. No good purpose can be served by ignoring that obvious fact. But it cannot affect our judgment save only perhaps to steel us, if that were necessary, to the essential and accustomed behavior of judges. In all cases great or small this must be to render judgment evenly and dispassionately according to law, as each is given understanding to ascertain and apply it.
>
> "No man or group is above the law. Nor is any beyond its protection. These truths apply equally to the Government. When its power is exerted against the citizen or another in the nation's courts, those tribunals stand not as partisans, but as independent and impartial arbiters to see that the balance between power and right is held even. In discharging that high function the courts themselves, like the parties, are subject to the law's majestic limitations. We are not free to decide this case, or any, otherwise than as in conscience we are enabled to see what the law commands." (United States v. United Mine Workers of America (1947), 330 U.S. 258, 342-343.)

Long ago Mr. Justice Holmes said:

> "Great cases like hard cases make bad law. For great cases are called great, not by reason of their real importance in shaping the law of the future, but because of some accident of immediate overwhelming interest which appeals to the feelings and distorts the judgment. These immediate interests exercise a kind of hydraulic pressure which makes what previously was clear seem doubtful, and before which even well settled principles of law will bend." (Northern Securities Co. v. United States (1904), 193 U.S. 197, 400-401.)

It would be unrealistic to think that the usual, formal type of petition for rehearing addressed solely to the panel which heard this cause would or could result in any reconsideration of the points previously so exhaustively briefed and argued. Only a fresh consideration of the basic problems which this case presents, and a fixed and inexorable determination on the part of the Court to resist any "subversive erosion of the judicial process"[4] in this case could bring about a modification of the order of the panel which heard this case.

Because the judges who have heretofore sat have committed themselves in this cause as they have,[5] a rehearing, if it is to serve its function of reconsidering what has heretofore been done, must be undertaken by the entire Court. Furthermore, it is at least questionable whether this entire circuit ought to be committed to a conflict with other circuits and to a rejection of Supreme Court doctrine upon the basis of a decision made by a minority of its members.

---

[2] The Attorney General who instituted the prosecution did so because "I think that the case against Bridges * * * has already been of some help in the Hawaii situation." (T.R. 73-76, 146) and because the Government was opposed to Bridges' "influence" in the labor movement (T.R. 6072-5).

[3] Stephens, J., in Bridges v. Wixon (1944, 9 Cir.), 144 F.2d 927, 938.

[4] Healy, J., in Bridges v. United States (1950, 9 Cir.), 184 F.2d 881, 887.

[5] Bone, J., said in his opinion:

> "I am in complete accord with all that has been said by my associates. Their exhaustive opinions reflect unanimous conclusions reached only after thorough discussion in conference and after independent consideration of all issues by each judge of this division of our court."

It will be the burden of this petition to demonstrate how the opinions of the judges of this particular panel not only disregarded the decisions of other Courts of Appeal,[6] but ignored applicable rules of law, precedents, judicial reasoning, and legislative history, in arriving at the result obtained.

Whether in fact there were present "hydraulic pressures" can only be a matter of conjecture; but that "well settled principles of law" appear to have bent under the impact of this case is fairly obvious.

II.

THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

A. The Saving Clause.

The question presented on this phase of the case arose as follows:

The second and third counts of the indictment are based upon sections of the Nationality Code of 1940. This code contained a five year statute of limitations. In 1948 (nine months before the indictment here was returned) the applicable sections of the 1940 code—both those dealing with the substantive crimes and that setting forth the five year statute of limitations—were repealed, and some of the sections dealing with the substantive offenses were re-enacted in the new Criminal Code along with a general three year statute of limitations. The repealing section of the 1948 law provided that "any right or liability now existing" under the repealed statutes should "not be affected" by the repeal.

---

[6] Stephens, J., in his opinion, said:

(a) "We are of course aware that the Second Circuit has taken a different view of the problem in United States v. Obermeier (1950, 2 Cir.), 186 F.2d 243."

(b) "We cannot agree with the reasoning in the Marzani opinion [Marzani v. United States (1948, C.A. D.C.) 168 F.2d 133], nor consequently with the conclusions reached."

Does such a proviso respecting "rights or liabilities" apply to a period of limitations?

The panel which heard this case, contrary to every authority on the subject and without citing a single authority to support its views, held that the proviso had such an effect.

1. In so doing it ignored the fundamental distinction between substance and procedure which has existed in the law from time immemorial and the equally venerable rule that periods of limitation are matters affecting not the "right" but only the "remedy".

Almost one hundred years ago[7] the Supreme Court said, speaking of statutes of limitations:

> "They do not confer any right of action. They are enacted to restrict the period within which

---

[7] For earlier cases on the point see Bank of United States v. Donnally (1834), 8 Pet. 361; Brent v. Bank of Washington (1836), 10 Pet. 596.

the right, otherwise unlimited, might be asserted." (Riddlesbarger v. Hartford Insurance Co. (1869), 7 Wall. 386.)

This view has been consistently followed to the present day:

Campbell v. Holt (1885), 115 U.S. 620;
Mattson v. Dept. of Labor (1934), 293 U.S. 151;
Order of Railroad Telegraphers v. Railway Express Agency (1944), 321 U.S. 342;
Chase Securities Corp. v. Donaldson (1945), 325 U.S. 304;
Holmberg v. Armbracht (1946), 327 U.S. 392;
Kavanagh v. Noble (1947), 332 U.S. 535;
Orr v. United States (1949, 2 Cir.), 174 F.2d 577.

Not only did this panel ignore these cases (it failed even to mention them or the doctrine which they exposit), but it ignored specific cases holding that a proviso in a repealing statute referring only to "rights" or to "liabilities" was not sufficient to preserve "procedural" as distinguished from "substantive" matters.

Great Northern Ry. Co. v. United States (1908), 208 U.S. 452;
Hertz v. Woodman (1910), 218 U.S. 205;
Hallowell v. Commons (1916), 239 U.S. 506.

These cases demonstrate without question (1) that statutes of limitations deal with remedies or matters of procedure; and (2) that saving clauses dealing with rights and liabilities have no effect upon such matters. From this it inevitably follows that such saving clauses have no effect upon statutes of limitations and do not operate to preserve pre-existing periods of limitation.

The panel did not even mention this point in its opinion.

Before this circuit is committed to such a conflict with the Supreme Court and the reasoning of the Supreme Court decisions, a rehearing should be granted en banc so that this point may be disposed of.

2. In holding that the proviso in question had the effect of preserving the repealed five year period of limitations, the panel ignored seventy-five years of legislative history, demonstrating that on at least four occasions Congress recognized that a clause saving the "rights or liabilities" existing under repealed statutes had no effect upon periods of limitation.

(a) The Revised Statutes of 1874 contained a clause (Section 13) providing that the repeal of any statute should not release or extinguish "any penalty, forfeiture, or liability" incurred thereunder, and another clause (Section 5598) providing that "all offenses committed and all penalties or forfeitures incurred" under any repealed statute might be prosecuted and punished as if the repeal had not been made. Despite these provisions Congress considered a separate section necessary to preserve statutes of limitations, for the Revised Statutes contained yet another clause (Section 5999) providing that "all acts of limitation" in any statute repealed prior to 1874 should not be affected thereby.

It is obvious that Congress did not consider acts of limitation saved either by the general saving clause (Section 13) which included the words "any liability" or by the specific saving clause (Section 5598) which included the words "all offenses"; it recognized that if it intended to save periods of limitation it must say so explicitly.

(b) In 1909, in enacting the Criminal Code, Congress, without repealing the aforesaid sections, included two additional sections dealing with this problem. Section 533 saved "all offenses committed, and all penalties, forfeitures or liabilities incurred", and Section 534 separately saved "all acts of limitation", again illustrating Congress' understanding of the proper manner of preserving a pre-existing period of limitations.

(c) In 1933 Congress repealed as obsolete many sections of the Revised Statutes. It was at first proposed to repeal Section 5599, supra, but the Secretary of War and the Attorney General expressed the view that the repeal of that section might revive certain expired claims despite the fact that the proposed repealing statute saved rights and liabilities. The Secretary of War and the Attorney General were of the view that "since that proviso referred only to 'rights' and 'liabilities' and not to remedies which may be barred by limitations", it was necessary to retain the clause specifically saving "all acts of limita- tion". Congress followed this advice and in order to save the period of limitations and not revive the barred claims, did not repeal Section 5599.

At the same time the Attorney General recommended that Section 5599 be rewritten so that it would preserve "all acts of limitation" not only with respect to statutes enacted prior to 1874 but with respect to those subsequently enacted. Congress did not accept, and has not yet accepted, this recommendation thereby demonstrating its intent—for whatever reason—to preserve all acts of limitation only with respect to statutes referred to in the Revised States of 1874.

(d) In 1947, both Section 13 and Section 5599, supra, were incorporated in the United States Code as 1 U.S.C.A. 109 and 110, showing again an understanding that specific language dealing with "limitations" is necessary to achieve the end sought and that the preservation of "rights and liabilities" is inadequate.

The panel which decided this cause ignored this seventy-five years of legislative history. It ignored the fact that only one year after Congress placed both Section 13 and Section 5599 in Title 1, it enacted the saving clause here under consideration without making any specific reference in that clause or elsewhere to acts of limitation. It hardly seems likely that hard upon the heels of seventy-five years of unbroken legislative history demonstrating the necessity for such specific reference, there would be a sudden reversal of policy without any statement or explanation that such a reversal was taking place.

The panel did not even mention any of these points in its opinion.

Before this circuit is committed to such a conflict with the obvious understanding of Congress, a rehearing should be granted so that these points may be disposed of.

3. In holding that the five year period of limitations is applicable to offenses arising under the Nationality Code, the panel ignored the notes of those who revised the code in 1948. Those "authoritative"[8] notes are not even mentioned in the panel's opinion. Those notes read as follows:

> "Section 582 of Title 18 * * * and Section 746(g) of Title 8 * * * were consolidated * * *
>
> "In the consolidation of these sections the five year period of limitation for violations of the Nationality Code provided for in said Section 746(g) of Title 8, * * * is reduced to three years. There seems no sound basis for considering three years adequate in the case of heinous felonies and gross frauds against the United States but inadequate for misuse of a passport or false statement to a naturalization examiner."

The panel did not even refer to the Revisers Notes in its opinion.

Before this circuit is committed to the proposition that the Revisers Notes may be ignored in applying and interpreting the provisions of the code, a rehearing should be granted so that this point may be disposed of.

---

[8] United States v. National City Lines (1949), 337 U.S. 78, 81.

4. The panel which decided this cause was "aware that the Second Circuit had taken a different view of the problem." The opinion, however, gave no reason or authority for not following the view of the Second Circuit. It did not say that the "view" of the Second Circuit is erroneous.[9] Nor did it even analyze the opinion of the Second Circuit. There is no indication of an awareness that the Second Circuit engaged in a careful consideration of the distinction between substantive and procedural matters and that the Second Circuit considered carefully the legislative history of the various saving clauses. This failure to consider the underlying bases of the Second Circuit's "different view" leaves the impression that this panel has simply opposed its ipse dixit to the reasoning of the Second Circuit's opinion.

Before this circuit is committed to a conflict with the carefully reasoned and thoroughly documented opinion of a sister circuit, this petition for rehearing should be granted so that the points raised in the opinion of the sister circuit may be considered and, if possible, answered.

---

[9] Four months earlier a panel of this Court consisting of Denman, C.J., and Orr and Pope, JJ., considered the same problem and said:

> "United States v. Obermeier * * * is authority for holding counts one to six [allegedly committed more than three years before the date of the indictment] barred." Miranda v. United States (1952, 9 Cir.), 196 F.2d 408.

5. Furthermore, this panel ignored the most recent legislative and executive recognition of the fact that since September 1, 1948, the five year period of limitations has not applied to crimes under the Nationality Code. The opinion did not mention the fact that on June 30, 1951, Public Law 65 of the 82nd Congress became effective. This law specifically fixed at ten years the period within which prosecutions could be maintained for certain offenses against the Nationality Code and for conspiracies to commit such offenses. In recommending this legislation the Secretary of State requested that the applicable period of limitations be changed "from three years to ten years". And in reporting upon this legislation the Judiciary Committees of both houses, in identical language, said:

> "In the codification of Title 18 * * * effective September 1, 1948, Section 582 of that title dealing with limitations on offenses other than capital, and Section 746(g) of Title 8 were consolidated, with the result that violation of the penal provisions of the Nationality Act became subject to the general three year statute of limitations."
>
> (82d Cong., 1st Sess., H.R. 167, S.R. 384.)

The opinion did not consider the anomaly raised by this situation: On the one hand the United States Attorney argues that the period of limitations for offenses under the Nationality Code is five years, and on the other hand the Secretary of State and the Judiciary Committees of Congress recognize that it has been three years all along.

Before this circuit is committed to a decision which ignores the most recent expression of the executive and legislative branches of the Government on the issues involved, a rehearing should be granted so that the point may be disposed of.

6. Finally, the panel ignored the well settled rule of law that a statute of limitations is a statute of repose and that in the event of any question as to how it is to be interpreted—although from the foregoing it is clear that there can be no such question—it is to be interpreted and applied in favor of the accused.

United States v. Scharton (1932), 285 U.S. 518.

The panel also ignored the suggestion that, for the same basic reason, when there is doubt concerning the effect of a saving clause upon a criminal proceeding, the clause should be strictly construed in favor of the accused.

United States v. One Airplane (1927, D.C. Cal.), 23 F.2d 500.

Before this circuit is committed to a decision which so overrides the rights of the accused, contrary to the established law on the subject, this petition for rehearing should be granted so that the point may be disposed of.

The only cases referred to by the panel in the course of its discussion on this phase of the case have no relation to any of the issues involved. The question here presented is whether or not the preservation of a "right or liability" operates to preserve a pre-existing period of limitations. Cases like Yeaton v. United States (1809), 9 U.S. 281; United States v. Chambers (1934), 291 U.S. 217, and Coffin v. Rich (1858), 45 Me. 507, cited by the panel, do not deal with this problem and are not germane. Each one of these cases deal only with the problem of the effect of a repeal upon the "substantive" rights of litigants. The Yeaton case—a prize case—deals with the question of whether the repeal of a statute creating a cause of action destroyed the cause of action. The Chambers case deals with the question of whether the repeal of the 18th Amendment had any effect upon a pending prosecution for a violation of the National Prohibition Act. The Coffin case deals with the question of whether the repeal of a statute making stockholders liable for corporate debts had any effect upon the right of a corporation's judgment creditor to proceed against a stockholder.

Each of these cases is concerned only with the impact of the repeal upon the continued existence of the cause of action. None of them deals with a limitations problem and consequently none of them is authority for the proposition that a clause saving "rights or liabilities" has any effect upon a statute of limitations.[10]

---

[10] As a matter of fact, what was said in Coffin v. Rich demonstrates the error of the panel's views:

> "The legislature has power to take away by statute what was given by statute except vested rights. And the right of the party when it exists by statute does not become vested until after judgment."

Here the Government had no "vested right" to prosecute for five years before September 1, 1948, and Congress had the power, Before this circuit is bound to a decision of this precise question upon the authority of an 1809 admiralty case and an 1858 state corporation law case, and in the absence of any apparent consideration of the Supreme Court cases dealing with the exact point at issue,[11] a rehearing should be granted so that these points may be disposed of.

B. The Wartime Suspension of Limitations Act.

The question presented on this phase of the case is: Does the statute providing for the suspension, while the United States is at war, of any statute of limitations applicable to offenses "involving fraud" against the United States apply to this case?

The panel which heard this case, contrary to the decision of two other circuits and of at least three Supreme Court cases, held that it did.

In so doing the panel had to hold (a) that "fraud" was "involved" in the offense of false swearing; and (b) that fraud of that type was embraced in the Suspension Act.

---

which it exercised, to reduce the period of limitations to three years.

The losing party in Coffin v. Rich argued, as does the panel here, that the legislature could not have "intended" by repealing the earlier statute, to change the then-existing liability of members of corporations and that it must have intended to preserve such liabilities. But in the absence of a specific preservation (here there is no specific preservation of the period of limitations), the Court said:

> "Why they did not except such liability from the operation of the repealing act is not for us to say. Whether by design or mistake the effect is the same."

[11] Supra, pages 5-7.

1. In holding that "fraud" was involved in the case at bar, the panel relied upon Knauer v. United States (1946), 328 U.S. 654, a denaturalization case in which the false swearing involved related to the petitioner's oath of allegiance to this country and to his renunciation of his allegiance to the land of his birth. The panel ignored the pointed distinction made by the Court between falsity inherent in the oath and falsity relating to a question of fact.

> "We need not consider the extent to which a decree of naturalization may constitute an official determination of issues of fact * * * Those facts relate to the past, to behavior and conduct, but the oath is in a different category. It relates to a state of mind and is a promise of future conduct * * *
>
> "* * * when an alien takes the oath with reservations and does not in good faith foreswear loyalty and allegiance to the old country, the decree of naturalization is obtained by deceit. The proceeding itself is then founded on fraud." (Knauer v. United States, supra, at 670, 671.)

The panel which decided this case not only ignored the distinction so clearly made in the Knauer case, but also ignored the decision of the Supreme Court in Schwinn v. United States (1940), 311 U.S. 616. That case involved a denaturalization proceeding based upon false testimony concerning the petitioner's period of residence; that is, the falsehood had to do with a question of fact. This Court (112 F.2d 74) affirmed the decree of denaturalization on the ground of "fraud". The Supreme Court granted certiorari and refused to affirm on the fraud point. Its entire opinion reads:

> "The petition for certiorari is granted. The judgment is affirmed on the sole ground that the certificate of citizenship was illegally procured."

That the Supreme Court should have granted certiorari and then specifically announced the basis upon which it affirmed demonstrates that in the view of the Supreme Court not every falsehood is ipso facto a fraud and underlines the point subsequently made in the Knauer case that falsehoods with respect to the oath, as distinguished from falsehoods with respect to matters of fact, may properly be regarded as "frauds".

Before this circuit is bound to a rule that any false statement whatsoever in a naturalization proceeding—as distinguished from falsity in the oath—is ipso facto a fraud, the petition for rehearing should be granted so that this point may be considered.

2. The decision of the panel squarely conflicts with the holding of the Second Circuit in United States v. Obermeier, that "Nothing in 8 U.S.C.A. Section 746(a)(1) * * * makes fraud an ingredient of the crime". (186 F.2d 243, 257.)

Possibly a mere conflict with another circuit is not sufficient to grant a petition for rehearing, but the panel apparently did not even recognize that it was in conflict with Obermeier on this point for it did not refer to this phase of the Obermeier opinion; it referred to its conflict with Obermeier only on the "saving clause" phase of the case.

Before this circuit enters into conflict with another circuit sub silentio, as it were, the petition for rehearing should be granted so that the basis of the conflict may be examined and the issue resolved.

3. The panel which decided this case never explained how denominating the crime here involved as a "fraud" resolved the issue. For even this very panel said:

> "* * * not every fraud against the Government, whether inherently pecuniary or otherwise, comes within the effect of the Suspension Act."

It must follow, therefore, that some "frauds" do come within the effect of the Suspension Act and some do not. Nowhere in its lengthy opinion does the panel state why a naturalization fraud is within, rather than without, the effect of that Act.

To settle this question, a rehearing should be granted.

The panel which decided this case ignored a recent Supreme Court decision which has pointed the way toward a delineation of those frauds which do, and those frauds which do not, come within the Suspension Act. United States v. Smith (1952), 342 U.S. 225, indicates that frauds in situations not connected with the war effort are not within the Suspension Act. There, Mr. Justice Clark, concurring, said:

> "Soon after the beginning of World War II Congress realized that it would be impossible for the Department of Justice currently to investigate and prosecute the large number of offenses arising out of the war effort. Therefore Congress > suspended the running of the statute of limitations * * * It is clear that Congress intended to give the Department more time to apprehend, investigate and prosecute offenses occurring 'under the stress of present day events' of the war * * *

>
> "The present cases had nothing to do with the war or the reconversion thereafter * * *"

The panel did not apply these criteria to the case at bar. If it had, of course it would have had to hold that this case had nothing to do with the war, did not arise out of the war effort, and consequently was not covered by the Suspension Act.[12]

Even United States v. Gottfried (1948, 2 Cir.), 165 F.2d 360, upon which the panel relies, supports the view that only crimes arising out of "the hurly-burly of war" are embraced within the Suspension Act. That case involved the wartime rationing program and there would have been no offense but for the wartime legislation creating such a program. For that reason the Court said the Suspension Act "perfectly fits the situation at bar".[13] A violation of the naturalization statute does not "fit", either perfectly or imperfectly, into this picture and there is no authority for trying to force it to fit.

---

[12] The reasoning of Mr. Justice Clark has recently been followed by Judge Oliver J. Carter in the Northern District of California: "Any consideration of the meaning of the plain language of the statute must assume that Congress intended to accomplish some sound objective by the language used. The Servicemen's Dependents Allowance Act of 1942, the act under which the defendant is charged, was one which had its very reason for existence founded upon wartime conditions. The tremendous volume of claims made under the Act during wartime and the attendant investigation of fraudulent claims made thereunder would have made it difficult if not impossible to successfully protect the Government's interest without an extension of the period of limitations * * * Similar problems created by other wartime legislation made it imperative that Congress extend the period of limitations on criminal prosecutions arising out of such legislation * * *" (United States v. Showalter (1952, D.C. Cal.), 103 F.Supp. 806, 809.)

Before this circuit adopts a decision which fails to explain why a naturalization fraud is within the scope of the Wartime Suspension Act, in the face of Supreme Court and other reasoning to the contrary, the petition for rehearing should be granted so that the point may be considered and disposed of.

4. The panel which decided this case admitted that its decision was contrary to the decision of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in Marzani v. United States (1948, C.A., D.C.), 168 F.2d 133. All it said about this was:

> "We cannot agree with the reasoning in the Marzani opinion * * *"

Why it could not agree with the reasoning it never stated. As a matter of fact, it never stated the basis of the reasoning of the Marzani opinion.

Before this circuit is committed to a conflict with a decision of another circuit under these circumstances, particularly in the context of the entire argument on the Suspension Act phase of the case, the petition for rehearing should be granted so that the point may be disposed of.

---

[13] That this is the significance of Gottfried is seen by the same Court's handling of that case in Obermeier (186 F.2d 243, 257, n. 64)—still another factor ignored by this panel.

5. Since the decision of this panel, there has been published in the latest Federal Reports a decision of the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit to the effect that a "citizenship fraud" is not within the Suspension Act.

In United States v. Anzalone (1952, 3 Cir.), 197 F. 2d 714, a conviction for wilfully and falsely claiming American citizenship in violation of 18 USCA 911[14] was reversed.

> "There could be no question that on October 5, 1940, Anzalone represented that he was a citizen of the United States when he signed and filed a Pennsylvania voter's registration card. In this he swore that he was a citizen of the United States * * * But any indictment based on that offense was barred by the applicable statute of limitations by the end of 1943. Section 3282, Title 18, USC." (197 F.2d 714, at 715.)

If a false representation of American citizenship were a "fraud" within the Suspension Act, the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit would have had to consider whether that Act tolled the normal three year statute of limitations.[15] But it never considered the point, nor did the Government urge it to do so,[16] for the simply obvious reason that such a "fraud" is manifestly not within the language or objectives of the Wartime Suspension Act. It apparently never occurred either to the Court or the prosecutors to urge such a claim. Only in this case has the Government put forth such a claim—and only in this case has it achieved success with that claim.

---

[14] Section 911 derives from a subsection of 8 USCA [1940 ed.] 746, as do Counts II and III of the indictment here.

[15] The Suspension Act was originally passed in 1942 and if applicable in the Anzalone case would have permitted the prosecution. Compare United States v. Smith (1952), 342 U.S. 225, and United States v. Showalter (1952, D.C., Cal.), 103 F. Supp. 806.

[16] United States v. Anzalone, supra, at 715, and United States v. Anzalone (1951, W.D., Pa.), 100 F. Supp. 987, at 989, n. 6:

> "Of course the statute of limitations is a bar to the prosecution * * *"

In order to consider the effect of this most recent decision of the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit upon the ruling in this case, the petition for rehearing should be granted.

6. The panel's treatment of the Supreme Court opinions which dealt with the World War I Suspension Act is so confused and lacking in clarity that for this reason alone the petition for rehearing must be granted.

The panel discussed United States v. Noveck (1926), 271 U.S. 201, and United States v. Scharton (1932), 285 U.S. 518, which held that fraud was not an ingredient either of perjury or false statements in tax "fraud" cases. In each case the Supreme Court held that fraud was not involved and the Suspension Act did not apply because the statute creating the crime did not mention "fraud". The panel recognized that the statute under which Count II of the indictment here is laid similarly does not mention fraud and that "it can be argued from this fact that the Suspension Act would not be applicable hereto". The panel recognized also that "If the cited case[s] must be construed to mean that 'fraud' must be spelled out literally in the statute, then logically we must hold that the Suspension Act does not apply to Count II * * *"

Of course the cited cases cannot mean anything else, as appellants have urged all along, and the panel never said how else the cited cases may be "construed". Those cases specifically hold that as fraud is not mentioned in the statute and need not be proved; it is not an ingredient of the crime and the crime does not "involve" fraud. Therefore they refuse to apply the Suspension Act to the crime. The panel recognized that logically this conclusion must follow here too. But for some unexpressed reason it characterized this conclusion as "extreme" and refused to be "driven" to it.

Before this circuit is committed to a view that the logical following of Supreme Court decisions which might result in a dismissal of the indictments in this particular case is an "extreme conclusion", the entire Court should rehear this matter.

This is particularly so because of the "reasoning" employed to get around the decisions in the Noveck and Scharton cases—decisions, we repeat, wherein the Supreme Court said that since fraud was not mentioned in the charging statutes and was not required to be proved, it was not an element of the crime.

This panel said:

> "* * * there are offenses which encompass acts inherently fraudulent as to the Government but in which the fraud is not an ingredient and need not be proved."

In every case in which the Supreme Court has found that fraud is not an ingredient under the statutes creating the crimes, it has said that the offense does not "involve" fraud within the meaning of the Suspension Act. This panel, contrariwise, said that even though fraud is not an ingredient of the offense and "need not [even] be proved", somehow or other fraud may be "inherent" in the offense. This substitutes for objective statutory standards the personalized subjective whims and interpretations of any judge who feels that fraud is "inherent" in a particular case.

Before this circuit is committed to any such doctrine—a doctrine which would never let a litigant know whether or not fraud was "inherent" in his case until after some judge said so—the petition for rehearing should be granted and the entire matter reviewed by the full Court.

The panel not only refuses to follow the Noveck and Scharton opinions, but it also refuses to follow United States v. McElvain (1926), 272 U.S. 633, which involved a conspiracy to defraud the Government in respect of income tax. There the Supreme Court held that the general three year limitation rather than the special six year limitation set out in the Suspension Act was applicable. This appears to be a simple and square holding that even when the indictment is cast in the form of a "conspiracy to defraud", the Court will look to the nature of the offense rather than to the form of the pleading to determine whether the Suspension Act applies. But the panel did not see it that way:

> "The opinion of the Supreme Court in United States v. McElvain, supra, is not easy reading and has had various constructions."

Whether the opinion of the Supreme Court is or is not easy reading, and whether it is or is not easier reading than the opinion of this panel on the "fraud" point, is not the issue. If, indeed, McElvain has had various constructions, the panel might have been expected to cite some. However, it did not. The only "construction" contrary to the square holding of McElvain, that the form of the indictment does not change the result, is the decision of this panel in this case.

The fact of the matter is that in every case which involved an alleged false statement and in which the indictment was returned more than three years after the alleged crime, the Supreme Court has held that the indictment had to be dismissed. This is true of McElvain, Noveck and Scharton, and it made no difference how or in what manner the indictment was drawn. If those men could not be prosecuted for "defrauding" the Treasury, how can Bridges and his associates be prosecuted for this so-called "naturalization fraud"?

It is also true that neither Obermeier nor Marzani nor Anzalone could be prosecuted for alleged false statements they made at a date more than three years earlier than the return day of the indictment. If these men could not be prosecuted for statements substantially identical to the ones here alleged to have been made by Bridges, how it [illegible] that Bridges can be prosecuted in this case?

These questions need to be answered, and it is no answer that this panel simply "disagrees" with the other Courts.

Before this circuit is committed to a decision which is contrary to every precedent on the point and particularly because the decision is rendered in this case with its background and history, this petition for rehearing must be granted and the entire question examined by the full Court.

III.

RES JUDICATA AND RELATED PROBLEMS.

Because the prior proceedings against Bridges took place before administrative tribunals, the panel, citing Pearson v. Williams (1906), 202 U.S. 281, held that the doctrine of res judicata cannot be applied here. The panel ignored the fact that in the half century since the decision in the Pearson case, administrative law has taken tremendous steps forward and that the Supreme Court has adopted an entirely different view of the nature and dignity of administrative proceedings. Just six months ago the Supreme Court in Far East Conference v. United States (1952), 342 U.S. 570, reaffirmed the current approach to administrative proceedings by applying once again the philosophy expressed by Mr. Justice Stone in United States v. Morgan (1939), 307 U.S. 183, 191:

> "* * * court and agency are not to be regarded as wholly independent and unrelated instrumentalities of justice * * * Court and agency are the means adopted to attain the prescribed end * * * Neither body should repeat in this day the mistake made by the courts of law when equity was struggling for recognition as an ameliorating system of justice; neither can rightly be regarded by the other as an alien intruder to be tolerated if must be, but never to be encouraged or aided by the other in the attainment of the common aim."

The panel ignored the fact that this is not abstract doctrine; that, as a matter of fact, in cases decided long after Pearson v. Williams, the Supreme Court has held that administrative determinations do in fact constitute res judicata.

> Keogh v. Chicago & Northwestern Ry. Co. (1922), 260 U.S. 156;
>
> United States ex rel. Girard v. Helvering (1937), 301 U.S. 540.

The panel also ignored the fact that Pearson v. Williams involved only a "summary sort" of preliminary examination after which an alien was permitted to make only a conditional entry. It is not surprising that the Supreme Court in 1906 held that such an inquiry was not res judicata in a subsequent deportation proceeding. It is only to that extent that one administrative decision "does not preclude a subsequent administrative consideration."

But where, as here, there has been a full-dress administrative hearing, with the taking of testimony under oath, the examination and cross-examination of witnesses, and all of the rest of it, then the doctrine of the more recent cases of the Supreme Court cited above prevails.

Before this circuit permits to stand the bald statement of one of its panels that the doctrine of res judicata cannot be applied to administrative decisions, it should, in the face of the foregoing cases, grant the petition for rehearing so that the point may be reconsidered.

IV.

BRIDGES v. WIXON AS EVIDENCE.

The panel made a highly technical analysis of Bridges v. Wixon (1945), 326 U.S. 135, and concluded that the case did not "hold" that Bridges was not a Communist and that Robertson and Schmidt had no right to rely on the decision in that case when they appeared as witnesses for Bridges in his subsequent naturalization hearing.

This ruling ignored the long established doctrine that when "intent" is an issue, a defendant may negative his bad faith by evidence explaining his intent or understanding. Robertson and Schmidt had a right to show their good faith in the premises. They were not lawyers; and assuming that the technical analysis made by the panel in 1952 is the correct one, it is not to be imputed to them as of 1945 when the understanding generally was the Supreme Court had vindicated Bridges.[17]

This Court has held that evidence of reliance on an attorney's advice is admissible to show absence of criminal intent and has not analyzed that advice to see whether or not it was technically sound.

> Hersch v. United States (1934, 9 Cir.), 68 F. 2d 799;
>
> C.I.T. Corporation v. United States (1945, 9 Cir.), 150 F.2d 85.

This panel did not even mention these prior decisions of this Court in its consideration of this point.

---

[17] Pope, J., in his opinion, quotes from the record:

> Robertson: "I studied that decision. I studied the majority decision and I studied the concurring decision and I made up my mind then and there that President Bridges was not, never had been and was never affiliated with the Communist Party; and the Supreme Court of the United States is something that I think speaks with authority."
>
> Schmidt: "* * * I had read the decision of the Supreme Court, and I thought, well, as long as the highest tribunal in the United States of America has made a decision with respect to this case, the matter is now settled for all time: and I had no hesitation to recommend this man for citizenship."

Interestingly enough, when it became necessary to bolster a weak circumstantial case respecting the conspiracy, Judge Pope relied upon Robertson's and Schmidt's "knowledge" of the decision in Bridges v. Wixon as a circumstance from which it could be inferred that they knew that "the day was about to come when Bridges could finally sew up his citizenship." Aside from the irony of having one judge reject the decision when its receipt might be helpful to the defendants and having another judge use it to their disadvantage, is the fact that if Robertson and Schmidt "knew" anything about Bridges v. Wixon, it was not what Judge Stephens now says that the case stands for but what they then understood it to stand for.

In fact it cites absolutely no authority whatsoever for its holding.[18]

Before this circuit permits such a departure from the normally accepted rules governing the admissibility of evidence in cases involving intent, the petition for rehearing should be granted so that the point can be determined in the light of the applicable authorities.

V.

THE OTHER ERRORS OF THE TRIAL COURT.

The panel admitted that on at least three other occasions the rulings of the trial Court were improper but said that each instance separately did not present sufficient grounds for reversal. In achieving this result, the panel (a) glossed over the seriousness of the incidents involved; and (b) ignored the rules laid down by the Supreme Court for the determination of what constitutes reversible error.

1. The Father Meinecke Incident.

The opinion of the panel glossed over the significance of what happened here by saying "The [trial] Court took part in the examination of the witness." Thus is concealed the fact that in so "taking part" the trial judge was the champion of the prosecution. The panel did not record that the trial judge had earlier refused to come to the aid of the defense with the observation that it was "not the province of a Court to examine the witness." It did not explain why, only after the cross-examination had failed to destroy the witness, it suddenly became the province of the Court to undertake to do so.

---

[18] All the authority is contrary to this holding of the panel. See, e.g., Potter v. United States (1894), 155 U.S. 483; Harrison v. United States (1912, 6 Cir.), 200 F. 662; Buchanan v. United States (1916, 8 Cir.), 233 F. 257; Hyde v. United States (1926, 4 Cir.), 15 F.2d 816; Miller v. United States (1941, 8 Cir.), 120 F.2d 968; Haigler v. United States (1949, 10 Cir.), 172 F.2d 986.

Secondly, the opinion never revealed the true effect of the questions put by the trial court; it stated only that such questions "might ~~be~~ subject to misunderstanding." If the questions were set forth it would be seen that the word "misunderstanding" was an understatement. Such questions, if asked by a prosecutor, would be error as an unjustified and unwarranted attempt to harass and humiliate a defense witness. When asked by a trial Court, which is supposed to maintain "thoroughgoing impartiality",[19] they cry aloud for reversal.

---

[19] Glasser v. United States (1942), 315 U.S. 60, 83.

See United States v. Brandt (1952, 2 Cir.), 196 F.2d 653:

> "A trial judge conducting a case before a jury in the United States courts is more than a mere 'moderator' [citing cases], but he is decidedly not a 'prosecuting attorney.' United States v. Guertler (2 Cir.), 147 F.2d 796, cert. den. 325 U.S. 879 * * * Hunter v. United States (5 Cir.), 62 F.2d 217 * * * He may call witnesses on his own motion, adduce evidence and examine those who testify * * * but he nonetheless must remain the judge, impartial, judicious, and above all responsible for a courtroom atmosphere in which guilt or innocence may be soberly and fairly tested * * * He must therefore be on continual guard that the authority of the bench be not exploited toward a conviction he may privately think deserved or even required by the evidence. United States v. Minuse (2 Cir.) 114 F.2d 36; Martucci v. Brooklyn Children's Aid Society (2 Cir.) 140 F.2d 732; and United States v. Marzano (2 Cir.) 149 F.2d 923."

Thirdly, the panel said that the "danger" of a "misunderstanding" was cured by subsequent instructions to the jury. The fact of the matter is that the comments of the trial Court to which reference is made in the panel's opinion, were not "instructions" to the jury. At no time did the trial Court instruct the jury to disregard the questions or the inferences that might be drawn from them. On the contrary, it merely sought to justify what had been done and, if anything, compounded the evil.

To say that this incident alone was "not so prejudicial" as to warrant a reversal is to fly in the face of Kotteakos v. United States (1946), 328 U.S. 750, and other similar cases.

2. The Kessler Incident.

The panel in this instance not only affirmed what amounted to a denial of cross-examination of a Government witness but condoned a comment by the trial Court in the presence of the jury which admittedly "was in poor discretion" and which did not represent the "true idealism" with which a trial Court should act. This it did by again glossing over what happened and minimizing its significance, and by ignoring the rule of the Kotteakos and other cases.

(a) The panel did not state the facts which are necessary to an understanding of this incident. The record reveals that a witness named Michener had placed Bridges at an alleged Communist Party meeting in San Francisco and had fixed the time of that meeting in relation to a season of the year. He said that he had stayed at the Shaw Hotel in San Francisco at the time of the alleged meeting. The defense then produced a registration card from the Shaw Hotel dated approximately six months away from the time of the year that the witness had fixed. This was the only card that the defense found in the records of the Shaw Hotel for the year in question. It was in order to remove this cloud upon the testimony of its witness that the prosecution called Kessler to produce and identify another card corresponding more closely in time with the period originally fixed by Michener with the explanation that the Government had procured and removed that card from the files of the Shaw Hotel some time earlier.

These facts which point up the importance of the cross-examination of Kessler and the necessity for establishing when, why, under what circumstances, and at whose direction the card had been removed, are not even mentioned in the panel's opinion. The whole thing is glossed over by saying that on direct examination Kessler's testimony "was confined to identifying the exhibit."

Clearly it was the duty of defense counsel to determine what role, if any, the prosecutors had played in the removal and concealment of the card Kessler produced. Clearly it was the duty of the trial Court to permit a full investigation into the matter, particularly when the good faith of the prosecutors was in issue. That denial of cross-examination on this point deprived appellants of substantial rights and denied them of due process of law is clear from Alford v. United States (1931), 282 U.S. 687. This case, which is the leading case on the subject of a defendant's right to an unimpeded cross-examination, is not even mentioned by the panel in its opinion.

(b) In addition to preventing cross-examination improperly, the trial judge stated in the presence of the jury that defense counsel had an "expectation or hope that some error might be created in the record" in order to avoid an "ultimate conviction" based upon "uncontradicted evidence, establishing to a certainty the guilt of the accused."

For a trial judge to make such a comment during the course of a case is obviously flagrantly prejudicial error. To dismiss it by suggesting, as the panel does, that it was simply a matter of "poor discretion" is a shocking disregard of the rules laid down in the Kotteakos and other cases.

3. Reasonable Doubt.

The trial judge for the first time, so far as we have been able to find out, in the history of the United States District Courts or of any Court, instructed the jury that a reasonable doubt was a doubt "for which a good reason can be given." It seems obvious that if a defendant is entitled to an acquittal only if a "good reason" therefor can be given, the burden has been shifted from the prosecution to the defense, contrary to every precept of criminal justice.[20]

---

[20] In Bihn v. United States (1946), 328 U.S. 633, a conviction was reversed, although the trial Court had given the standard instructions respecting burden of proof, presumption of innocence

Without suggesting why this analysis of the effect of the instruction is incorrect, the panel simply asserted that it is. The panel said that the balance of the instruction on reasonable doubt removed the danger suggested by appellants. But the balance of the instruction, while not as prejudicial as that portion under consideration, did not cure the evil for it never told the jury affirmatively what a reasonable doubt is. It told the jury what a reasonable doubt is not, and even the panel, taking the instruction as a whole, could only say that it "plainly informs the jury that 'reasonable doubt' means no more or less than the plain meaning of those two words as used." This, of course, is semantics.[21]

As a matter of fact, appellants would have been better off if the trial Court had said a reasonable doubt means a reasonable doubt. As it is, they had the burden of establishing to the jury that a reasonable doubt meant a "good" reasonable doubt.

---

and reasonable doubt (the standard instruction on reasonable doubt was not given in the case at bar), because the Court also had said to the jury that it had to determine who did commit the crime in question. The Supreme Court recognized that this shifted the burden to the defendant in requiring her to establish her innocence by proving who was guilty of the crime and it said (at p. 637) that this "instruction sounds more like comment of a zealous prosecutor than instruction of a judge who has special responsibilities for assuring fair trials of those accused of crime."

[21] "A conviction ought not to rest upon an equivocal direction to the jury on a basic issue." (Bollenbach v. United States (1946), 326 U.S. 607.

See, also, Kraus v. United States (1946), 327 U.S. 614; United States v. Negro (1947, 2 Cir.), 164 F.2d 168; McFarland v. United States (1949, C.A., D.C.), 174 F.2d 538.

While the panel in effect admonished the trial Courts of this circuit that such an instruction should not be given (for it said this instruction "was not to be commended") it refused to apply this salutary admonition in the Bridges case.[22]

In refusing to reverse this conviction for this manifest error, the panel again departed from the doctrine laid down in the Kotteakos and other cases.

In Kotteakos v. United States (1946), 328 U.S. 750,[23] the Supreme Court considered the question of what constituted "reversible error" as distinguished from "harmless error".

> "* * * if one cannot say, with fair assurance, after pondering all that happened without stripping the erroneous action from the whole, that the judgment was not substantially swayed by the error, it is impossible to conclude that substantial rights were not affected."

Here the panel never applied this test. It never considered whether or not the erroneous action substantially swayed the judgment.

---

[22] The authorities cited by the panel on this phase of the case do not support it. While under varying circumstances some of the cases—with substantial dissents—have held it was not reversible error to instruct that a reasonable doubt meant "a doubt for which a reason could be assigned" (and there is good authority to the contrary—Pettine v. New Mexico [1912, 8 Cir.], 201 F. 480), none of them have ever held that the reason to be assigned must be a "good" one.

[23] This case came hard upon the heels of the Supreme Court decisions in Bollenbach v. United States (1946), 326 U.S. 607; Kraus v. United States (1946), 327 U.S. 614, and Bihn v. United States (1946), 328 U.S. 633.

> "The inquiry cannot be merely whether there was enough to support the result, apart from the phase affected by the error. It is rather, even so, whether the error itself had substantial influence. If so, or if one is left in grave doubt, the conviction cannot stand."

The panel never made an inquiry such as is required by this rule. It never sought to ascertain whether the errors (here there were at least three of them) had substantial influence. We submit that they obviously had. But whether we are right or wrong, the panel did not even purport to meet the test required by the Supreme Court, and it certainly did not say that it was not "left in grave doubt" as a result of these errors.

The doctrine of the Kotteakos case has been followed consistently since it was first enunciated (Fiswick v. United States (1946), 329 U.S. 211; Krulewitch v. United States (1949), 336 U.S. 440; United States v. Levi [1949, 7 Cir.], 177 F.2d 833), and apparently was the law of this circuit until this decision, for in Meeks v. United States (1947, 9 Cir), 163 F.2d 598, a panel of this Court consisting of Chief Judge Denman and Judges Stephens and Orr reversed a conviction because of errors below despite the fact that there was "evidence strongly adverse to appellant which the jury may or may not have believed." Judge Denman, with the concurrence of his colleagues, said:

> "However, the Supreme Court does not permit an appellate court to speculate as to what wit> nesses the jury did believe or disbelieve. Indeed, in view of the fundamental character of these errors we may not affirm, even if we are 'without doubt' of appellant's guilt.''[24] (Ibid., 602.)

Before this circuit is committed to an opinion which glosses over at least three errors of a substantial nature by minimizing the facts found in the record concerning them, which approves "misunderstanding", "poor discretion", and instructions which are "not to be commended", and which affirms a conviction on such a record without even considering the doctrine of the Kotteakos, Bollenback, Kraus, Bihn and Krulewitch cases, the petition for rehearing should be granted so that these points may be considered en banc for the future administration of criminal justice in this circuit.

VI.

THE OPINION ON THE EVIDENCE.

1. The panel ignored the recent decision of United States v. Remington (1951, 2 Cir.), 191 F.2d 246, to the effect that in a case involving membership in the Communist Party the trial judge must, in his charge, "single out such 'overt acts' as furnish a rational basis for inferring what the accused thought constituted membership", and that unless the jury believed the testimony as to such facts, they cannot find the accused guilty.

---

[24] These are the Court's italics.

The panel recognized that the instructions here given to the effect that association, identity of views and so forth are not sufficient to constitute membership "had a practical significance" in this case, since "a very great volume of the testimony went no farther" than this and therefore "would fall short of proof of actual Communist Party membership." As "a very great volume of the testimony" was not competent to prove the charge,[25] the failure of the trial judge to instruct specifically on what was necessary to prove the charge was clear error.

The one instruction given on this subject compounded the error since it permitted the jury to find Communist Party membership "from all the evidence * * * direct as well as circumstantial" and thereby it undid what was sought to be attained in the earlier instruction and permitted a conviction upon testimony which "would not * * * suffice to furnish the required proof of Communist Party membership." Thus on the one hand the jury was told that evidence of association and so forth was not sufficient to make out a case, but on the other hand it was told that it could find Communist Party membership from "all the evidence".

The panel ignored the cases which have held that such conflicting instructions require a reversal.

Drossos v. United States (1924, 8 Cir.), 2 F. 2d 538;

---

[25] Incidentally, "a very great volume" of the opinion, dealing as it does with such association and identity of views, is similarly irrelevant and whether or not the jury or the reviewing panel regarded Bridges as a "fellow traveler" is not germane.

McFarland v. United States (1949, C.A., D.C.), 174 F.2d 538;

United States v. Donelly (1950, 7 Cir.), 179 F. 2d 227.

To correct this error of the panel it is necessary that the petition for rehearing be granted.

2. The panel conceded that all of the evidence with respect to the alleged conspiracy was circumstantial.[26] But the panel ignored the well established rule that a conviction on circumstantial evidence cannot be sustained in the presence of any hypothesis of innocence. It did not even discuss a most significant bit of evidence which demonstrates that at least as to one appellant, a hypothesis of innocence is not only tenable but is absolutely required.

The record reveals, from the testimony of the very first prosecution witness, that appellant Robertson, without any prior arrangement or understanding, was called in as a witness for Bridges at the very last moment because of the inability of another person (Paul Schmur) to qualify. This circumstance gives to the rule respecting "hypothesis of innocence" a "practical effect" in this case which is ignored by the panel.

To correct this error of the panel the petition for rehearing should be granted.

---

[26] We have already mentioned the inconsistency between Judge Stephens' affirmance of the trial Court's rejection of Bridges v. Wixon on the one hand, and Judge Pope's utilization of that decision as a "circumstance" which justified the verdict on this count.

VII.

THE REVOCATION OF CITIZENSHIP.

The panel misread the section under which the revocation order was entered. The panel failed to apply this section properly because it ignored its legislative history.

The section provides that upon conviction for "knowingly procuring naturalization in violation of law", revocation shall ensue. Since Bridges was not charged with that offense, but was charged with making a false statement in a naturalization proceeding, he cannot stand convicted for the offense upon which the revocation statute is based.

> "Conviction upon a charge not made would be a sheer denial of due process." (DeJonge v. Oregon [1937], 299 U.S. 353, 362.)

The statute is precise in defining the offense for which the added penalty of revocation is provided. The panel loosely transplants that penalty from one offense to another by saying, "All the elements of knowledge are present in the verdict of guilty." That is not the issue. The issue is: Did the verdict amount to a conviction of knowingly procuring naturalization in violation of law? The answer is obvious that it did not. It amounted at most to a conviction of making a false statement in a naturalization proceeding.

That there is a difference between the two is manifest from the legislative history. The Naturalization Act of March 3, 1903, 32 Stat. 1213, 1222, Section 39, contains separate sections dealing with the separate offenses and imposes the added penalty of revocation only for the offense of procuring naturalization in violation of law. This penalty is not imposed for the offense of giving false testimony in a naturalization proceeding.[27]

9344

If the panel had examined the statute carefully and looked at its legislative history it would have seen that a conviction for false swearing is not a conviction for knowingly procuring naturalization in violation of law, and that while automatic revocation may follow a conviction for the latter offense, it is not proper here, where there has been a conviction only for the former.

In order that this error be rectified and that the naturalization laws be properly administered in this circuit, the petition for rehearing should be granted.

VIII.

CONCLUSION.

We have sought to demonstrate in this petition how the panel which decided this case departed from well established principles of law not only with respect to the application of the statute of limitations but with respect to the proper administration of criminal justice and with respect to a proper evaluation of the evidence. We believe that all of the points assigned are well taken and that any one of them requires the full Court to reconsider the action of the panel.

---

[27] This distinction, with the limitation of the penalty to the one designated offense, is carried forward in the Naturalization Act of 1906 (34 Stat. 596, 603, Section 23) and in the Nationality Code of 1940 (8 U.S.C.A. [1940 ed.] 746[a]). The two offenses are now found in widely separated sections of the statute—one in Chapter 69 of Title 18 (18 U.S.C.A. 1425[a]), the other in Chapter 47 of Title 18 (18 U.S.C.A. 1015[a]).

To permit the judgment of the panel to stand will do a greater disservice to the administration of justice than it will do to the cause of these three appellants. By granting a rehearing in this case and overturning the judgment of the panel, the Court will demonstrate that Harry Bridges and his associates will receive the same treatment as all other persons at the hands of the American judiciary.

Dated, San Francisco, California,
October 3, 1952.

Respectfully submitted,
Gladstein, Andersen & Leonard,
Norman Leonard,
Attorneys for Appellants and Petitioners.

CERTIFICATE OF COUNSEL.

I hereby certify that I am of counsel for appellants and petitioners in the above entitled cause and that in my judgment the foregoing petition for rehearing and application that petition for rehearing be heard en banc is well founded in point of law as well as in fact and that said petition is not interposed for delay.

Dated, San Francisco, California,
October 3, 1952.

NORMAN LEONARD,
Of Counsel for Appellants and Petitioners.

[Title of Court of Appeals and Cause.]

Before: Stephens, Bone and Pope,
Circuit Judges.

ORDER OF AMENDMENT

For good cause our opinion in the above-entitled case which was filed September 6, 1952, is hereby ordered amended as follows, to wit:

Add a footnote numbered 2a after the word "oath" appearing in the fifth line from the top of page 3 of the printed slip sheet. Footnote 2a is to read as follows:

> "In reading the authorities which follow, it is necessary to keep in mind that Bridges was not charged with the crime of perjury but was charged with the separate offense of having fraudulently made a false statement under oath in his naturalization proceedings."

Strike from the opinion all which appears under the subtitle "The Saving Clause in the Repeal of Offenses Charged in Counts II and III" beginning on page 7 of the printed slip sheet, and substitute instead the following:

"On June 25, 1948, Title 18 of the United States Code, entitled 'Crimes and Criminal Procedure' was enacted and became effective law as of September 1, 1948 (Act of June 25, 1948, 62 Stat. 683). By the adoption of the code the criminal laws of the nation, so far as practical, were brought together in orderly manner through the method of simultaneous repeal and reenactment by Congress. By the new code the section of the Nationality Act of 1940 (Title 8 U.S.C.A. §746 (a) (1)) under which Count II of the indictment in suit was laid, was brought into the new code as §1015 (a) of Title 18, and in the same manner the section of the Nationality Act (Title 8 U.S.C.A. §746 (a) (5)) under which Count III of the indictment in suit was laid, was brought into the new code as §1425 of Title 18, with some change in phraseology not important in this case.

"However, the June 25, 1948, Act provided by §21 thereof the following:

> " 'The sections or parts thereof of the Revised Statutes or Statutes at Large enumerated in the following schedule are hereby repealed. Any rights or liabilities now existing under such sections or parts thereof shall not be affected by this repeal.' [Emphasis ours.]

"The sections of the laws under which Counts II and III were laid are enumerated in the schedule. It is clear, therefore, that the laws under which the charges in this case were laid continued effectively until the then existing rights or liabilities were extinguished by the running of a statute of limitations or otherwise.

"The Nationality Act contained a section which provided for a five-year limitation (Title 8 U.S.C.A. §746 (g)), upon the institution of criminal proceedings for offenses defined therein. That section was included in the schedule of repealed sections but it was not carried over into the new code; instead an omnibus section of the new code included the limitation applicable to the offenses in suit. The section reads:

> "'§3282. Except as otherwise expressly provided by law, no person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense, not capital, unless the indictment is found or the information is instituted within three years next after such offense shall have been committed.' (Title 18 U.S.C.A., §3282, Act of June 25, 1948, c. 645, 62 Stat. 828.)

"It is apparent that if the five-year limitation in the old Nationality Act (Title 8 U.S.C.A. §746 (g)) remained effective through the provision in the repealing and reenacting Act, both Counts II and III were laid in time under it. It remained effective if the reservation of 'rights or liabilities' preserved the limitation, as well as the substantive offenses then existing, as to offenses which had been committed prior to the effective date of the new code. The trial court held that the limitation was preserved and the government supports the holding.

"Keeping in mind the remedial purpose of the revisors, and Congress, we think the Saving Clause cannot be given the broad effect claimed for it by the government. What was done, as we have said, was the transfer of laws relating to crime into one code of laws. The offenses charged in Counts II and III were so transferred, and in order that no doubt should arise as to their effective continuity from their original setting to the new one the Saving Clause was added. The revisors saw no reason for the period of five years for instituting prosecution for violation of the offenses defined in the Nationality Act and shorter periods for certain other offenses. Therefore, they did not move the five-year limitation section into the new code and did not continue it as law, as they did the sections defining the offenses under which Counts II and III were laid. Instead, they fixed the limitation period at three years through the operation of the omnibus section. Of course, statutes of limitations are at all times subject to change, though change never revives a right against which a limitation has entirely run.

"The legislation was skillfully drawn to prevent the nullification of prosecutions already begun by providing for continuity of the offenses through the revision and to prevent an effective amnesty as to violations more than three and less than five years old by postponing the effective date long enough for the government to act under the old five-year limitation.

"We hold that the statute of limitations of five years for violations of offenses under the Nationality Act yielded to the three-year provision as of the effective date of the revision.

"Appellants suggest in their brief that the revision, including the Saving Clause, was intended to apply only to prosecutions already instituted. The tenor of what we have already written shows that we disagree and the reasons for disagreement.

"Consistent with the purpose of the revision the revisors moved the Wartime Suspension Act, old Title 18 U.S.C. §590 (a), into the new code as §3287 of Title 18 U.S.C.A. We turn to the consideration of that statute and to whether it effected the suspension of the running of the three-year statute of limitations."

The opinion is further amended by adding to the paragraph beginning on page 16 and ending on page 17 of the printed slip sheet the following:

> "And the conclusions reached were based upon the court's own conclusions that the Noveck, McElvain and Scharton cases hold that the Suspension Act then in force did not apply to non-pecuniary frauds; hence the present Suspension Act does not. We have analyzed the cases referred to and we think the court's conclusions in Marzani on this point are not justified."

The opinion is further amended by striking the subheads "Count I" and "Counts II and III" and all that appears thereunder on pages 18 and 19 of the printed slip sheet and inserting instead the following:

> "Since fraud against the United States or any agency thereof was an ingredient of each one of the offenses charged and such fraud was not required to be of a pecuniary nature, the Wartime Suspension Act applies and the statute of limitations had not entirely run against any count of the indictment when it was returned."

/s/ ALBERT LEE STEPHENS,
/s/ HOMER T. BONE,
/s/ WALTER L. POPE,
United States Circuit Judges.

United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit

No. 12,597

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT and J. R. ROBERTSON, Appellants,
vs.
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Appellee.

Sept. 6, 1952

Appeals from the United States District Court, Northern District of California, Southern Division

Before: Stephens, Bone, and Pope,
Circuit Judges.

Stephens, Circuit Judge.

OPINIONS AND CONCURRING OPINION

(As Amended Nov. 18, 1952)

On the 25th day of May, 1949, a single indictment was returned by a United States Grand Jury charging Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt, and J. R. Robertson with the crime of conspiracy to fraudulently secure Bridges' naturalization (Count I; 18 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] §88, now 18 U.S.C. [1948 Rev.] §371); charging Bridges with the crime of knowingly making a false statement under oath relating to his naturalization proceedings (Count II; 8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] §746a, now 18 U.S.C. [1948 Rev.] §1015(a)); charging Schmidt and Robertson each with the crime of fraudulently aiding and abetting an alien (Bridges) to procure naturalization (Count III; 8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] §746(a)(5)). All of the charges contained in the indictment were submitted together to a jury which returned verdicts of guilty against each defendant as charged in each count; judgment and sentence followed; and each defendant appeals on numerous grounds as to each judgment.[1]

Count I.

Count I is laid under Title 18 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] §88, (now 18 U.S.C. [1948 Rev.] §371) in which

---

[1] Bridges was sentenced to:
two years imprisonment on Count I of the indictment and five years on Count II of the indictment, commencing and running concurrently.

Schmidt was sentenced to:
two years imprisonment on Count I of the indictment and two years on Count III of the indictment, commencing and running concurrently.

Robertson was sentenced to:
two years imprisonment on Count I of the indictment and two years on Count III of the indictment, commencing and running concurrently.

Bridges, Schmidt and Robertson were charged with having conspired together to secure the naturalization of Bridges, an alien, by fraudulently representing that he had never belonged to the Communist Party of the United States. The applicable statute is as follows:

> §88. "If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each of the parties to such conspiracy shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both."

The texts of the Count, and the alleged overt acts, are set out in the margin.[2]

---

[2] Count I: "The Grand Jury charges: That Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt, and J. R. Robertson (hereinafter called 'said defendants') on or about the 23rd day of June, 1945, and continuing thereafter until on or about October 1, 1945, and for some time prior thereto, the exact time being to the Grand Jury unknown, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, within said Division and District, did conspire with each other, and with divers other persons to the Grand Jury unknown, to defraud the United States by impairing, obstructing and defeating the proper administration of its naturalization laws, in the manner following, to wit: By having said defendant Harry Renton Bridges fraudulently petition for and obtain naturalization in a naturalization proceeding in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, by falsely and fraudulently stating and representing to the said Court in said proceeding numbered 28152 in the records of said Superior Court, that he, said defendant Harry Renton Bridges, had never belonged to the Communist Party in the United States; that said statement and representation so agreed to be made, and made, as aforesaid, as said defendants, and each of them at all times herein mentioned well knew, were false and fraudulent in this, that said defendant Harry Renton Bridges had in truth and in fact belonged to and been a member of the Communist Party in the United States from the year 1933 up to and including said 17th day of September, 1945; that said statement and representation were material to said naturalization proceeding.

Count II.

Count II is laid under Section 346 of the Nationality Act of 1940, c. 876, 54 Stat. 1137, 1163, Title 8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] §746(a)(1), (now 18 U.S.C. [1948 Rev.] §1015(a)), in which Bridges, alone, is charged with having fraudulently made a false

---

"That in pursuance of such conspiracy, and during the existence thereof, and in furtherance, and to effect the objects thereof, said defendants, respectively, did and performed the following overt acts:

"1. On the 23rd day of June, 1945, defendant Harry Renton Bridges filed at the office of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, in the City of San Francisco, State of California, an application for a Certificate of Arrival and preliminary form for petition for naturalization.

"2. On or about the 8th day of August, 1945, said defendant Harry Renton Bridges appeared before Lloyd H. Garner, a Naturalization Examiner of the United States, at San Francisco, State of California, in the office of the County Clerk in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and gave testimony in the matter of the application of statement under oath[3] in his naturalization proceedings in the Superior Court of California, as follows:

> Question by the Court to Mr. Bridges: "Do you now, or have you ever, belonged to the Communist Party of the United States?"
>
> Answer by Mr. Bridges: "I have not; I do not."

The applicable statute is as follows:

> 8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] §746(a). It is hereby made a felony for any alien or other person, whether an applicant for naturalization or citizenship, or otherwise, and whether an em-said defendant Harry Renton Bridges for naturalization.

---

"3. On or about the 8th day of August, 1945, said defendants Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, and each of them, at the office of the County Clerk in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, signed as witnesses a petition for naturalization in the case of defendant Harry Renton Bridges.

"4. On or about the 17th day of September, 1945, said defendants Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt, and J. R. Robertson, and each of them, appeared in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and gave testimony in support of the petition of defendant Harry Renton Bridges for naturalization."

---

[3] In reading the authorities which follow, it is necessary to keep in mind that Bridges was not charged with the crime of perjury but was charged with the separate offense of having fraudulently made a false statement under oath in his naturalization proceedings.

ployee of the Government of the United States or not——

"(1) Knowingly to make a false statement under oath, either orally or in writing, in any case, proceeding, or matter relating to, or under, or by virtue of any law of the United States relating to naturalization or citizenship."

The text of the Count II is set out in the margin.[4]

---

[4] Count II: "The Grand Jury further charges: That on the 17th day of September, 1945, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, Honorable Thomas M. Foley, Superior Judge, presiding, there came on for hearing a naturalization proceeding, numbered 28152 in the records of said Superior Court, on the petition of defendant Harry Renton Bridges for naturalization under the Nationality Act of October 14, 1940; that defendant Harry Renton Bridges then and there was called and produced as a witness in said proceeding then on for hearing, and took an oath before said Court that he, the said defendant, would testify truly in said proceeding, and said Court then and there had competent authority to administer said oath, and did administer it; that defendant Harry Renton Bridges did then and there wilfully and knowingly make a false statement under oath in certain matters which were material to the issues of said proceeding then and there being heard, giving the following answers to questions asked, to wit:

"'Q. Do you now, or have you ever, belonged to the Communist Party in the United States?

"'A. I have not; I do not.'

That said answers so stated and testified to by

Count III.

Count III is laid under Section 346 of the Nationality Act of 1940, c. 876, 54 Stat. 1137, 1163, Title 8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] §746(a)(5). In this Count Schmidt and Robertson are accused of knowingly encouraging, aiding, advising, and assisting Bridges to secure his naturalization through fraud. The applicable statute is as follows:

> 8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] §746(a). "It is hereby made a felony for any alien or other person, whether an applicant for naturalization or citizenship, or otherwise, and whether an employee of the Government of the United States or not— * * *
>
> "(5) To encourage, aid, advise, or assist any person not entitled thereto to obtain, accept, or receive any certificate of arrival, declaration of intention, certificate of naturaliza-

---

defendant Harry Renton Bridges were, and each of them was, as said defendant then and there knew, wilfully false and contrary to his said oath, and said defendant did not then and there believe said answers, or any of them, to be true, and the said answers were, and each of them was, then and there believed and known by him to be false.

"That in truth and in fact said defendant at the time of so testifying belonged to and was a member of the Communist Party in the United States, and had belonged to and been a member of said Communist Party in the United States from 1933 up to and including said 17th day of September, 1945.

"That said statement and testimony of said defendant, and said answers given by him as aforesaid, were upon a material matter, and were material in and to the issues of said proceeding."

tion or certificate of citizenship, or other documentary evidence of naturalization or of citizenship——

"(a) Knowing the same to have been procured by fraud; * * *."

The text of the Count is set out in the margin.[5]

The Statute of Limitations

The acts which are the bases of the charges were performed within the period intervening between

---

[5] Count III: "The Grand Jury further charges: That said defendants Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on or about the 17th day of September, 1945, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, within said Division and District, did wilfully and knowingly encourage, aid, advise and assist a person, to wit, Harry Renton Bridges, not then and there entitled thereto, to obtain, accept and receive a Certificate of Naturalization, which was to be procured, and was procured by fraud, as said defendants, and each of them, at all times herein mentioned well knew, said fraud consisting of false and fraudulent statements and representations made in a naturalization proceeding before the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco, numbered 28152 in the records of said Superior Court, and said Harry Renton Bridges did not belong to the Communist Party in the United States and had never belonged to the Communist Party in the United States, whereas in truth and in fact said Harry Renton Bridges then and there, as said defendants Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, and each of them, then and there well knew, belonged to and was a member of the Communist Party in the United States, and had belonged to and been a member of said Communist Party in the United States from 1933 up to and including said 17th day of September, 1945."

June 23 to October 1, 1945, and since the indictment was returned on May 25, 1949, the three year period provided by the general statute of limitations,[6] within which prosecutions could legally be instituted, had expired and the judgments must be reversed and the indictment dismissed if the prosecution is limited to such period.

The government thinks the prosecution is not so limited because the Congress, aware of the difficulty of prosecuting frauds committed against the government during wartime, enacted the so-called wartime Suspension Act[7] which provided that the three-year period would not begin to run until cessation of war hostilities had been officially proclaimed.

Appellants are of the opinion that neither one of the alleged offenses is a fraud against the gov-

---

[6] Act of June 25, 1948, c. 645, 62 Stat. 828, Title 18 U.S.C. §3282:
Offenses Not Capital.

> "Except as otherwise expressly provided by law, no person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense, not capital, unless the indictment is found or the information is instituted within three years next after such offense shall have been committed."

[7] Act of June 25, 1948, c. 645, 62 Stat. 828, Title 18 U.S.C. §3287:
Wartime Suspension of Limitations.

> "When the United States is at war the running of any statute of limitations applicable to any offense (1) involving fraud or attempted fraud against the United States or any agency thereof in any manner, whether by conspiracy or not, or (2) committed in connection with the acquisition, care, handling, custody, control or ernment cognizable by the Suspension Act, and therefore institution of the prosecution for these offenses was not extended by it.

The first count of the indictment is under the substantive offense of conspiracy, and the second and third counts are offenses defined in the statute commonly referred to as the Nationality Act of 1940. The government is of the opinion that the statute of limitations of five years provided in the Nationality Act of 1940[8] applies to Counts II and III independently of the general statute of limitations, and the Suspension Act, while appellants claim that it does not apply and that the general statute of limitations of three years is the applica-> disposition of any real or personal property of the United States, or (3) committed in connection with the negotiation, procurement, award, performance, payment for, interim financing, cancelation, or other termination or settlement, of any contract, subcontract, or purchase order which is connected with or related to the prosecution of the war, or with any disposition of termination inventory by any war contractor or Government agency, shall be suspended until three years after the termination of hostilities as proclaimed by the President or by a concurrent resolution of Congress. * * *."

---

[8] Nationality Act of 1940, Section 346 (g), c. 876, 54 Stat. 1137, 1167, Title 8 U.S.C. §746 (g) [1946 ed.]: Statute of Limitations.

> "No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any crime arising under the provisions of this chapter unless the indictment is found or the information is filed within five years next after the commission of such crime."

ble limitation, we shall go immediately to the consideration of the latter problem.

The Saving Clause in the Repeal of Offenses Charged in Counts II and III

On June 25, 1948, Title 18 of the United States Code, entitled "Crimes and Criminal Procedure" was enacted and became effective law as of September 1, 1948, (Act of June 25, 1948, 62 Stat. 683). By the adoption of the code the criminal laws of the nation, so far as practical, were brought together in orderly manner through the method of simultaneous repeal and reenactment by Congress. By the new code the section of the Nationality Act of 1940 (Title 8 U.S.C.A. §746(a)(1) under which Count II of the indictment in suit was laid, was brought into the new code as §1015(a) of Title 18, and in the same manner the section of the Nationality Act (Title 8 U.S.C.A. §746(a)(5)) under which Count III of the indictment in suit was laid, was brought into the new code as §1425 of Title 18, with some change in phraseology not important in this case.

However, the June 25, 1948, Act provided by §21 thereof the following:

> "The sections or parts thereof of the Revised Statutes or Statutes at Large enumerated in the following schedule are hereby repealed. Any rights or liabilities now existing under such sections or parts thereof shall not be affected by this repeal." [Emphasis ours.]

The sections of the laws under which Counts II and III were laid are enumerated in the schedule. It is clear, therefore, that the laws under which the charges in this case were laid continued effectively until the then existing rights or liabilities were extinguished by the running of a statute of limitations or otherwise.

The Nationality Act contained a section which provided for a five-year limitation, (Title 8 U.S.C.A. §746(g), upon the institution of criminal proceedings for offenses defined therein. That section was included in the schedule of repealed sections but it was not carried over into the new code; instead an omnibus section of the new code included the limitation applicable to the offenses in suit. The section reads:

> "§3282. Except as otherwise expressly provided by law, no person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense, not capital, unless the indictment is found or the information is instituted within three years next after such offense shall have been committed." (Title 18 U.S.C.A., §3282, Act of June 25, 1948, c. 645, 62 Stat. 828.)

It is apparent that if the five-year limitation in the old Nationality Act (Title 8 U.S.C.A. §746(g)) remained effective through the provision in the repealing and reenacting Act, both Counts II and III were laid in time under it. It remained effective if the reservation of "rights or liabilities" preserved the limitation, as well as the substantive offenses then existing, as to offenses which had been committed prior to the effective date of the new code. The trial court held that the limitation was preserved and the government supports the holding.

Keeping in mind the remedial purpose of the revisors, and Congress, we think the Saving Clause cannot be given the broad effect claimed for it by the government. What was done, as we have said, was the transfer of laws relating to crime into one code of laws. The offenses charged in Counts II and III were so transferred, and in order that no doubt should arise as to their effective continuity from their original setting to the new one the Saving Clause was added. The revisors saw no reason for the period of five years for instituting prosecution for violation of the offenses defined in the Nationality Act and shorter periods for certain other offenses. Therefore, they did not move the five-year limitation section into the new code and did not continue it as law, as they did the sections defining the offenses under which Counts II and III were laid. Instead, they fixed the limitation period at three years through the operation of the omnibus section. Of course, statutes of limitations are at all times subject to change, though change never revives a right against which a limitation has entirely run.

The legislation was skillfully drawn to prevent the nullification of prosecutions already begun by providing for continuity of the offenses through the revision and to prevent an effective amnesty as to violations more than three and less than five years old by postponing the effective date long enough for the government to act under the old five-year limitation.

We hold that the statute of limitations of five years for violations of offenses under the Nationality Act yielded to the three-year provision as of the effective date of the revision.

Appellants suggest in their brief that the revision, including the Saving Clause, was intended to apply only to prosecutions already instituted. The tenor of what we have already written shows that we disagree and the reasons for disagreement.

Consistent with the purpose of the revision the revisors moved the wartime Suspension Act, old Title 18 U.S.C. §590(a), into the new code as §3287 of Title 18 U.S.C.A. We turn to the consideration of that statute and to whether it effected the suspension of the running of the three-year statute of limitations.

The Applicability of the Wartime Suspension Act

The Wartime Suspension Act (62 Stat. 828) is cast in three numbered classes. The government views class (1), which suspends the running of the general limitation statute until proclamation of cessation of hostilities as to offenses "involving fraud or attempted fraud against the United States or any agency thereof in any manner, whether by conspiracy or not * * * ," as covering frauds to obtain rights and privileges from the government or which obstruct the government or its agencies in the due execution of law. And pecuniary[9] loss to the government is not a necessary element. Classes (2) and (3) apply to frauds against the government or a government agency in specific instances which involve pecuniary loss to the government.

Appellants, opposing the government's view, seek to apply the rule of ejusdem generis to the Act and argue that since classes (2) and (3) refer to frauds of the same nature, class (1) is limited to frauds of the same nature. We pass this contention by quoting from United States vs. Gilliland, 1941, 312 U.S. 86, 93:

> "'The rule of "ejusdem generis" is applied as an aid in ascertaining the intention of the legislature, not to subvert it when ascertained.'"

Appellants also argue that the legislative history supports the view that only pecuniary frauds were contemplated by the Congress. We think the government's view of the Act is supported by the face of the Act and that no ambiguity is present which requires reference to the legislative history. However, we think the history, some of which we set out in the margin,[10] does not support appellant's view.

---

[9] For facility of expression in this opinion, we have expanded the meaning of the word "pecuniary" to include any and all property of value.

---

[10] House and Senate Reports (No. 2051, House Misc. Rep. III, and No. 1544, Senate Misc. Rep. IV, accompanying the bill which became the Act

We shall proceed to look at the case authorities. But before doing so, it is well to have in mind that not every fraud against the government, whether inherently pecuniary or otherwise, comes within the effect of the Suspension Act. There are offenses for which specific statutes of limitation apply and there are offenses which encompass acts inherently fraudulent as to the government but in which the

---

of August 24, 1942, 56 Stat. 747, and which, when amended in 1944 became the Act here considered) referred to the need for time "to investigate, discover, and gather evidence to prosecute frauds against the Government." It alluded to the gigantic war program, to the fact that "[h]uge sums of money" were "being expended for materials and equipment," that these dealings would no doubt present opportunities for unscrupulous persons "to defraud the Government or some agency." These allusions suggest fraud causing pecuniary losses. On the other hand, the same report mentions the fact that "[t]he law-enforcement branch of the Government is also busily engaged in its many duties, including the enforcement of the espionage, sabotage, and other laws." This suggests that these agencies were currently too busy with war problems to be able to devote the time necessary to discover frauds against the Government, a condition which would be true of one character of fraud as another.

American Stevedores v. Porello, 1947, 330 U.S. 446, 451-2, demonstrates that when a statement made in Congress during the pendency of a bill mentions but one purpose to be served by an enactment of language broad enough to accomplish other purposes as well, it cannot be assumed, in the absence of express limitations in the enactment, that it was not intended to serve the other purposes as well.

It appears to us that the legislative history is too equivocal to be determinative here.

fraud is not an ingredient and need not be proved. The Suspension Act does not apply in such circumstances if the decisions relative to the provisos considered in Noveck, McElvain and Scharton, hereinafter cited, are to rule. See our note 15a.

The Case Authorities

United States vs. Gottfried, 1948, 2 Cir., 165 F. 2d 360: Gottfried and others were involved in frauds to obtain more sugar than their legal ration. Gottfried and his corporation were indicted for making a fraudulent statement, and Gottfried and two others were indicted for conspiracy to defraud the government. The specific fraud alleged was that the government should be deprived of the services of one of its enforcement officers in order to accomplish the illegal purpose. No mention was made as to any pecuniary loss of the government. The court said in part, at page 368:

> "The argument [by appellants]—drawn from the Congressional debates—is that this language should be confined to frauds of those who contracted with the United States or supplied it with materials, and that it does not include interference even though fraudulent which results in no pecuniary loss. Textually, this reasoning has nothing to commend it, except so far as the word, 'fraud,' may imply pecuniary loss; and, whatever might be said as a new matter for so circumscribing that word, it has been the law, at least since 1910, that in the statute [§80, Title 18 U.S.C.A.]

> under which this indictment was drawn, 'fraud' includes any conduct 'calculated to obstruct or impair its' (the United States') 'efficiency and destroy the value of its operations and reports.' [Haas vs. Henkel, 1910, 216 U.S. 462, 479].[11] We see no reason for reading the words 'defrauding the United States' in the statute of limitations now in question less comprehensively; certainly there was not enough ground for that in the debates of Congress. Besides, the purpose of the amendment was not to let crimes pass unpunished which had been committed in the hurly-burly of war, an over-riding motive which perfectly fits the situation at bar."

We are in accord with these expressions.

Following World War I there was in effect a proviso to the statute of limitations which was to some extent the prototype of the Wartime Suspension Act. It is therefore useful to approach the scope of the present Act through decisions made under the former Act.

---

[11] The court in Gottfried was referring to the following found in Haas v. Henkel, 1910, 216 U.S. 462, 479:

"The statute is broad enough in its terms to include any conspiracy for the purpose of impairing, obstructing, or defeating the lawful function of any department of the government * * *. That it is not essential to charge or prove an actual financial or property loss to make a case under the statute has been more than once ruled [citing many cases]."

United States vs. Noveck, 1926, 271 U.S. 201: In this case the government was contending that the acts of defendant, the basis of the charge of perjury against him, were inherently fraudulent and therefore a proviso suspending the statute of limitations was applicable. But the court held otherwise, giving the reason for its holding that fraud is not an ingredient of perjury, that perjury can be proved without proof of fraud, and that the proviso to the statute of limitations applies only to those cases in which fraud is an ingredient. The court went on to say that otherwise the same period of limtation would not apply to all offenses of perjury. Those in which the government was defrauded would be under the proviso and all others would be under the general statute of limitations.

As we have already seen, the basic reason for the decision in United States vs. Noveck, supra, was that the proviso to the statute of limitations then in effect applied only to crimes in which fraud against the government or any agency thereof is an ingredient and is a necessary element of proof. That is, since the crime in Noveck was perjury, a crime which may be proved independently of or in the absence of fraud against the government, fraud against the government is an immaterial incident.

United States vs. McElvain, 1926, 272 U.S. 633: The indictment was laid under Criminal Code §37 (35 Stat. 1088-1096) and the charge was conspiracy to defraud the United States in respect of its income tax. The general statute of limitations (§1044) for criminal offenses was three years and under a proviso to it the period within which the indictment could be returned as to certain offenses was six years. The government claimed that the proviso was applicable to the charge laid, but the defense thought not. The trial court and the Supreme Court held that the general statute of limitations without the proviso was applicable. For clarity, we shall refer to the section, minus the proviso, as the "main part." Section 1044, complete with proviso, is quoted in note [12].

The opinion of the Supreme Court in United States vs. McElvain, supra, is not easy reading and has had various constructions. Without very careful study it mistakenly appears that an inconsistency or miscitation of statutory section has crept into it. The court, it will be observed, says at page 639:

> "The crime of conspiracy to commit an offense is distinct from the offense itself," meaning of course that conspiracy is one crime and the performance of the illegal acts planned or "involved" in the conspiracy constitutes another distinct or, according to the court, "substantial" crime.[13]

---

[12] Rev. Stats. §1044: "No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense, not capital, except as provided in section 1046, unless the indictment is found, or the information is instituted, within three years next after such offense shall have been committed: Provided, however, That in offenses involving the defrauding or attempts to defraud the United States or any agency thereof, whether by conspiracy or not, and in any manner, and now indictable under any existing statutes, the period of limitation shall be six years. This Act shall apply to acts, offenses, or transactions where

The proviso cannot relate to any offense not within the terms of the main part of the statute because the proviso is an excepting clause to the rule or law laid down in the main part. Without the proviso, the main part of the statute by its terms covers every offense except capital offenses and offenses arising from the revenue laws. The excepting clause (the proviso) takes all offenses, covered by the main part which "involve" fraud against the United States or its agencies, out of the three-year limitation and fixes instead thereof a six-year limitation.

The case is dealing with an offense of conspiracy but, says the court (page 639),

> "The language of the proviso cannot reasonably be read to include all conspiracies as defined by §37 [because the proviso contains the words 'whether by conspiracy or not' which establishes that it is the substantive offense or the object of the conspiracy which determines the scope of the proviso]. * * * [O]bviously it the existing statute of limitations has not yet fully run, but this proviso shall not apply to acts, offenses, or transactions which are already barred by the provisions of existing laws." 42 Stat. 220; see also Title 18 U.S.C.A. §582 (1927 ed.).

---

---

[13] See also Glasser v. United States, 1942, 315 U.S. 60, 66.

> [the proviso] would be limited to those [conspiracies] to commit the substantive offenses which it [the main part] covers"

or, in the language of the proviso, which it "involves." The substantive offense to the conspiracy charged in the McElvain case is not covered or involved in the main part but by specific language it is excluded therefrom. But no "distinct" offense of conspiracy is excluded from coverage of the main part. It follows that the offense charged is within the terms of the main part and not within the excepting part—the proviso. All the rest of the opinion is intended to explain the reasonableness of the decision and the evident intent of Congress but, unfortunately, rather acts to confuse. See note [13a].

Under the doctrine of the McElvain case it is clear that since Count I of our case concerns conspiracy, the substantive offense of which is not excluded from the main part of the applicable statute of limitations, the proviso would apply.[14] The decision and opinion in United States v. McElvain, supra, is not authority for excluding our Count I from the Suspension Act.

[13a] The gist of counsel's argument, which the court approved, was (p. 636): "If the proviso in the amendment of §1044 does not include within its terms frauds existing under the Revenue Act, then necessarily such proviso does not include conspiracies to commit frauds on the Government under the Revenue Act."

---

[14] See Miller v. United States, 1928, 24 F. 2d 353; Falter v. United States, 1928, 23 F. 2d 420.

United States v. Scharton, 1932, 285 U.S. 518: The statute of limitations with which Scharton was concerned was §1110(a) of the Revenue Act of 1926, applying specifically to offenses under the revenue laws. Differing from McElvain, the indictment was not for conspiracy, but for violating a "substantive" revenue law and was within the main part of the applicable statute of limitations. There was a proviso to the applicable statute of limitations, §1110(a), similar to the proviso in McElvain, hence, under the McElvain reasoning the offense was not taken out of the main part. But the proviso was held not to apply because of the principle announced in United States v. Noveck, supra, that fraud against the United States or any agency thereof was not an ingredient of the offense charged. The court sought to find the intent of Congress and in doing so called attention to the fact that the proviso was an excepting clause and therefore was to be strictly construed. The section under which the charge is made, §1114(b), makes an attempt to evade any tax under the Revenue Act of 1926, an offense without the mention of fraud. "There are, however, numerous statutes expressly making intent to defraud an element of a specified offense against the revenue laws." United States v. Scharton, supra, at page 521. Hence, under the Noveck doctrine, the proviso applies only to offenses which encompass fraud as an ingredient.

The statute under which our Count II is laid, 8 U.S.C. §746(a)(1), has no specific mention of fraud and it can be argued from this fact that the Suspension Act would not be applicable thereto. However, we think the Suspension Act does apply for the reason we shall now set forth. The charge in Scharton was that the accused had made attempts to evade income taxes and the statutory offense, §1114(b), Revenue Act of 1926, made attempts to wilfully evade or defeat the tax, a felony. There is no specific mention of fraud in the statute defining the offense charged, and the proviso as we have seen is made applicable only to "offenses involving the defrauding or attempt to defraud the United States or any agency thereof," et cetera.

If the cited case must be construed to mean that "fraud" must be spelled out literally in the statute, then logically we must hold that the Suspension Act does not apply to Count II, for although fraud is specifically charged in the indictment, fraud is not specifically mentioned in the statute defining the offense under which the charge is laid.

We think we are not driven to this extreme conclusion. Noveck, McElvain, and Scharton do not foreclose the holding that where the very terms of a statutory offense require proof which necessarily involves fraud or attempted fraud against the United States or an agency thereof, and there is no special Act inconsistent therewith such as is found in McElvain and Scharton, the Suspension Act applies. After all, the Congress was enacting the Suspension Act to preserve the government's right to prosecute those who had tried, successfully or not, to defraud it during the war. It does not seem to be in harmony with Congressional intent nor does it seem otherwise necessary to construe the Noveck doctrine so strictly that it excepts the extension or suspension of statute of limitations from applying to acts which come directly under the offense and which cannot be committed without thereby committing fraud against the United States or an agency thereof. In the circumstances prosecutions under the same statutory offense could not be limited in one case to a certain period and to another period in another case—a strong point in Noveck. Both McElvain and Scharton were controlled by special statutes covering the revenue laws. The trial court held to the view we have suggested and the government adheres to it. We think it is supported by reason and therefore we are not constrained to broaden the Scharton holding to include the instant case. All we have said on this point is but a roundabout way of saying that fraud is an ingredient of the offense charged. Such in effect was the holding in Knauer v. United States, 1946, 328 U.S. 654. Hence, we hold that the Suspension Act applies to Count II of the indictment. We have already shown that the Saving Clause applies.

Since our Count III does specifically include fraud as an ingredient of the offense charged, it seems obvious that the Suspension Act applies and, for the reasons already given, the Saving Clause applies.

Marzani v. United States, 1948, (C.A., D. Columbia) 168 F. 2d 133: Appellant Marzani was indicted in 1947, tried, convicted, and sentenced for having made false and fraudulent statements in a matter within the jurisdiction of an agency of the United States government in violation of §80 of Title 18 U.S.C.A. (The False Claims Act). Factually, he was charged with having given false answers to questions as to whether he had ever been a member of the Communist Party, ever attended their meetings, etc. The general three-year statute of limitations had run before the indictment was returned and it would have to be dismissed unless the Suspension Act, hereinbefore considered, was effective. The court, after discussing Noveck, McElvain, Scharton, and Gilliland, supra, concluded that the Suspension Act did not apply to the False Claims Act. It gave as its reasons that the False Claims Act did not involve pecuniary frauds, whereas the Suspension Act applied only to offenses which involved pecuniary frauds against the government. We cannot agree with the reasoning in the Marzani opinion, nor consequently with the conclusions reached. And the conclusions reached were based upon the court's own conclusions that the Noveck, McElvain and Scharton cases hold that the Suspension Act then in force did not apply to non-pecuniary frauds; hence the present Suspension Act does not. We have analyzed the cases referred to and we think the court's conclusions in Marzani on this point are not justified.

It is true that Gilliland held that the False Claims Act was not restricted to matters in which the government was defrauded in a pecuniary or financial sense. But, while each of the three cases—Noveck, McElvain, and Scharton—was a case involving pecuniary loss, none of these cases held that the proviso could be invoked only when the government had been defrauded in a pecuniary manner. The Suspension Act applies to every offense "involving fraud or attempted fraud against the United States." The word fraud as defined by the Supreme Court in Haas v. Henkel, 1910, 216 U.S. 462, 479, means the "impairing, obstructing or defeating [of] the lawful function of any department of Government." Gilliland reaffirmed Haas v. Henkel by holding that since Congress had removed the words "cheating and swindling" from the False Claims Act, Congress had in effect declared that a fraud need not be pecuniary in nature in order to be covered by the False Claims Act.[15] We therefore conclude that the Suspension Act applies to every offense involving fraud against the government whether pecuniary or not.

Appellants argue that since the Suspension Act applies to fraud "in any manner," whereas the conspiracy statute applies to fraud "in any manner or for any purpose," the two Acts refer to different types of frauds. In their argument they concede that the definition of fraud in the conspiracy statute applies both to pecuniary frauds and to frauds which obstruct the government in its lawful functions. However, they urge that the absence of the words "or for any purpose" in the reference to fraud in the Suspension Act confines the scope of that Act to pecuniary frauds. They rely upon the Cohn case (see our footnote 15, supra) for the conclusion reached. The Cohn case held that the term "fraud" in the False Claims Act, before its 1934 amendment, applied only to pecuniary frauds. However, a careful reading of the Cohn case, and the Gilliland case, shows that fraud in the Cohn case included those of a pecuniary nature only because it (fraud) was coupled with the words "cheating and swindling." And that once the words "cheating and swindling" were deleted, the word fraud, standing alone and without any help from the phrase "for any purpose," was held to extend to all frauds whether pecuniary or not. United States v. Gilliland, 1941, 312 U.S. 86. See note [15a].

---

[15] In United States v. Cohn, 1926, 270 U.S. 339, the Supreme Court had held that since the False Claims Act, Criminal Code §35, 18 U.S.C.A. §80 (1927 ed.) as it then read, applied to false claims made "with the intent of cheating and swindling or defrauding the Government of the United States" [emphasis ours], it related only to pecuniary frauds. However, §35 was amended June 18, 1934, 48 Stats. 996, by deleting the words "cheating and swindling."

[15a] The foregoing discussion as to the application of the Suspension Act to the offenses involved in this case is under the assumption that the proviso to the statute of limitations covering frauds against the United States during the first World War is in all respects the prototype of the present Suspension Act, and that the Supreme Court decisions under the proviso apply as well to the Suspension Act. We think there is reason for a different view.

In the Noveck, McElvain and Scharton cases the Supreme Court was dealing with provisos added to specific limitation acts. In each case the court gave the proviso a strict construction. This was primarily because they were enacted as provisos. We think the fact that the Suspension Act is cast in a

We conclude as follows:

Since fraud against the United States or any agency thereof was an ingredient of each one of the offenses charged and such fraud was not required to be of a pecuniary nature, the Wartime Suspension Act applies and the statute of limitations had not entirely run against any count of the indictment when it was returned.

Res Judicata

The Executive Department of the government has long been concerned with Mr. Bridges. And we take note of that concern solely because it is claimed by the appellants that the actions taken against Bridges effect a legal bar to the instant prosecutions. Because of this important legal point, we turn to the prior proceedings against Bridges.

It is contended by appellants that, prior to the return of the indictment, it had been adjudicated that Bridges was not, at the time of his naturalization and that he never had been, a member of the Communist Party; and that it is a denial of due process of law under the Fifth Amendment to refuse to apply the doctrine of res judicata to this case.

We think it sufficient to quote briefly from the separate independent Act rather than as a proviso to the general statute of limitations and is cast in very inclusive language indicates that Congress intended to avoid the limitations written into the Noveck, McElvain and Scharton opinions.

---

Supreme Court opinion in Southern Pacific Co. v. United States, 1897, 168 U.S. 1, at page 48:

> "* * * a right, question or fact distinctly put in issue and directly determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, as a ground for recovery, cannot be disputed in a subsequent suit between the same parties or their privies; and even if the second suit is for a different cause of action, the right, question or fact once so determined must, as between the same parties or their privies, be taken as conclusively established, so long as the judgment in the first suit remains unmodified." [Emphasis ours.]

In 1938, the Secretary of Labor, then in charge of Immigration and related subjects, issued a warrant for the arrest and deportation of Bridges, an alien, charging that at the time he entered the United States he was a member of or affiliated with a defined class of aliens who advocated overthrow of the government by force and violence. Title 8 U.S.C. [1927 ed.] §137(c) and (g). Dean James N. Landis, acting as an official of the executive department of the government but not as an arm of the judicial department, heard the evidence and held that it established neither membership nor affiliation with the deportable class. The Secretary of Labor approved Dean Landis' report and dismissed the warrant.

We hold that the proceedings do not act as an estoppel to, nor res judicata of, the prosecutions in the present action, primarily because the cases which apply the rule of the Southern Pacific case, supra, do not extend the doctrine of estoppel by judgment beyond the findings of "a court of competent jurisdiction." Furthermore, the Supreme Court has specifically said that since an administrative board is an instrument of the executive power and not a court, the doctrine of res judicata cannot be applied to its decisions. Pearson v. Williams, 1906, 202 U.S. 281. An administrative decision does not preclude a subsequent administrative consideration of the identical matter, Mock Kee Song v. Cahill, 1938, 9 Cir., 94 F. 2d 975; Flynn v. Ward, 1938, 1 Cir., 95 F. 2d 742; therefore a decision of an executive agency cannot act as a bar to subsequent judicial proceedings.

Bridges v. Wixon

Bridges also cites his 1940 deportation hearing and the related Supreme Court decision in Bridges v. Wixon, 1945, 326 U.S. 135, as establishing that he was not a Communist at any time up to 1940, and that this issue in our case is res judicata. Of course, the issue in none of the former hearings was as to Bridges' being a Communist. Under the Smith Act[16] and under the applicable law in Schneiderman v. United States, 1943, 320 U.S. 118, an allegation that a person was a Communist was not per se an allegation of a crime, while the allegation that one conspired to destroy the government by force or violence stated a crime.

---

[16] 54 Stat. 670, 671; Title 18 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] §§10, 11, now 18 U.S. C.A. [1948 Rev.] §2385.

As for the administrative hearing, it would not be res judicata for the same reasons as assigned to the 1938 hearing before Dean Landis. Moreover, it would not appear that Bridges would want us to rely on the findings of Judge Sears (sitting as a hearing officer of the executive department) in the second administrative hearing, which were to the effect that Bridges had been both affiliated with and a member of the Communist Party, an organization which advocated the overthrow by force or violence of the government of the United States. Although Judge Sears' findings were reversed by the Board of Immigration Appeals, they were reinstated by the Attorney General. Regulations of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, 8 C.F.R. (1940 Supp.) §§90.3 and 90.12.

However, the 1940 hearing and resulting arrest for deportation led to a decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Bridges v. Wixon, supra. But even though we assume that Bridges and the United States were parties to both the Wixon case and the present case, the doctrine of res judicata is not applicable unless the two cases have a common question or fact which has been "distinctly put in issue and directly determined." Southern Pacific Co. v. United States, supra. The issue of whether or not Bridges was a Communist, and therefore made a false statement when he denied such party membership, is thus reduced to a determination of whether or not Bridges v. Wixon, supra, actually held that Bridges had never been a Communist.

Comparison of Bridges v. Wixon and the Instant Case

In Bridges v. Wixon, supra, Bridges sued for a writ of habeas corpus to compel the Immigration Director to release him from custody. In the instant case Bridges is under indictment for conspiracy to defraud the United States by defeating the administration of its naturalization laws for making false statements under oath in a naturalization proceeding. The causes of action in the two cases are different. Therefore, the second cause of action is not barred by the judgment in the first. However, under the definition of res judicata given in the Southern Pacific case, certain facts, having once been determined in a final judgment, cannot be relitigated in any subsequent action between the same parties.

After careful study of the Supreme Court's opinion, we have reached the conclusion that Bridges v. Wixon, supra, did not decide that Bridges had never been a Communist. The Supreme Court stated in the majority opinion, at page 149, that the administrative agency gave too loose a meaning to the term "affiliation" as proscribed by Title 8 U.S.C. §137(c) and (e), and had also improperly received evidence of Bridges' membership in the Communist Party in the form of an unsigned statement purportedly made by one O'Neil who denied making the statement. The Supreme Court, therefore, concluded that the administrative decision approving an executive order to deport Bridges could not be sustained since it was not supported by substantial evidence.

The matter in court was habeas corpus, and the Communist issue was not in the case. The holding of the Supreme Court was as follows, at page 156:

> "Since Harry Bridges has been ordered deported on a misconstruction of the term 'affiliation' as used in the statute and by reason of an unfair hearing on the question of his membership in the Communist Party, his detention under the warrant is unlawful."

In other words, while the administrative decision to the effect that Bridges was a Communist and deportable, was overturned, there was no judicial determination that Bridges was not affiliated with nor a member of the Communist Party. Bridges v. Wixon, supra, goes no farther than to declare what was the proper administrative procedure to be followed. It did not reach, and there was no need for the decision in that case to reach, the question of whether or not Bridges actually was a Communist. Therefore, we conclude that Bridges v. Wixon, supra, is not res judicata to the case here on appeal.

The Bridges v. Wixon Opinion by the Supreme Court as Evidence

The Supreme Court opinion in Bridges v. Wixon, supra, was offered in evidence by appellants Schmidt and Robertson to show that they, having read the opinion, relied in part thereon in reaching the conclusion that Bridges was not a Communist. However, the opinion was excluded as immaterial and incompetent. Since it was not negatived in that case that Bridges was a Communist, the trial court did not err in excluding it from evidence offered on behalf of Schmidt and Robertson to show their state of mind. The case was of no probative value on the point of Schmidt's and Robertson's knowledge or lack thereof regarding Bridges' membership in the Communist Party, and because of the nature of the issue involved in the case and the narrow scope of the decision, its introduction into evidence could not have been explanatory of Schmidt's and Robertson's beliefs, but could only have served to confuse and mislead the jury. The trial judge's decision to exclude Bridges v. Wixon from evidence was well within the limits of due exercise of his discretion.

Double Jeopardy

The next point raised by Bridges on this appeal is the issue of double jeopardy. The Fifth Amendment of the United States Constitution states that no person shall be > "* * * subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb. * * *."

It is in effect Bridges' contention that the two attempts which were made in the past to deport him as an undesirable alien in reality placed him in jeopardy of "life or limb," and consequently he is shielded by the Constitution from the present conviction for conspiracy to defraud the United States.

Bridges has not been subjected to double jeopardy. At no time during the deportation proceedings was Bridges subjected to peril of life or limb. He was detained solely for the purpose of deportation; not for punishment. Furthermore, the identity of "offenses," necessary for the invocation of the protection against double jeopardy, is lacking since conspiracy and the defrauding of the United States by making false statements to procure naturalization for one not entitled thereto, are distinct crimes which have no relevance to the deportation hearings. Cf. United States v. Williams, 1951, 341 U.S. 58, 62. For, as the Supreme Court said in Bugajewitz v. Adams, 1913, 228 U.S. 585, 591,

> "The determination [by an administrative body that an alien should be deported] by facts that might constitute a crime under local law is not a conviction of crime, nor is the deportation punishment; * * *."

See also Helvering v. Mitchell, 1938, 303 U.S. 391, 398, and footnote at page 399; Ex parte Bridges, 1943, 49 F. Supp. 292, reversed in Bridges v. Wixon, supra, on other grounds; United States v. Bridges, 1949, 86 F. Supp. 922, 928.

Of course, habeas corpus is not a criminal proceeding and a hearing for the writ or a decision upon such hearing cannot put a person in jeopardy. All that can come from a proceeding in habeas corpus of the type used in Bridges v. Wixon, is a determination upon the issue of the detention of a person.

Due Process

Bridges' contention that he has been denied due process of law by virtue alone of the several deportation proceedings and the present criminal indictment and conviction, is without merit. Whatever may be said as to the institution of the several proceedings, Mr. Bridges has been accorded every constitutional right in the instant case. The circumstance that phases of the former hearings and of this case are to some extent interrelated, afford no ground for the claim that due process had not been accorded each and every of the defendants-appellants.

Materiality

There was, at the time in suit, no statutory bar to any alien's naturalization on account of membership in the Communist Party,[17] and possessing such membership was not a crime. There was, however, a bar against naturalization of one who adhered to the belief that this government should be changed by force or violence, and such adherence was a legal ground for deportation. False denials of such membership at a naturalization proceedings were material. The Russian brand of Communism and works of Karl Marx and Lenin were well known and their teachings of the doctrine of overturning our government by force and violence was common knowledge. Had Bridges answered the court's question in the affirmative, the next line of questions which logically would have followed would have been as to whether Bridges believed in the violent overthrow of the government. From the answers received, the court would determine whether the applicant was devoted to the United States Constitution, and whether as a matter of fact and law Bridges qualified as a person entitled to citizenship.[18] The case of Schneiderman v. United States, 1943, 320 U. S. 118, is not in point.

---

[17] But see Amendment to Nationality Code, 1950, 8 U.S.C.A. §705, 64 Stat. 1013, and the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952, Act of June 26, 1952, c. 477, Public Law No. 414, §212(a)(28)(c).

---

[18] Harisiades v. Shaughnessy, 1952, 342 U.S. 580, a recent Supreme Court case dealing with the deportation of aliens under the Alien Registration Act of 1940, 54 Stat. 670, 8 U.S.C.A. [1942 ed.] §137, settles to a certainty that the questions of the court, as to Communist membership, were material to the naturalization proceeding.

The Alien Registration Act of 1940 provides for the deportation of any aliens who "believe in, advise, advocate, or teach, or who are members of or affiliated with any organization, association, society, or group that believes in, advises, advocates, or teaches: (1) the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law; * * *." 8 U.S.C.A. [1942 ed.] §137(c) and (g). The identical language is found in Title 8 U.S.C.A. [1942 ed.] §705(b) wherein the grounds for denying naturalization to an alien are set forth. Although Harisiades had been, but no longer was, a Communist, nevertheless he was ordered deported under the mandate of the Act. Therefore, if Bridges had confessed membership in the Communist Party at the time of his naturalization hearing, he too would have been subject to deportation. In view of the fact that Communist affiliation places an alien within the coverage of the Alien Registration Act, had Bridges spoken the truth at the naturalization hearing, it would have constituted good cause for the denial of the petition. For the statutory definition which makes an alien deportable also makes him ineligible for citizenship. 8 U.S.C.A. §§137(c) and 705(b).

The Third Count: Aid and Abet

Schmidt and Robertson present the theory that the third count of the indictment does not state an offense because there is nothing in the indictment which indicates that Bridges was not entitled to citizenship. The intent of the argument is that even if Schmidt and Robertson did aid and abet Bridges in his naturalization proceedings, the only fact alleged as disqualifying Bridges was that he was a member of the Communist Party, and that such membership was no offense, citing Schneiderman, supra. Hence, that there could have been no fraud.

The fallacy in this theory lies very close to the surface. It is true that as of the time in suit, membership in the Communist Party or being a Communist was not a crime. It was, however, a crime to commit a fraud against the United States or any agency thereof. Aiding and abetting an alien toward securing the great privileges of citizenship through misrepresentation of a fact, which could well be the basis of a refusal to grant it,[19] is well within the terms of the indictment. It is idle nonsense to argue that adherence to a plan of government as contradictory and inconsistent as Communism is to our plan of government would be an improper or inconsequential subject of inquiry in connection with a Naturalization proceeding.

---

[19] See Harisiades v. Shaughnessy, our footnote 18 supra.

Father Meinecke

Father Meinecke was called as a defense character witness to testify regarding Bridges' reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity. The court took part in the examination of the witness, and the defendant contends that the nature of the questions asked by the court were so phrased as to discredit the testimony of the witnesses before the jury.

While the questions of the court might be subject to misunderstanding, that danger was cured by subsequent instructions to the jury.[20] Furthermore, as the Supreme Court said in Glasser v. United States, 1942, 315 U.S. 60, 83:

---

[20] Record on Appeal, pages 4382-4387: "The Court: * * *. Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, * * *.

"Latterly, in my examination of Father Meinecke some mention was made by counsel concerning the asserted impropriety of a question on my part to the father. I might say to you that that was not born of any desire on my part, nor was it designed to inquire into Father Meinecke's mental processes. Nor was it to reflect upon his integrity. The question was born and conceived out of a desire on my part to accord fairness to the witness for the reason that mention was made during the course of this testimony that he left San Francisco for Nevada; an inference might be drawn from that departure that it had something to do with activities in trade unionism and the like. The father on the witness stand volunteered that he asked to be transferred. I merely wanted to inquire, ladies and gentlemen, a very simple question, not born of curiosity on my part, but born of a desire to provide you with all the facts surrounding the father, and it was to the end that I might inquire as to his health. Very many people have to leave large metropolitan areas to go to less burdensome parishes and that was the reason underlying my question."

> "Perhaps the court did not attain at all times that thoroughgoing impartiality which is the ideal [we intimate nothing of the kind here] but our examination of the record as a whole leads to the conclusion that the substantial rights of the petitioners were not affected. The trial was long and the incidents relied on by petitioners few. We must guard against the magnification on appeal of instances which were of little importance in their setting."

In any event, whether or not the court's conduct in regard to Father Meinecke constituted error, it was not so prejudicial as to warrant reversal. For Father Meinecke, in order to be a valid character witness, must testify as to the defendant's reputation in the community. Father Meinecke testified only as to his personal opinion, which is generally inadmissible. Wigmore on Evidence, 3rd ed., §1980. And in addition to Father Meinecke, there were eleven other character witnesses who testified in Bridges' behalf.[21]

---

[21] The testimony of each character witness is found at the page number of the Record on Appeal cited after his name:

Frank M. Andrews (page 4699),
Stanley Bailey (page 4483),
Hubert Brown (page 4049),
Walter E. Buck (page 3921),
Daniel F. Del Carlo (page 4199),
Dr. Leo Eloesser (page 3839),
Kenneth H. Finnesey (page 4058),

Limit on Scope of Cross-Examination

In the course of the trial the government put Lawrence R. Kessler, an agent of the Bureau of Naturalization, on the witness stand for the purpose of identifying a hotel registration card which the government wished to have placed in evidence. The evidentiary value of the card was to show that Lewis Michener, Jr., another government witness, was in San Francisco in August, 1940, to attend a Communist Party meeting at which, he testified, Bridges was also present. On direct examination Kessler's testimony was confined to identifying the exhibit. Counsel for defendant Bridges sought to attack Kessler's credibility on cross-examination on the ground that the only purpose of Kessler's testimony was to bolster Michener's testimony. The court limited the scope of the cross-examination to matters pertaining to the card and precluded impeachment as it is within the discretion of the trial court to do. Glasser v. United States, 1942, 315 U.S. 60, 83; United States v. Fotopoulos, 1950, 9 Cir., 180 F. 2d 631, 640; Chevillard v. United States, 1946, 9 Cir., 155 F. 2d 929, 935; United States v. Toner, 1949, 3 Cir., 173 F. 2d 140, 144.

Counsel for defendant challenged the court's right to limit the scope of the cross-examination in this

---

Augustin F. Gaynor (page 4207),
Robert W. Kenny (page 4258),
Dewey Mead (page 3998),
Oscar W. Pearson (page 4036),
all prominent men in their various vocations and professions.

instance. The court in reply read from a prepared memorandum on the point of law. And while reading the memorandum in the presence of the jury, the court quoted from Morton v. United States, 1932, 7 Cir., 60 F. 2d 696, 699, as follows [at page 3609 of the Record on Appeal]:

> "The battle continued, not to ascertain the truth, but in the evident hope that error might be injected into the record and ultimate conviction thereby avoided. But avoidance of a conviction upon uncontradicted evidence, establishing to a certainty the guilt of the accused, * * *."

The court prefaced its reading of the above passage from the Morton case with the statement addressed to defendant's counsel that

> "* * * the language used in this Morton case is somewhat reminiscent of your expectation or hope that some error might be created in the record."

Defendant labels the above-quoted language of the trial court as such flagrant prejudicial misconduct as to constitute reversible error. However, the court ordered the statements stricken from the record and in addition instructed the jury as follows:

> "During the course of the trial, the Court has been called upon to make comments in ruling upon objections of counsel and motions made by them. It has also occurred during the trial that the court has been called upon to admon> ish and reprimand counsel in connection with the conduct of the trial of this case. The jury shall not draw any inference from any such remarks or comments or rulings of the court that the court was intending to convey to the jury in any manner whatever its view or opinion as to what the verdict or decision of the jury should be. Such comments as the court may have made in that regard were only pursuant to the power and, indeed, the duty of the court to supervise the trial of the case and to expedite it."

It appears that the court recognized that the reading was in poor discretion and sufficiently admonished the jury to disregard it. The jury system would be faulty indeed if it must be held that jurors are so easily misled. There are few cases of long and tedious sessions with contentious counsel in which the judge has acted in true idealism. Moreover, since the criticism of counsel in connection with a technical point of evidence does not reflect upon the parties, the court's statement was not prejudicial to the defendants. Goldstein v. United States, 1933, 8 Cir., 63 F.2d 609, 612-614; Mansfield v. United States, 1935, 8 Cir., 76 F.2d 224, 231-233, cert. den. 296 U.S. 601. We see no reversible error here.

Instructions to the Jury

1. "Reasonable Doubt"

Appellants contend that certain of the instructions to the jury were plain error and seek a reversal of their conviction for that reason. The first of these concerns the court's definition of "reasonable doubt" as follows:

> "The term reasonable doubt means a doubt for which a good reason can be given, in the light of all the evidence." [Page 7885, Record on Appeal]

Appellants maintain that the instruction as quoted puts on them the burden of establishing a doubt. Appellants' analysis of the effect of the instruction is incorrect, especially when considered in connection with the succeeding part of the instruction:

> "It means a doubt which is substantial and not merely shadowy. It does not mean a doubt which is merely capricious or speculative. Neither does it mean a doubt born of reluctance on the part of a juror to perform an unpleasant duty, or a doubt arising out of sympathy for a defendant or out of anything other than a candid consideration of all the evidence presented."

Instructions may not be taken apart and a phrase here and a clause or even a sentence or a paragraph there used to find error. The criticized portion of the instruction, when read in its context, plainly informs the jury that "reasonable doubt" means no more or less than the plain meaning of those two words as used. Furthermore, while this instruction on reasonable doubt is not to be commended, it does not constitute reversible error.[22]

2. Credibility of Witnesses

Appellants charge error as to the instructions on credibility of witnesses. One part objected to is as follows:

> "If the witness has the appearance of attempting to the best of his ability to tell the truth, and other circumstances tend to establish that situation, then you give full credit to his testimony."

The court continued, and this portion of the instruction is not objected to:

> "But if you are impressed that the witness ~~is~~ attempting to hide something or is not telling the whole truth, then you have the right to give only such consideration to his testimony as you may think it entitled to receive."

This instruction is not unfavorable to appellants. It merely acts as emphasis to the obvious principle that because a witness testifies to a fact, a juror does not have to believe it. He should determine according to his best judgment in the circumstances.

---

[22] Owens v. United States, 1904, 9 Cir., 130 F. 279; Griggs v. United States, 1908, 9 Cir., 158 F. 572; Louie Ding v. United States, 1917, 9 Cir., 246 F. 80; United States v. Woods, 1933, 2 Cir., 66 F. 2d 262, 265; Young v. Territory of Hawaii, 1947, 9 Cir., 160 F. 2d 289, cert. den. 331 U.S. 849; United States v. Farina, 1950, 2 Cir., 184 F.2d 18, cert. den. 340 U.S. 875.

Objection is also made to the further instruction on credibility to the effect that the jury should consider the interest which a witness, particularly the defendant, might have in the outcome of the trial. Such an instruction was neither improper nor prejudicial. Reagan v. United States, 1895, 157 U.S. 301, 311; Frederick v. United States, 1947, 9 Cir., 163 F.2d 536, 550, cert. den. 332 U.S. 775. Moreover, there was no objection to the credibility instruction as required by Rule 30, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, 18 U.S.C.A.

3. Discrepancies and Inconsistencies in Testimony.

Appellants claim error in the instruction on discrepancies or inconsistencies in the testimony of witnesses. In effect, the jury was told not to be misled by discrepancies of a minor nature or discrepancies in the testimony inmmaterial to the issue of the guilt or innocence of the defendants. The trial was long in time and hard fought throughout and much testimony in great detail was introduced. The instruction was intended to advise the jury, in their deliberations, not to leave the ultimate question of guilt or innocence for questions which, when resolved, would be of no help in their main problem. The instruction was not erroneous.

4. Conspiracy

Two instructions on conspiracy are assigned as error. The first instruction is to the effect that conspiracies need not be proved by direct evidence, and it was both necessary in order that the jury not be misled and well established at law. Nye &

Nissen v. United States, 1948, 9 Cir., 168 F.2d 846, 852, affirmed 336 U.S. 613; Blumenthal v. United States, 1946, 9 Cir., 158 F.2d 883, 889, affirmed 332 U.S. 539; United States v. Manton, 1938, 2 Cir., 107 F.2d 834, cert. den. 309 U.S. 664. The second instruction, on the degree of participation necessary to make a person a part of a conspiracy, was not unfavorable to the defendants. It was, in part, [page 7900, Record on Appeal]:

> "It requires more than proof of a mere passive cognizance of a crime on the part of a defendant to sustain a charge of conspiracy to commit it. And you must find that the defendant did some act or made some agreement showing an intention to participate in some way in such conspiracy."

We find no error here. Moreover, no objection was made to the second instruction on conspiracy under Rule 30, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, 18 U.S.C.A., or otherwise.

5. Judicial Comment on Evidence

Error is claimed because the court said a certain number of witnesses, naming them, had testified on the issue of Bridges' membership in the Communist Party for the government, and a certain number for the defendant on the same issue, naming the witnesses. Neither in what was said nor from the context in which it was said, was there any suggestion that the number of witnesses should be taken into consideration rather than the effect on the jurors of their testimony. The very full instructions given the jury as to the presumption of innocence, the burden of the government, and the weight and credibility to be given to testimony of witnesses negative any idea that the jurors might have understood that the mere number of witnesses to any point of fact should rule over their judgment in reference to it. See Erie Railroad Co. v. Fritsch, 1934, 3 Cir., 72 F.2d 766, cert. den. 293 U.S. 620.

6. Bridges v. Wixon

That the trial court was correct in excluding from the jury any consideration of the decision of the Supreme Court in Bridges v. Wixon, supra, was fully discussed in this opinion ante. We add here only that the court did not err in charging the jury that no inference was to be drawn from the many references to that case which were made by the defense counsel during the trial.

7. Elements of Third Count of Indictment

We see no merit in appellants' contention that the court in its instructions misstated the elements of the offense charged against Schmidt and Robertson in the third count. The indictment was phrased within the provisions of Title 8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] §746(a)(5)a. There was no reversible error in the court's explanation that the expression "to abet" means,

> "* * * knowingly and with criminal intent to aid, promote, encourage or instigate, by act or counsel, or both act and counsel, the commission of such criminal offense."

There was no objection to this instruction under Rule 30, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, 18 U.S.C.A., or otherwise.

8. Criminal Intent

As for the trial court's instructions on the intent necessary to convict defendants Schmidt and Robertson of any of the counts charged, they were favorable to the defendants. For while Schmidt and Robertson admitted aiding Bridges to obtain citizenship, the court charged that such aiding would not be a crime unless it was with an,

> "* * * intent upon the part of either of these defendants to deceive and defraud the Government of the United States."

9. Materiality

Appellants argue that the trial court's instruction that the false statements were material to the naturalization proceeding as a matter of law, was erroneous. The question of materiality is always for the court. Sinclair v. United States, 1929, 279 U.S. 263, 298; Travis v. United States, 1941, 10 Cir., 123 F.2d 268, 270. And that is also the rule in this circuit despite appellants' misconstruction of the holding in Luse v. United States, 1931, 9 Cir., 49 F.2d 241. For while it is true that in the Luse case this court said that what is material in a perjury case is a mixed question of fact and law, we also said that the question of fact is confined to what actually took place. Once it was determined what took place, the materiality of such facts to the issue was for the court alone. There was no error here.

Appellants are asserting that the evidence introduced at the trial does not support the verdicts returned by the jury. This claimed reversible error has been explored by each member of the court and the task of expressing the court's views on this subject has been assigned to Judge Pope. His treatment of our conclusions follows immediately.

Pope, C. J.:

We now proceed to state the reasons for the Court's conclusion that the evidence upon each count was sufficient to sustain the verdict.

As to the Second Count—The alleged false statement as to Communist Party membership.

The second count, by which Bridges was charged with knowingly making a false statement under oath, a statement that he did not and had not belonged to the Communist Party, is the key to the indictment. We consider the evidence upon that charge first.

The jury was instructed that in order to convict under this count it must find that there was proof, beyond a reasonable doubt, of Bridges' actual membership in the Communist Party; that "mere association between an individual and an organization does not constitute membership * * * A person may approve some or all of the aims or activities of an organization, yet this does not make him a member. Even sympathy for the program of an organization, or contributions of money do not create the legal status of membership * * * The law also recognizes that active cooperation with an organization in its activities does not create the legal status of membership * * * Even affiliation, if you should find it to exist in this case, would not constitute the same legal status as membership, for the reason that membership refers to something more than, and different from affiliation."

This instruction had practical significance, for a very great volume of the testimony went no farther than to disclose that for a considerable period of time Bridges attended and participated in many Communist meetings, numbers of them "closed" meetings, that is, purportedly open to Communists only; that he presided at some of these meetings and that he frequently sought the advice and help of known Communist leaders and organizers, particularly in planning union activities and the strategy and tactics to be employed by his union during strikes. Similarly it was shown that he and his associates sought and made use of the Communist Party newspapers and printing establishments, and during the same time he frequently had occasion to give expression to opinions disclosing his close following of the Communist Party line. Ten of the Government witnesses who gave such testimony were themselves former Communists. Several of these were former longshoremen or engaged in related work, had been officials of unions in which Bridges had been active, and had been closely associated with him. Some had been engaged in editing Communist newspapers. Others of these witnesses had been organizers for the Communist Party who had devoted particular attention to forming Communist groups or "fractions" among labor unions, and particularly among the unions representing men employed along the waterfront.

The picture which these men drew was, in broad outline, that of a continued effort of representatives of the Communist Party to "infiltrate" the waterfront unions mainly by enlisting union leaders in the Party, and by placing Communist Party members in positions of influence in the unions. Beginning about 1933 there was a greatly increased drive for the organization of labor unions generally. The movement was stimulated, first by the National Recovery Act, and then by the Wagner Act. In 1934 a union known as the International Longshoremen's Association, which had been dormant for some time, was brought to life with the aid of the Communist Party. This union, known as ILA, called a strike. Bridges was chairman of its strike committee composed of some 50 members. The strike was a bitter one. The employers attempted to break it by opening the port, and violence ensued. Union strategy, it was testified, was first planned in closed meetings of Communist leaders, and Bridges and his committee carried into effect the plans thus formulated. In 1935 Sam Darcy, leader of the Communist Party's District 13,[1] conceived a plan to organize the Maritime Federation of the Pacific which united the maritime unions on the Pacific Coast. Its organization was promoted by Darcy, and to a lesser degree, by William Schneidermann, who succeeded Darcy. Bridges became president of the San Francisco council of that organization. That council became the joint strike committee for the San Francisco area during a strike which lasted from November, 1936, to February, 1937. In June, 1937, the Maritime Federation of the Pacific voted in favor of affiliation with the C.I.O. In July, Bridges attended a meeting of the National C.I.O. Maritime Committee in Washington, D.C. On the trip he, with the witness Rathborne, then president of the American Communications Association, and himself a Communist Party member,[2] went to New York to try to persuade the national president of ILA to go along on the affiliation with the C.I.O. Bridges and Rathborne, while in New York, visited the National Communist headquarters where they discussed the maritime setup in the C.I.O. with Stachel, Browder and Hudson, party functionaries, and reviewed what the policy of the C.I.O. maritime groups would be, and what the Communist Party policy was. In 1938, during the first constitutional convention of the C.I.O., held at Pittsburgh, Bridges attended a meeting in the William Penn Hotel composed of the members of the Communist Party who constituted the party's "top fraction" of the national C.I.O. Here was discussed the relations of the Party to the C.I.O., and also the possibility of securing the naming of one John Brophy as secretary-treasurer of the C.I.O.[3] Bridges attended other Communist meetings in connection with subsequent C.I.O. conventions.[4]

---

[1] Comprising California, Nevada, and parts of Arizona. District 13 later included Hawaii.

---

[2] Rathborne was later a member of the executive committee of the national C.I.O.

---

[3] Rathborne described this discussion as follows: "The only other matter that I recall being discussed there, after I got my hair combed, was the matter of the election of officers of the newly formed CIO, and the fact that there was no dispute or discussion hardly on who the logical choice would be for president. That was John L. Lewis. However, there was some discussion on the secretaryship, and if I remember correctly, it was decided that the Communist forces at that convention should try to prevail upon Mr. Lewis to accept Mr. John Brophy as the secretary-treasurer of the CIO, and subsequently Mr. Brophy was not elected, incidentally."

---

[4] The testimony was that at the 1939 C.I.O. convention at San Francisco, John L. Lewis made strong declarations against Communist influence and activity in the C.I.O. At the same convention he abolished the position of west coast director of the C.I.O., (held by Bridges) and ordered that the "present west coast director will be the California director, and I will appoint new directors for the rest of the area." Thereupon, at a Communist meeting held in the Whitcomb Hotel at San Francisco, attended by Schneidermann and others, Bridges advised against making any issue of his demotion, and advised an attitude of cooperation with John L. Lewis. His suggestion was that at the same time the Party's forces should be built stronger down below in the unions, so that, as Rathborne described his statement, "we can have a greater influence and be in a position to more effectively prevent Lewis and his henchmen from red-baiting and taking an anti-party position in the future."

At the 1941 convention Bridges read and intro-

When the various meetings at San Francisco, purportedly Communist Party meetings, and attended by Bridges, are taken into account, they add up to several score. They were described as held for two purposes: one, to plan a Communist-directed strategy of union activity; the other, to plan for the election of Communist members or duced a resolution, prepared for him by one Crouch, a Communist organizer, with the aid of William Schneidermann, which urged the then current Communist policy of all-out support of the administration program of aid to the democracies in the war effort.

---

Another witness, Michener, also a Communist, who had been chairman of the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council, attended the national C.I.O. convention at Philadelphia in 1943. He described a closed Communist Party meeting held during the convention and attended by Bridges and himself and other Communist Party members. At this meeting those present were informed by one Hudson, a so-called "top Communist" that Philip "Slim" Connolly, a Communist Party member who had but recently been elected California State President of the C.I.O., should resign and step down in favor of a non-Communist. The reason given for this proposal was that the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council, which was Communist controlled, had some members on the national C.I.O. pay roll, and that by making this concession as to Connolly, the Party would have a better chance to control those salaried positions. Michener and Bridges both opposed the proposal until Hudson pointed out that the decision had been made by the top leaders of the Communist Party at New York. Bridges and Michener then proceeded to make the arrangements to carry the decision into effect, and Connolly's resignation was secured.

sympathizers to various offices at union elections.[5]

Of course, under the instructions of the court, previously mentioned, Bridges' participation in these activities, taken alone, would fall short of proof of actual Communist Party membership. The only significance of such acts is what value they may have, circumstantially, as evidence of an opportunity, through frequent association, for Bridges actually to reach a decision to join the Party. One so situated would be more likely, as a matter of natural inclination, to join the group than would be the case of one having no such contacts.

---

[5] The activities of what the witnesses called Communist Party units, or "fractions," in assuming leadership in the trade union movements with which Bridges was connected, were described in much detail. In general these activities would be recognized by the jury as making a likely pattern of behavior, and fitting into what has now become generally recognized as the shape of Communist missionary enterprise. "In the countries outside Russia the Communists have posed as the champions of the under-dog; they have espoused democratic programs; they have indeed purported to be the faithful advocates of the cause of every exploited race and class. To be sure, they have followed the zig-zag of the Party Line—condemning Hitler, then praising him, then condemning him again; calling Roosevelt a fascist and a warmonger and later praising him as a great leader. But somehow the Communists have by adroit exploitation of propaganda defied logic and tried to use each of their positions to strengthen their reputation as a champion of the poor and oppressed." From a review of Sidney Lens' "The Counterfeit Revolution" by Justice William O. Douglas in "The Progressive," V. 16, No. 6, p. 30, June, 1952. See, also, the statement of Mr. Justice Jackson in Communications Assn. v. Douds, 339 U.S. at p. 430.

It is true that a number of the witnesses described some of these meetings which Bridges attended, and at some of which he presided, as "closed" Communist meetings. The logical fallacy in concluding from this that Bridges must therefore have been a Party member is that it assumes the truth of that which is sought to be proven. If, in fact, Bridges was not a Party member, his presence at such a meeting would mean no more than that he attended a meeting at which every other person present was a Party member.

Bridges himself made no effort to deny his frequent attendance at meetings attended by Communist Party members, or his acceptance of aid and assistance from the Party and its leaders, or his sympathy with many of its objectives.[6]

---

[6] Bridges testified to the early efforts of himself and his associates to organize the waterfront workers, and in this connection told of the substandard working conditions which confronted the longshoremen; the inadequate pay, the lack of job security, the company-controlled unions, the unfair discriminations in respect to hiring, the "shape-up," the blacklists, the speedup, the system of "kickbacks" to bosses, required as a condition to employment. He said that it was to eliminate these and other claimed evils that the strikes were called, and that it required great effort on the part of the union leaders to hold the strikers together. In this situation, he and the other union leaders sought help wherever they could find it. He gladly accepted aid offered by the Communists. He said: "I am not going at this late stage to try to take away any

Bridges further stated that the union was offered the support of the Communist Party and of its paper "The Daily Worker" which printed a daily bulletin for the use of the union during its strikes. He and his associates accepted this offer of help.[7] of the credit they are entitled to, because they did contribute something towards helping the strike. We were grateful for it at that time; the men were grateful for it, and I just think it would be crawfishing and ingratitude to try to kiss it off now and say we never had anything to do with them, because they did help in the way I have said, not only with the helping to print the bulletin and with what financial donations as well as food donations they could get, as well as they—when we called upon all organizations, particularly labor organizations, to help us man the picket lines, the Communist Party responded to that call, too, and so did other parties, so did—not the Republican or Democratic Parties; they were darned conspicuous by their absence, but I mean the smaller minority political parties. I recall at that time there was the Proletariat Party around here, there was the Workers Party, the Socialist Workers Party; there were several. Most of those radical, left-wing parties, and they more or less vied with each other to try to prove to the longshoremen and the other strikers how much they were helping. And by and large, the role of all that was pretty much magnified, particularly, the role of the Communist Party was played up purposely by the shipowners and Industrial Association and the city departments, for a reason, and the reason was hysteria so that it was easier to break the strike under that smoke screen of hysteria."

---

---

[7] During the 1934 strike San Francisco had an anti-picketing ordinance in effect and the men on the union picket lines were charged by the police who attacked with clubs and tear gas. On July 5,

Bridges did deny being present at a few of the fifty or more meetings which various witnesses described with particularity, all of them Communist meetings. He denied the account of a meeting held at night in a prune orchard in Santa Clara County where a witness testified Bridges and others met Earl Browder. He denied that he attended a Communist convention at Fresno, and he denied attending a meeting near Grants Pass, Oregon, as to which some testimony was given. He made no effort to take issue as to numerous other meetings at which witnesses stated he was present, and which were described as Communist meetings.

The record also contains some evidence of the expression by Bridges from time to time of opinions on national and world affairs which are indicative of his sympathy with the Communist point of view. Such evidence, like the evidence of Bridges' attendance at meetings with Communist party members, would not in itself suffice to furnish

---

1934, the 30,000 men on strike undertook to mass on the picket line and this was followed by an all-day battle with the police in which many persons were shot and two men were killed. Some of the wounded men were taken to 128 Haight Street, San Francisco, which was a Communist headquarters and which was used as a hospital as it was made available to the strikers. The battle led to the calling out of the National Guard, but the union and the Communist Party proceeded to hold a mass funeral for the two men who were killed, a feature of which was a parade up Market Street and a grave-side speech by Sam Darcy at the burial of the man who was a Communist.

the required proof of Communist party membership.[8]

The danger of attempting to prove any person to be a Communist by evidence of his expression of views which happen to coincide with the program of the Communist Party, is too well understood to require comment here. However, it cannot be said that the evidence thus far described, the evidence of continued association and cooperation with Communist groups and the evidence of apparent adherence to the Communist Party line, is, although inconclusive and insufficient in itself, wholly irrele-

---

[8] In December, 1945, Bridge's union, the ILWU, called a one-day coastwise work stoppage for the purpose of propagandizing the hasty return of American troops from overseas. Bridges testified he did not know this was the Communist Party line, but said that he did not care, either then or now.

In an article written by him and published under date of November 14, 1947, Bridges said, "Thus stripped of all camouflage the Marshall Plan is a scheme to use money and food of the American people to purchase and turn over to Wall Street at practically no cost to the private interests, the basic industries and raw materials of Germany and all western European nations."

At a convention of the ILWU in San Francisco in April, 1947, a resolution was proposed which stated, among other things: "Communism is not an issue in the United States, nor are our economy, political democracy or civil liberties threatened by agents of the Soviet Union. The real threat stems directly from the greed and desire for imperialistic world control of American trusts and monopolies." Bridges, who was chairman of the meeting, made a long statement in support of the resolution in the course of which he said: "Communism is not a vant to the issue before the jury. For, as we shall shortly disclose, there was a substantial amount of evidence that Bridges in fact joined and became a member of the Communist Party. Obviously the likelihood of Bridges actually joining the party would be affected by the matters thus mentioned. If the Communist Party sought to plant seed which would result in a new member springing up, the success of the effort would depend a great deal on whether the seed fell upon fertile ground.

Schomaker, a former longshoreman, who had held numerous positions and offices in Bridges' union, form of government, it is a state of society, it is a system, and it is a system that holds that people cannot exploit other people for profit. It simply means you can't own a factory or a ship and do nothing and live on the fat of the land and clip coupons while somebody sweats and slaves for a living."

---

In 1948, when the ILWU and the Waterfront Employers Association signed a contract, Bridges' union had demanded that the longshoremen would be under no obligation to serve any vessel or handle any cargo declared unfair by the World Federation of Trade Unions. In 1949 when the CIO withdrew from this World Federation of Trade Unions because it was a "communist-controlled organization," Bridges "bitterly opposed" this move by the CIO. At the trial and on cross-examination Bridges said of the CIO constitutional amendment adopted in November, 1949, prohibiting Communist Party members from serving as officers or members of the executive committee of the CIO: "But if you would ask me what I would term it, I would term it a racketeering, corrupt, crooked, cover up for a lot of dirty goings on, so that certain people could use a great organization like the CIO for their own personal political advancement."

and who had long been a close associate of Bridges, testified that he himself had been a Communist Party member since 1931. About Thanksgiving of 1933, Schomaker became editor of the "Waterfront Worker," a paper published by a group of longshoremen who were members of the Communist Party. Schomaker testified that on an occasion in November or December of that year he and one B. B. Jones, also a member of the Communist Party, met with Bridges and solicited the latter's membership in the Party. He testified that after considerable conversation, Bridges agreed to join, and after agreeing on a name which Bridges should assume as a member of the Party, Jones produced a printed application card. Schomaker temporarily left the room and after his return Jones exhibited the card to Schomaker who observed Bridges' signature thereon. Jones and Schomaker took the card to the Party headquarters at 37 Grove Street and turned the application over to Sam Darcy. Schomaker testified that on numerous occasions he saw Bridges pay his Communist Party dues to the unit secretary and that he had on occasion received Bridges' Communist Party book which was turned in to the Party headquarters at the end of each year so that a new book could be issued to "Harry Dorgan," which was Bridges' party name.

In the winter of 1935 Bridges and Schomaker were neighbors. Schomaker testified that on one evening during that year he saw a crowd in front of Bridges' home and that Bridges then told him that Bridges' wife had fallen out of the window and asked Schomaker to go to his house and get his Communist Party book "before the snooty reporters" got there.

There was also testimony that in August or September, 1938, Bridges made a talk at a meeting held at the home of one John Shaw in San Francisco which was attended by 30 to 35 people, including William Schneidermann, district organizer for the Communist Party, and other Communist Party members. Also attending were some persons who were not Communists. During the meeting, as it was described by a Mrs. Harris, a Government witness, Bridges made a speech. She testified: "He got up and talked about the conditions on the waterfront and how they were progressing and how the Communist people, Communist Party was helping, and that, and also about the editorials and writings in the People's World, and he made a plea for us that were there to become members of the Communist Party, and he also stated that he was a member of the Party, of the Communist Party * * * I was flabbergasted when I heard him say that, because he had been accused, and I had heard it denied. And when he made that statement, why, it made a very much impression on me." Substantially the same account of the affair was given by the Witness Schomaker, who was also present.

It is argued on behalf of appellants that the testimony respecting the recruitment of Bridges in the Communist Party in 1933, and the testimony concerning the speech made at the John Shaw residence, is inherently so improbable and so incredible that it must be discarded. The evidence as to the processing of the Bridges membership application was that it had to be submitted to a membership committee or group of persons for investigation and approval. It is pointed out that the claimed admission by Bridges in 1938 that he was himself a member of the Communist Party was made in the presence of a group of persons some of whom were not Communists and some of whom were unknown to Bridges. It is said that it is inconceivable that Bridges, who knew that the Immigration Bureau had for years been attempting to prove him a Communist and to deport him on that ground, would have laid himself open by making a public statement of that character before such an audience, or that he would have turned in an application in writing which, if it fell into the hands of a government agent, would put him at the mercy of those who had pursued him.

With respect to this contention, it must be observed that in 1933, when the application was said to have been signed, the series of efforts to prove Bridges a Communist had not yet begun. In 1938, at the time of the Shaw residence meeting, Bridges of course knew that the Immigration Bureau was after him. The question for the jury to determine was whether they would credit the testimony that the statement was in fact made. This would involve consideration not only of the reliability of the recollection of the witnesses and their general credibility, but a consideration of whether in the circumstances it could be believed that Bridges was so rash or so incautious as to make such a statement in those surroundings.

The question whether these events did or did not occur was typically one for the jury. In general this case presents no circumstances different from those which constantly appear where the testimony of witnesses is sharply in conflict. The special function of the jury, in our system, is to deal with such matters. No appellate judge is ever in a position to reconstruct for himself, from a printed record, the multitude of things which bring conviction to a juror's mind—the demeanor of the witness, his apparent candor or evasiveness, his assurance or hesitation, and even his facial expressions or the sound of his voice.

Even the cold record here discloses that at the trial, and in the presence of the very jury which was to determine whether he had or had not been a Communist Party member, Bridges was singularly lacking in caution, giving a demonstration which the jury might well consider more remarkable than the actions which Mrs. Harris testified "made a very much impression on me."[9]

---

[9] The circumstance was this: Bridges was on the stand, and his conduct was observed for a good many days during the trial. He knew that the Government was attempting to prove that he was or had been a Communist Party member; he knew that the jury who were observing him were his judges, and yet he apparently overlooked no opportunity during the process of cross-examination to make speeches to the jury in what they must have understood was an effort to prove to them the soundness of views generally expressed by World

That Bridges entertained the views he volunteered in comparing the Chinese Revolution to the American Revolution, or which he expressed in respect to the Russian satellites, or in regard to Phil Murray's effort to oust Communist Party members from official positions in the CIO, is not what seems significant at this point. We do not regard the circumstance here related as of controlling importance. Without it, the question would still be one for the jury. But it is worthy of note that without any apparent effort to confine himself to answering briefly, and to the point, the questions put to him on cross-examination, Bridges went on at great

---

Communism with respect to national and international affairs. Speaking of the Communist conquest of China he said to the jury: "I think the people have finally taken over and changed things, something like they did here in the United States in 1776. I think they have had a peoples' revolution down there, and if they are wrong, then the people of the United States were wrong in 1776."

Further in discoursing upon this subject Bridges stated: "We had the same thing occur after the American Revolution. Remember, after the American Revolution here in—17—this word 'revolution' —people seem to shy away from in these days. I didn't invent the word. But in the days of the American Revolution, like the French Revolution, America, the United States, went through the same thing. All the world was jumping on it and pointing out the Communists in the United States, meaning George Washington, Paine and others. The same thing was happening, and it will happen more and more. So our union can't bear any responsibility. And because we have advocated trade with China in the interests of getting more work for our longshoremen on the waterfront, who unless length with discourses which, we apprehend, must have caused the jury to wonder whether they were watching a man filled with missionary zeal for expounding the views commonly understood to make up the Communist Party line, or one who was supremely indifferent to whether he gave the jury the impression that if he was not a Communist Party member, he must at any rate be a fellow traveler. We connot say that in these circumstances a jury would be obliged to disregard as impossible or incredible the testimony of what Bridges said and did on the occasions described by these witnesses. Per-they get work, of course, they can't have a union, the union will fall apart, and maybe I will have to do something else, even myself,—that is not so much what I am thinking of—but it is as simple as that. The port here, the City of San Francisco, believe me, lives by its waterfront. That is a matter of simple economics. And the bulk of our trade, fifty per cent of the foreign trade that moves through the port of San Francisco was China trade. We have got to re-establish that trade, otherwise we can't have prosperity and employment here in the United States, particularly in the port of San Francisco, and a lot of people around here would be out of a job, and if people are out of work around here, our city, of course, will not have prosperous times and will not have security."

---

After he had volunteered his views about China, he was invited to express an opinion on the "rape of Poland" and the seizure of Baltic and Balkan countries by Russia. As for Poland, he said, "Here was a country where the government collapsed, and the way I looked at it, the country of Russia she took steps to prevent or to meet what eventually transpired, namely, she figured her country was to be invaded and she took certain steps." As for the haps a man who lacked caution when before the jury, was but acting in a similar manner at the John Shaw home in 1938.

There was other evidence which, if credited, would tend to show Bridges' actual membership in the Communist Party. Three witnesses testified that they attended the national convention of the Communist Party at New York in 1936, and that at that meeting Bridges was elected to the national committee of the Communist Party under the name of "Comrade Rossi." Two of these witnesses testified that he was reelected to the same committee at the national convention of the Party in 1938. There was no testimony that Bridges was present at the 1938 convention but two of the three wit-other countries mentioned, he said, "I would say that there is more democracy in those countries now than before they were seized by the Soviets. Prior to that they were all dictatorships."

---

Explaining the position he had taken when he "fought bitterly" against a resolution calling for the resignation of executive board members who were unwilling to abide by the anti-Communist amendment to the C.I.O. constitution, he said: "The C.I.O. doesn't elect me to the executive board. My union elects me. I am instructed by my union that elects me and pays my wages to carry out certain policies to this board. I am the voice, the representative of my union on this C.I.O. board. You come in with a resolution now and say that unless I take orders from you, Mr. Murray, notwithstanding what my membership tells me, I am not eligible to serve on this board. I said, 'That is a violation of the CIO constitution, that is a phoney, it is a racket, and if you are going to carry through a policy like that, you are going to destroy CIO.' And that is what is happening to CIO to-nesses as to the 1936 election testified that Bridges was present at that meeting. The third said he did not see Bridges there.

Of course, if Bridges in fact became a member of the governing body of the national Party this would permit an inference that he was a member of the Party. Considerable doubt is thrown on this aspect of the case by reason of the fact that it was established, apparently beyond controversy, that at the very time the 1936 convention was being held, Bridges was in Stockton, California, making a speech at a union meeting. If he was there he could not have been present at the 1936 convention, as two of the three witnesses said he was.

We do not feel called upon to speculate as to day; it is being destroyed because of those types of policies."

---

Bridges continued: "So I took this resolution, I came back, I called meetings of my own local union and I said, 'Listen, fellows,' I said, 'Look, here's the way the National CIO wants it. In order to get along with them, let's say we do this. Let's let Phil Murray appoint from the ILWU anyone he wants to represent the ILWU on the board, and let Bridges resign. And let us furthermore instruct the representatives of the ILWU on the CIO executive board that any time Murray says, "Vote yes," to vote yes; any time Murray says, "Vote no," vote no; any time Murray says, "Abstain," to abstain. Let them have that.' And my membership said, 'Look, Bridges, if that is the way you feel, if you carry out a program like that, we will get ourselves another president. We didn't elect you for a program like that. Now, if you haven't got the guts, if you haven't got enough in you to get in there and fight, we will find someone who will do the job for us.' " whether these two witnesses might have been mistaken as to his presence there, or whether the definite proof of Bridges' presence in Stockton conclusively demonstrates that the testimony relating to the 1936 convention, and perhaps, as to the 1938 convention, was false. We think, for the reasons we have previously mentioned, that there was sufficient other evidence to warrant the jury in finding that Bridges was in fact a member of the Communist Party.

Appellants contend that as a matter of law the evidence was insufficient to satisfy the rule that in perjury cases there must be at least the testimony of two independent witnesses or the testimony of one witness plus independent evidence which is inconsistent with the innocence of the defendant. Cf. Weiler v. United States, 323 U.S. 606. Appellants assert that the evidence that the sworn statement of Bridges was false does not measure up to the standards required by this rule.

The second count of the indictment is not based upon the general perjury statute but upon section 746 (a) (1) of the Nationality Act of 1940, now codified at 18 USCA 1015. We need not consider whether the two witness rule applies to a prosecution under this section. Cf. Todorow v. United States, (9 Cir.) 173 F. 2d 439, 443, c.d. 337 U.S. 925, for we think that, assuming that the same rule applies as in prosecutions for perjury, the rule was satisfied here.

The falsity of the statement made under oath was testified to by the witness Schomaker who told of the application for membership in the party and the subsequent payment of dues. Mrs. Harris, an independent witness, testified to Bridges' admission of party membership made by him at the public meeting at the Sha[illegible] residence. It is to be noted that this admission was made prior to the date of the alleged crime and there is authority to the effect that admissions so made do not require corroboration to the same extent as others. Warszower v. United States, 312 U.S. 342, 347. In any event, in this case, where the Government did not rest upon the uncorroborated testimony of one witness, but brought forward an accumulation of evidence, circumstantial and otherwise, which supplemented the direct evidence of joining the Party and the evidence of the 1938 admission, we think that the rule was fully satisfied. Maragon v. United States, (CADC) 187 F. 2d 78, c.d. 341 U.S. 932.

Appellants enumerate sundry reasons why they think we should hold that the evidence offered on behalf of the Government is unworthy of belief. Thus they point to the fact that some of the Government witnesses who admitted having been former Communists also admitted that on prior occasions when under oath and testifying before the un-American Activities Committee or the Tenney Investigating Committee of the California Legislature they had denied being members of the Party. The contention is that one who admits perjury on prior occasions, cannot be credited now.

Again it was developed that some of the Government witnesses had given testimony as Government witnesses in a large number of other cases involving issues similar to those in this case. It is said that such witnesses were professional witnesses as to Communist activities in various places and that hence they were not worthy of credit. Attention is called to the fact that a number of the Government witnesses were naturalized citizens and it is argued that since some of those witnesses had themselves obtained citizenship at a time when they themselves falsely denied Communist Party membership, they were subject to prosecution and hence subject to pressure on the part of Government agents who, it is asserted, held threats of such prosecution over the heads of these naturalized witnesses. Some witnesses received substantial sums of money on account of witness fees and expenses in connection with their attendance at the trial of this case. In the case of one witness not only he but his wife were paid witness fees covering a long period of time. It is argued that the sums thus paid were so substantial that it must be inferred that the recipients would be willing to testify to anything in order to maintain their positions as witnesses.

All of these matters were brought out on cross-examination and developed at great length during the trial. They were the subject of much argument by counsel for appellants at the time the case was argued to the jury and, of course, they are matters in respect to which the jury was the final judge. None of these circumstances would, as a matter of law, require us to throw out the testimony of these witnesses in its entirety.

As to the First Count—The alleged conspiracy.

We next proceed to the question of the sufficiency of the evidence as to the first count of the indictment.[10] This charges that Bridges, Schmidt and Robertson conspired to defraud the United States by impairing, obstructing and defeating the proper administration of its naturalization laws by having Bridges petition for and obtain naturalization by falsely and fraudulently stating and representing that Bridges had never belonged to the Communist Party; that in pursuance of the conspiracy the defendants did and performed four overt acts: 1, the filing by Bridges of his application for a certificate of arrival and preliminary form of petition for naturalization; 2, his appearance on the 8th day of August, 1945, before the naturalization examiner where he gave testimony in the matter of his application for naturalization; 3, the signing on the same day, by Schmidt and Robertson as witnesses, of the Bridges' petition for naturalization; and 4, the appearance of the three men named, on September 17, 1945, in the Superior Court, and their then testimony in support of Bridges' petition for naturalization.

It is contended that there is neither direct nor circumstantial evidence of any such conspiracy; that until June 18, 1945, when the Supreme Court in the case of Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U.S. 135, reversed the decision of this court, a warrant of deportation based on Bridges' alleged membership in or affiliation with the Communist Party was outstanding against him. This reversal was but five days prior to the filing of Bridges' application for citizenship on June 23, 1945. Hence, it is said, up to five days before the application was made, the warrant of deportation was a bar to Bridges' naturalization and therefore there could be no conspiracy up to that time because naturalization was then impossible. It is argued that there was nothing to show that either Bridges, Schmidt or Robertson had any reason to anticipate questions concerning Bridges' membership in the Communist Party at any time prior to the actual hearing on September 17, 1945, at which time the naturalization examiner was prompted to make the inquiry as to party membership because he had received, a few days previously, an affidavit of Bridges' estranged wife, from whom he was then obtaining a divorce, which stated that Bridges was a member of the Communist Party under the name of "Dorgan." It is contended that the mere fact that the question was then asked was insufficient to bring about a conspiracy to obtain naturalization through the unlawful giving of false answers to such a question.

---

[10] In dealing with the first and third counts, under both of which Schmidt and Robertson were convicted, and on which they received sentences of equal length, to run concurrently, it must be borne in mind that if the evidence is sufficient to sustain conviction on either count, the sufficiency of the evidence on the other count need not be considered. Sinclair v. United States, 279 U.S. 263, 299.

It is true that the evidence of the alleged conspiracy was entirely circumstantial, as is almost invariably the case where conspiracy is charged.

There is evidence sufficient to show the existence of a long-standing and close association between Schmidt, Robertson and Bridges in two respects. In the first place all three were long and intimately associated as officers in the I.L.W.U. labor union. There was also evidence sufficient, if believed, to demonstrate that all three of them were associated as members of the Communist party. Not only was there very extensive evidence that Schmidt and Robertson, as well as Bridges, had attended many of the numerous Communist meetings to which reference has been made, but there was testimony that Schmidt had himself solicited the witness Henry Schrimpf to join the Communist Party, and had handed Schrimpf the membership card which he executed. It was testified that Robertson was a member of a top Communist fraction of the State C.I.O. consisting of Communist Party members who were members of the C.I.O. executive board, a group facetiously known in Communist circles as "God's Committee."

The jury could infer from the evidence that Schmidt and Robertson not only knew that Bridges was a Communist and a member of the Communist Party but that there had long existed a controversy between Bridges and the Government officials in charge of matters relating to citizenship and naturalization characterized by repeated attempts to deport Bridges on the ground of his alleged membership in or association with the Communist Party. Schmidt and Robertson therefore knew that if the fact of Bridges' membership in the Communist Party were developed in the course of his naturalization proceedings, it would be fatal to his application. Both of these defendants testified that they knew of the handing down of the decision in the Wixon case[11] on June 18, 1945, and the testimony of both of these defendants discloses that they had the decision in that case very much in mind when they first proceeded to give testimony on Bridges' behalf and otherwise assist him in procuring his citizenship.[12]

The evidence warrants the inference that all of

---

[11] The opinion in that case was not a part of the record, for it was excluded, as we have noted. What is here referred to is the fact that the case had been decided, and favorably to Bridges, matters which were in evidence.

---

[12] Thus Robertson testified in enumerating the bases for the answers he gave concerning Bridges at the citizenship hearing, that he had read transcripts of the Landis trial, the Sears trial, and of other investigations and then said: "And finally, a decision of the U. S. Supreme Court came out. I studied that decision. I studied the majority decision and I studied the concurring decision, and I made up my mind then and there that President Bridges was not, had never been, and was never affiliated with the Communist Party; and the Supreme Court of the United States is something that I think speaks with authority."

In the course of his answer to a similar question Schmidt testified: "Secondly, I had read the decision of the Supreme Court, and I thought well, as long as the highest tribunal in the United States of America has made a decision with respect to this case, the matter is now settled for all time; and I had no hesitation to recommend this man for citizenship."

these defendants knew that now that the decision in the Wixon case had come down the day was about to arrive when Bridges could finally sew up his citizenship, and that Schmidt and Robertson were then proceeding to permit him to do so and that they did undertake to assist by testifying, falsely, that Bridges was not a member of the Communist Party.

Under these circumstances it is clear that there was sufficient evidence to warrant a conviction under the conspiracy count, and that the charge of a conspiracy was sufficiently proven.

As to the Third Count—The alleged aid and assistance by Schmidt and Robertson.

The evidence to which we have just referred sufficiently discloses that there was an abundance of proof to sustain the charge of the third count to the effect that Schmidt and Robertson did wilfully and knowingly encourage, aid, advise and assist a person, namely, Bridges, not then and there entitled thereto, to obtain, accept and receive a certificate of naturalization, which was to be procured and was procured by fraud, said fraud consisting of false and fraudulent statements made in a naturalization proceeding.

It is contended that there is no evidence that a certificate of naturalization was in fact issued. There was introduced in evidence a certified copy of the judgment of the Superior Court reciting that Bridges and other persons had complied with the naturalization laws and that each was entitled to be admitted to citizenship, and reciting that "It is hereby ordered that each of said petitioners be and is hereby ordered to become a citizen of the United States of America." There was no evidence that the clerk of that court performed his ministerial duty to issue and deliver to Bridges the certificate of naturalization described in §736 Title 8 USCA. We think that in view of the fact that the issuance of the certificate by the clerk is a mere ministerial act following the judgment, as soon as the judgment admitting Bridges to citizenship had been entered there had been accomplished all that was required "to obtain" a certificate of citizenship within the meaning of Title 8 §746 (a) (5) under which the third count was laid, and that in truth the certificate mentioned had then been "obtained." The argument that the evidence as to the third count is insufficient is without merit.

As stated in Glasser v. United States, 315 U.S. 60, 80, "It is not for us to weigh the evidence or to determine the credibility of witnesses. The verdict of a jury must be sustained if there is substantial evidence, taking the view most favorable to the Government, to support it. United States v. Manton, 107 F. 2d 834, 839, and cases cited. Participation in a criminal conspiracy need not be proved by direct evidence; a common purpose and plan may be inferred from a 'development and a collocation of circumstances.'" This court has followed the same rule. Henderson v. United States (9 cir.) 143 F. 2d 681, 682.

Generally, with respect to the jury's function in weighing testimony and determining the credibility of witnesses this court has said: "With regard to the foregoing testimony, as well as much of the other evidence discussed by the appellants, it should be borne in mind that the question of weight and credibility is for the jury and not for the court." Coplin v. United States (9 cir.) 88 F. 2d 652, 664. Accord: Pasadena Research Laboratories v. United States, (9 cir.) 169 F. 2d 375, 380. Tested by these rules, which this court has long followed, Craig v. United States, (9 cir.) 81 F. 2d 816, 827, c.d. 298 U.S. 690; Hemphill v. United States, (9 cir.) 120 F. 2d 115, c.d. 314 U.S. 627; Stillman v. United States, (9 cir.) 177 F. 2d 607, 616, the evidence here was sufficient to sustain the convictions on all counts.

Bone, C. J.:

I am in complete accord with all that has been said by my associates. Their exhaustive opinions reflect unanimous conclusions reached only after thorough discussion in conference and after independent consideration of all issues by each judge of this division of our court.

Judgments affirmed.

(Endorsed:) Opinions and Concurring Opinion. Filed September 6, 1952, as amended Nov. 18, 1952. Paul P. O'Brien, Clerk.

United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit

Excerpt from Proceedings of Tuesday, November 18, 1952.

Before: Stephens, Bone and Pope,
Circuit Judges.

[Title of Cause.]

ORDER DENYING PETITION FOR REHEARING

Upon consideration of the petition of appellants, filed October 3, 1952, and within time allowed therefor by rule of court, for a rehearing of above cause, and application that petition for rehearing be heard en banc, and good cause therefor appearing, It Is Ordered that said petition for rehearing be, and hereby is denied.

United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit

CERTIFICATE OF CLERK, U. S. COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT, TO RECORD CERTIFIED UNDER RULE 38 OF THE REVISED RULES OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

I, Paul P. O'Brien, as Clerk of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, do hereby certify the foregoing 18 volumes, containing 8,434 pages, numbered from and including 1 to and including 8,434, to be a full true and correct copy of the entire record excluding original exhibits of the above-entitled case in the said Court of Appeals, made pursuant to request of counsel for the appellants, and certified under Rule 38 of the Revised Rules of the Supreme Court of the United States, as the originals thereof remain on file and appear of record in my office.

Attest my hand and the seal of the said the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, at the City of San Francisco, in the State of California, this 4th day of December, 1952.

[Seal] PAUL P. O'BRIEN,
Clerk.

[fols. 8437-8438] SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES
OCTOBER TERM, 1952

No. —

HENRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT and J. R. ROBERTSON, Petitioners,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

ORDER EXTENDING TIME TO FILE PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI—November 28, 1952

Upon consideration of the application of counsel for petitioners,

It is ordered that the time for filing petition for writ of certiorari in the above-entitled cause be, and the same is hereby, extended to and including January 16, 1953.

Wm. O. Douglas, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Dated this 28th day of November, 1952.

[fol. 8439] SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES, OCTOBER TERM, 1952

No. 548

[Title omitted]

ORDER ALLOWING CERTIORARI—Filed March 9, 1953

The petition herein for a writ of certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit is granted, limited to questions 1 and 2 presented by the petition for the writ.

And it is further ordered that the duly certified copy of the transcript of the proceedings below which accompanied the petition shall be treated as though filed in response to such writ.

Mr. Justice Clark took no part in the consideration or decision of this application.

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT. U.S.

Office - Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
JAN 14 1953
HAROLD B. WILLEY, Clerk

SUPPLEMENTAL TRANSCRIPT OF RECORD

Nos. 548-9, October Term, 1952

Bridges et al. vs. United States of America

Nos. 12597–12607

United States Court of Appeals

For the Ninth Circuit

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT and J. R. ROBERTSON,
Appellants,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Appellee.

and

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES,
Appellant,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Appellee.

Appeals from the United States District Court,
Northern District of California,
Southern Division

Proceedings Had in the United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit

Phillips & Van Orden Co., 870 Brannan Street, San Francisco, Calif.

Nos. 12,597 and 12,607

In the United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit

No. 12,597

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, J. R. ROBERTSON and HENRY SCHMIDT, Appellants,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Appellee.

No. 12,607

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES,
Appellant,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Appellee.

APPLICATION FOR LEAVE TO FILE SUPPLEMENTAL PETITION FOR REHEARING, PRAYER THAT SUPPLEMENTAL PETITION FOR REHEARING BE HEARD EN BANC, AND THAT ORDER DENYING PETITION FOR REHEARING BE VACATED

GLADSTEIN, ANDERSEN & LEONARD,
NORMAN LEONARD,
240 Montgomery Street,
San Francisco 4, California,
Attorneys for Appellants.

Table of Authorities Cited

Cases — Pages

Bradley Mining Company vs. Boice (1952, 9 Cir.), 198 F.2d 790 — 8444, 8450

Bridges, et al. vs. United States (Sept. 6, 1952, 9 Cir., No. 12,597, Slip Sheet p. 52), ... F.2d — 8443

Gottfried vs. United States (2 Cir.), 165 F.2d 360 — 8447

Kotteakos vs. United States (1946), 328 U.S. 750 — 8443, 8450, 8451, 8452

Marzani vs. United States (1948, C.A. D.C.), 168 F.2d 133 — 8444, 8445, 8446

Marzani vs. United States, 83 U.S. App. D.C. 78, 168 F.2d 133 — 8447

Obermeier vs. United States (1950, 2 Cir.), 186 F.2d 243 — 8445, 8446, 8447, 8448

United States vs. Anzalone (1952, 3 Cir.), 197 F.2d 714 — 8445

U. S. vs. Gilliland, 312 U.S. 86, 61 S.Ct. 518, 85 L.Ed. 598 — 8447

United States vs. McElvain (1926), 272 U.S. 633 — 8445

United States vs. Noveck (1926), 271 U.S. 201 — 8445

United States vs. Scharton (1932), 285 U.S. 518 — 8445

United States vs. Smith (1952), 342 U.S. 225 8449

Western Pacific Railroad Corporation vs. Western Pacific Railway Company (1952, 9 Cir.), 197 F.2d 994 8449

Wolcher vs. United States (Nov. 17, 1952, 9 Cir., No. 12,992), ...F.2d 8443, 8451, 8452

Statutes

Act of June 25, 1948, Section 21, 62 Stat. 683, 862 8443

Nos. 12,597 and 12,607

In the United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit

No. 12,597

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, J. R. ROBERTSON, and HENRY SCHMIDT, Appellants,
vs.
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Appellee.

No. 12,607

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES,
Appellant,
vs.
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Appellee.

APPLICATION FOR LEAVE TO FILE SUPPLEMENTAL PETITION FOR REHEARING, PRAYER THAT SUPPLEMENTAL PETITION FOR REHEARING BE HEARD EN BANC, AND THAT ORDER DENYING PETITION FOR REHEARING BE VACATED

To the Honorable William Denman, Chief Judge, and to the Honorable Associate Judges of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit:

Come now appellants above named and hereby apply for leave to file this supplemental petition for rehearing in the above-entitled causes, pray that said supplemental petition be heard en banc, and pray that the order of this Court, dated November 18, 1950, denying appellants' petition for rehearing, be vacated, and in support thereof respectfully allege as follows:

I.

The Order of Amendment filed and entered herein on November 18, 1952, substantially modified the opinion filed and entered herein on September 6, 1952, and if appellants are to have the benefits intended by the rules permitting the filing of a petition for rehearing, they should be permitted to address such a petition to the amended or modified opinion.

II.

In their petition filed herein on October 3, 1952, appellants prayed, inter alia, that a rehearing be granted en banc. The order denying the petition for rehearing filed and entered herein on November 18, 1952, did not even rule upon this portion of appellants' petition for rehearing. Appellants are at least entitled to a ruling of the Court on an application made to it and their application that the petition for rehearing be heard en banc ought to have been passed upon and not simply ignored.

III.

On the day before the panel which heard this case denied the petition for rehearing, another panel of this Court decided another case in a substantially different way. While this panel refused to apply the rule of Kotteakos vs. United States (1946), 328 U.S. 750, to the case at bar, that rule was applied to another case by a panel consisting of Judges Healy, Orr and Pope who reversed a conviction because of technically erroneous rulings respecting the admission and exclusion of evidence (Wolcher vs. United States [Nov. 17, 1952, 9 Cir., No. 12,992], ... F.2d ......). None of the errors in that case was as serious or prejudicial as the errors here present.

Argument

I.

On September 6, 1952, Judges Stephens, Pope and Bone, "after thorough discussion in conference and after independent consideration of all issues,"[1] concluded that the saving clause in Section 21 of the Act of June 25, 1948, 62 Stat. 683, 862, "expressly preserved"[2] to the Government the right to prosecute appellants under the repealed five year statute of limitations.

On November 18, 1952, after apparently the same thorough discussion and independent consideration of all issues, the same three judges concluded that "the Saving Clause cannot be given the broad effect claimed for it by the government"[3] and specifically held "that the statute of limitations of five years for violations of offenses under the Nationality Act yielded to the three-year provision as of the effective date of the revision."[4]

---

[1] Bridges, et al. vs. United States (Sept. 6, 1952, 9 Cir., No. 12,597, Slip Sheet p. 52), ...F.2d .....

[2] Ibid., p. 8.

[3] Ibid., Order of Amendment, November 18, 1952, Typewritten Order, p. 3.

Appellants, of course, do not quarrel with this modification of the Court's opinion since it reflects now for the first time a position which appellants have been urging for three and one-half years in this case. However, this complete reversal of views on this issue by the panel of judges deciding this case demonstrates the merit of appellants' contentions and supports appellants' argument that if all issues in this case, including the issue of the applicability of the Suspension Act, were submitted to the entire Court en banc, there is at least a reasonable basis for supposing that the result would be different.[5]

Furthermore, on the issue of the Suspension Act itself the thoroughly considered opinion of September 6, 1952, was subject to substantial modification although the panel still adhered to its original conclusion.

For the first time the panel in its amendment of November 18, 1952, suggests that the conclusions of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in Marzani vs. United States (1948, C.A. D.C.), 168 F.2d 133, were based upon that Court's own conclusions that the Supreme Court cases[6] held that the Suspension Act did not apply to non-pecuniary frauds. In so doing the panel completely misreads the Marzani case. The Court in the Marzani opinion carefully analyzed the Government's contention that fraud was an "essential element" of false swearing.[7] It rejected that contention not upon the ground suggested by the panel in its presently modified opinion but upon the ground that the Suspension Act did not apply to that kind of fraud—even if it were fraud. Here is its language:

---

[4] Ibid., p. 4.

[5] See Judge Pope's dissenting opinion in Bradley Mining Company vs. Boice (1952, 9 Cir.), 198 F.2d 790, 792.

> "The difficulty with the foregoing contention is that it ignores the plain rulings in Noveck and kindred cases. Those cases involved false statements, under oath. The offenses tendered to obstruct, by dishonest means, the operation of a department of the Government. The Court held that the Suspension Act (actually an identical

---

[6] United States vs. Noveck (1926), 271 U.S. 201; United States vs. McElvain (1926), 272 U.S. 633; United States vs. Scharton (1932), 285 U.S. 518.

---

[7] Incidentally, the panel's addition to its opinion of September 6, 1952, of a footnote now to be numbered 2a which recites that Bridges was not charged with perjury or with having made a false statement under oath (Typewritten Order, supra, note 3, p. 1), while it is another modification of the earlier opinion, does not in any way sustain the Court's conclusion because that is precisely what Marzani (supra), Obermeier (infra), and Anzalone (United States v. Anzalone [1952, 3 Cir.], 197 F.2d 714) were charged with, and that made no difference in the result in their cases.

> predecessor) does not apply to such offenses. So that even if the False Claims Act does involve the sort of fraud the Government says it does, the Suspension Act does not apply; the rulings in the Noveck and similar cases related to precisely that same sort of fraud. Despite the vigor and skill with which the Government's contention is pressed upon us by its counsel, we can see no escape from that conclusion. It follows that we are of opinion that the first nine counts of this indictment were barred by the statute of limitations, and the defendant's motion that they be dismissed should have been granted." (168 F. 2d at 137, emphasis supplied.)

The Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia is not the only Court with which this panel disagrees on the issue of the applicability of the Suspension Act. It also is in conflict with the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit on this precise issue, a fact which was pointed out in appellants' petition for rehearing but which is not mentioned in the amendment of November 18, 1952. For in Obermeier v. United States (1950, 2 Cir.), 186 F. 2d 243, the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit held not only that the saving clause did not sustain the prosecution,[8] but it also held that the Suspension Act could not save the prosecution because fraud was not inherent in the crime of false swearing in a naturalization proceeding.

---

[8] A proposition with which this panel disagreed on September 6, 1952, but with which it apparently now agrees.

> "The government contends, however, that in any event the War Time Suspension of Limitations Act preserved its right to prosecute this action. That Act, so far as pertinent, is substantially the same as the Acts interpreted by the Supreme Court in United States v. Noveck, 271 U. S. 201, 46 S. Ct. 476, 70 L. Ed. 904,[9] United States v. McElvain, 272 U. S. 633, 47 S. Ct. 219, 71 L. Ed. 451,[10] and United States v. Scharton, 285 U. S. 518, 52 S. Ct. 416, 76 L. Ed. 917.[11] As so interpreted, it suspends a statute of limitations only when fraud or attempted fraud against the United States (or one of its agencies) 'is an ingredient under the statute defining the offense,' and does not, absent such a statutory definition, apply to perjury or false swearing even when the United States is directly interested.[12] Nothing in 8

---

[9] Perjury in an income tax return. [Court's footnote.]

[10] False income tax return. [Court's footnote.]

[11] Attempt to evade taxes by falsely understating taxable income. [Court's footnote.]

[12] In U. S. v. Gilliland, 312 U. S. 86, 61 S. Ct. 518, 85 L. Ed. 598, the offense was so defined as to make fraud an ingredient. So, too, in Gottfried v. United States (2 Cir.), 165 F. 2d 360, as we there interpreted the statute creating the crime. See also Marzani v. United States, 83 U. S. App. D. C. 78, 168 F. 2d 133. [Court's footnote.]

> U.S.C.A. § 746(a)(1), under which defendant was indicted, makes fraud an ingredient of the crimes." (186 F. 2d at 256-257; emphasis supplied.)

The panel apparently did not even recognize that the Second Circuit held that fraud was not an ingredient of the crime charged in Count II of this very indictment.

Furthermore, the ambiguity manifest in the panel's thinking on the coverage of the Suspension Act has not been removed by the modification of November 18, 1952.

On the one hand the panel still says:

> "* * * it is well to have in mind that not every fraud against the government, whether inherently pecuniary or otherwise, comes within the effect of the Suspension Act."[13]

On the other hand, the panel still says:

> "We therefore conclude that the Suspension Act applies to every offense involving fraud against the government whether pecuniary or not."[14]

This leaves open the question of whether the Suspension Act does or does not apply to "every fraud" or "every offense involving fraud" against the Government. And it does not even touch the question of what kinds of "frauds" are, and what kinds are not, covered by the Suspension Act. No consideration is given the rationale of United States v. Smith (1952), 342 U. S. 225, which demonstrates that the Suspension Act is applicable not to all offenses involving fraud, but only to offenses "arising out of the war effort."

---

[13] Slip Sheet, supra, note 1, page 11.

[14] Ibid, page 17.

Certainly, in view of the fact that the panel is in conflict with two other circuits, the fact that the first petition for rehearing resulted in a substantial modification of the panel's thinking on one phase of the case, and the fact that even now the panel's reasoning on the Suspension Act is ambiguous and contradictory, appellants' request that the case be reheard en banc should be granted.

II.

On October 3, 1952, appellants petitioned for a rehearing and made application that their petition for rehearing be heard en banc. This application has apparently not yet been ruled upon. The only orders entered on November 18, 1952, were orders amending the opinion of September 6, 1952, and orders denying appellants' petitions for rehearing. There was no order either granting or denying the application that the rehearing be heard en banc, nor was there even an order striking it as was done in Western Pacific Railroad Corporation v. Western Pacific Railway Company (1952, 9 Cir.), 197 F. 2d 994, 1012.

Appellants certainly are entitled to have a ruling upon an application which they make to the Court so that in the event they ultimately are required to proceed further in this cause they may have a record to present to the Supreme Court. Since the Supreme Court has granted certiorari in the Western Pacific case ([October 13, 1952], . . . U.S. . . . , 73 S. Ct. 28, 29), it is obvious that the question of appellants' right to petition for a rehearing en banc is an open one and one which the Supreme Court thinks is of sufficient importance to be reviewed by it. That right should not be foreclosed by this panel's ignoring the existence of such an application.

Furthermore, if the reasons assigned by Judge Pope in his dissenting opinion in the Bradley Mining case, supra, and the reasons assigned by both Judge Healy and Chief Judge Denman in their respective opinions in the Western Pacific case, supra, have any cogency at all, then it is clear that this is one case perhaps out of hundreds where a rehearing en banc should be granted. Not only is there the existence of conflicts with at least two other circuits on the question of the application of the Suspension Act; not only does the substantial modification of the panel's opinion of September 6, 1952, demonstrate a lack of cetrainty and clarity of the grounds upon which the judgment is now being affirmed, but on the very day before the petition for rehearing was denied, another panel of this Court reversed a conviction upon the basis of the Kotteakos rule, while the panel in this case refused to apply the Kotteakos rule here. The errors committed in the other case were certainly less substantial than those involved in this case. This brings us to our last point.

III.

In their petition for rehearing,[15] appellants, emphasizing the prejudicial character of the errors committed by the trial Court, urged this panel to apply to this case the rule of Kotteakos v. United States (1946), 328 U. S. 750, and to reverse the conviction because it could not be said that those errors, substantial as they were, had no effect upon the ultimate outcome. Neither in its original decision of September 6, 1952, nor in its Order of Amendment of November 18, 1952, did this panel so much as mention the Kotteakos case.

However, on November 17, 1952, a conviction for wilfully and knowingly attempting to defeat some $30,000 of income taxes by failure to report over-ceiling sales of liquor was reversed by a panel of Judges Healy, Orr and Pope. (Wolcher v. United States, supra.) That panel, relying on the Kotteakos case, reversed because no "proper foundation" was laid for certain documents which were received in evidence against the defendant, and because certain evidence which the defendant wished to offer to corroborate his testimony on the price of pinball machines was rejected.[16]

---

[15] The point, of course, was made earlier in briefs and argument before the decision of September 6, 1952.

---

[16] The evidence offered on behalf of Wolcher, the exclusion of which resulted in the reversal, consisted of a magazine called "Billboard." The evidence offered on behalf of Robertson and Schmidt, the exclusion of which did not result in reversal, consisted of a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. The incongruity is manifest.

In the Wolcher case the errors were highly technical and certainly did not reflect any unfairness on the part of the trial judge. We do not say that Wolcher's conviction should not have been reversed. We do say that if Wolcher's conviction had to be reversed, then this conviction must a thousand times more so be reversed. For the errors here were not purely technical. They were serious errors and reflected upon the fairness of the trial accorded appellants. This panel itself has characterized the trial judge's conduct as "in poor discretion," as likely to lead to "misunderstanding," and as lacking in "that true idealism" which a trial Court should manifest. The instructions he gave were not to be "commended," said this panel.

If ever there was a case where the Kotteakos rule should apply, this is it. Yet on one day, one panel of this Court refuses to apply the Kotteakos rule in the case of three labor leaders, while on the day before another panel of this Court has no hesitancy in applying it in the case of a big liquor dealer and pinball operator.

Conclusion

Not only is it important that justice be done in this case, but it is important that justice appear to have been done.

If Wolcher is entitled to a new trial because a document was admitted against him without a "proper foundation," why is not Bridges entitled to a new trial because the trial judge told the jury, in effect, that there should be an "ultimate conviction" because of "uncontradicted evidence" establishing his guilt to "a certainty," and that they were to convict unless there was a "good reason" for not doing so? If Wolcher is entitled to a new trial because there was excluded from his defense the "Billboard" magazine, why are not Robertson and Schmidt entitled to a new trial because there was excluded from their defense the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States?

This case is replete not only with error, it is replete—to give the Government the benefit of the doubt—with very close questions of law. Why is it that every single question is resolved against these appellants?

If a labor leader and his associates are to receive an equality of treatment with a "pinball king," then the least these appellants are entitled to is a new trial.

May they not have these questions examined by the full Court?

Wherefore, appellants respectfully apply for leave to file this supplemental petition for rehearing, and pray that said petition be heard en banc, and pray that the order of November 18, 1952, denying their petition for rehearing be vacated.

Dated, San Francisco, California, November 25, 1952.

Respectfully submitted,

GLADSTEIN, ANDERSEN &
LEONARD,

NORMAN LEONARD,
Attorneys for Appellants.

Certificate of Counsel

I hereby certify that I am of counsel for appellants and petitioners in the above-entitled cause and that in my judgment the foregoing application for leave to file supplemental petition for rehearing, prayer that supplemental petition for rehearing be heard en banc, and that order denying petition for rehearing be vacated, is well founded in point of law as well as in fact and that said petition is not interposed for delay.

Dated, San Francisco, California, November 25, 1952.

NORMAN LEONARD,
Of Counsel for Appellants.

[Endorsed]: Received November 25, 1952, U.S.C.A.

[Endorsed]: Filed December 29, 1952, U.S.C.A.

United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit

No. 12,597

Order

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, J. R. ROBERTSON, AND HENRY SCHMIDT, Appellants,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Appellee.

No. 12,607

Order

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES,
Appellant,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Appellee.

Dec. 29, 1952

Application for Leave to File, Etc.

Before: Stephens, Bone, and Pope,
Circuit Judges

PER CURIAM

Following our denial of the petition for rehearing in the above-entitled cases, there was received at the clerk's office a document entitled "Application for Leave to File Supplemental Petition for Rehearing, Prayer That Supplemental Petition for Rehearing be Heard En Banc, and that Order Denying Petition for Rehearing be Vacated." The instrument is addressed to all of the judges of the court and was lodged with the clerk's office after the time for filing a petition for rehearing had expired and after the appellants had obtained from the United States Supreme Court an extension of time within which to petition for the writ of certiorari. Copies of our opinion, amended opinion, original petition for rehearing, and the document above mentioned, have been distributed to each active member of the court.

A United States Court of Appeals consists of three circuit judges, and, in circuits having more than three judges, it consists of a "Division" of three judges. In exceptional circumstances it may consist of all the active members of the circuit sitting in banc. A "Division" court is no less a court than an "in banc" court.

In Western Pacific R. R. Corp. v. Western Pacific R. Co., 9 Cir., 1951, 197 F. 2d 1013, the members of this court had before it an application similar to the one we are now dealing with and in that case the Supreme Court has granted the writ of certiorari without specifying whether it will deal with the subject of in banc procedure. We reaffirm the view taken by us in the Western Pacific case, to wit, that the assignment of causes for hearing of appeals pending in our court is at all times and in all circumstances, save only as to disqualification of a judge, the exclusive right and duty of the whole court and that it is not a privilege of litigants to request that their cases be heard by any selected court sitting in division or sitting in banc. Whether the case will be reheard after decision, and, if reheard, by which particular judges, are matters entirely for the court itself.

However, it is manifestly desirable that the final disposition of the instant cases should not be complicated because of any disposition the Supreme Court may make of the Western Pacific case, or delayed awaiting decision in that case, and for these reasons, and these reasons alone, we proceed to state the basis for our ruling on the document presented for filing with the clerk.

Section 46(c) of Title 28, U.S.C.A. provides:

> "Cases and controversies shall be heard and determined by a court or division of not more than three judges, unless a hearing or rehearing before the court in banc is ordered by a majority of the circuit judges of the circuit who are in active service. A court in banc shall consist of all active judges of the circuit."

All of the members of the Division to which these cases were assigned, and to which they remain assigned, are of the opinion that the cases do not differ from the regular business of the court in any respect which would justify treatment different from that accorded other cases and, therefore, all of the members are opposed to any reassignment of them or of any phase pertinent to them. Since Chief Judge Denman has disqualified himself in each of the cases, it is manifest that a majority of the circuit—or four members thereof—have not and will not grant any petition for rehearing in banc in regard to them.

A moment's thought dispels the notion that petition for rehearing in banc after decision in Division should necessitate the convening of the whole court for its consideration. If such a petition must be considered by the court in banc, most, if not every, lawyer on the losing side of a case before a Division would feel it his duty to ask the whole court to take it over. No judge, required to pass on the question, would do so without knowing the case through the records and the briefs, and even then, he would not have the benefit of open conference that our oral argument amounts to. We are of the opinion that the statutory power given the court to grant rehearings was never meant to provide an appeal from Division to the Court In Banc, but was meant to provide power for the court itself to control its affairs. It seems reasonably certain that the provision of Section 46(c) (in banc hearings) is expressed in the negative for the purpose of affording the power we suggest and, at the same time, of avoiding undesirable results. The whole active membership of the court acts upon the original assignment, and, "unless" and "until" the assignment is changed, the assignment continues. No suggestion is made in the statute that litigants have any choice as to the individual judges who shall sit on their cases, or whether they shall be heard in Division or in banc.

We have considered the petition to file the document first hereinabove mentioned, and have considered the reasons therein as to why appellants think our order denying the petition for a rehearing should be vacated and a rehearing should be granted. Since we amended our opinion after the filing of the original petition for a rehearing we now order that the document lodged with the clerk be filed as a petition to the "Division" and as a second petition for rehearing, and as such it is denied. The motion to vacate our order denying the original petition for a rehearing is denied.

[Endorsed]: Opinion on Application for Leave to File, etc. Filed Dec. 29, 1952. Paul P. O'Brien, Clerk.

United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit

Nos. 12597 and 12607

[Title of Causes.]

Excerpt from Proceedings of Monday, December 29, 1952.

Before: Stephens, Bone and Pope,
Circuit Judges

ORDER DIRECTING FILING OF APPLICATION, ETC., AND DENYING SECOND PETITION FOR A REHEARING, ETC.

By direction of the Court, It Is Ordered that the application for leave to file supplemental petition for rehearing, etc., received November 25, 1952, be filed as a second petition for rehearing of above causes.

Upon consideration of such second petition for a rehearing, and pursuant to the Per Curiam Opinion thereon this day filed;

It Is Further Ordered that said second petition for rehearing be, and hereby is denied.

It Is Further Ordered that the motion to vacate our order of Nov. 18, 1952, denying the original petition for rehearing be, and hereby is denied.

United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit

CERTIFICATE OF CLERK, U. S. COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT, TO SUPPLEMENTAL RECORD CERTIFIED UNDER RULE 38 OF THE REVISED RULES OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

I, Paul P. O'Brien, as Clerk of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, do hereby certify the foregoing 23 pages, numbered from and including 8437 to and including 8460, to be a full, true and correct copy of the supplemental record of the above-entitled case in the said Court of Appeals, made pursuant to request of counsel for the appellant, and certified under Rule 38 of the Revised Rules of the Supreme Court of the United States, as the originals thereof remain on file and appear of record in my office.

Attest my hand and the seal of the said the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, at the City of San Francisco, in the State of California, this 13th day of January, 1953.

[Seal]: PAUL P. O'BRIEN,
Clerk.

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT. U.S.

JAN 14 [illegible]

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

No. 548

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT,
and J. R. ROBERTSON,
Petitioners,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

TELFORD TAYLOR
New York, N. Y.

NORMAN LEONARD
San Francisco, Cal.

Counsel for Petitioners

INDEX

PAGE

Opinions below 1

Jurisdiction 2

Questions presented 2

Statutes involved 3

Statement 3

Specification of errors to be urged 6

Reasons for granting the writ 7

Conclusion 23

Appendix 24

CITATIONS

Cases:

Adamson v. California, 332 U. S. 46 14
Alford v. United States, 282 U. S. 687 . . . . 21, 22

Bihn v. United States, 328 U. S. 633 23
Bollenbach v. United States, 326 U. S. 607 23
Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135
3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 19
Bridges v. United States, 184 F. 2d 881 (9th Cir.) . . . 6, 15
Brown v. Zurbrick, 45 F. 2d 931 (6th Cir.) 13
Bryan v. United States, 338 U. S. 552 13
Buchanan v. United States, 15 F. 2d 496 (8th Cir.) . . . 20

PAGE

C. I. T. Corporation v. United States, 150 F. 2d 85 (9th Cir.) 20
Churchill Tabernacle v. Federal Communications Commission, 160 F. 2d 244 (D. C. Cir.) 10
Collins v. Loisel, 262 U. S. 426 11

Ex Parte Reaves, 121 F. 848 (D. C. Ala.) 11

Fiswick v. United States, 329 U. S. 211 22
Flynn v. Ward, 95 F. 2d 742 (1st Cir.) 10
Francis v. Resweber, 329 U. S. 459 14

Harris v. Biszkowicz, 100 F. 2d 854 (8th Cir.) 11
Harrison v. United States, 200 F. 662 (6th Cir.) 20
Hersh v. United States, 68 F. 2d 799 (9th Cir.) 20

International Building Co. v. United States, 199 F. 2d 12 (8th Cir.) 10

Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U. S. 750 .... 20, 21, 22, 23
Knauer v. United States, 328 U. S. 654 13
Kraus & Bros. v. United States, 327 U. S. 614 22
Krulewitch v. United States, 336 U. S. 440 .... 22, 23

Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Ohio Valley Tie Co., 242 U. S. 288 9

Marzani v. United States, 168 F. 2d 133 (D. C. Cir.) 15, 16, 17, 18, 19
Meeks v. United States, 163 F. 2d 598 (9th Cir.) 22
Miller v. United States, 120 F. 2d 968 (10th Cir.) 20
Morse v. United States, 267 U. S. 80 11

Ng Fung Ho v. United States, 259 U. S. 276 13

Pearson v. Williams, 202 U. S. 281 .... 8, 9
Pettine v. Territory of New Mexico, 201 F. 489 (8th Cir.) 23
Potter v. United States, 155 U. S. 438 20

Scalfon v. United States, 332 U. S. 575 13
Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U. S. 97 14

PAGE

Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. United States, 168 U. S. 1 11
Sunshine Coal Co. v. Adkins, 310 U. S. 381 9

Tait v. Western Maryland Ry. Co., 289 U. S. 620 9

United States v. Anzalone, 197 F. 2d 714 (3rd Cir.) 18
United States v. Beacon Brass Co., Inc., 344 U. S. 43 .. 18
United States v. Brandt, 196 F. 2d 653 (2d Cir.) 20
United States v. Bridges, 86 F. Supp. 922 (D. C. N. D. Cal.) 5
United States v. Chung Shee, 71 F. 2d 277 (D. C. S. D. Cal.) 11
United States v. Farina, 184 F. 2d 18 (2nd Cir.) 23
United States v. Gottfried, 165 F. 2d 360 (2nd Cir.) .. 18
United States v. Grainger (N. D. Cal.), decided Dec. 5, 1952 .... 18, 19
United States v. Klinger, 199 F. 2d 645 (2nd Cir.) ... 19
United States v. Levi, 177 F. 2d 833 (7th Cir.) 22
United States v. McElvain, 272 U. S. 633 .... 15, 17
United States v. Noveck, 271 U. S. 201 .... 15, 16
United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243 (2nd Cir.) 17, 18, 19
United States v. Scharton, 285 U. S. 518 .... 15, 16
United States v. Shneer, 194 F. 2d 598 (3rd Cir.) 15
United States v. Smith, 342 U. S. 225 .... 18, 19
United States v. Willard Tablet Co., 141 F. 2d 141 (7th Cir.) 10
United States v. Williams, 341 U. S. 58 13

Wallis v. Fecchio, 65 F. 2d 250 (5th Cir.) 13
Wade v. Hunter, 336 U. S. 684 14
Western Pacific R. R. Corp. v. Western Pacific R. Co., 197 F. 2d 994 (9th Cir.), cert. granted 344 U. S. 809 6
Williams v. United States, 93 F. 2d 685 21
Wolcher v. United States, F. 2d (9th Cir.), decided November 17, 1952 22

	PAGE
Statutes:
8 U. S. C. [1946 ed.], Sec. 746(a)	3, 17, 24
18 U. S. C. Sec. 371	3, 24
18 U. S. C. Sec. 1015(a)	3, 17, 24
18 U. S. C. Sec. 3282	3, 14, 25
18 U. S. C. Sec. 3287	3, 14, 15, 25
28 U. S. C. Sec. 1254(1)	2
Act of November 17, 1921 c. 124, Sec. 1	15
Revenue Act of 1926, Sec. 1110(a)	16
Miscellaneous:
H. Rep. No. 2051, 77th Cong., 2d Sess.	16
Sen. Rep. No. 1544, 77th Cong., 2d Sess.	16
Stern, Denial of Certiorari Despite Conflict, 66 Harv. L. Rev. 465, January 1953	19

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT, and J. R. ROBERTSON, Petitioners, vs. UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.	No. ......

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

Petitioners, Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt, and J. R. Robertson, respectfully pray that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit entered in the above-entitled case on September 6, 1952, as amended November 18, 1952.

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the District Court for the Northern District of California (hereinafter referred to as the "trial court") denying motions to dismiss the indictment is reported at 86 F. Supp. 922; its opinion overruling objections to the introduction of certain evidence is reported at 87 F. Supp. 14; its opinion upon the revocation of bail for petitioner Bridges pending his appeal to the Court of Appeals is reported at 93 F. Supp. 989.[1] The opinion of the Court of

---

[1] The opinion of the trial court rendered on the Government's motion to stay proceedings in a pending civil denaturalization suit is reported at 86 F. Supp. 931.

Appeals for the Ninth Circuit vacating and setting aside the order revoking the bail of petitioner Bridges is reported at 184 F. 2d 881. The amended opinion of the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirming the judgment below has not yet been officially reported; it is printed at Tr. 8354-8433.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Court of Appeals was entered on September 6, 1952. The order of the Court of Appeals denying petitioners' timely petition for rehearing, and its amended opinion, were entered on November 18, 1952. On November 28, 1952, Mr. Justice Douglas entered an order extending the time for filing a petition for certiorari to January 16, 1953. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U. S. C. 1254(1).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

The Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirmed a judgment of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California, entered upon jury verdicts under a three-count indictment, finding petitioner Bridges guilty of making a false statement in his naturalization proceeding, finding the other two petitioners guilty of participating in procuring Bridges' naturalization certificate by fraud, and finding all three petitioners guilty of conspiring to defraud the United States by having Bridges make the false statement. The alleged falsity of the statement, or the alleged fraud, under each count, turned upon whether petitioner Bridges had ever been a member of the Communist Party. The questions are:

(1) Whether, in view of prior adjudications (including the determination of this Court in Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135), this proceeding is barred, in whole or in part, by the principles of res judicata, or estoppel, or the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment.

(2) Whether this proceeding is barred by the statute of limitations.

(3) Whether, in four particular and important respects, petitioners were denied a fair trial.

STATUTES INVOLVED

The relevant provisions of (a) 18 U. S. C. 371, on which Count I of the indictment is based; (b) 18 U. S. C. 1015(a), on which Count II is based, (c) 8 U. S. C. [1946 ed.] 746(a), on which Count III is based, (d) 18 U. S. C. 3282, the applicable statute of limitations, and (e) 18 U. S. C. 3287, the Wartime Suspension Act, are set forth in the Appendix, infra, pp. 24-25.

STATEMENT

Harry R. Bridges has resided continuously in the United States since 1920, when he entered legally as an immigrant seaman from Australia (Tr. 43). He was naturalized on September 17, 1945. His wife and his children are native-born American citizens. He is the President, and the other petitioners are or have been officers, of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union.

From 1934 to 1945, Bridges was the subject of investigations and proceedings designed to deport him on the ground that he was or had been a member of the Communist Party. These were unsuccessful, and on June 23, 1945 (five days after the decision in Bridges v. Wixon, supra), Bridges filed at the San Francisco office of the Immigration and Naturalization Service his petition for naturalization. On August 8, 1945, he appeared before an examiner in connection with this petition; Schmidt and Robertson also appeared and witnessed the petition.[2]

On September 17, 1945, Bridges, with the same two witnesses, appeared in the Superior Court of the State of California, and testimony was taken in support of the petition. The witnesses testified that they were American citizens, that they had known Bridges for five years and knew him to be of good moral character; they vouched for his loyalty to the United States and recommended him to citizenship (Tr. 134-135).[3] Government counsel stated that the witnesses were satisfactory, and they were excused. Bridges was then examined. The following was among many questions to and answers by him (Tr. 138):

> "Q. Do you now or have you ever belonged to the Communist Party in the United States?
> A. I have not, I do not."

Thereafter, Government counsel stated that he had no further evidence and no objection to naturalization (Tr. 144).

On May 25, 1949, three years, eight months, and eight days after the naturalization decree, this indictment (Tr.

---

[2] Robertson was called at the last minute in place of a prospective witness whose citizenship qualifications were not established to the satisfaction of the examiner (Tr. 459-461).

[3] It is not alleged in the indictment herein, nor did the Government offer any proof at the trial, that any of these statements were false.

3-8) was filed. The fraud charge in Count I was that Bridges' testimony was false, in that he allegedly had been a member of the Communist Party from 1933 to September 17, 1945. The overt acts alleged to ground the conspiracy were the several steps of the naturalization proceeding. Count II of the indictment alleged that the question put to petitioner was material and his falsehood willful. Count III charged that Schmidt and Robertson assisted Bridges to obtain a certificate of naturalization, knowing it to have been procured by fraud.

After the indictment was returned, Bridges moved its dismissal (Tr. 10-26) on grounds which included all the issues embraced in the first two questions presented here.[4] Petitioners Schmidt and Robertson moved to dismiss on such of the foregoing grounds as were applicable to them (Tr. 27-41, 8312). The motions to dismiss were denied. United States v. Bridges, 86 F. Supp. 922.

After a long trial, the jury returned verdicts of guilty against Bridges on Counts I and II of the indictment, and against Schmidt and Robertson on Counts I and III of the indictment (Tr. 220-222). Motions in arrest of judgment and for new trial were duly made (Tr. 223-228). All were denied (Tr. 229), and Bridges was sentenced to concurrent terms of two years on Count I and five years on Count II (Tr. 230, 235-236). Schmidt and Robertson were each sentenced to concurrent terms of two years on Counts I and III of the indictment (Tr. 231-234, 237-240).

Ten weeks later, the Government moved to revoke the order granting bail to Bridges, and to remand him to the custody of the Marshal. Over objection, and despite the Government's admission that the appeal presented substantial questions, Bridges was incarcerated in the San Francisco County Jail (93 F. Supp. 989). Three weeks later he was released by order of the Court of Appeals. Bridges v. United States, 184 F. 2d 881.

---

[4] Supra, p. 3.

Appeals from the judgment of conviction were timely filed to the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, which affirmed it on September 6, 1952. A petition for rehearing was denied, on the basis of an amended opinion, on November 18, 1952. A supplemental petition, reiterating the request for a hearing before the Court of Appeals en banc, was denied with a further opinion on December 29, 1952.[5]

SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS TO BE URGED

The court below erred:

(1) In holding that the indictment was not barred, in whole or in part, by prior adjudications, under the principles of res judicata or estoppel, or under the Fifth Amendment.

(2) In holding that the indictment was not barred by the statute of limitations.

(3) In affirming the judgment of the trial court, and holding that petitioners were afforded a fair trial, despite erroneous and prejudicial rulings, questions and statements of the trial court as follows: (a) the trial court's exclusion from evidence of this Court's decision in Bridges v. Wixon, supra, (b) improper questions put to the defense witness Father Meinecke, and the trial court's subsequent comments on these questions, (c) the trial court's restriction of the scope of cross-examination of the Government witness Kessler, and its comments, in the presence of the jury, in support of this ruling, and (d) the trial court's instruction to the jury that a reasonable doubt is a doubt for which "a good reason can be given".

---

[5] Cf. Western Pacific R.R. Corp. v. Western Pacific R. Co., 197 F. 2d 994, 1013 (9th Cir.), cert. granted 344 U. S. 809, Docket Nos. 150 and 160.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

1. Prior Adjudications. As the court below put it, with commendable understatement, "the Executive Department has long been concerned with Mr. Bridges" (Tr. 8382). This concern has been manifested in two exhaustive proceedings, prior to this one, in which it was sought to deport him on the basis of a charge of Communist membership or affiliation. Both of these prior efforts were unsuccessful; the first proceeding resulted in an administrative adjudication favorable to Bridges, and the second culminated in the decision of this Court in Bridges v. Wixon, supra.

Administrative investigations by the Immigration and Naturalization Service in 1934 and 1936 failed to establish Bridges' membership in or affiliation with the Communist Party (Tr. 47, 49). Nevertheless, in 1938 the Secretary of Labor issued a warrant for his deportation on such charges, and a full and lengthy (Tr. 53) hearing was held before a special examiner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the Honorable James M. Landis. On December 28, 1939, Dean Landis transmitted to the Secretary of Labor his findings that neither membership in nor affiliation with the Communist Party had been established. The Secretary of Labor approved this determination and cancelled the warrant (Tr. 55).

Thereafter, and consequent upon a statutory amendment making past as well as present membership in or affiliation with the Communist Party a ground for deportation, a new warrant for Bridges' deportation was issued by the Attorney-General in 1941 (Tr. 56-58).[6] Another exhaustive hearing (Tr. 59) was held before the Presiding Inspector (the Honorable Charles B. Sears). Judge Sears found that the evidence established affiliation and membership; the Board of Immigration Appeals found to the contrary, but the Attorney-General found in accordance with Judge Sears' decision, and ordered Bridges deported. Upon his arrest, Bridges sued out a writ of habeas corpus contesting the validity of the warrant. His writ was denied by the District Court (49 F. Supp. 292) and this decision was affirmed (two judges dissenting) by the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit (144 F. 2d 927), but this Court reversed the judgments below, and Bridges was released.[7] He thereupon applied for and obtained naturalization.

The court below refused to give these two prior administrative and judicial determinations the effect of res judicata or estoppel. As to the first, it held that "since an administrative board is an instrument of the executive power and not a court, the doctrine of res judicata cannot be applied to its decisions" (Tr. 8384), relying on Pearson v. Williams, 202 U. S. 281. As to the second, it held that in Bridges v. Wixon, supra, "there was no judicial determination that Bridges was not affiliated with nor a member of the Communist Party" (Tr. 8387). Both holdings are erroneous; both are in conflict with applicable decisions of this Court and of other courts of appeals.

---

[6] In the meantime, the Immigration and Naturalization Service had been transferred to the Department of Justice.

[7] The history of these proceedings is summarized in the opinion of this Court in Bridges v. Wixon, supra, at pages 139-40.

With respect to the effect of administrative determinations, Pearson v. Williams, supra, is not governing here. As the Pearson opinion carefully specified, the administrative decision there in question (made by a board of special inquiry of the Commissioner of Immigration) was a tentative and summary one.[8] The Board had no power to compel the attendance of witnesses, and was expected to "decide upon such evidence as is at hand or is readily accessible."[9] In this context, the court stated:[10] "Decisions of a similar type long have been recognized as decisions of the executive department and cannot constitute res judicata in a technical sense".

But an entirely different situation is presented when, as here, the administrative proceeding is plenary and of a quasi-judicial character. Tait v. Western Maryland Ry. Co., 289 U. S. 620; Sunshine Coal Co. v. Adkins, 310 U. S. 381; Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Ohio Valley Tie Co., 242 U. S. 288. The court below wrongly read Pearson v. Williams, supra, as a blanket holding that administrative determinations are not given the effect of res judicata or estoppel.[11] The courts of appeals are in plain conflict on this question. Thus, in the First and District of Columbia Circuits, the courts of appeals appear to have taken the same position as did the court below. Cf. Flynn v. Ward, 95 F. 2d 742, 743 (1st Cir.); Churchill Tabernacle v. Federal Communications Commission, 160 F. 2d 244, 246 (D. C. Cir.). But in the Seventh and Eighth Circuits, a more discriminating result has been reached in line with the decisions of this Court, under which plenary, quasi-judicial determinations are given effect as res judicata or by way of estoppel. International Building Co. v. United States, 199 F. 2d 12 (8th Cir.); United States v. Willard Tablet Co., 141 F. 2d 141 (7th Cir.). And the record in the present case leaves no doubt that the proceedings before the special examiners were plenary, and as exhaustive as any court trial.[12]

---

[8] The Board's function was to determine, at the moment of the alien's debarkation, whether he was entitled to land. As Justice Holmes remarked, under these circumstances "any inquiry necessarily must be of a very summary sort". Pearson v. Williams, supra, at p. 284.

[9] Id. at page 285.

[10] Ibid.

[11] The nature of the misconception below is manifested by the court's observation that Dean Landis was "acting as an official of the executive department of the Government but not as an arm of the judicial department . . ." (Tr. 8383). True, of course, but this applies to all administrative determinations, including those which are quasi-judicial, and the court's test would have subverted the decisions in the Tait and Sunshine cases, supra.

Turning to the second proceeding, the decision of this Court in Bridges v. Wixon, supra, is a judicial determination based upon an administrative record—i.e., the record of the proceedings before Judge Sears and the reviewing authorities of the Department of Justice. The court below refused to give effect to the decision, on the grounds that "The matter in court was habeas corpus, and the Communist issue was not in the case" (Tr. 8307), and that "there was no judicial determination" (Tr. 8387) that Bridges was not a Communist Party member.

But the lower court's reliance upon the form of the proceeding (habeas corpus) is in direct conflict with the law as declared by this Court and other circuit courts of appeals. Where the writ is granted, by a plenary determination on the merits, the decision is res judicata of the issues of fact and law necessarily involved in that result. See Morse v. United States, 267 U. S. 80, 85; Collins v. Loisel, 262 U. S. 426, 430; Harris v. Biszkowicz, 100 F. 2d 854 (8th Cir.); United States v. Chung Shee, 71 F. 277 (D. C. S. D. Cal.); Ex Parte Reaves, 121 F. 848 (D. C. Ala.)

---

[12] Tr. 53-59. The proceedings were protracted, many witnesses were called and exhibits introduced, full argument was heard and briefs received, the factual and legal issues were earnestly contested, and findings and conclusions were made.

The remarkable statement of the court below (Tr. 8387) that "the Communist issue was not in" Bridges v. Wixon, supra, flies in the face of the opinions of this Court and the lower courts in that proceeding. Likewise, the petition for the writ of habeas corpus, and the Government's traverse, put in issue whether there was evidence to support Judge Sears' decision and the Attorney-General's warrant.[13] And this Court clearly held that the record contained no substantial evidence, in support of the charge of Communist Party membership, against Bridges. There is, therefore, a plain basis for application of the rule as stated in Southern Pacific RR. Co. v. United States, 168 U. S. 1, at p. 48 that ". . . a right, question or fact distinctly put in issue and directly determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, as a ground for recovery, cannot be disputed in a subsequent suit between the same parties or their privies . . .". In the present case the parties (the Federal Government and Bridges) are the same as in Bridges v. Wixon, supra, and the issue (whether Bridges was or was not a member of the Communist Party) is the same as in that case.[14]

---

[13] See Record in Bridges v. Wixon, supra, p. 49.

Indeed, the court below conceded (Tr. 8386) that this Court in Bridges v. Wixon, held "that the administrative decision approving an executive order to deport Bridges could not be sustained since it was not supported by substantial evidence". This Court's judgment in Bridges v. Wixon was, therefore, far more than a mere finding of unfairness or other irregularity in the administrative proceeding, such as would require a new trial. Courts never decide issues of fact in the philosophic absolute, but only within the framework of the record. When a conviction, or other judicial decision adverse to an individual, is upset on review for lack of supporting evidence, and not merely for unfairness or other irregularity, the determination on review (unless the proceeding is resumed below) is judicially final and is available to the individual to be pleaded as res judicata or estoppel by judgment. The Government cannot repeatedly cast the dice in the hope that a new and distinct proceeding may turn up substantial evidence. Cf.

---

[14] Below, the Government made some point that Bridges might be shown to have become a Communist after the earlier determinations. But this is of no avail to it, as the case did not go to the jury on that basis. The indictment charged, in each count, that Bridges was a member from 1933 to September 17, 1945. At the trial, defense counsel objected unsuccessfully to the introduction of evidence antedating the prior determinations (Tr. 736, 816-17, 87 F. Supp. 14), and unsuccessfully requested instructions to the jury to disregard evidence of membership prior to each significant date in the earlier proceedings (Tr. 293-96). Therefore, even if earlier evidence might have been held admissible to prove a state of facts continuing after the prior determinations, which we by no means concede, the case as it went to the jury was not limited to the question of membership subsequent to the prior determinations. And in fact the bulk of the evidence related to years preceding these determinations. See the opinion below on the evidence by Judge Pope (Tr. 8404-8433).

Sealfon v. United States, 332 U. S. 575; United States v. Williams, 341 U. S. 58, at 63.

We need not here be concerned with what the situation would have been had the Government, after the decision in Bridges v. Wixon, supra, endeavored to resume the administrative proceeding for Bridges' deportation, and to hold another administrative hearing on the same factual issues. Cf. Bryan v. United States, 338 U. S. 552. The Government did not do so, and it is bound here by Bridges v. Wixon and the issues of fact therein judicially resolved.

Furthermore, the Government thereafter did not oppose Bridges' naturalization, and did not appeal from the decree granting him citizenship. That decree, itself, is also res judicata of the issues of fact necessarily decided, including that of non-membership in the Communist Party.[15]

Administrative decisions in recent years have often assumed proportions momentous to individuals. Deportation proceedings are perhaps the plainest example. See Bridges v. Wixon, supra, at p. 147. Although the prior proceedings against Bridges were not technically criminal in character, they were certainly penal. Ng Fung Ho v. United States, 259 U. S. 276; Wallis v. Tecchio, 65 F. 2d 250 (5th Cir.); Browne v. Zurbrick, 45 F. 2d 931 (6th Cir). The Fifth Amendment forbids double jeopardy as to even a trifling criminal offense. Its guaranty of due process of law extends at least the basic protections of the Bill of Rights to all types of proceedings, whether or not known in 1789. Unless the constitutional guaranty against double jeopardy is "to be eroded away by a tide of plausible-appearing exceptions" (Justice Murphy in Wade v. Hunter, 336 U. S. 684, 694), it must be held applicable to cases such as the one at bar.

---

[15] The question of the binding effect of a naturalization decree, as to past facts, was expressly left open in Knauer v. United States, 328 U. S. 654. However, the Court did restate (at p. 670), with apparent approval, the rule that "the issue of fraud can become res judicata in the judgment sought to be set aside", and sharply distinguished the issue of state of mind (involved in the Knauer case) from issues as to past facts (involved in this case), as to which (at p. 671) "opportunity exists for the examiner or the judge to determine if what the new citizen swore was true, was in fact false."

Under the decision below, the Government can follow one protracted and exhaustive proceeding with another. If that can be done, there will inevitably come a proceeding, whether it be the second or the seventh, when the Government may get the result it wants. The entire course of proceedings with respect to Bridges embodies repetitious charges based upon the same factual issue, disregard of the salutary policy of repose, and harassment of an individual on the same charge over the course of fifteen years or more. This cannot be squared either with rudimentary concepts of fair play, or with the Fifth Amendment. This Court should examine "the whole course of the proceedings in order to ascertain whether they offend those canons of decency and fairness which express the notions of justice of English-speaking peoples even toward those charged with the most heinous offenses." See Adamson v. California, 332 U. S. 46, 67-68. Cf. Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U. S. 97, 105; Francis v. Resweber, 329 U. S. 459, 469.

2. Statute of limitations. This proceeding was barred by the general federal statute of limitations (18 U. S. C. 3282) unless the Wartime Suspension of Limitations Act (18 U. S. C. 3287) is applicable.[16] The court below held the latter Act applicable, expressly recognizing (Tr. 8379) that its decision was in direct conflict with Marzani v. United States, 168 F. 2d 133 (D. C. Cir.), twice affirmed by an equally divided Court, 335 U. S. 895 and 336 U. S. 922.[17]

---

[16] In its original opinion of September 6, 1952, the court below held that Counts II and III were also saved by the "rights and liabilities" clause in the Act of June 25, 1946, which repealed the five-year limitation previously applicable to the offenses charged in these counts (Tr. 8225-8229). In its amended opinion of November 18, 1952, the court below held to the contrary (Tr. 8364-8367).

The Wartime Suspension Act suspended until three years after the termination of hostilities (proclaimed by the President December 31, 1946) the running of the statute of limitations applicable to offenses "involving fraud or attempted fraud against the United States or any agency thereof, whether by conspiracy or not."[18] This language is substantially identical with that contained in the similar statute enacted after World War I (November 17, 1921, c. 124, Sec. 1, 42 Stat. 220), which suspended the limitation on "any offenses involving the defrauding or attempts to defraud the United States or any agency thereof, whether by conspiracy or not, and in any manner."

By a series of unanimous decisions of this Court, it became the settled construction of the 1921 statute that it applied only where fraud was a necessary element of the statutory crime charged. United States v. Noveck, 271 U. S. 201; United States v. McElvain, 272 U. S. 633; United States v. Scharton, 285 U. S. 518. Even if the acts of which the defendants stood accused clearly involved fraud in a general sense, the 1921 Act was inapplicable unless the criminal statute explicitly made fraud an essential ingredient of guilt. Thus, in the Noveck case, an indictment for perjury was barred, even though it consisted of a false statement of income to defraud the government of tax revenues, because fraud was not a necessary element of the crime of perjury. In the Scharton case,[19] the court went further, and declared (285 U. S. at p. 522) that such statutes should be "liberally interpreted in favor of repose, and ought not to be extended by construction to embrace so-called frauds not so denominated by the statutes creating offenses."

---

[17] The existence of the conflict was also recognized in United States v. Skneer, 194 F. 2d 598, 599 fn. 1 (3rd Cir.), and Bridges v. United States, 184 F. 2d 881, 883-84.

[18] Two other categories of offenses covered in the Wartime Suspension Act were concededly not applicable in this proceeding.

In the light of this interpretive history, Congress enacted the Suspension Act involved in this proceeding. The legislative history is barren of any evidence that Congress intended or attempted to undo or modify the rules of interpretation previously laid down by this Court, or in any way to expand the new statute's coverage. Furthermore, the House and Senate Committee reports strongly indicate that the legislative intent was to suspend the limitation on frauds of a pecuniary nature committed in connection with the war,[20] quite different from the offenses here charged.

The substantive offense with which petitioner Bridges is charged (Count II) is making a false statement in a naturalization proceeding. It is patent on the face of the statute that fraud is not an essential element of the statutory crime. The Noveck and Scharton cases are directly in point, and the Suspension Act does not apply. The decision below is plainly wrong, and is in conflict not only with Marzani v. United States, supra, but also with United

---

[19] The Scharton case construed a proviso in the Revenue Act of 1926, Sec. 1110(a), similar in language to the 1921 statute.

[20] No. 2051, House Misc. Rep. III, and No. 1544, Sen. Misc. Rep. IV (77th Cong. 2d Sess.).

States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243 (2nd Cir.), wherein the Act was held inapplicable to a charge identical to the one herein question. As the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit concluded, the Act applies[21]

> ". . . only when fraud or attempted fraud against the United States (or one of its agencies) 'is an ingredient under the statute defining the offense' and does not, absent such a statutory definition, apply to perjury or false swearing even when the United States is directly interested. Nothing in 8 U. S. C. § 746(a)(1),[21a] under which the defendant was indicted, makes fraud an ingredient of the crime."

The Marzani case held that the Suspension Act applies only to pecuniary frauds, and under this decision the Act is equally inapplicable to Counts I and III of this indictment, and they are barred. Other reasoning leads to the same result. Count I is cast in the language of conspiracy to defraud, but the acts alleged constitute only a conspiracy to have Bridges make a false statement in a naturalization proceeding. Similarly, Count III charges petitioners Robertson and Schmidt with assisting Bridges to obtain a Certificate of Naturalization, by means of a false statement. If fraud is not an essential element of the false statement, it can hardly be an element of the conspiracy or of the assistance. This reasoning was the basis of this Court's decision in the McElvain case, supra, where the defendant was indicted under the same statute on which Count I of the present indictment is based. The Court held that the earlier Suspension Act did not cover the conspiracy because the substantive offense, to which the conspiracy was directed, was not covered.[22] [21] United States v. Obermeier, supra, at page 257. The opinion of Judge Frank was concurred in by Judges Learned Hand and Swan.

---

[21a] Now 18 U. S. C. 1015 (a), on which Count II of this indictment is based.

The decision in the Marzani case also appears to have been confirmed by this Court's dictum in United States v. Beacon Brass Co. Inc., 344 U. S. 43.[23] Indeed, the decision below, holding the Suspension Act applicable, is so bereft of support in precedent or logic that a district court in California has recently refused to follow it. United States v. Grainger (N. D. Cal.), decided December 5, 1952.[24]

---

[22] United States v. Gottfried, 165 F. 2d 360 (2nd Cir.), heavily relied on by the court below, involved both conspiracy and the substantive offense of false statements made to the Office of Price Administration in connection with sugar rationing. The Suspension Act was held applicable, but the decision seems to have been doubted in the later Obermeier case in the same court (186 F. 2d at p. 257, footnote 64). Furthermore, the crime involved was more in the nature of a "wartime offense" to which the Suspension Act was thought peculiarly applicable. See, in this connection, the concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Clark in United States v. Smith, 342 U. S. 225, 230-31.

[23] Referring to the statute involved in the Marzani case (the False Claims Act), this Court, per Mr. Justice Minton, stated at 344 U. S. p. 45: "Obviously, at the times of the indictments here, the three-year limitation period, 18 U. S. C. (Supp. V) Sec. 3282, for violations of this statute had expired as to statements made in October 1945." See also United States v. Anzalone, 197 F. 2d 714 (3rd Cir.).

[24] As in the Gottfried case, supra, the defendants in the Grainger case were indicted under both the False Claims Act and the general conspiracy statute on which Count I of the indictment here is based. The district court (Lemmon, D. J.) held all counts barred and the Suspension Act inapplicable, on the basis of the Scharton, Marzani and Beacon Brass cases, supra. Referring to the opinion below in the present case, the court stated:

> ". . . It should be observed, however, that in its Bridges opinion, our appellate court did not evaluate the force of the word 'denominated' in the Scharton case; that in criticizing the 'conclusions' of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in the Marzani case, supra, the Ninth Court of Appeals did not consider the fact that Marzani had twice been affirmed, though by a divided Supreme Court; and finally, our Court of Appeals apparently overlooked the Beacon Brass case, supra
>
> "This Court, therefore, must though reluctantly, disregard the holding in Bridges, and be guided by the Supreme Court's recent semaphores in Scharton, Marzani, and Beacon Brass."

Finally, the question here at issue is an important one, as the Government earnestly maintains in its petition for allowance of an appeal to this Court in the Grainger case, supra.[25] Another question of construction of the Suspension Act has recently been brought before this Court by the Government's petition for certiorari in United States v. Klinger, 199 F. 2d 645 (2nd Cir.). All the observations therein with respect to the importance of the matter[26] are applicable to this case, and underline the desirability of settling the conflict created by the court below.

3. Denial of Fair Trial. A. The Court below affirmed the exclusion from evidence of this Court's opinion in Bridges v. Wixon, which Robertson and Schmidt had offered to support their vouching for Bridges in the naturalization proceedings. It said the opinion could not have been explanatory of their beliefs "because of the nature of the issue involved in the case and the narrow scope of the decision (Tr. 8388)". But these petitioners had the right to have the jury determine the reasonableness of their beliefs

---

[25] See the matter under the heading "The Question is Substantial" in the Government's petition in that case, filed January 2, 1953 in the District Court for the Northern District of California. Therein the Government also concedes that the decision below in this case is in conflict with the Marzani and Obermeier cases, supra.

[26] See pages 7 to 8 of the Government's petition in No. 527. In the Klinger case, the question at issue is whether the bar of the statute is suspended until December 31, 1949, or whether the running does not begin until that day, creating in effect a six-year period. Cf. United States v. Smith, 342 U. S. 225. The Government's petition points out that there are well over one hundred prosecutions in which indictments have been filed but which have not yet been brought to trial, and that the Suspension Act has now become permanent legislation, so that definitive construction by this Court is desirable. Cf. Stern, Denial of Certiorari Despite a Conflict, 66 Harv. L. Rev. 465 (January, 1953), passim.

by an examination of the document upon which they claimed those beliefs were predicated. Potter v. United States, 155 U. S. 438; Harrison v. United States, 200 F. 662 (6th Cir.); Buchanan v. United States. 15 F. 2d 496 (8th Cir.); Hersh v. United States, 68 F. 2d 799 (9th Cir.); Miller v. United States, 120 F. 2d 968 (10th Cir.); C. I. T. Corporation v. United States, 150 F. 2d 85 (9th Cir.). The exclusion of this evidence was prejudicial error. Cf. Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U. S. 750.

B. Father Paul Meinecke, a Catholic priest, was called as a character witness by Bridges. At the conclusion of his examination by counsel, the trial court undertook an examination which tended to discredit the witness.[27] Questions were put which indicated that the witness was mentally unbalanced (Tr. 4380-1). The court below admitted that "the questions of the [trial] court might be subject to misunderstanding" (Tr. 8393), but went on to say that such a danger was cured by a subsequent instruction. In fact, no subsequent instruction to disregard the implications of the questions was given. Rather, the trial judge said he was seeking to provide the jury with "all the facts surrounding the Father" (Tr. 4387). This indicated that there were "facts" concerning the witness' mental health which the jury ought to consider, and if anything this compounded the evil. Similar conduct on the part of a trial judge has heretofore resulted in setting aside convictions. United States v. Brandt, 196 F. 2d 653 (2nd Cir.); Williams v.

---

[27] Shortly prior to doing so the trial court had declined an invitation of defense counsel to assist in overcoming technical objections put by the prosecutor during the direct examination of this very witness with the observation that "It is not the province of the court to examine the witness" (Tr. 4369-70).

United States, 93 F. 2d 685 (9th Cir.); cf. Kotteakos v. United States, supra.

C. The trial court improperly limited cross-examination of Kessler, a key prosecution witness. An earlier witness had placed Bridges at an alleged Communist Party meeting, and had fixed the time as an occasion when he (the witness) had stopped at a specified hotel in San Francisco "late in 1940" (Tr. 3343). Subsequently, the Government asserted that this was the "only registration" of the witness at the hotel in question for the year 1940 (Tr. 3481). The defense thereupon produced a registration card dated in February 1940—the only one it found in the hotel records.

In order to remove this cloud upon its witness, the Government called Kessler, an employee of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, who produced another registration card dated in August 1940, with the explanation that the Government had earlier removed this card from the hotel files.

The trial court should have permitted an unhampered cross-examination of this Government employee to determine why and under what circumstances the second registration card had been removed.[28] However, disregarding this Court's decision in Alford v. United States, 282 U. S. 687, the trial court permitted no cross-examination on this point (Tr. 3580-3602). This was a prejudicial abuse of discretion which "cut off in limine all inquiry on a subject with respect to which the defense was entitled to a reasonable cross-examination". Alford v. United States, supra, at p. 694.

---

[28] Earlier government witnesses who had fixed a precise date when they claimed to have seen Bridges in New York City at an alleged Communist meeting were confronted with documentary and other evidence which, as the court below recognized, established "apparently beyond controversy" (Tr. 8423) that he was three thousand miles away in California at that time. The caution thereafter exhibited by the Government in fixing precise dates was understandable.

In connection with this incident, the trial court made highly prejudicial observations in the presence of the jury.[29] The court below recognized this as being "in poor discretion" (Tr. 8397) and as not reflecting the "true idealism" with which a trial judge should act (Tr. 8397). But it is far more than that. Standing by itself, it would justify a reversal. Together with the other errors, it compels one. Kotteakos v. United States, supra; Krulewitch v. United States, 336 U. S. 440; Kraus & Bros. v. United States, 327 U. S. 614; Fiswick v. United States, 329 U. S. 211; United States v. Levi, 177 F. 2d 833 (7th Cir.); Meeks v. United States, 163 F. 2d 598 (9th Cir.); Wolcher v. United States, F. (2) (9th Cir.), decided November 17, 1952.

D. The trial judge told the jury that petitioners were entitled to acquittal if the Government failed to prove their guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, but also instructed that such a doubt was one "for which a good reason can be given" (Tr. 7885-6). This put upon petitioners the burden of satisfying the jury that there was a good reason for their acquittal. The court below itself recognized that such an instruction is "not to be commended" (Tr. 8399).

---

[29] In the course of ruling upon the point, the trial judge said:

> "Then in Morton v. U. S. at 60 Fed. 2d 696, at 699. And the language used in this Morton case is somewhat reminiscent of your [addressing trial counsel] expectation or hope that some error might be created in the record. The Court said * * * 'The battle continued, not to ascertain the truth, but in the evident hope that error might be injected into the record and ultimate conviction thereby avoided. But avoidance of a conviction upon uncontradicted evidence, establishing to a certainty the guilt of the accused, . . .' and so forth."

The circuits are not in agreement on the reversibility of an instruction to the effect that a reasonable doubt means a doubt for which a reason can be assigned. Cf. United States v. Farina, 184 F. 2d 18 (2nd Cir.) (see especially Judge Frank's dissenting opinion at pp. 21-24); Pettine v. Territory of New Mexico, 201 F. 489 (8th Cir.). But never has it been suggested that not only must an affirmative reason be assigned to warrant an acquittal, but that the reason must be a "good" one. Standing alone this error would require reversal of the convictions. Bihn v. United States, 328 U. S. 633; Bollenbach v. United States, 326 U. S. 607. Compounded as it is with other errors of the trial court, the convictions cannot stand. Cf. Kotteakos v. United States, supra, and Krulewitch v. United States, supra.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, it is respectfully submitted that this petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

TELFORD TAYLOR,
New York, N. Y.
NORMAN LEONARD,
San Francisco, Cal.
Counsel for Petitioners.

January, 1953.

APPENDIX

18 U. S. C. Section 371:

"If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy; each of the parties to such conspiracy shall be fined not more than $10,000., or imprisoned not more than two years, or both."

18 U. S. C. Section 1015 (a):

"Whoever knowingly makes any false statement under oath, in any case, proceeding, or matter relating to, or under, or by virtue of any law of the United States relating to naturalization, citizenship, or registry of aliens * * * shall be fined not more than $5,000. or imprisoned not more than five years, or both."

8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) Section 746 (a):

"It is hereby made a felony for any alien or other person, whether an applicant for naturalization or citizenship, or otherwise * * *

(5) To encourage, aid, advise, or assist any person not entitled thereto to obtain, accept, or receive any * * * certificate of naturalization, or certificate of citizenship, or other documentary evidence of naturalization or of citizenship—

a. Knowing the same to have been procured by fraud; or

b. Knowing the same to have been procured by the use or means of any false name or false > statement given or made with intent to procure the issuance of such * * * certificate of naturalization, or certificate of citizenship, or other documentary evidence of naturalization or citizenship * * *"

18 U. S. C. Section 3282:

"Except as otherwise expressly provided by law, no person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense, not capital, unless the indictment is found or the information is instituted within three years next after such offense shall have been committed."

18 U. S. C. Section 3287:

"When the United States is at war the running of any statute of limitations applicable to any offense (1) involving fraud or attempted fraud against the United States or any agency thereof in any manner, whether by conspiracy or not, or (2) committed in connection with the acquisition, care, handling, custody, control or disposition of any real or personal property of the United States, or (3) committed in connection with the negotiation, procurement, award, performance, payment for, interim financing, cancelation, or other termination or settlement, of any contract, subcontracted, or purchase order which is connected with or related to the prosecution of the war, or with any disposition of termination inventory by any war contractor or Government agency, shall be suspended until three years after the termination of hostilities as proclaimed by the President or by a concurrent resolution of Congress.

Definitions of terms in section 103 of Title 41 shall apply to similar terms used in this section."

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT. U.S.

Office-Supreme Court
FEB 19 195

No. 548

In the

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1952

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT
and J. R. ROBERTSON,
Petitioners,

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

On Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

---

REPLY MEMORANDUM FOR THE PETITIONERS

Telford Taylor,
New York, N. Y.
Norman Leonard,
San Francisco, Cal.
Counsel for Petitioners.

CITATIONS

PAGE

CASES:

Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135 .... 3, 4, 5

Marzani v. United States, 168 F. 2d 133 (D. C. Cir.), affirmed by an equally divided Court, 335 U. S. 895, and similarly reaffirmed, 336 U. S. 922. 1

United States v. Grainger, (N. D. Cal.), decided Dec. 5, 1952 2

United States v. Klinger, 199 F. 2d 645 (2nd Cir.) . .

United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243 (2nd Cir.) 2

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT,
and J. R. ROBERTSON,
Petitioners,
v.
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

No. 548

ON PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

REPLY MEMORANDUM FOR THE PETITIONERS

I

With respect to the question whether this prosecution is barred by the statute of limitations, the Government's memorandum (pp. 20-23) agrees that the decision below is in square conflict with United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243 (2nd Cir.) and Marzani v. United States, 168 F. 2d 133 (D. C. Cir.), affirmed by an equally divided Court, 335 U. S. 895, and similarly reaffirmed, 336 U. S. 922. Recognizing this conflict, the Government's memorandum substantially concedes, and certainly does not contest (pp. 35-36) the issuance of a writ of certiorari to review this question.

The Government's statement (p. 22) that the conflict "relates to a matter of diminishing importance" is supported only by the suggestion that there are less (by some indeterminate amount) than the "over one hundred prosecutions", relied on by the Government in its pending petition for certiorari in No. 527, United States v. Klinger, 199 F. 2d 645 (2nd Cir.), that would be governed by the decision in the instant case.

Furthermore, the Government's memorandum in the instant case (pp. 23-26) challenges the holding of the court below that Counts 2 and 3 of the indictment were not preserved by a saving clause in the 1948 repealer of the previous five-year statute of limitations—a challenge which implicitly invites review by this Court.

Finally, we respectfully remind the Court that a Federal District Court within the Ninth Circuit (United States v. Grainger, decided December 5, 1952) has deliberately declined to follow the decision in the instant case by the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, and that the Government is seeking an appeal to this Court in the Grainger case.* We cannot believe that the Government would thinkingly contend that the Grainger case, wherein the Government did not prevail, should be reviewed on appeal by this Court, but that the instant case, wherein the same basic question was decided below adversely to petitioners, should not be reviewed by this Court on certiorari. Certainly such a forked position would lend itself readily to invidious inferences.

---

*See the petition in No. 548 at pp. 18-19, and the Government's memorandum at p. 22, footnote 14.

II

It seems apparent, therefore, that a writ of certiorari should issue to review the question respecting the statute of limitations. Obviously, the principal purpose of the Government's memorandum is to limit the scope of the writ to this question, as the Government's memorandum (p. 36) expressly requests.

With all the earnestness at our command, we respectfully urge that such a limitation in the writ is unsupportable. The question whether this prosecution was barred by prior adjudications is one of the two basic questions in this case, fully equal in importance to the question with respect to the statute of limitations, as is apparent from the content of and emphasis given to this point in our petition (pp. 7-14).

Apart from the judicial effect of the naturalization decree itself, and the emasculation of Constitutional guaranties resulting from multiple and repetitious penal proceedings (both of which are substantial questions), it is clear that the issue as between the Government and petitioners revolves around the judicial effect of this Court's decision in Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135. The nub of this issue is clearly reflected in the following extract from the Government's memorandum (pp. 14-15):

> ". . . At most, what was decided in the prior proceedings was that Bridges had not been shown to be a member of the Communist Party before 1940. The issue as of 1945 when Bridges swore that he was not a member, was, of course, not at all involved in those proceedings. Thus the Government did not attempt to re-litigate any issue actually decided in the deportation hearings.[8]

---

[8] "To establish the falsity of the 1945 statement the Government did not rely on the evidence which had been introduced at the prior deportation hearings. All of the government's witnesses were new."

The flaw in the Government's argument is apparent from the extraordinary footnote. That the Government's witnesses against Bridges in the prior deportation hearings had all been discredited, so that the Government felt obliged to dredge up and rely upon an entirely new lot, is indeed interesting, but quite irrelevant to the point at issue. The question is not whether the prosecution's evidence came from new witnesses, but whether the issue which went to the jury was, in whole or in part, the same issue that had been litigated before. If, "what was decided in the prior proceedings was that Bridges had not been shown to be a member of the Communist Party before 1940", then obviously "the issue as of 1945", which alone should have gone to the jury, was whether Bridges was at any time a Communist after the decision in 1940 and before September 17, 1945 (the latest date specified in the indictment).

However, as we pointed out in our petition (p. 12, footnote 14), the indictment was not so limited, and the efforts of the defense to limit the evidence were unsuccessful. The Government's memorandum completely fails to meet this basic point. It is only necessary to read the Government's summary of its own evidence (pp. 4-10) to see that the great bulk relates to years prior to 1940. How the jury would have found had the issue been properly limited is, at best, entirely speculative.

We pass over without further comment the Government's labored efforts to explain away (p. 14) the conflict among the circuits created by the decision below with respect to the judicial effect of administrative or habeas corpus decisions. As for the Government's contention (p. 13) that Bridges v. Wixon, supra, merely held that the administrative hearing was "unfair", rather than that the evidence did not sustain the deportation order, we respectfully refer the Court to its opinion in Bridges v. Wixon, at p. 156 ("Since it was error to admit O'Neil's unsworn statements against Bridges, since they were so crucial to the findings of membership, and since that issue was so close, we are unable to say that the order of deportation may be sustained without them".), and to the conclusion of the court below (Tr. 8386) that this Court in Bridges v. Wixon held "that the administrative decision approving an Executive Order to deport Bridges could not be sustained since it was not supported by substantial evidence."

It is difficult, therefore, to find any reasonable basis for restricting the scope of the writ in the manner suggested by the Government. It seems clear that the case should in any event come before this Court to review the limitations question. Why should petitioners be foreclosed from presenting the important legal issues, vital to petitioners' rights as citizens under a government of law, which stem from the prior adjudications? The integrity and effect of this Court's own decision in Bridges v. Wixon are directly involved in this proceeding and there are, therefore, especially compelling reasons for this Court itself to pass upon these issues.

III

For the foregoing reasons, it is respectfully submitted that the writ of certiorari should not be limited in the manner suggested by the Government.

TELFORD TAYLOR,
New York, N. Y.
NORMAN LEONARD,
San Francisco, Cal.
Counsel for Petitioners.

February, 1953.

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT. U.S.

Office - Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
MAR 23 1953
HAROLD B. WILLEY, Clerk

No. 548

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT
and J. R. ROBERTSON,
Petitioners,
v.
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

PETITION FOR ENLARGEMENT OF SCOPE OF REVIEW ON CERTIORARI

TELFORD TAYLOR
New York, N. Y.
NORMAN LEONARD
San Francisco, Cal.
Counsel for Petitioners.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

No. 548

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT
and J. R. ROBERTSON,
Petitioners,

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

PETITION FOR ENLARGEMENT OF SCOPE OF REVIEW ON CERTIORARI

Come now petitioners above-named and hereby apply for an order enlarging the scope of review as defined by the order of this Court granting certiorari on March 9, 1953.

1.

On January 14, 1953, petitioners filed a petition for a writ of certiorari to review a judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirming judgments of conviction in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California. In said petition three questions were presented for review:

1. Whether, in view of prior adjudications (including the determination of this Court in Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135), this proceeding is barred, in whole or in part, by the principles of res judicata, or estoppel, or the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment.

2. Whether this proceeding is barred by the statute of limitations.

3. Whether, in four particular and important respects, petitioners were denied a fair trial.

II.

On March 9, 1953, this Court made an order granting the writ limited, however, to Questions 1 and 2.

III.

Petitioners respectfully urge that the issues embraced under Question 3 are important and substantial questions which affect the administration of criminal justice in the courts of the United States, and, as more fully set out in the petition for certiorari (pp. 19-23), that the rulings of the court below are in conflict with the decisions of other courts of appeal and with the principles enunciated by this Court in Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U. S. 750; Bollenbach v. United States, 326 U. S. 607; and Bihn v. United States, 328 U. S. 633.

IV.

Apparently, under the rulings of this Court, the petitioners and this Court will be foreclosed from considering the issues raised under Question 3, unless this petition be filed:

For example, in Dennis v. United States, 341 U. S. 494 at 518, Mr. Justice Frankfurter pointed out "that no attempt was made to seek an enlargement of the range of questions" specified in the limited grant of certiorari in that case, and therefore "these alone are now open for our consideration". See also the dissenting opinion by Mr. Justice Black in that case, at page 581.

V.

Petitioners respectfully call the Court's attention to that portion of Question 3, as set forth in the petition (pp. 19-20), which deals with the exclusion from evidence, at the trial, of this Court's opinion in Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135. It is apparent that this particular issue is closely related to the issues presented by Question 1 of the petition, relating to prior adjudications, including the determination by this Court in Bridges v. Wixon, supra. In view of this close relationship, petitioners respectfully urge that the Court should not be foreclosed from consideration of all aspects of the problem.

Wherefore, petitioners pray that the Court make an order enlarging the scope of review so that all questions presented by the petition for certiorari, particularly that relating to the exclusion from evidence of Bridges v. Wixon, may be considered.

Respectfully submitted,

TELFORD TAYLOR

NORMAN LEONARD

Counsel for Petitioners.

Certificate of Counsel

We hereby certify that the foregoing petition is presented in good faith and not for delay.

TELFORD TAYLOR
NORMAN LEONARD
Counsel for Petitioners.

March 21, 1953

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT, U.S.

HAROLD B. WILLEY, Clerk

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

No. 548

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT,
and J. R. ROBERTSON,
Petitioners,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Respondent.

BRIEF FOR THE PETITIONERS

TELFORD TAYLOR
New York, N. Y.

NORMAN LEONARD
San Francisco, Calif.
Counsel for Petitioners

Of Counsel

JOHN P. FRANK
New Haven, Conn.

GLADSTEIN, ANDERSEN & LEONARD
San Francisco, Calif.

INDEX

PAGE

Opinions Below 1

Jurisdiction 2

Questions presented 2

Statutes Involved 3

Statement 3

Summary Of Argument 12

Argument 18

I. This Proceeding Is Barred By The Statute Of Limitations 18

A. The Wartime Suspension of Limitations Act is not Applicable to the Offenses Charged in this Indictment 19

1. The Suspension Act is not applicable unless fraud is an essential element of the statutory crime charged 20

2. If fraud is not an essential element of the offense charged, the Suspension Act is not made applicable by including in the indictment a charge of conspiracy to defraud the United States 25

3. Independently of the foregoing, the Suspension Act is applicable only to frauds which are pecuniary in nature, or which arise out of and are connected with the War 29

PAGE

4. The Suspension Act does not apply to any of the counts of this indictment 34

5. The arguments of the Government have all been previously rejected by this Court 40

6. If the Suspension Act were interpreted as is urged by the Government, the basic policies of both the statute of limitations and the Suspension Act would be subverted . . . 42

B. Counts II and III are Governed by the Three-Year General Statute of Limitations, and not by the Special Five-Year Statute of the Nationality Act, which was Repealed in 1948 . . 48

II. This Proceeding Is Barred By Prior Adjudications Under The Principles Of Res Judicata, Estoppel, And The Due Process Clause Of The Fifth Amendment 52

A. The Secretary of Labor's Determination in January, 1940 that Bridges was not a Communist Conclusively Established that Fact in this Proceeding 55

1. Res judicata and estoppel in administrative proceedings 56

2. Because the Secretary of Labor's determination was not given effect in this proceeding, the judgment below must be reversed 62

B. The decision of this Court in Bridges v. Wixon Conclusively Established in this Proceeding that Bridges was not a Communist Prior to 1941 64

1. Bridges v. Wixon held that there was no evidence to support the administrative conclusion that Bridges was a member of the Communist Party 66

PAGE

2. Because the Wixon case was not given effect in this proceeding, the judgment below must be reversed 70

C. The Naturalization Decree of September 17, 1945 is Res Judicata of the Issues therein Determined, including that of Bridges' Alleged Communist Party Membership; Therefore the Judgment below must be Reversed and the Indictment Dismissed 72

D. This indictment is barred by the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment 79

Conclusion 87

CITATIONS

CASES:

Adamson v. California, 332 U. S. 46 ....17, 81
Arizona Grocery v. Atchison Ry., 284 U. S. 370 61

Bailey v. United States, 13 F. 2d 325 (9th Cir.) 32
Baltimore & P. R. R. Co. v. Grant, 98 U. S. 398 50
Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. 351 (U. S., 1828) 20, 88
Bindczyck v. Finucane, 342 U. S. 76 ....76, 77, 78
Biskind v. United States, 281 Fed. 47 (6th Cir.) ... 45
Braverman v. United States, 317 U. S. 49
12, 13, 20, 28, 38, 48
Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135
3, 7, 15, 52, 53, 54, 60, 64, 65, 66, 67, 69, 70, 71, 72, 81
Harry Bridges before the Attorney General in Deportation Proceedings (U. S. Government Printing Office, 1942) 67, 85

PAGE

Brock v. North Carolina, 344 U. S. 424 . . . . 17, 83, 84, 85
Browne v. Zurbrick, 45 F. 2d 931 (6th Cir.) 81
Bryan v. United States, 338 U. S. 552 . . . . 69, 83

Campbell v. Wadsworth, 248 U. S. 169 61
Caringella v. United States, 78 F. 2d 563 (7th Cir.) . 69
Cendagarda v. United States, 64 F. 2d 182 (10th Cir.) 45
Chitwood v. United States, 178 Fed. 442 (8th Cir.) 16, 72, 76
Choy Yuen Chan v. United States, 30 F. 2d 516 (9th Cir.) 56
Collins v. Loisel, 262 U. S. 426 . . . . 15, 65
Commissioner v. Sunnen, 333 U. S. 591 . . . . 58, 61
Commonwealth v. Old, 5 Litt. 137 (Kentucky, 1824) . 86
Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U. S. 351 . . . . 14, 53

De La Rama S. S. Co. v. United States, 344 U. S. 386 51
Duchess of Kingston's Case, 20 State Trials 537, 168 Eng. Rep. 175 (1776) 53

Ekiu v. United States, 142 U. S. 651 59
Evans v. United States, 11 F. 2d 37 (4th Cir.) 32
Ex parte Lang, 18 Wall. 163 (U. S., 1873) 87
Ex parte Reaves, 121 Fed. 848 (M. D. Ala.) 65

Falter v. United States, 23 F. 2d 420 (2d Cir.) 25, 32, 36, 45
Federal Trade Commission v. Raladam Co., 316 U. S. 149 61
Fok Yung Yo v. United States, 185 U. S. 296 59
Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 146 U. S. 698 59
Frances v. Resweber, 329 U. S. 459 81

Gebardi v. United States, 287 U. S. 112 39
Girouard v. United States, 328 U. S. 61 23

Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S. 462 . . . . 30, 33, 41, 44
Hammerschmidt v. United States, 265 U. S. 182 . . 46
Harris v. Biezkowicz, 100 F. 2d 854 (8th Cir.) . . . 65

PAGE

Hart Steel Co. v. Railroad Supply Co., 244 U. S. 294 .... 16, 72
Hazel-Atlas Co. v. Hartford Co., 322 U. S. 238 79
Heikkila v. Barber, 21 L. W. 4249, March 16, 1953 .... 60, 65
Holmgren v. United States, 156 Fed. 439 (9th Cir.) 36
Hoystod v. Commissioner of Taxation, 42 T. L. R. 207 (Privy Council 1925) 61
Hutton v. Ras Steam Shipping Co., 1 K. B. 834 (1907) 61

In re Bogunovic, 18 Cal. 2d 160, 114 Pac. 2d 581 78
In re Clark, 301 Pa. 321, 152 Atl. 192 78
In re Doyle, 42 F. 2d 686 (S. D. N. Y.) 27, 47
In the Matter of Harry R. Bridges—Findings and Conclusions of the Trial Examiner (United States Government Printing Office, 1939) 5, 6, 63, 86
In the Matter of Harry Renton Bridges, Immigration and Naturalization Service, Department of Justice, File No. 55973/217 .... 7, 67, 86
International Building Co. v. United States, 199 F. 2d 12 (8th Cir.) 61

Japanese Immigrant Case, 189 U. S. 86 59
Johannessen v. United States, 225 U. S. 227 74

Keogh v. Chicago and Northwestern Ry. Co., 260 U. S. 156 61
Kepner v. United States, 195 U. S. 100 .... 17, 82, 83
Kessler v. Strecker, 307 U. S. 22 .... 6, 63
Knauer v. United States, 328 U. S. 654 .... 16, 38, 53, 74, 75
Krulewitch v. United States, 336 U. S. 440 45
Kwong Hai Chew v. Colding, 344 U. S. 590 57

Lee v. Federal Trade Commission, 113 F. 2d 583 (8th Cir.) 61
Lem Moon Sing v. United States, 158 U. S. 853 59
Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Ohio Valley Tie Co., 242 U. S. 288 .... 57, 61

PAGE

Marzani v. United States, 168 F. 2d 133 (D. C. Cir.), affirmed 335 U. S. 895, 336 U. S. 922 . . . . .13, 31, 33, 36
Miller v. United States, 24 F. 2d 353 (2d Cir.) 25, 32
Mortimer v. The South Wales Ry. Co., 1 E. & E. 374 (Q. B. 1859) 61

National Labor Relations Board v. Gullett Gin Co., 340 U. S. 361 24
Ng Fung Ho v. United States, 259 U. S. 276 81

Outlaw v. United States, 81 F. 2d 805 (5th Cir.) . . . 45

Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U. S. 319 . . . .17, 82, 83, 84, 89
Pearson v. Williams, 202 U. S. 281 . . . . .15, 55, 56, 57, 59, 60, 62, 67

Queen v. Hartington, 4 El. & Bl. 780, 119 Eng. Rep. 288 (1855) 78
Queen v. Robins, 1 Cox C. C. 114 (1844) 48, 88

Reed v. Allen, 286 U. S. 191 79
Regina v. Miles, L. R. 24 Q. B. D. 43 54
Rein v. United States, 69 F. 2d 206 (3rd Cir.) 35
Riddlesbarger v. Hartford Insurance Co., 7 Wall. (U. S., 1869) 20

Salinger v. Loisel, 265 U. S. 224 65
Schwinn v. United States, 311 U. S. 616 38
Sealfon v. United States, 332 U. S. 575 . . . . .15, 55, 71
Shaughnessy v. United States ex rel Mezei, 21 L. W. 4242, March 16, 1953 . . . . .57, 90
Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U. S. 97 80
Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. United States, 168 U. S. 1 . . . . .15, 16, 55, 71, 78
Sparry's Case (1591), 5 Co. 61, 77 Eng. Rep. 148 78
Spratt v. Spratt, 4 Pet. 393 (U. S., 1831) 73
Stroud v. United States 251 U. S. 15 . . . . .17, 82
Sunshine Coal Co. v. Adkins, 310 U. S. 381 . .15, 57, 61

PAGE

Tait v. Western Maryland Ry. Co., 289 U. S. 620 . . . . 57, 61
Tisi v. Tod, 264 U. S. 131 66
Trono v. United States, 199 U. S. 521 . . . . 17, 82
Tutun v. United States, 270 U. S. 568 . 16, 72, 73, 74, 76, 77, 78, 79

United States v. Anzalone, 197 F. 2d 714 (3d Cir.) 35
United States v. Atkins, 260 U. S. 220 61
United States v. Ball, 163 U. S. 662 82
United States v. Balt. & Ohio R. R. Co., 229 U. S. 244 . . . . 15, 54, 55, 71
United States v. Beacon Brass Co., Inc., 344 U. S. 43 36
United States v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 315 U. S. 289 48
United States v. Bressi, 208 Fed. 369 (W. D. Wash.) 35
United States v. Bridges, 86 F. Supp. 931 (N. D. Cal.) 76
United States v. Champlin Refining Co., 341 U. S. 290 39
United States v. Chung Shee, 71 Fed. 277 (S. D. Cal.), affirmed 76 Fed. 951 (9th Cir.) 65
United States v. Cohn, 270 U. S. 339 . . . . 13, 29, 32, 36
United States v. Dunton, 291 Fed. 905 (S. D. N. Y.) 68, 69
United States v. Gilliland, 312 U. S. 86 . . . . 30, 32, 33
United States v. Ginsberg, 243 U. S. 472 74
United States v. Gottfried, 165 F. 2d 360 (2d Cir.) 13, 20, 32, 33, 36
United States v. Grainger, N. D. Cal., December 5, 1952, probable jurisdiction noted, April 6, 1953, Docket No. 634 35
United States v. Hamilton, 157 Fed. 569 (C. C. S. D. N. Y.) 76
United States v. Ju Toy, 198 U. S. 253 59

PAGE

United States v. Katz, 271 U. S. 354 39
United States v. Keitel, 211 U. S. 370 45
United States v. Mathues, 27 F. 2d 137 (E. D. Pa.) 34
United States v. McElwain, 272 U. S. 633
12, 13, 20, 26, 27, 28, 29, 32, 37, 38, 40, 44, 45, 47, 48
United States v. National City Lines, 337 U. S. 78 .. 50
United States v. Ness, 245 U. S. 319 74
United States v. Noveck, 271 U. S. 201
12, 13, 20, 22, 23, 24, 26, 29, 32, 35, 36, 40, 41, 45, 47, 48
United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243 (2d Cir.)
13, 14, 19, 33, 35, 49
United States v. Oppenheimer, 242 U. S. 85 83
United States v. Scharton, 285 U. S. 518
12, 13, 20, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 28, 29, 32, 36, 37, 41, 42, 45, 47, 48
United States v. Showalter, 103 F. Supp. 806 (N. D. Cal.) 34
United States v. Smith, 342 U. S. 225 ....34, 36, 44
United States v. Soeder, 10 F. Supp. 944 (W. D. Mo.) 45
United States v. Stone & Downer Co., 274 U. S. 225
58, 61
United States v. Terranova, 7 F. Supp. 989 (N. D. Cal.) 46
United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61 ...16, 72, 79
United States v. Tommasello, 160 F. 2d 348 (2d Cir.) 33, 37
United States v. Wildcat, 244 U. S. 111 61
United States v. Willard Tablet Co., 141 F. 2d 141 (7th Cir.) 61
United States v. Williams, 341 U. S. 70 23
United States v. Zeuli, 137 F. 2d 845 (2d Cir.).... 39
United States ex rel Girard v. Helvering, 301 U. S. 540 61

PAGE

United States ex rel Marcus v. Hess, 317 U. S. 537 17, 84
Vajtauer v. Commissioner, 273 U. S. 103 . . . . 66, 67
Wade v. Hunter, 336 U. S. 684 80
Waley v. Johnston, 316 U. S. 101 65
Walker v. United States, 192 F. 2d 47 (10th Cir.) 37
Wallis v. Tecchio, 65 F. 2d 250 (5th Cir.) 81
Weinhandler v. United States, 20 F. 2d 359 (2d Cir.) 32
Wesson v. United States, 164 F. 2d 50 (8th Cir.) . . . 37
Western Pacific R. R. Corp. v. Western Pacific R. R. Co. 21 L. W. 4297, April 6, 1953 . . . . 2, 11
Wong Yang Sung v. McGrath, 339 U. S. 33 58
Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U. S. 135 20

STATUTES:

U. S. Const. Amend. V 80, 81, 82
U. S. Const. Amend. XIV 82
8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 746(a) 3, 9, 34, 35, 38, 39
8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 746(g) 19, 48, 50
18 U. S. C. 371 . . . . 3, 25, 30, 44, 45, 46
18 U. S. C. 1015 (a) 3
18 U. S. C. 3282 . . . . 3, 18, 36, 49, 50
18 U. S. C. 3287 . . . . 3, 18, 23, 42
18 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 88 . . . . 9, 25, 39
18 U. S. C. (old) 80 . . . . 29, 37
26 U. S. C. 3748 44
28 U. S. C. 1254 (1) 2
Revised Statutes of 1874, Secs: 13, 55, 98, 5599 50
35 Stat. 1159, Secs. 533, 544 (1909 Criminal Code) 50
Act of Nov. 17, 1921, c. 124, 42 Stat. 220 19
Act of December 27, 1927, c. 6, 45 Stat. 51 31
Revenue Act of 1932, Sec. 1108, 47 Stat. 169, 228 . . 27
Act of June 28, 1940, 54 Stat. 673 6
Act of Aug. 24, 1942, c. 555, 56 Stat. 747 19

PAGE

56 Stat. 781 43
Surplus Property Act, 58 Stat. 667 23
Contract Settlement Act of 1944, 58 Stat. 781 23
Act of June 25, 1948, Sec. 21, 62 Stat. 683 . . . .19, 48, 49
Public Law 65, 82nd Cong. (H. R. 2396) 43, 44

MISCELLANEOUS:

Sen. Rep. 1205, 72nd Cong., 2nd Sess. 50
Sen. Rep. 2031, 76th Cong., 3rd Sess. 6, 58
Sen. Rep. 1544, 77th Cong., 2nd Sess. 21, 30
Sen. Rep. 1592, 77th Cong., 2nd Sess. 43
H. R. Rep. 16, 70th Cong., 1st Sess. 31
H. R. Rep. 1492, 72nd Cong., 1st Sess. 29
H. R. Rep. 97 5, 76th Cong., 3rd Sess. 6
H. R. Rep. 2051, 77th Cong., 2nd Sess. 21, 30
H. R. Rep. 304, 80th Cong., 1st Sess. 23
69 Cong. Rec. 842 31
76 Cong. Rec. 9031 6
88 Cong. Rec. 4759 24
88 Cong. Rec. 6160 24
Hearings before Committee on Judiciary on H. R. 4916, 77th Cong., 1st Sess. 24
12 Federal Register P 18
Federal Rules Crim. Pro. 37(b) 2, 45(a) 2
Davis, Administrative Law (1951) 56, 73
Report of National Commission on Law Observance and Enforcement, Vol. II, No. 5, May 27, 1931 . . 58

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT,
and J. R. ROBERTSON,
Petitioners,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Respondent.

No. 548

BRIEF FOR THE PETITIONERS

Opinions Below

The opinion of the District Court for the Northern District of California (hereinafter referred to as the "trial court") denying motions to dismiss the indictment is reported at 86 F. Supp. 922; its opinion overruling objections to the introduction of certain evidence is reported at 87 F. Supp. 14; its opinion upon the revocation of bail for petitioner Bridges pending his appeal to the Court of Appeals is reported at 93 F. Supp. 989.[1] The opinion of the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit vacating and setting aside the order revoking the bail of petitioner Bridges is reported at 184 F. 2d 881. The amended opinion of the Court of

---

[1] The opinion of the trial court rendered on the Government's motion to stay proceedings in a pending civil denaturalization suit is reported at 86 F. Supp. 931.

Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirming the judgment below is reported at 199 F. 2d 811, and its additional opinion on supplemental petition for a rehearing en banc,[1a] at 201 F. 2d 254.

Jurisdiction

The judgment of the Court of Appeals was entered on September 6, 1952. The order of the Court of Appeals denying petitioners' petition for rehearing, and its amended opinion, were entered on November 18, 1952. On November 28, 1952, Mr. Justice Douglas entered an order extending the time for filing a petition for certiorari to January 16, 1953. The petition was filed January 14, 1953, and was granted March 9, 1953, limited, however, to questions 1 and 2 presented by the petition for the writ. The jurisdiction of this Court rests on 28 U. S. C. 1254(1). See also Fed. R. Crim. P. 37(b)(2) and 45(a).

Questions Presented

The Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirmed a judgment of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California, entered upon jury verdicts under a three-count indictment, finding petitioner Bridges guilty of making a false statement in his naturalization proceeding, finding petitioners Schmidt and Robertson guilty of participating in procuring Bridges' naturalization certificate knowing it to have been procured by fraud, and finding all three petitioners guilty of conspiring to defraud the United States by having Bridges make the false statement. The alleged falsity of the statement, or the alleged fraud, under each count, turned upon whether petitioner Bridges had ever been a member of the Communist Party. The questions are:

[1a] Cf. Western Pacific RR. Corp. v. Western Pacific RR. Co., 21 L. W. 4297, April 6, 1953; infra, p. 11, n. 10a.

(1) Whether this proceeding is barred by the statute of limitations.

(2) Whether, in view of prior adjudications (including the determination of this Court in Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135), this proceeding is barred, in whole or in part, by the principles of res judicata, or estoppel, or the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment.

STATUTES INVOLVED

The relevant provisions of (a) 18 U. S. C. 371, on which Count I of the indictment is based; (b) 18 U. S. C. 1015(a), on which Count II is based, (c) 8 U. S. C. [1946 ed.] 746(a) on which Count III is based, (d) 18 U. S. C. 3282, the applicable statute of limitations, (e) 18 U. S. C. 3287, the Wartime Suspension Act, and (f) other statutory provisions useful for the consideration of this case, are set forth in the Appendix, pp. 1-11.

STATEMENT

Harry R. Bridges has resided continuously in the United States since 1920, when he entered legally as an immigrant seaman from Australia (Tr. 43). He was naturalized September 17, 1945. His wife and children are native-born American citizens. He is the President, and the other petitioners are or have been officers, of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union.

From 1934 to 1945, Bridges was the subject of investigations and proceedings designed to deport him on the ground that he was or had been a member of the Communist Party. An investigation of Bridges' alien status, undertaken in 1934 by the San Francisco District Director of Immigration and Naturalization working in conjunction with the San Francisco Police Department, resulted in a report by the District Director that the investigation had "failed to show that he [Bridges] is in any manner connected with the Communist Party, or any radical organization" (Tr. 47). Thereafter, the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization appointed three members of his staff to investigate charges against Bridges; their report, prepared in 1936, concluded (Tr. 49):

> "In short, whenever any legal ground for the deportation of Bridges has been brought to the attention of the Department of Labor, it has been investigated but, invariably, it has been found that he was in the clear, and that his status as an immigrant was entirely regular".

In 1937, the Department of Labor, by its then Solicitor (Gerard D. Reilly), conducted a further investigation, during the course of which Bridges was put under oath by the Solicitor and testified as follows (Tr. 49-50):

> "Q. Were you—or are you—a member of the Communist Party?
>
> "A. No."

In 1938, the Department of Labor issued a warrant for Bridges' arrest and deportation on the ground that his presence in the United States was in violation of the immigration laws, and a lengthy[2] hearing was held before a Trial Examiner specially appointed by the Secretary of Labor (Tr. 50-55). The charge in that proceeding was that Bridges "became and now is" a member of the Communist Party.[3] During the course of the hearing before the Trial Examiner, Bridges testified under oath as follows (Tr. 53):

> "Q. Are you now a member of the Communist Party?
> "A. No.
> "Q. Or have you at any other time in the past been a member of the Communist Party?
> "A. No."

At the conclusion of the hearing, the Trial Examiner (the Honorable James M. Landis) transmitted to the Secretary of Labor his findings and conclusions that "the evidence therefore establishes neither that Harry R. Bridges is a member of nor affiliated with the Communist Party of the

---

[2] The taking of testimony occupied 45 days; 32 witnesses were called by the Government and 27 by Bridges; 274 exhibits were introduced by the Government and 136 by Bridges; the stenographic transcript of the hearing comprised 7724 pages, exclusive of the exhibits. Tr. 53; see also In the Matter of Harry R. Bridges—Findings and Conclusions of the Trial Examiner (U. S. Government Printing Office, 1939).

[3] More precisely, the charge, under the statute then in effect, was that Bridges "became and now is a member of an organization . . . that believes in, advises, advocates and teaches the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States." However, in partial response to a request for a bill of particulars, the Government replied that the organization in question was the Communist Party of the United States of America. Tr. 51-53; see also In the Matter of Harry R. Bridges, supra, pp. 135-36. Other charges, not directly relevant here, related to "affiliation" with the Communist Party, and to the distribution of printed matter advocating the overthrow of the Government by force and violence.

United States of America."[4] The Secretary of Labor sustained the Trial Examiner's findings, cancelled the warrant of deportation, and dismissed the proceedings, on January 8, 1940.

Early in 1940, the House of Representatives passed a bill directing the Attorney General to take Bridges into custody and deport him "notwithstanding any other provisions of law". (H. R. 9766, 76th Cong., 3rd Sess.). The Attorney General, in a letter to the Senate Committee which was considering the bill, expressed the opinion that such special legislation, directed against an individual, would be unconstitutional (Sen. Rep. 2031, 76th Cong., 3rd Sess., p. 9), and the bill was not reported to the Senate. However, Congress thereupon proceeded to amend the statute to provide for deportation of any alien who was "at the time of entering the United States, or has been at any time thereafter" a member of or affiliated with an organization of the character attributed to the Communist Party in the Landis proceeding.[5] Although this statute was framed in general terms, it is apparent that the sponsor of the legislation in the House of Representatives had as his chief purpose the laying of a basis for further deportation proceedings against Bridges.[6] [4] Tr. 54-55; see also In the Matter of Harry R. Bridges, supra, pp. 132-134. The Trial Examiner's findings were submitted to the Secretary of Labor on December 28, 1939.

---

[5] Act of June 28, 1940, 54 Stat. 673, 8 U. S. C. 137. The year before, this Court had ruled that the statute then in force required present, rather than past, membership or affiliation as the basis for deportation. Kessler v. Strecker, 307 U. S. 22.

[6] On the floor of the House of Representatives, Congressman Hobbs declared "It is my joy to announce that this bill will do, in a perfectly legal and constitutional manner, what the bill specifically aimed at the deportation of Harry Bridges seeks to accomplish. This bill changes the law so that the Department of Justice should now have little trouble in deporting Harry Bridges and all others of similar ilk". 76 Cong. Rec. 9031.

Early in 1941, the Department of Justice[7] caused a new warrant for the arrest and deportation of Bridges to be issued, charging that Bridges "has been a member of or affiliated with" the Communist Party.[8] Another exhaustive hearing (Tr. 59) was held before the specially designated Presiding Inspector (the Honorable Charles B. Sears). The volume of evidence, both testimony and exhibits, was comparable to that in the Landis proceeding. On September 26, 1941, the Presiding Inspector submitted to the Attorney General his memorandum summarizing the evidence and his proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law, including findings that Bridges had been a member of and affiliated with the Communist Party. Accordingly, he recommended deportation.

The subsequent proceedings leading up to the decision of this Court in Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135, are summarized in the opinion in that case (at 139-40):

> "The case was heard by the Board of Immigration Appeals which found that Harry Bridges had not been a member of or affiliated with either of those organizations* at any time after he entered this country. The Attorney General reviewed the decision of the Board and rendered an opinion in which he made findings in accordance with those proposed by [7] By that time, the Immigration and Naturalization Service had been transferred from the Department of Labor to the Department of Justice.

---

[8] The warrant was dated February 12, 1941. Like the earlier one, it specifically charged membership or affiliation with "an organization, association, society, or group that believes in, advises, advocates or teaches the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States." However, the Government specified the Communist Party in its opening statement. Tr. 56-58; see also In the Matter of Harry Renton Bridges, Immigration and Naturalization Service, Department of Justice, File No. 55973/217.

> the inspector and ordered Harry Bridges to be deported. A warrant of deportation was issued. Harry Bridges surrendered himself to the custody of the respondent and challenged the legality of his detention by a petition for a writ of habeas corpus in the District Court for the Northern District of California. That court denied the petition and remanded petitioner to the custody of respondent. 49 F. Supp. 292. The Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed by a divided vote. 144 F. 2d 927, 944. The case is here on a petition for a writ of certiorari which we granted because of the serious character of the questions which are presented."

This Court reversed the judgment below,[9] and the writ of habeas corpus was granted. On June 23, 1945 (5 days after the decision), Bridges filed at the San Francisco office of the Immigration and Naturalization Service his preliminary form for a petition for naturalization. On August 8, 1945, he appeared before an examiner in connection with this petition; Schmidt and Robertson also appeared and witnessed the petition. Robertson was called at the last minute in place of a prospective witness whose citizenship qualifications were not established to the satisfaction of the examiner (Tr. 459-61).

On September 17, 1945, Bridges, with the same two witnesses, appeared in the Superior Court of the State of California, and testimony was taken in support of the petition. The witnesses testified that they were American citizens, that they had known Bridges for five years and knew him to be of good moral character; they vouched for his loyalty to the United States and recommended him to citizenship (Tr. 134-135). Government counsel stated that the witnesses were satisfactory, and they were excused. Bridges was then examined. Among the many questions to him was the same question that had been put in the prior administrative proceedings, to which the same answer was given (Tr. 138):

---

[9] The grounds of the judgment of this Court are discussed infra, pp. 66-69.

> "Q. Do you now or have you ever belonged to the Communist Party in the United States?
>
> "A. I have not, I do not."

After further examination on the Communist issue, Government counsel stated that he had no further evidence and no objection to naturalization (Tr. 144), and Bridges was naturalized.

On May 25, 1949, three years, eight months, and eight days after the naturalization decree, this three-count indictment (Tr. 3-8) was filed. Count I charged the petitioners with conspiracy to defraud the United States, under Section 37 of the Criminal Code, 18 U. S. C. [1946 ed.] 88. The fraud charged was that Bridges' testimony was false (and known to the petitioners to be false), in that he allegedly had been a member of the Communist Party from 1933 to September 17, 1945. The overt acts alleged to ground the conspiracy were the several steps of the naturalization proceeding. Counts II and III of the indictment were brought under Section 346 of the Nationality Act of 1940, 8 U. S. C. 746. Count II charged Bridges with making a willfully false answer to the question with respect to Communist Party membership. Count III charged Schmidt and Robertson with assisting Bridges to obtain a certificate of naturalization, knowing it to have been procured by fraud.

After the indictment was returned, Bridges moved its dismissal (Tr. 10-26) on grounds which included all the issues embraced in the two questions presented here. Petitioners Schmidt and Robertson moved to dismiss on such of the foregoing grounds as were applicable to them (Tr. 27-41, 8312). The motions to dismiss were denied (86 F. Supp. 922).

After a long trial, the jury returned verdicts of guilty against Bridges on Counts I and II of the indictment, and against Schmidt and Robertson on Counts I and III of the indictment (Tr. 220-222). Motions in arrest of judgment and for new trial were duly made (Tr. 223-228). All were denied (Tr. 229), and Bridges was sentenced to concurrent terms of two years on Count I and five years on Count II (Tr. 230, 235-236). Schmidt and Robertson were each sentenced to concurrent terms of two years on Counts I and III of the indictment (Tr. 231-234, 237-240).

Ten weeks later, the Government moved to revoke the order granting bail to Bridges, and to remand him to the custody of the Marshal. Over objection, and despite the Government's admission that the appeal presented substantial questions, Bridges was incarcerated in the San Francisco County Jail (93 F. Supp. 989). Three weeks later, he was released by order of the Court of Appeals (184 F. 2d 881).[10]

Appeals from the judgment of conviction were filed to the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, which affirmed it on September 6, 1952. A petition for rehearing was denied, on the basis of an amended opinion, on November 18, 1952. A supplemental petition, reiterating the request for a hearing before the Court of Appeals en banc, was denied with a further opinion on December 29, 1952.[10a]

---

[10] The grounds urged by the Government as a basis for the revocation of bail did not favorably impress the Court of Appeals, which declared that the courts should not be called upon to act as "instruments of executive expediency" or "mere instruments for carrying into effect the arbitrary will" of the executive branch. 184 F. 2d at 887.

In the petition for a writ of certiorari, the petitioners did not ask this Court to review such questions as whether or not there was sufficient evidence at the trial to sustain a conviction under the indictment. Nonetheless, in its memorandum on the petition, the Government saw fit to include (pp. 4-10) a lengthy summary of the evidence it adduced at the trial "to show that prior to, at the time of, and subsequent to, these naturalization proceedings, Bridges was in fact an active member of the Communist Party, known to be such by the other petitioners."

We are reluctant to assume that this one-sided summary was introduced into the Government's memorandum for purposes of psychological warfare. It is perhaps more reasonable, and certainly more charitable, to infer that the summary was included because of understandable worry that the failure, at two prior and protracted proceedings with two different sets of Government witnesses, to adduce sufficient evidence to support a finding that Bridges is or has ever been a Communist, might arouse curiosity as to the character and substance of the proof upon a third inquiry, with a third set of Government witnesses, into the same question.

Under the questions here and now open to review by this Court, we do not deem it appropriate to discuss the sufficiency of the evidence. However, in analyzing the question of, and the Government's arguments with respect to,[11] the legal effect of the prior adjudications of the membership charge, it is necessary to advert to the Government's evidence, and the several adjudicators' evaluations thereof, at each of the several proceedings.[12]

[10a] In Western Pacific R. R. Corp. v. Western Pacific R. R. Co., 21 L. W. 4297, April 6, 1953, this Court remanded to the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit causes in which an application for leave to be reheard en banc had been stricken. Substantially the same order was made by the division below in this case (201 F. 2d 254, 255; Tr. 8456) despite petitioners' prayer on two separate occasions that the rehearing be heard en banc (Tr. 8297-8347, 8437-8454, especially 8449).

[11] See the Government's memorandum on certiorari at pages 14-15, especially footnote 8.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I

THIS PROCEEDING IS BARRED BY THE GENERAL THREE-YEAR STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

A. The 1942 Wartime Suspension of Limitations Act is inapplicable. (1) Its 1921 predecessor, substantially identical, was repeatedly and unanimously interpreted by this Court as applying only to offenses wherein fraud was an essential element of the statutory crime. United States v. Noveck, 271 U. S. 201; United States v. Scharton, 285 U. S. 518.[13] This construction is in harmony with the statutory purpose to give the Department of Justice additional time to discover and gather evidence of frauds against the Government; if fraud need not be charged or proved, the basis of ~~the~~ suspension is removed. Following these decisions, Congress in 1942 re-enacted substantially the same language which had been thus construed. (2) The requirement of fraud as an essential element is equally applicable to conspiracy charges: the test is whether fraud is such an element of the offense which is the object of the conspiracy. United States v. McElvain, 272 U. S. 633; see Braverman v. United States, 317 U. S. 49, 55. (3) Independently of the foregoing, and as the legislative history shows, the Suspension Act is directed at pecuniary frauds. That is the "usual and primary sense" of the term "defrauding". United States v. Cohn, 270 U. S. 339. The 1921 suspension was never held applicable to non-pecuniary frauds, and it has been held that the 1942 Suspension Act is so limited. Marzani v. United States, 168 F. 2d 133 (D. C. Cir.), twice affirmed by an equally divided Court, 335 U. S. 895 and 336 U. S. 922. If not pecuniary, the fraud must be connected with the "hurly-burly of war". United States v. Gottfried, 165 F. 2d 360 (2d Cir.). (4) None of the counts of this indictment meets any of the foregoing requirements. Fraud is not an essential element of the offense of making a false statement in a naturalization proceeding. United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243 (2d Cir.). Assuming that fraud was an incident or even the purpose of the false statement, that does not make it an essential element of the charge or proof, as is required by the Noveck and Scharton cases. The conspiracy count, therefore, stands on no better footing; so held in the McElvain case. Where Congress has seen fit to eliminate the requirement of fraud as the basis for suspension of the limitation, it has done so by specific legislation. Braverman v. United States, supra. Nor do any of the counts charge fraud which is either pecuniary or in any way related to the war emergency. (5) The Government's arguments for application of the Suspension Act have all been made before and rejected by this Court. (6) Furthermore, if the Suspension Act were to be given the scope for which the Government contends, the beneficial and established policy of repose underlying the general statute of limitations would be subverted. Relaxation of the requirement of fraud as an essential element, coupled with the Government's use of charges cast in the language of "conspiracy to defraud", would sweep a very large amount of the federal criminal jurisdiction within the Suspension Act.

---

[12] Infra, p. 85. See also the Appendix to this brief, pp. 38-41.

B. Counts II and III are not saved under the former five-year statute of limitations for offenses under the Nationality Act, which was repealed in 1948. The court below, on rehearing, so decided unanimously, as did the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. United States v. Obermeier, supra. When Congress has desired to preserve the original period of limitations for offenses committed before a change in the period, it has made express provision to this effect. Therefore, the general language in the repealer preserving "rights or liabilities now existing" does not perpetuate the repealed statute of limitations. The cases cited by the Government are not in point, and the Government's position leads to the indefensible anomaly that prosecution for an offense committed on August 31, 1948 would not be barred until August, 1953, whereas an identical offense committed the following day would be barred in September, 1951.

II

THIS PROCEEDING IS BARRED BY PRIOR ADJUDICATIONS, UNDER THE PRINCIPLES OF RES JUDICATA, ESTOPPEL, AND THE DUE PROCESS CLAUSE OF THE FIFTH AMENDMENT.

A. The Secretary of Labor's determination in January, 1940, that Bridges was not then a Communist, conclusively established that fact in this proceeding. The doctrine of estoppel by judgment is clearly governing. Cromwell v.

County of Sac, 94 U. S. 351; Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. United States, 168 U. S. 1; United States v. Balt. & Ohio R. R. Co., 229 U. S. 244. That doctrine is applicable to plenary, quasi-judicial decisions of administrative tribunals. Sunshine Coal Co. v. Adkins, 310 U. S. 381, and numerous other decisions of this Court and other courts. Pearson v. Williams, 202 U. S. 281, contains nothing to the contrary, and its reasoning supports our position. Since the Landis-Perkins decision conclusively established that Bridges was not a Communist in 1940, that factual issue was foreclosed at the trial on this indictment, and the evidence and issues should have been correspondingly limited. But the trial court refused so to limit the issue for the jury, and instructed the jury to disregard the prior determinations. This requires reversal of the judgments of conviction.

B. The second (Sears-Biddle) deportation proceeding, together with this Court's decision on review thereof by habeas corpus, conclusively established that Bridges had not been a Communist at any time prior to 1941 (the year of the Sears proceeding). Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135. That case held that the due process requirement of some evidence, to support the administrative determination that Bridges was a Communist, had not been met. The issue of fact with respect to Bridges' membership prior to 1941 was thereby conclusively resolved in the negative. The cases cited under A above are all in point, as is also Scalfon v. United States, 332 U. S. 575; see Collins v. Loisel, 262 U. S. 426, 430. The Government itself treated the Wixon decision as final; it abandoned the deportation proceeding, released Bridges' bail, and did not oppose Bridges' naturalization. The factual issue at the trial should therefore have been limited to Bridges' alleged membership after 1941, but the trial court refused so to limit the evidence or the issue before the jury, and instructed the jury to disregard the prior determination. This requires reversal of the judgments of conviction.

C. The naturalization decree of September 17, 1945 conclusively determined between the parties that Bridges was not a Communist at any time during the entire period covered by the indictment. Tutun v. United States, 270 U. S. 568; United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61. The question of Bridges' Communist membership was raised during the naturalization proceedings. It was a known issue which had been repeatedly and freshly litigated between the parties; the Government had been investigating the issue for many years theretofore. The present proceeding re-litigates, in the guise of a perjury indictment, the very issue adjudicated upon naturalization. Chitwood v. United States, 178 Fed. 442 (8th Cir.). The Government relies on Knauer v. United States, 328 U. S. 654, but that decision was expressly limited to a misrepresentation of present state of mind, not of past fact. Every consideration of judicial policy requires that the naturalization decree here be held conclusive. See Hart Steel Co. v. Railroad Supply Co., 244 U. S. 294, 298-9; Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. United States, 168 U. S. 1, 48. This requires reversal of the judgments and dismissal of the indictment.

D. The entire course of the several proceedings against Bridges, involving repetitious actions based on the same factual issue, and harassment of an individual on the same charge but in different proceedings over the course of many years, violates the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment. Under the decision below, the Government can follow one protracted and exhausting proceeding with another ad nauseam in order finally to get the result it wants. When this Court has allowed repeated criminal trials on the same charge, the trials have been in the same proceeding, and the decisions have rested on this circumstance. Trono v. United States, 199 U. S. 521; Stroud v. United States, 251 U. S. 15; Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U. S. 319; Brock v. North Carolina, 344 U. S. 424. In cases such as these there are strong statements in the opinions that the Government cannot repeatedly institute new proceedings on the same charge; see also Mr. Justice Holmes' dissenting opinion in Kepner v. United States, 195 U. S. 100, 134; Mr. Justice Frankfurter's concurring opinion in United States ex rel. Marcus v. Hess, 317 U. S. 537, 553; Chief Justice Vinson's dissent in Brock v. North Carolina, supra, at pages 429-440. Disregard of traditional principles and rudimentary concepts of fair play has led here to the perpetration of the very abuses which those concepts and principles are intended to prevent. What has been done here offends "those canons of decency and fairness which express the notions of justice of English-speaking peoples even toward those charged with the most heinous offenses." See Adamson v. California, 332 U. S. 46, 67-68 The judgments must therefore be reversed and the indictment dismissed.

CONCLUSION

After reviewing the case bit by bit, in conclusion it must be viewed as a whole. After examining the statute of limitations, the doctrine of Res Judicata, and the due process clause severally, the Court should recognize the impact of these principles as a whole, for they are not on related items but are based on common judicial policies of repose and fairness, and thus are components of a corpus. In conjunction, as well as severally, the Constitution, the statutes, and traditional principles of the common law require that the judgments below be reversed and the indictment dismissed.

ARGUMENT

I

THIS PROCEEDING IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

All the acts charged in each count of the indictment concededly occurred in 1945, more than three years before its filing in 1949. However, the Court below held that the running of the applicable three-year statute of limitations (18 U. S. C. 3282, Appendix p. 3) was suspended by the Wartime Suspension of Limitations Act (18 U. S. C. 3287, Appendix pp. 3-4). That act suspended until three years after the termination of hostilities[13] the running "of any statute of limitations applicable to any offense . . . involving fraud or attempted fraud against the United States or any agency thereof in any manner, whether by conspiracy or not". The question, therefore, is whether the offenses charged in this indictment are within the ambit of the Suspension Act.[14]

---

[13] The President proclaimed the termination of hostilities on December 31, 1946 (12 Fed. Reg. 1).

A. The Wartime Suspension of Limitations Act is not Applicable to the Offenses Charged in this Indictment.

The Suspension Act, insofar as it relates to "offenses involving fraud or attempted fraud against the United States,"[15] was enacted in 1942 (Act of August 24, 1942 c. 555, Sec. 1, 56 Stat 747). It is derived from, and substantially identical with, the comparable statute enacted after World War I (Act of November 17, 1921, c. 124, 42 Stat 220, Appendix pp. 4-5). That statute added a proviso to the general three-year statute of limitations (R. S. 1044), fixing a six-year period for "offenses involving the defrauding or attempts to defraud the United States or any agency thereof, whether by conspiracy or not, and in any manner."

By a series of unanimous decisions of this Court, and in accordance with the clear meaning and purpose of the statute, it became the settled construction of the 1921 act that it applied only where fraud was a necessary element of the crime charged. United States v. Noveck, 271 U. S. 201; United States v. McElvain, 272 U. S. 633; United States v. Scharton, 285 U. S. 518; see Braverman v. United States, 317 U. S. 49, 55. Furthermore, the legislative history of both the earlier and the present statutes, and their uniform construction by the lower federal courts, limit their application to frauds, which are pecuniary in nature, or arise out of what Judge Learned Hand has called "the hurly-burly of war". See United States v. Gottfried, 165 F. 2d 360, 368 (2d Cir.).

---

[14] In its memorandum on certiorari, the Government also contended that a saving provision of the Act of June 25, 1948, revising Title 18 (Sec. 21, 62 Stat 683), preserved as to Counts II and III, the earlier five year Statute of Limitations (8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] 746 g, Appendix pp. 2-3) applicable in 1945 to offenses against the naturalization laws. The Court below rejected the Government's contention, which also failed in United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243 (2d Cir.), certiorari denied 340 U. S. 951. Against the contingency that the Government will continue to press this argument, the point is discussed infra, pp. 48-52.

[15] The two other categories of offenses covered in the Wartime Suspension Act are concededly not applicable in this proceeding.

None of the counts in this indictment meets any of these requirements. Apart from the decision below, there is, to our knowledge, no case in which the Suspension Act or its predecessor has been held applicable to offenses such as those charged against petitioners. The Government's arguments have been repeatedly and squarely rejected by this Court. Their acceptance now would extend the scope of the Suspension Act far beyond its wording and purpose, and would fairly obliterate the general three-year statute of limitations.

1. The Suspension Act is not applicable unless fraud is an essential element of the statutory crime charged.

The 1942 Suspension Act and its 1921 predecessor were enacted as exceptions, necessitated by extraordinary war-time circumstances, to the fixed policy of the law in favor of repose. As Mr. Justice Story put it in Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. 351, 360 (U. S., 1828): "A statute of limitations is a wise and beneficial law . . ." See also Riddlesbarger v. Hartford Insurance Co., 7 Wall. 386, 390 (U. S., 1869); Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U. S. 135, 139 ("Statutes of limitations are vital to the welfare of society and are favored in the law.").

The Suspension Act, too, has an important policy, but it is not the policy of swallowing up limitations altogether, and it does not reach the offenses charged against the petitioners. The 1921 legislation was requested by the Attorney General in order to reach war frauds not yet uncovered (H. R. Rep. 365, 67th Cong., 1st Sess.). The similar purpose of the 1942 Suspension Act, as stated in both the House and Senate Committee reports (H. R. Rep. 2051 and Sen. Rep. 1544, 77th Cong., 2d Sess., Appendix pp. 11-17), is "to suspend any existing statute of limitations applicable to offenses involving the defrauding or attempt to defraud the United States or any agency thereof, for the period of the present war", and it was intended to "afford the Department of Justice sufficient time to investigate, discover, and gather evidence to prosecute frauds against the Government."

In the light of the wording and revealed purpose of the Suspension Act, therefore, it is apparent that it does not embrace any offense unless fraud is an essential element of the crime, which must be charged and proved. Since the purpose was to give the Department of Justice more time to discover frauds, and to assemble the evidence necessary to their proof, the Act does not apply to offenses where the Government is obliged neither to charge nor to prove fraud. Therefore, the decisions of this Court holding the Suspension Act inapplicable except to offenses wherein fraud is an essential element, are in accordance with both the letter and the purpose of the 1921 proviso, and are equally governing under the present Suspension Act.

It is to be remarked that neither the 1942 nor the 1921 acts undertook to suspend the statute of limitations with respect to offenses lacking fraud as an essential element, where fraud was nonetheless an incidental concomitant of the crime or even where the very purpose was fraudulent. Neither act attempts to cover false statements, in and of themselves, for this would have been beyond the Congressional purpose to give the Department of Justice more time to discover and prepare cases where the fraud had to be charged and proved.

Therefore, it was unanimously held in United States v. Noveck, 271 U. S. 201, that the 1921 statute did not cover an indictment for perjury for false swearing to an income tax return "for purposes of defrauding the United States." The defendant was thus charged with both a false statement and a clearly fraudulent purpose to deprive the Government of its lawful taxes. "But the alleged purpose to defraud the United States is not an element of the crime defined in Section 125 [perjury] on which the indictment is based." United States v. Noveck, supra, at 203. No more is fraud an element of the crime of making false statements in naturalization proceedings, the offense charged in Count II of the indictment in the present case.[16]

The holding of the Noveck case was reaffirmed in United States v. Scharton, 285 U. S. 518. The Scharton case construed a proviso in the Revenue Act of 1926, Section 1110(a), similar in language to the 1921 proviso. The defendant was charged with wilfully attempting to evade and defeat taxes by falsely understating his income. Despite the Government's emphasis on the obvious fraudulent purpose, this Court unanimously held that the offense charged did not fall under the proviso, and was barred by the three-year statute of limitations. Mr. Justice Roberts pointed out that there were numerous other provisions of the Revenue Laws which expressly made intent to defraud an element of the crime, but that such intent was not an element in Section 1114(b), under which the defendant was indicted. He declared (at 522) that statutes of limitations must be "liberally interpreted in favor of repose", and that the suspending proviso should not be "extended by construction to embrace so-called frauds not so denominated by the statutes creating offenses."

---

[16] Infra, pp. 34-37.

Not only are the Noveck and Scharton decisions sound as a matter of first impression under the 1921 and 1926 provisos, and squarely applicable in construing the 1942 Wartime Suspension Act. They were, furthermore, "on the books" as the settled construction of those statutes at the time that Congress adopted their same language in the 1942 enactment. True, re-enactment after a decision, has not, in every case, been held conclusive of legislative intent to embody the judicial gloss. Girouard v. United States, 328 U. S. 61. But here all the factors which call for the customary application of the re-enactment doctrine are present. Not only in 1942, but twice in 1944 (when the second and third clauses of the Suspension Act were added), and again in 1948 (when there was a codification), Congress re-enacted the same language.[17]

Three times between 1944 and 1948, therefore, the 1942 re-enactment has been "repeated". United States v. Wil- liams, 341 U. S. 70, 81. Here, as in National Labor Relations Board v. Gullett Gin Co., 340 U. S. 361, the statute had been explicitly and repeatedly interpreted. As this Court stated in the Gullett case, supra, (at 366): "Under these circumstances it is a fair assumption that by reenacting without pertinent modification the provision with which we here deal, Congress accepted the construction placed thereon by the Board and approved by the courts."

---

[17] Clause (2) of the Suspension Act, covering offenses in connection with the handling of government property, comes from the Surplus Property Act, 58 Stat. 667. Clause (3), dealing with offenses arising out of government contracts, comes from the Contract Settlement Act of 1944, 58 Stat. 781. Both statutes re-enacted Clause (1) in language identical with that enacted in 1942, but changed the suspension date from June 30, 1945 to three years after the proclamation of the end of hostilities. The 1948 codification made purely grammatical changes; the words "defrauding or attempts to defraud" were replaced by "fraud or attempted fraud". See 18 U. S. C. 3287, Reviser's Note; H. R. Rep. No. 304, 80th Cong., 1st Session.

The legislative history is equally compelling. In 1941, hearings were held by a House Sub-Committee on a bill to suspend the statute of limitations on all offenses punishable under Federal law. In opposing the bill, the Attorney General suggested that it be amended so as to apply only "to offenses involving frauds against the United States as was done in 1921 by the Act of November 17, 1921".[18] And this is just what was in fact done at the next session of Congress. Both the House and Senate reports on the 1942 statute relied heavily upon the committee report of 1921 (H. R. Rep. 365, 67th Cong. 1st Sess., Appendix, pp. 13, 16), and the same statutory language was adopted.[19]

Therefore, the wording and purpose of the Wartime Suspension Act and its legislative history all dictate the conclusion that it is to be construed in accordance with the decisions of this Court in the Noveck and Scharton cases. False statements are not sufficient to bring the Suspension Act into play: fraud must be an element of the statutory crime charged.

---

[18] Hearings on H. R. 4916, 77th Cong., 1st Sess.; Appendix, pp. 19-20.

[19] The House did not accept a suggestion by Congresswoman Rankin (the sponsor of the 1941 bill) to expand the suspension so as to cover all Federal offenses. 88 Cong. Rec. 4759. In the Senate, Senator (now Mr. Justice) Burton, very briefly, called to his colleagues' attention that the 1942 statute was basically a re-enactment of the 1921 Act. 88 Cong. Rec. 6160; Appendix, p. 23.

2. If fraud is not an essential element of the offense charged, the Suspension Act is not made applicable by including in the indictment a charge of conspiracy to defraud the United States.

Both the 1942 and 1921 Acts are expressly applicable to fraudulent offenses "whether by conspiracy or not".[20] Section 37 of the Criminal Code, 18 U. S. C. [1946 ed.] 88 (now 18 U. S. C. [1948 ed.] 371) makes it unlawful for two or more persons to "conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose . . .". Count I of this indictment is laid under the second clause of the quoted language.

It is clear that where defrauding the United States is an essential element of the substantive offense, a conspiracy to commit that offense falls within the Suspension Act. Miller v. United States, 24 F. 2d 353 (2d Cir.); Falter v. United States, 23 F. 2d 420 (2d Cir.). However, if fraud is not an element of the offense, a charge of conspiracy to commit that offense, even though laid under the second clause of Section 37, stands on no different footing; neither is within the Suspension Act.

This conclusion is an obvious corollary of the principles already discussed. If there be a conspiracy to commit an offense of which fraud is not an element, the conspiracy alleged is properly lodged under the first clause of Section 37 covering conspiracies "to commit any offense against the United States". The allegation of fraud would be just as much surplusage in the conspiracy count as it would be in a substantive count. The Government need neither charge nor prove fraud in order to proceed under either Section 37 or the statute proscribing the offense which was the object of the conspiracy and, therefore, such an indictment would fall outside the purpose of the Suspension Act, for reasons already stated.[21] Equally it falls outside the Act's wording, which covers "any offense . . . involving fraud . . . whether by conspiracy or not", and thus clearly makes the nature of the offense itself the test of the Suspension Act's applicability to the conspiracy.[22] [20] It appears that, when the grammar was altered by the 1948 codification, the clause relating to conspiracy was left without the verb which was previously available by reference back.

---

In other words, the principles enunciated in the Noveck and Scharton cases are equally applicable to the offense "whether by conspiracy or not". No more was the Government's surplus allegation of fraudulent purpose in the Noveck case effective to bring the case within the suspension, no more is the framing of a conspiracy charge under the "fraud" clause of Section 37 effective for this purpose if the fraud is not an essential element of the offense. Had a second person been implicated with Mr. Noveck, a conspiracy count added to the indictment in that case would have done nothing to bring the suspension into play.

The foregoing reasoning is clearly supported by the decisions of this Court. In United States v. McElvain,

---

[21] Supra; pp. 20-24.

[22] The court below came to this same conclusion. In discussing the statement in United States v. McElvain, 272 U. S. 633, 639 that "The language of the [1921] proviso cannot reasonably be read to include all conspiracies as defined by Section 37," Judge Stephens explained (199 F. 2d at 823) that this was "because the proviso contains the words 'whether by conspiracy or not' which establishes that it is the substantive offense or the object of the conspiracy which determines the scope of the proviso". The court below erroneously concluded that the substantive offense charged in Count II embodied fraud as an essential element; had it reached the correct conclusion on Count II, its own reasoning would thus have required the dismissal of Count I as well.

272 U. S. 633, the defendant was indicted under Section 37 for conspiracy to defraud the United States of taxes by filing false income tax returns. Offenses under the revenue laws were expressly excluded from the three-year statute of limitations to which the 1921 suspension was a proviso. This Court unanimously ruled that the suspending proviso did not cover conspiracies, even though charged as fraudulent under the second clause of Section 37, unless the substantive offense which was the object of the conspiracy was also covered; the indictment was therefore held to be barred. Mr. Justice Butler stated (at p. 639):

> "The language of the proviso cannot reasonably be read to include all conspiracies defined by Section 37. But if the proviso could be construed to include any conspiracies, obviously it would be limited to those to commit the substantive offenses which it covers."[23]

Following the decision in the McElwain and Scharton cases, Congress in 1932 amended the suspending proviso in the Revenue Act of 1926 (which had been construed in the Scharton case) by adding the following paragraph (47 Stat. 169, 228 [Sec. 1108 of Revenue Act of 1932]): "For offenses arising under Section 37 of the Criminal Code . . .

---

[23] See also In re Doyle, 42 F. 2d 686 (S. D. N. Y.), at p. 691 (reversed as to other matters, United States v. Doyle, 47 F. 2d 1086 (2d Cir.)):

> "In view of the decision in the McElwain Case, I think that the statute of limitations applicable to a conspiracy to commit a federal crime depends on the statute applicable to the substantive offense which is the object of the conspiracy.
>
> "The rationale of such a holding is perfectly obvious, because, if it were otherwise, a prosecuting officer might, by making his indictment count in conspiracy, increase the statute of limitations, and, in effect, hold a defendant for a crime which had already been outlawed."

when the object of the conspiracy is to attempt in any manner to evade or defeat any tax or the payment thereof, the period of limitations shall also be six years". In Braverman v. United States, 317 U. S. 49 (1942), the defendants were convicted, under Section 37, of conspiracy to violate numerous provisions of the revenue laws covering tax evasion. This Court held that the indictment fell within the 1932 addition and, therefore, was not barred. Writing for a unanimous court, Chief Justice Stone reaffirmed the principles laid down in the McElvain and Scharton cases, and then observed (at 55): "To be within this last paragraph [the 1932 addition] it is not necessary that the conspiracy have as its object the commission of an offense in which defrauding or attempting to defraud the United States is an element." In other words, lacking the 1932 amendment, the indictment would clearly have been barred under the McElvain and Scharton decisions.

The committee reports and debate on the 1942 Suspension Act do not advert to its scope with respect to conspiracy. Here again, however, the principle of legislative re-enactment[24] is clearly applicable with respect to the McElvain decision. That decision made it clear, prior to the 1942 Act, that conspiracies did not come within the 1921 statute unless the offense, toward which the conspiracy was directed, was itself within the statutory suspension. The 1942 statute, by re-enacting language which had been so construed, should be interpreted in like manner.

Indeed, the basis for application of the re-enactment principle is greatly reinforced by the 1932 amendment to the Revenue Act proviso which was involved in the Braverman case. The conference report of the House on the 1932

---

[24] See supra, pp. 23-24.

Revenue Act (H. R. Rep. 1492, 72nd Cong., 1st Sess., p. 29, Appendix pp. 17-18) expressly recognized that "The Supreme Court has recently held [in the Scharton case] that under existing laws the offense of attempting to defeat and evade income taxes does not necessarily involve the defrauding, or attempting to defraud the United States, fraud not being an essential ingredient of such offense. . . ." Thus there was legislative awareness of the judicial construction of the suspension, and Congress enacted language deliberately framed to remove the basis for that construction where, but only where, offenses against the revenue laws were involved. No such amendatory language was enacted in the 1942 Suspension Act, which therefore should be interpreted in line with the Noveck, McElvain and Scharton cases, with respect to conspiracy and substantive counts alike.

3. Independently of the foregoing, the Suspension Act is applicable only to frauds which are pecuniary in nature, or which arise out of and are connected with the War.

The Suspension Act is inapplicable to this indictment, for reasons quite independent of those above. The limited purpose of the Suspension Act, and the necessity of preventing its application from swallowing up the statute of limitations, have given rise to the rule that the Suspension Act covers only pecuniary frauds. Obviously, the offenses charged in this indictment are not of that character.

In United States v. Cohn, 270 U. S. 339, this Court, in construing the so-called "False Claims Act" (18 U. S. C. [old] 80) prior to its amendment in 1934 (48 Stat. 996), declared (at pp. 346-347) that the "usual and primary sense" of the word "defrauding" meant "cheating the Government out of property or money." This Court declined to give "defrauding" in that context its broader "secondary" meaning—"interfering with or obstructing . . . lawful governmental functions by deceitful and fraudulent means"—except as a result of the 1934 broadening amendment. United States v. Gilliland, 312 U. S. 86; cf. Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S. 462.

The question is, therefore, whether there is anything in the context or legislative history of the Wartime Suspension Act which warrants interpreting the words "fraud or attempted fraud" other than in their "usual and primary sense" of pecuniary fraud. The answer is clearly in the negative. The language of the Suspension Act is narrower than that of Section 37 of the Criminal Code, which was broadly construed in Haas v. Henkel, supra.[25] The legislative history, as manifested in the House and Senate committee reports on the Suspension Act (Appendix, pp. 11-17), makes it clear that Congress had pecuniary frauds exclusively in mind. Immediately after stating the purpose of the legislation (to suspend the statute of limitations applicable to offenses involving the defrauding of the United States), the reports state: "Contracting for the United States is done through its various agencies, including the departments and independent establishments and Government-owned and Government-controlled corporations, and frauds against all of these agencies are intended to be embraced by the bill." After discussing the problems faced by the Department of Justice, and the need to give it more time to investigate and gather evidence of frauds against the Government, the reports state:

---

[25] Section 37 of the Criminal Code (Appendix, p. 1) covers the defrauding of the United States "for any purpose", indicating that the purpose need not be pecuniary. This language is omitted from the 1942 Suspension Act, as well as from the 1921 and 1926 provisos.

> "The United States, however, is engaged in a gigantic war program. Huge sums of money are being expended for materials and equipment in order to carry on the war successfully. Although steps have been taken to prevent and to prosecute frauds against the Government, it is recognized that in the varied dealings opportunities will no doubt be presented for unscrupulous persons to defraud the Government or some agency. These frauds may be difficult to discover as is often true of this type of offense and many of them may not come to light for some time to come. The law-enforcement branch of the Government is also busily engaged in its many duties, including the enforcement of the espionage, sabotage, and other laws."

The legislative history of the statute (Act of December 27, 1927, c. 6, 45 Stat. 51) which repealed the 1921 suspending proviso is even clearer. The House Report (H. R. Rep. 16, 70th Cong., 1st Sess.) stated, "In 1921 the Attorney General represented that he was desirous of having further time to investigate alleged war frauds". The sponsor of the repealing legislation in the House, Mr. LaGuardia, stated on the floor (69 Cong. Rec. 842) that the 1921 suspending proviso 'was intended to apply only to war frauds . . . The war frauds are cleaned up by this time . . . If anyone has defrauded the Government in cases arising out of the war, if he has not already been indicted, there is not much chance of indicting him now."

In Marzani v. United States, 168 F. 2d 133 (D. C. Cir.), twice affirmed by an equally divided Court, 335 U. S. 895 and 336 U. S. 922, it was held that the 1942 Suspension Act "does not apply to offenses in which defrauding the United States in a pecuniary way is not an essential ingredient"

(168 F. 2d at 136), and therefore did not cover an indictment under the amended False Claims Act for making false statements to Government agencies with respect to Communist membership. The Court of Appeals thus rested its decision specifically upon the ground that the Suspension Act applies only to pecuniary frauds.[26] So far as we are aware, the question was never tested under the 1921 proviso. However, in every reported case in which the 1921 statute was held applicable, the fraud charged was clearly within the "usual and primary sense" defined in the Cohn case—i.e., the purpose was to defraud the Government of money or property. Miller v. United States, 24 F. 2d 353 (2d Cir.); Falter v. United States, 23 F. 2d 420 (2d Cir.); Weinhandler v. United States, 20 F. 2d 359 (2d Cir.); Bailey v. United States, 13 F. 2d 325 (9th Cir.); Evans v. United States, 11 F. 2d 37 (4th Cir.).

Indeed, we know of only one decision under any of the suspension statutes embodying the language here in question where fraud in the "secondary sense" of the Cohn case has been held covered by the suspension. United States v. Gottfried, 165 F. 2d 360 (2d Cir.), certiorari denied, 333 U. S. 860. In that case, the defendants were indicted under the False Claims Act for false statements to the Office of Price Administration to circumvent wartime sugar rationing, and for conspiracy to defraud the United States by means of the false statements and the bribery of one of its officers. The court rejected the argument, based on the legislative history, that the Suspension Act should be confined to frauds involving pecuniary loss to the Government, observing, however, that (at 368) "the purpose of the amendment was not to let crimes pass unpunished which had been committed in the hurly-burly of war, an overriding motive which perfectly fits the situation at bar."

---

[26] The court rested its decision on an analysis of the Noveck, McElvain, Scharton and Gilliland cases rather than on the legislative history of the Suspension Act.

The Gottfried case affords no basis for holding the Suspension Act applicable to the present case, since it is clear that the indictment here fails to meet Judge Hand's test of the "hurly-burly of war". There is, therefore, no need to determine here whether or not the Gottfried case, insofar as it departs from the Marzani requirement of pecuniary fraud, was rightly decided.[27] It may be argued that special wartime legislation such as price controls and food rationing—enacted and enforced as part of "the hurly-burly of war"[28]—are in that respect like wartime contracts and purchases. But such a result would provide no basis for holding the Suspension Act applicable here.

---

[27] Judge Hand's opinion referred to the opinion in Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S. 462, which held that Section 37 covers conduct "calculated to obstruct or impair" government operations (although footnote 20 of his opinion refers to the section of the U. S. Code embodying the False Claims Act rather than Section 37), and then states (p. 368): "We see no reason for reading the words 'defrauding the United States' in the statute of limitations now in question less comprehensively; certainly there was not enough ground for that in the debates of Congress". But it had already been stated in the McElvain case (272 U. S. at 639) that "The language of the [1921] proviso cannot reasonably be read to include all conspiracies defined by Section 37", and the language of the 1921 proviso was thereafter carried into the 1942 Suspension Act without significant change, supra, pp. 23-24, 28.

Furthermore, no question of limitations was presented by the conspiracy (Section 37) indictment in the Gottfried case. The indictment which was there asserted to be barred by limitations was one for the substantative offense of violating the False Claims Act. An earlier decision of the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit held that fraud is not an essential element under the latter statute. United States v. Tommasello, 160 F. 2d 348 (2d Cir.), infra, p. 37. The authority of the Gottfried case seems to have been questioned in United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243, 257 footnote 64 (2nd Cir.): "In United States v. Gilliland, 312 U. S. 86, the offense was so defined as to make fraud an ingredient. So, too, in Gottfried v. United States, 165 F. 2d 360 (2d Cir.) as we there interpreted the statute creating the crime". Judge Learned Hand was again on the bench in the Obermeier case, wherein the opinion was written by Judge Frank.

4. The Suspension Act does not apply to any of the counts of this indictment.

It must be apparent from what has been said so far that Counts I (conspiracy) and II (the substantive offense which was the object of the conspiracy) of this indictment[29] are barred by the statute of limitations unless the offense charged in Count II meets the requirements of the wording, purpose, and settled judicial construction of the Suspension Act. This is one of those instances where elaboration risks obscuring the obvious. The Suspension Act is so clearly inapplicable to Count II that the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit (Judges Frank, Learned Hand and Swan), in a similar case under the identical statute (8 U. S. C. 746(a)(1)) on which Count II is based, disposed of the point in precisely three sentences.

---

[28] Judge Hand speaks of crimes "committed in the hurly-burly of war", but it seems perfectly clear that he means crimes which are related to or part of the "hurly-burly" rather than all crimes committed during the "hurly-burly". For the very problem is to distinguish, with respect to the application of the Suspension Act, among all crimes committed during the "hurly-burly", and the phrase can therefore have meaning only with respect to crimes arising out of the "hurly-burly". See the concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Clark in United States v. Smith, 342 U. S. 225, 230-31; United States v. Showalter, 103 F. Supp. 806, 809 (N. D. Cal.). In United States v. Mathues, 27 F. 2d 137 (E. D. Pa.), speaking of the 1921 suspending proviso, the court stated (at 138): "Incidentally this was aimed at war frauds".

[29] The application of the Suspension Act to Count III is discussed infra, pp. 38-40.

In so doing, they said all that is necessary on the subject. United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243, 256-57 (2d Cir.), certiorari denied 340 U. S. 951:

> "That [the Wartime Suspension] Act, so far as is pertinent, is substantially the same as the Acts interpreted by the Supreme Court in United States v. Noveck, United States v. McElvain, and United States v. Scharton. As so interpreted, it suspends a statute of limitations only when fraud or attempted fraud against the United States (or one of its agencies) 'is an ingredient under the statute defining the offense,' and does not, absent such a statutory definition, apply to perjury or false swearing, even when the United States is directly interested. Nothing in 8 U. S. C. A. Sec. 746(a)(1), under which defendant was indicted, makes fraud an ingredient of the crime."

We have no desire to belabor the point, but a brief summarization may be useful, in order to show that Count II meets neither of the requirements, each of which is independently necessary, for applicability of the Suspension Act.

(a) Fraud is not an element of the statutory crime charged. This is patent on the face of the statute. To charge and prove the offense, the Government need neither charge nor prove fraud. United States v. Noveck, supra; United States v. Obermeier, supra; United States v. Anzalone, 197 F. 2d 714 (3d Cir.); United States v. Grainger, N. D. Cal., December 5, 1952, probable jurisdiction noted, April 6, 1953, Docket No. 634. It need only prove that a false statement was knowingly made,[30] and any allegation or proof of fraud is surplusage. Holmgren v. United States, 156 Fed. 439 (9th Cir.). Assuming that fraud was an incident or even the purpose of the false statement, that is no more governing here than it was in the Noveck case. See Falter v. United States, 23 F. 2d 420, 426 (2d Cir.). Equally, it is clear that false statements can be knowingly made in naturalization proceedings without any intent to defraud the government. Finally, the statute does not "denominate" the crime as involving fraud. United States v. Scharton, supra.

---

[30] And, by judicial construction, that the falsehood was material. Rein v. United States, 69 F. 2d 206 (3rd Cir.); United States v. Bressi, 208 Fed. 369 (W. D. Wash.).

(b) There is charged no intent to defraud the Government of property or money, within the "usual and primary sense" of the word "defraud". United States v. Cohn, supra; Marzani v. United States, supra; cf. United States v. Beacon Brass Co. Inc., 344 U. S. 43.[31] The crime charged does not in any way "arise out of the war effort" and "had nothing to do with the war or the reconversion thereafter". See the opinion of Mr. Justice Clark, concurring, in United States v. Smith, 342 U. S. 225, 230-31. It is most certainly and totally unrelated to the "hurly-burly of war" described in the Gottfried case. The federal statutes relating to naturalization, including the criminal provisions, are permanent legislation unrelated to the war emergency.[32]

---

[31] Referring to the statute involved in the Marzani case (the False Claims Act), this Court, per Mr. Justice Minton, stated in the Beacon Brass case (344 U. S. at 45): "Obviously, at the times of the indictments here, the three-year limitation period, 18 U. S. C. (Supp. V) Sec. 3282, for violations of this statute had expired as to statements made in October 1945."

[32] If it be deemed relevant, this very case is equally unrelated. The issue with respect to Bridges' membership in the Communist Party had been in the forefront of the Government's "awareness" since long before the war, and was in no sense a matter which the Department of Justice needed more time to discover. Accordingly, this is clearly the type of case which the Suspension Act was not intended to reach.

The rule that the offense of making false statements to the Government does not embody fraud as an essential element, unless the statute clearly so requires, is by no means confined to naturalization cases. United States v. Tommasello, 160 F. 2d 348 (2d Cir.); Walker v. United States, 192 F. 2d 47 (10th Cir.); cf. Wesson v. United States, 164 F. 2d 50 (8th Cir.). In the Tommasello case, the defendant was indicted for writing a false prescription for morphine "with intent to defraud the United States". The defendant pleaded lack of intent to defraud, but the court (speaking through Judge Augustus Hand) ruled (p. 350) that under the False Claims Act (18 U. S. C. 80) "it is only necessary to prove that the defendant made false statements or representations in his prescription in respect to the patient who was to use the morphine but it is not necessary to show that the United States was defrauded."

Finally, any other conclusion would be clearly contrary to Congressional intent. After this Court held in the Scharton case that the offense of evading or defeating income taxes did not involve the element of fraud and consequently lay outside the 1926 proviso to the Revenue Act, Congress showed that it knows how to carve out a specific area where the longer period of limitation shall apply, even though the fraud is not an element of the offense. The 1932 amendment to the Revenue Act was expressly intended to accomplish just that.[33] The Government is now asking this Court to construe the Suspension Act as if Congress had enacted a similar broadening amendment in the naturalization field.

---

[33] The 1932 amendment extended the coverage of the six-year period both to the substantive offense of willfully defeating or evading taxes (Scharton) and to conspiracies under Section 37 having that offense as their object (McElvain). Appendix pp. 5-6.

Since Count II is clearly barred, so is Count I. Count I charges a conspiracy of which the offense stated in Count II is the object. If fraud is not an element of the false statement, it cannot be an element of the conspiracy. United States v. McElvain, supra; Braverman v. United States, supra.

The same reasoning applies to Count III, which charges petitioners Robertson and Schmidt, under 8 U. S. C. 746(a)(5)a, with aiding Bridges to obtain a certificate of naturalization, knowing it to have been procured by fraud. But Count III alleges only that the fraud consisted of the false statement charged in Count II and, as has been shown, fraud was not an element of the false statement offense. No more can it be an element of the "assisting" offense.

It is noteworthy that the clause on which Count III is based is immediately followed by 8 U. S. C. 746(a)(5)b, which covers certificates known to have been procured by means of a false statement. The careful distinction drawn by Congress between clauses a and b, incidentally, shows once again that when Congress wishes to distinguish between fraud and falsity,[34] it has no difficulty in finding appropriate language. But since the false statement offense (Count II) upon which this indictment rests does not embody the element of fraud, the Government cannot salvage it either by using the "fraud" clause of Section 37 in Count I or of 8 U. S. C. 746(a)(5) in Count III. Neither in Count I nor in Count III do the facts alleged carry us beyond falsity and into fraud, and neither count is covered by the Suspension Act.

---

[34] This Court has equally carefully drawn the distinction. Compare Knauer v. United States, 328 U. S. 654 with Schwinn v. United States, 311 U. S. 616. In the latter case, the court below had held that a falsehood respecting a matter of fact was "fraud" within the meaning of the denaturalization statute (112 F. 2d 74). This Court on certiorari entered the following per curiam order: "The petition for writ of certiorari is granted. The judgment is affirmed on the sole ground that the certificate of citizenship was illegally procured". Since a denial of certiorari would have achieved the same practical result, and would have given no greater authority to the lower court's "fraud" holding, this Court's action in granting the writ and simultaneously specifying the ground of its affirmance seems to indicate a purpose to make it clear that a false statement as to a past fact does not necessarily involve the element of fraud.

In thus clinging to the mere presence of the word "fraud" in these statutes, the Government overlooks that the Suspension Act requires not the mere word but that the offense embrace fraud as an essential element.[35] And it is plain that the Government included the conspiracy count in this indictment solely to assist its struggle to bring the indictment within the Suspension Act. For the acts alleged in Count I as constituting a conspiracy, comprise only the acts alleged in the subsequent substantive counts, including the formal steps in the naturalization proceeding.[36] The hollow quality of the conspiracy charge is revealed by the fact that Robertson's participation was the wholly accidental result of the fact that one of the two prospective witnesses who accompanied Bridges to the naturalization proceeding could not satisfactorily establish his citizenship qualifications (Tr. 459-61). On such ephemeral footing the Government's effort to invoke the Suspension Act rests.

---

[35] Compare United States v. Champlin Refining Co., 341 U. S. 290, which found different meanings for the same phrase in various parts of the same statute.

[36] In Bridges v. United States, pending, Docket No. 549 (the companion case to the one at bar), the Government, at page 7 of its memorandum admits,

> "While this count charges a conspiracy to defraud the United States under 18 U. S. C. [1946 ed.] 88, which obviously is not part of the Nationality Act of 1940, nevertheless, the illegality of the conspiracy is predicated on a contravention of the statutory mandate of the Nationality Act. That Act prescribes the steps for obtaining naturalization in explicit terms."

Cf. Gebardi v. United States, 287 U. S. 112, 122: ". . . where it is impossible under any circumstances to commit the substantive offense without cooperative action, the preliminary agreement between the same parties to commit the offense is not an indictable conspiracy either at common law, [citing state cases] or under the federal statute [citing federal cases]." See also United States v. Katz, 271 U. S. 354; United States v. Zeuli, 137 F. 2d 845 (2d Cir.). In the present case, the naturalization laws required that Bridges' petition for naturalization be supported by two witnesses; the particular substantive offense alleged in Count II could not have been committed without meeting this preliminary requirement.

5. The arguments of the Government have all been previously rejected by this Court.

There is a nostalgic—one might even say shopworn—quality to the Government arguments made and accepted below, and re-offered here, for each of them has been made before and rejected by this Court. The arguments are, essentially, these:

(a) It is emphasized that Counts I and III are laid under statutes which contain the word "fraud" in the statement of the offense. "Manifestly," this meets the test of the Suspension Act, particularly because the Noveck case cited 271 U. S. at 204) Section 37 as an illustration of a statute to which the Suspension Act might be applicable (Government memorandum on certiorari, p. 18).

But in the McElvain case the indictment was brought under Section 37. The Government brief in that case quoted (at p. 15) the same sentence from the Noveck case, and the Government's argument consisted of the single sentence: "Section 37 is the section involved in this case." The McElvain case rejected this argument, and held explicitly that the Suspension Act does not reach all conspiracies covered by Section 37, even though the indictment utilizes the "fraud" language of that section.

(b). The second Government argument is that the vital word of the Suspension Act is "involved", from which it is said to follow that there need be no precise relationship between the fraud and the offense: "some relationship between the offense and the fraud will suffice" (Government brief below, p. 108). Twenty-five years ago, in the Noveck case, the Government constructed an elaborate argument based upon the word "involved", with several dictionary definitions (Government brief in the Noveck case, pp. 10-11). The argument failed there, as it must here.

(c) The central theme of the third Government argument is that the conduct charged against the defendants necessarily results in a fraud against the United States (Government brief below, p. 108). So, too, in the Noveck case, the Government argued that "the defrauding of the United States was the necessary and logical consequence of Noveck's perjury" (Government brief in the Noveck case, p. 12; see 271 U. S. at 203). And in the Scharton case, the Government argued that any attempt to evade taxes by craft or trickery was "fraud" because it deprived the Government of money (Government brief in the Scharton case, p. 8; see 285 U. S. at 520).

These arguments of "necessary consequence" failed, not because the assertions were not factually true, but because they were irrelevant. The issue was not whether fraud results from conduct, or is the purpose of conduct, but whether the fraud must be proved as a basis of criminal conviction for the conduct.

(d) Last comes the argument from Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S. 462, a case having nothing to do with the Suspension Act, but holding that fraud in Section 37 covers any attempt to obstruct or defeat the lawful functions of the Government. Hence, runs the argument, "fraud" in the Suspension Act must be construed to cover all such attempts (Government brief below, pp. 113-114; memorandum on certiorari, p. 21).

But this argument was also relied on by the Government in the Scharton case (Government brief in the Scharton case, p. 7), and unsuccessfully. And this Court has repeatedly ruled that a conspiracy falls within the suspension acts only if the offense which is the object of the conspiracy lies within their scope.

6. If the Suspension Act were interpreted as is urged by the Government, the basic policies of both the statute of limitations and the Suspension Act would be subverted.

When Congress was considering the 1942 and 1921 legislation extending the statute of limitations, the basic problem it faced was how far it should go in making an exception to the beneficial and established policy of repose underlying the statute of limitations. The language which it adopted in the suspension acts, and the committee reports, indicate that Congress intended to draw a line which would give the Department of Justice additional leeway in circumstances where leeway is needed. Equally clearly, Congress intended to preserve the statute of limitations, and the policy of repose, except where the war emergency required their relaxation.

It is also to be noted that, whereas the 1921 Act was a proviso, intended to be temporary and in fact repealed in 1927 (45 Stat. 51), the 1942 Suspension Act (like the 1926 and 1932 amendments to the Revenue Act) is permanent legislation, and the 1942 Suspension Act comes into play, "When the United States is at war. . . ." Contrary to the suggestion of the court below,[37] this makes it all the more important that the 1942 Act be not applied so as to subvert the general statute of limitations.

---

[37] 199 F. 2d at 825 footnote 15a: "We think the fact that the Suspension Act is cast in a separate independent Act rather than as a proviso to the general statute of limitations and is cast in very in-

In specific legislative fields where Congress has desired to broaden the scope of the suspension it has done so, as in the 1932 amendments to the Revenue Act.[38] Thus, in 1942 and upon the recommendation of the Secretaries of War and Navy and the Attorney General (Sen. Rep. 1592, 77th Cong., 2nd Sess.), Congress enacted a law (56 Stat. 781) suspending the statute of limitations with respect to anti-trust suits, both civil and criminal. But the Department of Justice never requested, and Congress has never enacted, legislation to broaden the effect of the Suspension Act as applied to the naturalization laws by eliminating fraud as a necessary element,[39] and the Government should not now ask this Court to do what Congress has neither done nor been asked to do.

It should also be borne in mind that the 1942 Act results in a long period of limitation—at a minimum the seven-year period from the effective date of the Act to December 31, clusive language indicates that Congress intended to avoid the limitations written into the Noveck, McElvain and Scharton opinions." But in fact (a) the 1942 language is no more inclusive than that of 1921, (b) there is literally nothing in the legislative history in support of the suggested broadening intention, and (c) the re-enactment of the identical language, following the judicial construction, clearly shows the contrary.

---

[38] Supra, p. 37.

[39] However, on June 30, 1951 the President approved, as Public Law 65 of the 82nd Cong., H. R. 2396, which fixed at 10 years the period of limitations for the naturalization offenses in 18 U. S. C. 1423 to 1428 and 1541 to 1544 inclusive, and conspiracies to commit these offenses. These sections do not include the one on which Count II of this indictment is based, but they do include the one upon which Count III is based (18 U. S. C. 1425).

1949—and an even longer period if the Government's current position, that the statute does not start to run until December 31, 1949, should prevail.[40] On that basis, and accepting the Government's argument that the now-repealed five-year statute of limitations for crimes under the Nationality Act is preserved for all offenses committed prior to September, 1948,[41] such offenses committed in 1942 could be made the subject of an indictment until December 31, 1954.[42] And, inasmuch as offenses under the revenue laws are not expressly excluded from the 1942 Suspension Act (whereas they were so excluded from the general statute of limitations to which the 1921 suspension, construed in the McElvain case, was a proviso), offenses under the revenue laws involving defrauding the Government, which are governed by a six-year statute of limitations (26 U. S. C. 3748), could be prosecuted until December 31, 1955—thirteen years after the 1942 Act, and nine years after the President's proclamation of the end of hostilities.

Another aspect of the Government's position in this case gives even greater cause for alarm. This is its effort to make the Suspension Act co-extensive with Section 37 of the Criminal Code. Since the decision in Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S. 462, Section 37 has been given an everbroadening construction. See Falter v. United States, 23 F. 2d 420, 423-424 (2d Cir.). This Court had earlier declared that its reach transcends that of a conspiracy to defraud at common law. United States v. Keitel, 211 U. S. 370, 393. Section 37 has been said to reach any act which hampers or interferes with the United States in the successful execution of any policy established pursuant to law. United States v. Soeder, 10 F. Supp. 944 (W. D. Mo.); see also Outlaw v. United States, 81 F. 2d 805, 807 (5th Cir.); Cendagarda v. United States, 64 F. 2d 182 (10th Cir.); cf. Biskind v. United States, 281 Fed. 47 (6th Cir.) (conspiracy, for same conduct as the Cendagarda case held within "fraud clause" of Section 37, here held within its "offense against the United States" clause). Members of this Court and other federal judges have had occasion to comment on the "serious threat to fairness in our administration of justice" involved in the Government's growing and pervasive reliance on conspiracy charges. See the concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Jackson in Krulewitch v. United States, 336 U. S. 440, 445, in which are quoted earlier statements to the same effect by Chief Justice Taft and Judge Learned Hand.

---

[40] See the Government's petition for certiorari in United States v. Klinger, Cert. granted, April 6, 1953, Docket No. 527, and the concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Clark in United States v. Smith, 342 U. S. 225, 230-31.

[41] See the Government's memorandum on certiorari in this case, pp. 23-26, and infra, pp. 48-52.

[42] If the ten-year period of Public Law 65 (supra, footnote 39) had been in effect at the time, prosecution for offenses within its coverage could be prosecuted until December 31, 1959.

In short, if this Court were now to depart from the solid ground of the Noveck, McElvain, and Scharton cases, the result would be to sweep a very large amount of the federal criminal jurisdiction, particularly where conspiracy is charged, under the Suspension Act. We mean this quite literally, and examination of the various categories of federal criminal cases bears out that conclusion. Under the position taken by the Government, it is hard to conceive that any of these categories[43] are outside the scope of the Suspension Act if any element of falsity can be alleged, or if a conspiracy count in the language of the "fraud clause" of Section 37 is included in the indictment.[44] See, for example, United States v. Terranova, 7 F. Supp. 989 (N. D. Cal.), holding that a conspiracy to pay less than prevailing wages was "fraud" within the meaning of Section 37. The Government's rationale enables it, by utilizing a conspiracy charge, to "increase the statute of limitations

---

[43] See the breakdown into categories in Annual Report of the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts (1952), pp. 96-97:

Criminal cases commenced in 86 districts for certain types of cases

Nature of Offense	1942	1948	1949	1950	1951	1952
Total	30,577	30,102	32,303	33,739	36,322	35,666
Transportation, etc., of stolen motor vehicles	1,876	3,189	2,834	2,772	2,556	3,106
Fraud and other theft	3,981	8,315	8,756	8,892	7,128	7,268
White slave traffic	441	264	190	233	227	229
Narcotics	1,945	1,502	1,578	2,172	1,982	1,873
Liquor, Internal Revenue	9,591	3,008	3,403	3,696	3,968	3,764
Food and Drug Act	371	429	356	363	365	269
Immigration laws	2,157	7,845	9,838	10,451	14,931	13,114
Juvenile delinquency	955	1,010	868	968	1,005	1,115
Migratory bird laws	620	501	745	525	498	483
National Defense laws:
Selective Service Act—1940	3,356	459	185	164	22	11
Selective Service Act—1948	—	—	158	44	314	660
OPA-OHE, price and rent control	—	234	33	7	—	2
Defense Production Act of 1950	—	—	—	—	—	108
Alien registration	720	2	1	1	30	53
Kidnapping	19	27	21	23	23	34
All other	4,545	3,317	3,337	3,423	3,273	3,577

[44] Unless the defendant's conduct is open rather than covert. Hammerschmidt v. United States, 265 U. S. 182.

and, in effect, hold the defendant for crimes which already had been outlawed." (In re Doyle, 42 F. 2686 at 691).[45]

To avoid these excesses,[46] this Court and the lower federal courts have uniformly interpreted the Suspension Act so as to achieve the Congressional purpose without opening the door to wholesale evasion of the three-year statute of limitations. This case should not be made the occasion for departing from the sound principles enunciated by this Court through Mr. Justice Butler in the Noveck and McElvain cases, Mr. Justice Roberts in the Scharton case, and Chief Justice Stone in the Braverman case.

---

[45] A sampling of cases in the Southern District of New York where the indictment contained a conspiracy count and where the proceedings against one or more of the defendants terminated in federal year 1951, reveals the breadth of the conspiracy "to defraud" language of the Criminal Code. Indictments laid in terms of conspiracy to defraud the United States included such diverse matters as perjury before a grand jury (United States v. Brothman, 133/106), forgery (United States v. Campbell, 133/270), and interfering with the administration of the revenue laws (United States v. Comenetz, 134/127). Other indictments involving violation of the liquor laws sometimes did (United States v. Jaffe, 133/334) and sometimes did not (United States v. Tavolacci, 134/301) contain the term "intent to defraud", although the violations were similar. Had there been a reason for so doing, many of the indictments phrased simply in terms of a conspiracy to violate specific penal provisions could have been rephrased in terms of conspiracy to defraud the United States, e.g. violations of the narcotics laws (United States v. Kouchalakos, 133/46), and unlawful use of passport (United States v. Hinchliffe, 135/40).

[46] The principle of the Noveck, McElvain and Scharton cases leaves ample leeway to the Government within the purposes of the Suspension Act. A necessarily hasty check of the Criminal Code discloses many sections involving the type of fraud envisaged in the Committee Reports on the 1942 Suspension Act; e.g., possessing or using, with intent to defraud the United States, forged, altered or counterfeited contracts, deeds, powers of attorney, certificates, orders or other writings in order to obtain money from the United States (Secs. 495, 1002); altering, forging or counterfeiting contracting bonds, bids, contracts or public records with intent to defraud the United States (Sec. 494); making false entries, statements or reports to Federal credit or lending institutions with an intent to defraud the United States or its agencies (Sec. 1006); improperly delivering certificates, vouchers or receipts for military or naval property with an intent to defraud the United States (Sec. 1022); delivering insufficient money or property for military or naval services with an intent to defraud the United States (Sec. 1023); and the keeping or making of false entries or accounts by any employee of the United States with an intent to defraud (Sec. 2073).

In the light of its history, there is not the slightest reason why the Government should be allowed to bring this suit after the expiration of the normal period of limitations.[47] Baron Alderson observed in Queen v. Robins, 1 Cox C. C. 114 (1844), where the indictment followed the act by only 21 months, that "it is monstrous to put a man on his trial after such a lapse of time." There is here no lack of harmony between legal principles and general equities.

B. Counts II and III are Governed by the General Three-Year Statute of Limitations, and not by the Special Five-Year Statute of the Nationality Act, which was Repealed in 1948.

Below and in its memorandum on certiorari (pp. 23-26), the Government contended that Counts II and III[48] are governed, not by the general three-year statute of limitations, but by the five-year statute (8 U. S. C. [1946 ed.] 746(g), Appendix pp. 2-3) formerly incorporated in the Nationality Act.

The Act of June 25, 1948 (62 Stat. 683) which enacted the present Criminal Code (Title 18 U. S. C.) into positive law effective September 1, 1948, repealed this five-year statute and fixed the period of limitations at three years (18 U. S. C. 3282). Section 21 of the Act of June 25, 1948, supra, provided that "Any rights or liabilities now existing" under the repealed laws "shall not be affected by this repeal."

---

[47] Cf. United States v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 315 U. S. 289, 308 wherein ("coming to this Court as it does more than twenty years after the ships were completed") it is implicit that the Government should not postpone, until long after a war is over, its enforcement activities.

[48] This argument has no application to Count I of the indictment.

The precise question is whether an indictment returned after September 1, 1948 (as was the indictment here) for a crime committed before that date is governed by the five-year or the three-year period.

The court below, after considering and reconsidering the Government's argument,[49] unanimously rejected it and held the three-year period applicable. 199 F. 2d at 819-820. The same contention was made by the Government, and unanimously rejected (by Judges Frank, Learned Hand and Swan) in United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243 (2d Cir.)

Judge Frank's opinion in the Obermeier case (at pp. 250-256) contains a full review of the legislative history of the statutory provisions in question, and a careful analysis of the relevant principles with respect to repealers and saving clauses. There is no need to rehearse at length this history and analysis, which are so ably covered in his opinion. No court has approved the Government's position with respect to the Nationality Act, and there is little, if any, basis for it in decisions under other statutes.

Compelling evidence that the "saving clause" of the 1948 Act did not preserve the five-year statute of limitations beyond September 1, 1948 is found in well-established Congressional legislative practice. When Congress has desired to preserve the original period of limitations for offenses committed before a change in the period, it has made express provision to this effect. This has been true for at least seventy-five years, and may be seen by comparing Sections 13 and 5598 of the revised statutes of 1874 with Section 5599 thereof. Sections 13 and 5598 preserve, respectively, "any penalty, forfeiture, or liability" and "all offenses committed and all penalties or forfeitures". Section 5599, in contrast, expressly preserves "all acts of limitation, whether applicable to civil causes and proceedings, or to the prosecution of offenses, or for the recovery of penalties or forfeitures".[50]

---

[49] In its original opinion of September 6th, the court accepted the argument (Tr. 8225-29).

In 1933, when the revised statutes were overhauled and obsolete sections repealed, Section 5599 was retained at the suggestion of the Secretary of War and the Attorney General, and for the specific reason that the concluding proviso of the repealing statute under consideration "refers only to 'rights' and 'liabilities' and not to remedies, recourse to which may be barred by limitations." See Sen. Rep. 1205, 72nd Cong., 2d Sess. Accordingly, if Congress had intended to preserve the five-year statute of limitations in the Nationality Act, "it would have been so easy to have said so". Baltimore & P. R. R. Co. v. Grant, 98 U. S. 398, 403.

Furthermore, the legislative history is squarely contrary to the Government's contention. This is borne out by the "authoritative" (United States v. National City Lines, 337 U. S. 78, 81) reviser's notes to 18 U. S. C. 3282 (the three-year statute of limitations) which, specifically referring to the five-year period (8 U. S. C. [1946 ed.] 746[g]), state that this period "is reduced to three years" since "there seemed no sound basis for considering three years adequate in the case of heinous felonies and gross frauds against the United States, but inadequate for misuse of a passport or false statement to a naturalization examiner."

---

[50] The 1909 Criminal Code (35 Stat. 1159) contained similar distinct provisions, e.g., sections 533 and 534.

The fact that the effective date of the repealing statute was postponed until September 1, 1948, shows, as the court below put it (199 F. 2d at 820), that "The legislation was skillfully drawn to prevent the nullification of prosecutions already begun by providing for continuity of the offenses through the revision and to prevent an effective amnesty as to violations more than three and less than five years old by postponing the effective date long enough for the government to act under the old five-year limitation."

Likewise, any other construction would result in the indefensible anomaly that a later offense would be barred sooner than an earlier one. For an offense committed on August 31, 1948, the statute would not run until August 31, 1953; for the identical offense committed on the very next day, prosecution would be barred on September 1, 1951.

The cases cited by the Government (memorandum on certiorari, p. 25) accomplish little or nothing in support of its contention.[51] The Government appears to lay some store by De La Rama S. S. Co. v. United States, 344 U. S. 386, a holding that the general savings clause (1 U. S. C. 109) preserved to a suitor the right to proceed in the district court with a civil case already begun there, despite the repeal of the War Risk Insurance Act. But this decision does not reach the problem here, inasmuch as it did not deal with a limitations problem but rather with a contention which, if accepted, would have divested the district court of jurisdiction. Furthermore, the language of the statute there in question was quite different from that of the saving clause here, and there the case had been commenced many years prior to the enactment of the repealer, which is not so here.

---

[51] The authorities mentioned to support a contrary view are either civil cases (in which the doctrine of liberal construction in favor of repose has not the same force as in criminal cases), or do not involve periods of limitations, and they are all explicable upon other grounds.

In the present case, everything in the history of the statute of limitations and the savings clause demonstrates that it was Congress' intention to reduce the period of limitations to three years on and after September 1, 1948. Indictments brought subsequent to that date, as was the case here, are governed by the general three-year statute of limitations.

II

THIS PROCEEDING IS BARRED BY PRIOR ADJUDICATIONS UNDER THE PRINCIPLES OF RES JUDICATA, ESTOPPEL, AND THE DUE PROCESS CLAUSE OF THE FIFTH AMENDMENT.

The primary and determinative factual issue raised by the indictment is whether or not Bridges had belonged to the Communist Party during the period covered by the indictment, 1933 to September 17, 1945.[52] This very issue was determined favorably to Bridges in the proceedings culminating in his naturalization on September 17, 1945. With respect to a shorter period of time, the same factual issue was the subject of the two administrative deportation proceedings against Bridges, the second of which was reviewed by this Court in Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135 (1945).

---

[52] There were, of course, other factual issues with respect to petitioners Schmidt and Robertson under Counts I and III, but these were dependent upon the primary issue of Count II

In the two prior proceedings the Government sought to prove its charge of Communist membership[53] by adducing evidence that Bridges had attended Communist meetings; had followed a position in trade union matters "parallel" to that of the Communist Party, had dealt with Communists in matters of union concern, and had admitted to membership in the Communist Party. The evidence in those proceedings—as indeed in this one—dealt primarily with events claimed to have transpired in the 1930's, most of it "clustered around" (Knauer v. United States, 328 U. S. 654, 660) the water-front strikes of 1934 and 1936.[54]

It is our position that the first administrative proceeding (before Mr. Landis and Secretary Perkins) determined for purposes of this proceeding that Bridges was not then a Communist, and that the second proceeding (before Judge Sears and Attorney-General Biddle), together with this Court's holding in the Wixon case, similarly determined that Bridges was not a Communist at any time between his entry into the United States (1920) and 1941 (the year of the Sears proceeding). Therefore, the factual issue with respect to membership prior to 1941 had been conclusively determined between the parties[55] (the Government and

---

[53] Supra, p. 5.

[54] See Appendix, pp. 37-38.

[55] In Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U. S. 351, at 352-353, this Court set forth the distinction between "the effect of a judgment as a bar or estoppel against the prosecution of a second action upon the same claim or demand" (commonly referred to as the doctrine of res judicata), and "its effect as an estoppel in another action between the same parties upon a different claim or cause of action" (commonly called "collateral estoppel" or "estoppel by judgment"). As to the latter, the prior judgment concludes "those matters in issue or points controverted, upon the determination of which the finding or verdict was rendered." See also Duchess of Kingston's Case, 20 State Trials 537, 168 Eng. Rep. 175 (1776), in which Chief Justice De Grey sets out the same distinction.

Bridges), and should have been so treated upon the trial of this case. This requires reversal of the judgments of conviction because the trial court, over timely objection by the petitioners, refused to limit the evidence to the period after 1941 (and various other earlier dates specified in other objections, Tr. 736, 816-17, 87 F. Supp. 14), refused so to limit the issue which went to the jury (Tr. 293-96), affirmatively instructed the jury to disregard the earlier determinations (Tr. 7867-68, 7877), and excluded from evidence this Court's opinion in the Wixon case (Tr. 4226-27).

It is also our position that the naturalization decree of September 17, 1945 conclusively determined between the parties that Bridges was not a Communist at any time during the entire period covered by the indictment. This requires reversal of the judgment and dismissal of the indictment.

Finally, it is our position that the entire course of the several litigations against Bridges, involving, as it does, repetitious charges based on the same factual issue, and harassment of an individual on the same charge but in different proceedings over the course of fourteen years,

---

(n. 55 cont.) Under the doctrine of these and other cases, the prior decisions with respect to the factual issue of Bridges' membership in the Communist Party would constitute a bar to this indictment by way of collateral estoppel rather than res judicata. However, the distinction in terminology is not always closely observed. See United States v. Balt. & Ohio R. R. Co., 229 U. S. 244, 253, wherein an issue determined in an equity proceeding was "properly held to be res judicata as to the facts averred in" a subsequent criminal indictment involving the same issue.

There is no doubt that res judicata and estoppel are doctrines which apply in criminal as well as civil proceedings. United States v. Oppenheimer, 242 U. S. 85; Regina v. Miles, L. R. 24 Q. B. D. 43. And this is true even though the first adjudication be in a civil proceeding, and is pleaded in bar in a later criminal proceeding. United States v. Balt. & Ohio R. R. Co., supra.

cannot be squared with the rudiments of fair play, and is in violation of the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment. This likewise requires reversal of the judgment and dismissal of the indictment.

A. The Secretary of Labor's Determination in January, 1940 that Bridges was not a Communist Conclusively Established that Fact in this Proceeding.

On January 8, 1940, the Secretary of Labor approved the trial examiner's conclusion that the evidence failed to establish that Bridges was a member of or affiliated with the Communist Party, and dismissed the deportation proceeding (Tr. 55). It does not appear to be controverted that this determination, if made by a court, would have been conclusive in the present proceeding of the issues previously determined. The conclusive effect of the earlier proceeding would then present a routine example of collateral estoppel, and the earlier finding would "conclude those matters in issue which the verdict determined though the offenses be different". Sealfon v. United States, 332 U. S. 575, 578; United States v. Balt. & Ohio R. R. Co., 229 U. S. 244; Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. United States, 168 U. S. 1.

The court below decided (199 F. 2d at 826) and the Government contends (memorandum on certiorari, p. 14) that the Landis proceeding is not conclusive because the doctrine of res judicata is not applicable to deportation proceedings [illegible], more broadly, to decisions of administrative boards. The Government likewise argues that a determination of the factual issue of membership as of 1940 does not bear upon its determination as of 1945. Neither of these arguments is valid.

1. Res judicata and estoppel in administrative proceedings.

In denying the res judicata attributes of administrative determinations, the Government and the court below relied primarily on Pearson v. Williams, 202 U. S. 281 (1906), which held that a summary hearing and favorable ruling on an alien's right to enter did not bar a subsequent deportation order. But that case leads to no such broad conclusion as the Government seeks to draw; on the contrary, its reasoning tends rather to support the view that plenary, quasi-judicial determinations in deportation cases are judicially conclusive of what they decide.

The Government's position has been well described as the "all-or-none fallacy",[56] i.e., the fallacy that because an administrative ruling lacking elements of judicial determination is not given the attributes of res judicata, no administrative decisions of whatever dignity should be so treated. However, as Mr Justice Holmes' opinion in the Pearson case carefully specified (202 U. S. at 284-285), the administrative decision there in question (made by a board of special inquiry of the Commissioner of Immigration) was a tentative and summary one.[57] The Board had no power to compel the attendance of witnesses, and was expected to "decide upon such evidence as is at hand or is readily accessible." In this context, the court stated: "Decisions of a similar type long have been recognized as decisions of the executive department, and cannot constitute res judicata in a technical sense".

---

[56] Davis, Administrative Law (1951), p. 566.

[57] The Board's function was to determine, at the moment of the alien's debarkation, whether he was entitled to land. As Justice Holmes remarked, under these circumstances "any inquiry necessarily must be of a very summary sort". Pearson v. Williams, supra, at p. 284. See Davis, op. cit., supra, at p. 566: "Immigration proceedings are often so hasty and summary that res judicata ought not to cut off opportunity to correct mistakes in the light of better understanding at a later time. Yet a slight degree of res judicata remains. Quite consistently with the Supreme Court's view [in the Pearson case], a circuit court of appeals has held that an alien should not be 'called upon again and again to prove his right to be and remain in the United States' ", citing Choy Yuen Chan v. United States, 30 F. 2d 516-517 (9th Cir.).

But an entirely different situation is presented when, as here, the administrative proceeding is plenary and of a quasi-judicial character. Tait v. Western Maryland Ry. Co., 289 U. S. 620; Sunshine Coal Co. v. Adkins, 310 U. S. 381; Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Ohio Valley Tie Co., 242 U. S. 288. The court below wrongly read the Pearson case as a blanket holding that administrative determinations are never given the effect of res judicata or estoppel.[58]

Furthermore, the Pearson case considered the effect to be given a ruling in an entry case, not a deportation proceeding involving (as here) an alien who had long resided in this country. Deportation cases are treated, for due process and other purposes, quite differently from exclusion cases.[59] Every subsequent decision applying the Pearson ruling has been reached in an entry or "unassimilated status" case; it has never until this time been asserted in order to overturn a quasi-judicial administrative determination with respect to the deportability of a resident alien. Over the course of years and under this Court's influence,[60] deportation procedure has developed a progressively more formal and judicial structure. See Wong Yang Sung v. McGrath, 339 U. S. 33, 48-49.

---

[58] The nature of the misconception below is manifested by the court's observation that Dean Landis was "acting as an official of the executive department of the government but not as an arm of the judicial department . . .", 199 F. 2d at 826. True, of course, but this applies to all administrative determinations, including those which are quasi-judicial, and the court's test would have subverted the decisions in the Tait and Sunshine cases, supra.

[59] Compare Kwong Hai Chew v. Colding, 344 U. S. 590, which sharply restricted the Attorney-General's powers over resident aliens, with Shaughnessy v. United States ex rel Mezei, 21 L. W. 4242, March 16, 1953, which reached the opposite result with respect to identical powers applied to an entrance case.

As a part of this program, the administrative proceeding here in question was established. What resulted was an orderly and exhaustive hearing, resulting in a carefully deliberated finding. Had that order been made by the Tax Court, an administrative agency, it would have been res judicata for the year it covered. Commissioner v. Sunnen, 333 U. S. 591. Had it been made by the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, an administrative agency, it would have been res judicata, at least as to the particular shipment involved. United States v. Stone & Downer Co., 274 U. S. 225. Is this deliberate finding to be denied its consequence here because the agencies just mentioned have the word "Court" in their present titles, while Dean Landis was called a Trial Examiner and Madam Perkins was merely a Secretary? We submit that where a deportation decision as to a lawfully admitted and long-resident alien is based on exhaustive hearings, and results in a conclusion as to a past fact, that fact is conclusively determined. As the Attorney-General stated to the Senate Committee which was considering the 1940 bill to deport Bridges (Sen. Rep. 2031, 76th Cong., 3d Sess., Appendix pp. 22-23):

> "The extraordinary character of the bill upon its face is even more impressive viewed against its > background. This same alien has been accused, investigated, and tried at great length, and judgment has been rendered that he had not been proved guilty of the charges made against him. By this bill, the United States would deny faith and credit to its own duly conducted legal proceedings."

---

[60] Meanwhile, the Immigration Service was under pressure from outside critics to develop a procedure like that of the then Board of Tax Appeals, a Board which "neither initiates or prosecutes the cases which are brought before it but in effect sits as a court." 2 National Commission on Law Observance and Enforcement No. 5, May 27, 1931, pp. 160-61.

Indeed, the Pearson case has an affirmative rather than a negative impact on the question here. The court declared (202 U. S. at 285) that the administrative ruling was of a type long "recognized as decisions of the executive department" which "cannot constitute res judicata in a technical sense." In what sense, then, if not technical? None of the five cases cited[61] immediately following this statement involves any question of res judicata in its technical sense; but they reveal the opinion's meaning. They are cases holding that exclusion or deportation orders are not subject to review by the courts,[62] except to determine whether due process has been denied by unfairness or lack of any supporting evidence. This in fact subsequently occurred in the present case. Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135.

---

[61] Ekin v. United States, 142 U. S. 651; Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 146 U. S. 698, 713; Lem Moon Sing v. United States, 158 U. S. 538; Fok Yung Yo v. United States, 185 U. S. 296, 305; Japanese Immigrant Case, 189 U. S. 86, 98; United States v. Ju Toy, 198 U. S. 253, 263. The Ekin case, for example, re-affirms the right of habeas corpus to determine the lawfulness of an alien's restraint, while holding that Congress may give the final determination of factual issues to an executive officer who (p. 660) "is made the sole and exclusive judge of the existence of those facts, and no other tribunal, unless expressly authorized by law to do so, is at liberty to reëxamine or controvert the sufficiency of the evidence on which he acted."

[62] These cases were cited, therefore, with respect to the second order in the Pearson case, under which the aliens were to be deported, and which they were challenging. Mr. Justice Holmes, in other words, is saying that this second order is subject to only a limited review, and that the existence of the first and tentative order admitting the alien gave the courts no basis for interfering with the second order.

In other words, under the Pearson case, the Landis-Perkins determination was reviewable in the courts only on questions of due process. Now, the Government cannot turn the Pearson doctrine into a one-way street running in their chosen direction. Had the Landis-Perkins decision gone against Bridges, the Government certainly would have contended that it was subject to judicial review only as to due process; this, in fact, is just what the Government argued in the Wixon case (Government's brief in that case, pp. 18-23) and in Heikkila v. Barber, 21 L. W. 4249, 4250, March 16, 1953, in which this Court declared that "Congress had intended to make these administrative decisions non-reviewable to the fullest extent possible under the Constitution". But because the Landis-Perkins determination was that Bridges was not a Communist, the Government now claims the right to a broader judicial review (a review of factual questions),[63] by bringing an indictment for perjury.

If there are no decisions squarely establishing that a quasi-judicial determination in a deportation proceeding carries the attributes of res judicata and estops the parties from subsequently relitigating what has thus been determined, it is because never before, so far as we know, has the Government sought to overthrow such a determination by subsequent collateral attack. In other fields, however, there is abundant support for our position. Of course, quasi-legislative administrative actions, such as rate-making, are not res judicata any more than is an act of Congress.

---

[63] More precisely, the same factual question except for the period of time covered, see infra, pp. 62-63.

Arizona Grocery v. Atchison Ry., 284 U. S. 370. But that case clearly distinguishes quasi-judicial administrative decisions; the opinion states (at 389): "The rule of estoppel by judgment obviously applies only to bodies exercising judicial functions; it is manifestly inapplicable to legislative action." Nor are administrative decisions res judicata as to "continuing practices" such as were involved in Federal Trade Commission v. Raladam Co., 316 U. S. 149.

The res judicata attributes of administrative decisions were recognized in the tax field in the Sunnen case and in the customs field by the Stone & Downer case, and there are many other decisions to the same effect. United States v. Wildcat, 244 U. S. 111; Campbell v. Wadsworth, 248 U. S. 169; United States v. Atkins, 260 U. S. 220 (all dealing with Indian Affairs); Keogh v. Chicago and Northwestern Ry. Co., 260 U. S. 156 (Interstate Commerce Commission); United States ex rel. Girard v. Helvering, 301 U. S. 540 (Board of Tax Appeals); International Building Co. v. United States, 199 F. 2d 12 (8th Cir.) (Board of Tax Appeals); United States v. Willard Tablet Co., 141 F. 2d 141 (7th Cir.) (Federal Trade Commission); Lee v. Federal Trade Commission, 113 F. 2d 583 (8th Cir.);[64] cf. Hutton v. Ras Steam Shipping Co., 1 K. B. 834 (1907); Mortimer v. The South Wales Ry. Co., 1 E. & E. 374 (Q. B. 1859); Hoystod v. Commissioner of Taxation, 42 T. L. R. 207 (Privy Council 1925); Spenser Bower, Res Judicata (1924), Ch. II, Sec. 1, No. 17. There is, in short, no basis in reason or precedent for denying that the Landis-Perkins decision conclusively determined the factual question which was there put in issue—to wit, whether or not Bridges was then a Communist.

---

[64] The Tait and Louisville cases and the Sunshine case (supra, p. 57) recognized the res judicata attributes of decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Bituminous Coal Commission.

2. Because the Secretary of Labor's determination was not given effect in this proceeding, the judgment below must be reversed.

Apart from the Pearson case, the Government denies that the Landis-Perkins determination should be given effect in this proceeding because the indictment covers a different period of time. In its memorandum on certiorari (pp. 14-15), the Government states: "At most, what was decided in the prior proceedings was that Bridges had not been shown to be a member of the Communist Party before 1940. The issue as of 1945 when Bridges swore that he was not a member, was, of course, not at all involved in these proceedings. Thus the Government did not attempt to re-litigate any issue actually decided in the deportation hearings".

But part of the issue which went to the jury was the same issue that had been litigated before. If "what was decided in the prior proceedings was that Bridges had not been shown to be a member of the Communist Party before 1940", then obviously "the issue as of 1945", which alone should have gone to the jury, was whether Bridges was at any time a Communist after the decision in 1940 and before September 17, 1945 (the end of the period specified in the indictment).

However, the indictment was not so limited, and the efforts of the defense to limit the evidence and the issue for the jury were unsuccessful. The Government's memorandum completely fails to meet this basic point. As we have already pointed out (supra, p. 54), the court overruled objections to evidence bearing on the period prior to 1940, refused to limit the issue which went to the jury, and affirmatively instructed the jury to disregard the Landis-Perkins determination.

It is unnecessary to decide whether the Landis-Perkins determination relates only to the point of time at which it was made, or covers the preceding years.[65] Actually, none of the witnesses who appeared before Mr. Landis gave testimony relating to the time at which the hearing was held; for the most part their testimony covered the years 1934 to 1937,[66] and the Government relied on the presumption of a continuing state of facts to establish membership as of the time of the hearing. The theory of the Landis-Perkins finding, therefore, was that Bridges had not been shown to be a Communist during the years to which the testimony related, which destroyed the basis for the presumption.

But whether the decision reaches properly only to the time at which it was made, or covers the earlier years, makes no difference here. The trial court refused to give it effect even with respect to the time at which it was rendered, and this clearly requires reversal of the judgment of conviction.

---

[65] The trial examiner's finding, approved by the Secretary of Labor, related, if read literally, only to the time at which the decision was made, in accordance with the language of the charge against Bridges. Mr. Landis' report did not advert expressly to this question, although, in discussing Kessler v. Strecker, 307 U. S. 22, he observed that: "The Strecker case left uncertain the particular time as of which the facts of membership, etc., have to be proved, though the inference derivable from the opinion is that the significant time is that of the issuance of the warrant of arrest." See In the Matter of Harry R. Bridges—Findings and Conclusions of the Trial Examiner (United States Government Printing Office, 1939) p. 6, n. 17.

[66] See Appendix, pp. 36-37. The testimony of Bridges himself, who was called as a witness by the Government and of the witness Humphreys, extended into the year 1938.

B. The Decision of this Court in Bridges v. Wixon Conclusively Established in this Proceeding that Bridges was not a Communist Prior to 1941.

On September 26, 1941, Presiding Inspector Sears submitted his memorandum and proposed findings, including the findings that Bridges had been a member of and affiliated with the Communist Party. As is set forth in this Court's opinion in Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135, 139-140, the Board of Immigration Appeals found that Bridges had not been a member of or affiliated with the Communist Party, after which the Attorney General reviewed the Board's decision and made findings in accordance with those proposed by Judge Sears. Upon issuance of a deportation warrant, Bridges challenged the legality of his detention by habeas corpus and the proceedings on the writ culminated in the decision of this Court in the Wixon case. As a result of that decision the writ was granted, Bridges was released from bail, and the deportation proceeding was abandoned.

We contend that the decision in the Wixon case, on familiar principles, barred re-litigation of the issue of Communist membership prior to 1941. The Government contends (memorandum on certiorari, pp. 13-14) and the Court below agreed (199 F. 2d at 826-27) that the Wixon case held only that the administrative hearing was unfair, and did not reach the factual issue of membership. Likewise, the Government makes the same argument, with respect to the period of time involved, which has already been examined in connection with the Landis-Perkins decision (supra, pp. 62) with the additional contention (memorandum on certiorari, p. 15, footnote 8) that "To establish the falsity of the 1945 statement the Government did not rely [at the trial under this indictment] on the evidence which had been introduced at the prior deportation hearings. All of the Government witnesses were new." None of these arguments is valid.[67]

---

[67] Other statements in the decision below in support of its holding that the Wixon case is of no effect in this proceeding seem not to warrant detailed analysis. (1) "The matter in court was habeas corpus, and the Communist issue was not in the case" (199 F. 2d at 827). The second clause of this sentence can only be characterized as extraordinary in view of the careful analysis, in both the majority and minority opinions of this Court in the Wixon case, of the question whether there was evidence to support the administrative finding (326 U. S., at 149-157, 166-178). As for the reference to habeas corpus, though it is well-settled that a judgment refusing to discharge a petitioner (though it may be persuasive) is not res judicata (Salinger v. Loisel, 265 U. S. 224, 230; Waley v. Johnston, 316 U. S. 101, 105), a judgment which does discharge a prisoner is res judicata at least as to "all the facts and circumstances which came" up in the original proceedings. United States v. Chung Shee, 76 Fed. 951, 956 (9th Cir.), affirming the more extended district court opinion, id., 71 Fed. 277, 279 (S. D. Cal.), which in turn quotes the relevant portion of Freeman on Judgments for the distinction here made. Chung Shee is cited by this Court in Collins v. Loisel, 262 U. S. 426, 430, where the Court notes that a discharge on habeas corpus operates as res judicata of the issues of law and fact necessarily involved in that result. See Harris v. Biszkowicz, 100 F. 2d 854 (8th Cir.); Ex parte Reaves, 121 Fed. 848 (M. D. Ala.). And in Heikkila v. Barber, 21 L.W. 4249, March 16, 1953, this Court expressly stated that the reason for limiting an alien to the writ of habeas corpus was "to minimize opportunities for repetitious litigation and consequent delays. . . ."

(2) "Of course, the issue in none of the former hearings was as to Bridges' being a Communist. . . . an allegation that a person was a Communist was not per se an allegation of a crime, while the allegation that one conspired to destroy the Government by force or violence stated a crime" (199 F. 2d at 826-27). Of course, this is the sheerest legal fiction. Bridges was not charged before either Mr. Landis or Judge Sears with conspiring to destroy the Government by force and violence, but with being a member of the organization which advocated the violent overthrow of the Government. In each of the administrative proceedings, the Government specified that the organization in question was the Communist Party (supra, pp. 5, 7). Therefore, the precise issue in both administrative proceedings was whether or not Bridges was a member of the Communist Party.

1. Bridges v. Wixon held that there was no evidence to support the administrative conclusion that Bridges was a member of the Communist Party.

The Government's effort to rule the Wixon case out of the present proceeding is bottomed on the single circumstance that Judge Sears admitted, as substantive evidence against Bridges, hearsay evidence of an unsworn statement of one James D. O'Neil, and that both Judge Sears and the Attorney-General relied heavily on this evidence in reaching their conclusion that Bridges was a member of the Communist Party. In the Wixon case, this Court held that it was error to admit O'Neil's statement as substantive evidence. On that basis, the Court below said (199 F. 2d at 827) that the Wixon case "goes no farther than to declare what was the proper administrative procedure to be followed", and the Government contends (memorandum on certiorari, p. 13) that the case held only that the administrative hearing was "unfair".

But this reading of the Wixon case is wholly untenable in the light of the issue before this Court and the language of both majority and minority opinions. In the majority opinion (Mr. Justice Douglas) it was explicitly stated that a deportation order cannot be overturned on due process grounds "by showing that incompetent evidence was admitted and considered" (326 U. S. at 156, citing Vajtauer v. Commissioner, 273 U. S. 103, 106). Under the decisions of this Court, the issue in the Wixon case was whether there was evidence—sometimes described as "some" evidence, "any" evidence, or evidence "more than a scintilla, and not unbelievable on its face"—to support the Attorney-General's finding that Bridges was a Communist. Tisi v. Tod, 264 U. S. 131. That this was the issue before the Court was recognized in both the majority pinion (326 U. S. at 149: "In these habeas corpus proceedngs we do not review the evidence beyond ascertaining hat there is some evidence to support the deportation order", iting the Vajtauer case), and in the minority opinion of Chief Justice Stone (326 U. S. at 166, 170-171).

The history of the Sears-Biddle proceeding bears out hat the evidentiary question was determinative. Judge Sears, as was stated in the Attorney-General's decision, ejected much of the Government's evidence on membership s "untrustworthy, contradictory, or unreliable."[68] The Attorney-General relied primarily, if not exclusively, on he testimony of Harry Lundeberg and the unsworn statement of O'Neil.[69] When Bridges' petition for a writ of habeas corpus reached this Court, the primary point in both his and the Government's brief was whether there was sufficient evidence to support the administrative finding (Brief for petitioner in the Wixon case, pp. 29-65: brief for the Government therein, pp. 13-15, 18-93).[70]

---

[68] Harry Bridges before the Attorney-General in Deportation Proceedings (U. S. Dept. of Justice, May 28, 1942), p. 18; Appendix, pp. 39-41.

[69] Id., at pp. 18-24. As to seven other witnesses whose testimony was characterized by Judge Sears as "inconclusive, unreliable, or contradictory" (Id. at p. 25), the Attorney-General declared (Id. at p. 26) that "taken as a whole it cannot, because of its volume, be completely disregarded", but this seems to be stated with reference to "affiliation" rather than "membership."

[70] There were, of course, numerous other points involved. At each stage of the Sears-Biddle proceeding, Bridges pleaded the Landis-Perkins decision in bar as res judicata. Judge Sears rejected the argument because the evidence was presented by a new set of witnesses (infra, pp. 71-72), a greater period of time was covered by the charge, and on the Pearson case (In the Matter of Harry Renton Bridges, Immigration and Naturalization Service, Department of Justice, File No. 55973/217, Memorandum of Decision, at p. 17). The Board of Immigration Appeals discussed but, because of their finding that the evidence was insufficient, did not decide the point. The Attorney-General relied exclusively on Pearson v. Williams, 202 U. S. 281 (Harry Bridges before the Attorney-General in Deportation Proceedings (U. S. Government Printing Office, 1942) at p. 30). This Court, presumably because it disposed of the case on other grounds, did not advert to the res judicata question (326 U. S. at 156-157).

In this Court, therefore, the "membership" issue was whether the evidence of O'Neil and Lundeberg was sufficient to support the administrative finding. The dissenting justices thought Lundeberg's testimony alone sufficient (326 U. S. at 174). The majority opinion held O'Neil's statement incompetent (while recognizing that the administrative finding could not be overturned for that reason alone, 326 U. S. at 156), and that the finding of membership could not be sustained if O'Neil's statement was excluded from consideration.[71] The Court gave weight to the fact (326 U. S. at 156) that "the Board of Immigration Appeals significantly concluded that apart from O'Neil's unsworn statements the evidence of Bridges' membership was too flimsy to support a finding" and drew from this the conclusion that it would be "idle to consider what the Attorney-General might have ruled on the basis of the other evidence before him", citing, by comparison, United States v. Dunton, 291 Fed. 905 (S. D. N. Y.).

In the Dunton case, Judge Learned Hand held, in an exclusion case on habeas corpus, that the Secretary of Labor, reversing a board of special inquiry which voted to admit the alien, had improperly considered certain evidence not adduced before the board. Judge Hand granted the writ, saying (291 Fed. at 907):

> "It is idle to speculate upon what the board might have done if they had received it [the evidence im-

---

[71] The Court noted (326 U. S. at 155) that the Attorney-General did not find that Lundeberg's testimony alone was sufficient (the dissenting justices disagreed with this interpretation), though the Court reserved the question of what conclusion it would have reached had the Attorney-General found that testimony alone sufficient. The Attorney-General's failure to find Lundeberg's testimony alone sufficient thus furnished additional support for this Court's parallel conclusion.

> properly considered by the Secretary] . . . there can be no question that without it there was no color for reversal, nothing but the most trivial inconsistencies."

Quite clearly, the citation of the Dunton case at that point in the Court's opinion means that, lacking the O'Neil statement, the Attorney-General had no evidence before him sufficient to warrant reversing the Board of Immigration Appeals or to support a finding that Bridges was a Communist.[72]

If there are any doubts about the conclusiveness of the Wixon case,[73] they certainly did not occur to the Government when the decision was handed down. No effort was made to resume the deportation proceeding;[74] no effort was made to adduce additional evidence to support the administrative finding, or to give the Attorney-General an opportunity to rule on the sufficiency of Lundeberg's testimony standing alone.[75] Bridges' bail was released and the Government appears to have treated the Wixon decision in all respects as a final and conclusive adjudication of the issue, as indeed it was.[76]

---

[72] It is also to be noted that the court below, albeit inconsistently with their refusal to give effect to the Wixon case, stated (199 F. 2d at 827): "The Supreme Court, therefore, concluded that the administrative decision approving an executive order to deport Bridges could not be sustained since it was not supported by substantial evidence." Technically, as has been noted, the requirement in the Wixon case was not "substantial" but "some" evidence.

[73] "If the Court reverses the order, say, on the ground of lack of substantial evidence in the findings, then the res judicata effect probably ought to be the same as if the agency had held the other way on the issue in the first instance, with the added effect that the Court's holding is itself res judicata on the issue of substantial evidence, as well as on the other issues that might have been raised in the proceeding on judicial review." Davis, Administrative Law (1951), p. 611.

[74] Compare Bryan v. United States, 338 U. S. 552, wherein it was held (on a direct appeal from a criminal conviction, as distinguished from collateral review as in habeas corpus) that the circuit courts of appeal, when reversing a conviction for insufficient evidence, can either direct a new trial (even though the defendant's motion at trial for a directed verdict of acquittal was erroneously denied) or a judgment of acquittal. When the former course is followed, it "leaves the Government free to retry the case or to dismiss it if no additional evidence . . . be obtainable." See Caringella v. United States, 78 F. 2d 563, 567 (7th Cir.). If it be assumed that the rule of the Bryan case applies to the Wixon decision, the Government followed the latter course mentioned in the Caringella case.

2. Because the Wixon case was not given effect in this proceeding, the judgment below must be reversed.

Obviously the trial court's failure to restrict the issue for the jury to the period after 1941[77] was seriously prejudicial. The great bulk of the evidence introduced by the Government at the trial related to the same years of the mid-thirties that were covered by the witnesses called in the prior administrative proceedings (Appendix, pp. 36-37). The opinion of the court below (199 F. 2d at 834-45) contains an extensive review of the evidence. The evidence dealing with events subsequent to 1941 was such as (Appendix, pp. 41-43) "would not in itself suffice" to sustain the convictions (199 F. 2d 837, especially n. 8). Indeed, for this purpose, it is quite immaterial whether one adopts the time of the Landis-Perkins or the Sears-Biddle decision. And, as has been stated (supra, pp. 54, 62-63), the defendants made all possible motions to limit the evidence and restrict the issue for the jury as to each significant date in both administrative proceedings.

---

[75] The administrative regulations of the Immigration and Naturalization Service are set out in the Appendix, pp. 27-31. These specifically gave the Board of Immigration Appeals the authority to re-open a case.

[76] Immediately thereafter, when Bridges applied for naturalization, the Government interposed no objection. Infra, p. 72. The question whether the Wixon case or the Landis-Perkins decision would have been res judicata in the naturalization proceedings on the issue of Communist membership and affiliation, therefore, did not arise.

[77] There may be some question whether the precise governing date should be February 12, 1941 (the date of the warrant involved in the Sears-Biddle proceeding), or September 26, 1941 (the date of the Sears report). See Mr. Landis' comment on this type of question, supra, p. 63, n. 65.

To support the notion that relitigation of the factual issue of Bridges' Communist membership prior to 1940 was permissible, the Government has said (memorandum on certiorari, p. 15, footnote 8) only that: "To establish the falsity of the 1945 statement the Government did not rely on the evidence which had been introduced at the prior deportation hearings. All of the Government's witnesses were new." What is the purpose of this remarkable statement? That the Government abandoned the witnesses discredited in the earlier proceedings (Appendix, pp. 38-41), and felt obliged to dredge up and rely upon an entirely new lot, is indeed interesting, but quite irrelevant to the point at issue. The question is not whether the prosecution's evidence came from new witnesses, but whether the issue which went to the jury was, in whole or in part, the same issue as had been litigated before. Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. United States, 168 U. S. 1, 48; Sealfon v. United States, 332 U. S. 575, 578; United States v. Balt. & Ohio R. R. Co., 229 U. S. 244.

Whatever the purpose of the Government's statement, the fact that the witnesses were new has no bearing on the legal issues of res judicata and estoppel which are here under consideration, as the Government itself earlier acknowledged in its brief submitted to this Court in the Wixon case, wherein it is stated (at p. 99): "Although we do not understand that diversity of the evidence presented in two proceedings on the same issue bars the principle of res judicata, it is worth remarking that no witnesses offered by the Government at the second hearing had testified at the first." With all respect, we suggest that it was no more worth so remarking at the time of the Wixon case than it is at present.

C. The Naturalization Decree of September 17, 1945 is Res Judicata of the Issues therein Determined, including that of Bridges' Alleged Communist Party Membership; Therefore the Judgment below must be Reversed and the Indictment Dismissed.

On June 23, 1945 (five days after the decision in the Wixon case), Bridges filed his preliminary form for a petition for naturalization. The subsequent steps leading up to his naturalization by decree of the California Superior Court have already been described (supra, pp. 8-9; Tr. 102-145). The Government interposed no objection to Bridges' naturalization (Tr. 144).

Bridges was expressly asked and expressly denied present or former membership (Tr. 138), and an affidavit charging him with membership was offered "for what it is worth" by the Government's representative (Tr. 139-142). In granting the decree, therefore, the naturalization court determined that Bridges was not and had not been a Communist.

The naturalization decree was res judicata of the very issue in the present criminal proceeding. Chitwood v. United States, 178 Fed. 442 (8th Cir.); see Tutun v. United States, 270 U. S. 568, 577; Hart Steel Co. v. Railroad Supply Co., 244 U. S. 294, 298-9; cf. United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61. The factual question in both cases was precisely the same. That a naturalization decree is a "case or controversy" in the judicial sense has long been settled, as is the corollary that such a decree is a final adjudication which must be accepted by other courts as complete evidence of its own validity, and carries the attributes of res judicata. As Chief Justice Marshall said in Spratt v. Spratt, 4 Pet. 393, 407-408 (U. S., 1831):

> "The various acts upon the subject submit the decision of the right of aliens to admission as citizens to courts of record. They are to receive testimony, to compare it with the law, and to judge on both law and fact. This judgment is entered on record as the judgment of the court. It seems to us, if it be in legal form, to close all inquiry, and, like every other judgment, to be complete evidence of its own validity.
>
> "The inconvenience which might arise from this principle has been pressed upon the court; but the inconvenience might be still greater if the opposite opinion be established."

In line with these views, Mr. Justice Brandeis held in the Tutun case, supra at 577:

> "The petitioner's claim is one arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States. The claim is presented to the court in such a form that the judicial power is capable of acting upon it. The proceeding is instituted and is conducted throughout according to the regular course of judicial procedure. The United States is always a possible adverse party. By § 11 of the Naturalization Act the full rights of a litigant are expressly reserved to it. . . . Its contentions are submitted to the court for adjudication. . . . The judgment entered, like other judgments of a court of record, is accepted as complete evidence of its own validity unless set aside. . . . It may not be > collaterally attacked. . . . If a certificate is procured when the prescribed qualifications have no existence in fact, it may be cancelled by suit."

In Knauer v. United States, 328 U. S. 654, relied on by the Government as denying the res judicata attributes of a naturalization decree (memorandum on certiorari, pp. 15-16), the Government brought suit to cancel a naturalization certificate, in line with the last sentence quoted above from the Tutun case. The issue in the case was whether Knauer committed a fraud by taking a false oath of allegiance. Knauer pleaded the naturalization decree in bar as res judicata, and this Court's rejection of the plea[78] is the basis of the Government's contention that Bridges' naturalization decree was not conclusive of the issue here.

But the Knauer case does not even settle the question whether the decree here would be res judicata of the membership issue in a denaturalization proceeding against Bridges (as distinguished from the criminal charge here involved). For the Knauer decision was grounded narrowly on the fact that Knauer's oath of allegiance related "to a state of mind . . . and promise of future conduct" and not to "issues of fact", as here (328 U. S. at 670, 671):

> "It is said, however, that the issue of fraud may not be tried in this case. An analogy is sought to be drawn to those cases where relief against a prior

---

[78] Other cases where the naturalization certificate has been cancelled have involved jurisdictional defects, as in United States v. Ness, 245 U. S. 319; Johannessen v. United States, 225 U. S. 227; United States v. Ginsberg, 243 U. S. 472. In the Ness case, the Court pointed out (at 325) that the naturalization decree "is, though clearly erroneous, conclusive even as against the United States if it entered an appearance" on evidentiary and procedural matters.

judgment, on the ground that perjured testimony was introduced at the trial, was denied. United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61, 66 . . . But that rule goes no further than to say that the issue of fraud can become res judicata in the judgment sought to be set aside. We need not consider the extent to which a decree of naturalization may constitute a final determination of issues of fact, the establishment of which Congress has made conditions precedent to naturalization. Those facts relate to the past—to behavior and conduct. But the oath is in a different category. It relates to a state of mind and is a promise of future conduct. It is the final act by which an alien acquires the status of citizen. It requires forswearing of all allegiance in good faith and with no mental reservations. The oath being the final step, no evidence is heard at that time. It comes after the matters in issue have been resolved in favor of the applicant for citizenship. Hence, no opportunity exists for the examiner or the judge to determine if what the new citizen swore was true, was in fact false. Hence, the issue of fraud in the oath cannot become res judicata in the decree sought to be set aside. For fraud in the oath[79] was not in issue in the proceedings and neither was adjudicated nor could have been adjudicated."

The Knauer case, therefore, expressly reserved "the extent to which a decree of naturalization may constitute a final determination of issues of fact" in denaturalization proceedings. But the question so reserved is not the question here, and even if resolved favorably to the Government, would be of no avail to it here. For this is not a proceeding to cancel a certificate of naturalization; it is, per contra, a collateral attack on the naturalization decree by means of a criminal indictment for false swearing—the very kind of attack against the decree which, under the Tutun case, must be treated as a final adjudication, protected against collateral attack.[80] And here, the issue of Bridges' Communist membership, determined by the denaturalization decree, is the very issue on which the indictment for false swearing is based. Chitwood v. United States, supra. Furthermore, the Government has in fact instituted a proceeding to cancel Bridges' naturalization certificate, but that proceeding has been stayed, at the Government's own request and over the petitioners' objection. United States v. Bridges, 86 F. Supp. 931 (N. D. Cal.). The Government is now asking this Court to do precisely what the Tutun case said cannot be done. See also United States v. Hamilton, 157 Fed. 569 (C. C. S. D. N. Y.).

---

[79] The Government's quotation of the balance of this sentence following the footnote (memorandum on certiorari, pp. 15-16) omitted the words "in the oath", which of course limit the meaning of the sentence and make it wholly inapplicable to the present case.

The Government complains (memorandum on certiorari, p. 15) that "It would indeed be an odd application of the principle of res judicata to bar the Government from protecting the integrity of its own proceedings on the ground that the final order in those proceedings precludes a further inquiry, criminal or otherwise, as to whether the legal proceedings had been abused". But the proper channel for such inquiry[81]—a suit to cancel the certificate—has been stopped by the Government's own act.

---

[80] If "the issue of fraud can become res judicata" for purposes of a suit to cancel a certificate, a fortiori it can for purposes of collateral attack.

[81] In Bindczyck v. Finucane, 342 U. S. 76, a civil denaturalization case, Mr. Justice Frankfurter reviewed the naturalization statutes and their legislative history and concluded that civil denaturalization is the exclusive procedure for reaching fraudulent or illegal procurement of naturalization.

The vice of the Government's position, however, lies far deeper. Naturalization proceedings are not the Government's "own", as Mr. Justice Brandeis made clear in the Tutun case. And the policies underlying the principles of res judicata apply to litigation between a government and a private citizen as much as to suits between individuals. That principle rests not only on the general policy of repose and a realization that a proceeding, to set aside an earlier judgment fraudulently obtained, is it-

---

(n. 81 cont.)

"In the light of this legislative history we cannot escape the conclusion that in its detailed provisions for revoking a naturalization because of fraud or illegal procurement not appearing on the face of the record, Congress formulated a self-contained, exclusive procedure. With a view to protecting the Government against fraud while safeguarding citizenship from abrogation except by a clearly defined procedure, Congress insisted on the detailed, explicit provision of Section 15. . . .

Between them, these two sections, Section 11 and Section 15, provided a complete and exclusive framework for safeguarding citizenship against unqualified applicants. Under the first, the Government was given ample opportunity to interpose objections prior to the order of naturalization. If proper account was not taken of the evidence, the Government had recourse to appeal for examination of the action of the naturalizing court on the record. . . . At the expiration of that time, if citizenship was granted, it was to be proof against attacks for fraud or illegal procurement based on evidence outside the record, except through the proceedings prescribed in Section 15. The congressional scheme, providing carefully for the representation of the Government's interest before the grant of citizenship and a detailed, safeguarded procedure for attacking the decree on evidence of fraud outside the record, covers the whole ground. Every national interest is thereby protected." (Id. at pp. 83-4)

The revocation in Bindczyck v. Finucane was held invalid for failure to utilize the statutory procedure of Section 15.

In Bindczyck this Court was dealing with an attempted revocation of naturalization on the ground that Bindczyck swore falsely concerning his loyalty to the United States. This, the Court said, was an issue to be established outside the record (342 U. S. at 85, n. 9). So to the question of whether Bridges swore falsely must be determined outside the record of his naturalization proceedings.

self no more immune to fraud than the earlier one. It also grows out of the courts' awareness that "the aid of judicial tribunals would not be invoked . . . if . . . conclusiveness did not attend the judgments of such tribunals." See Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. United States, 168 U. S. 1, 49. The principle is thus based "on full and solid reason" (Sperry's Case [1591], 5 Co. 61, 77 Eng. Rep. 148), and "in the long run the ends of equity and strict justice both are served best by holding strictly to the rule. Queen v. Hartington, 4 El. & Bl. 780, 119 Eng. Rep. 288 (1855). And it is especially applicable to an adjuciation of naturalization, so that the decree granting citizenship shall be stable, like other judicial decrees, and not vulnerable to attack on grounds from which other judgments are immune, by accusations that false testimony was offered.

A glance at the naturalization laws and regulations shows the wisdom of this conclusion, and of the rule announced in the Tutun case. These are carefully drawn to afford the Government ample time to investigate the facts with respect to the alien's qualifications, and to challenge the naturalization petition if doubts are raised (Appendix, pp. 9-11, 31-35). The Government is allowed the fullest opportunity to oppose the application at the final hearing. If naturalization is granted over the Government's opposition, it may appeal, whether the decree be granted by a federal court (Tutun v. United States, supra), or a state court. In re Clark, 301 Pa. 321, 152 Atl. 192; cf. In re Bogunovic, 18 Cal. 2d 160, 114 Pac. 2d 581. As Mr. Justice Frankfurter stated in this Court's opinion in Bindczyck v. Finucane, 342 U. S. 76, 80-1:

> "To prevent fraud in a proceeding before a naturalization court, the Act devised a scheme of > administrative oversight for the naturalization process. The Government was given the right to appear. . . . This right was fortified by requiring notice of the petition to the newly created Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization and a ninety day waiting period between the filing of the petition and the final hearing. . . . These were safeguards to enable verification by the Bureau of the facts alleged in the petition and investigation of the qualifications of the applicant for citizenship."

Surely it is difficult to conceive of a case in which the application of the Tutun rule is less likely to reach an unfair result than the present one. For nothing is clearer than that the Government had ample notice of the accusation that Bridges was a Communist. The issue was not of a concealed nature as in Hazel-Atlas Co. v. Hartford Co., 322 U. S. 238; cf. United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61. Despite its possession of the fruits of years of investigation, the Government made no effort to oppose his naturalization, took no appeal from the decree, and allowed the period of limitations to expire before attempting to re-open the issue —by way of collateral attack. This Court should follow "the general and well settled rule that a judgment, not set aside on appeal or otherwise, is equally effective as an estoppel upon the points decided, whether the decision be right or wrong." See Reed v. Allen, 286 U. S. 191, 201.

D. This Indictment is barred by the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment.

The petitioner Bridges during the last fifteen years (1) has been subjected to an administrative trial in 1939 on the charge of membership in the Communist Party,[82] which terminated in his favor in 1940; (2) has been subjected to a second administrative trial in 1941 on the charge of past or present Communist membership which, after judicial review in this Court, terminated in his favor in 1945; (3) has established his non-membership in his naturalization proceeding in 1945; and (4) has been subjected since 1949 to a criminal trial for denying Communist membership, which has reached this Court in 1953.

The present indictment, which puts Bridges in jeopardy on the same issue which has thrice been determined in his favor, and which is the Government's third effort to punish him, by imprisonment or deportation, is barred under the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment.[83] If not double jeopardy in the technical sense,[84] the laying of this indictment nevertheless violated well-settled judicial principles of justice and fairness which are embodied in the due process clause. The Government cannot conduct its proceedings against an individual in such a manner as to offend "some principle of justice so rooted in the traditions and conscience of our people as to be ranked as fundamental". See Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U. S. 97, 105;

---

[82] Prior to 1939, the same petitioner was subjected to a series of investigations of the charge that he was a member of the Communist Party. All of them failed to sustain the charge (supra, p. 4).

[83] If it is impossible for us to cite any judicial holding which squarely supports this proposition, it is because the factual situation is itself unprecedented; the Government is equally unable to cite any holding to the contrary.

[84] The technical requirements of double jeopardy as declared in the precedents may not be met here, inasmuch as the prior determinations were not made in criminal proceedings. Members of this Court have, however, indicated that the "double jeopardy" clause should not be so restricted in its application. See the dissenting opinion in Wade v. Hunter, 336 U. S. 684, 694.

Mr. Justice Frankfurter, concurring, in Frances v. Resweber, 329 U. S. 459, 469.

Administrative decisions in recent years have often assumed proportions as momentous to individuals as criminal prosecutions. Deportation proceedings are perhaps the plainest example. See Bridges v. Wixon, supra, at p. 147. Although the prior proceedings against Bridges were not technically criminal in character, they were certainly penal. Ng Fung Ho. v. United States, 259 U. S. 276; Wallis v. Tecchio, 65 F. 2d 250 (5th Cir.); Browne v. Zurbrick, 45 F. 2d 931 (6th Cir.). The Fifth Amendment forbids double jeopardy as to even a trifling criminal offense. Its broader guaranty of due process of law extends at least the basic protections of the judicial process to all types of proceedings, whether or not known in 1789.

Under the decision below, the Government can follow one protracted and exhausting proceeding with another. If that can be done, there will come a proceeding, whether it be the second or the seventh, when the Government may get the result it wants. The entire course of proceedings with respect to Bridges embodies repetitious charges based upon the same factual issue, disregard of the salutary policy of repose, and harassment of an individual on the same charge over the course of fifteen or more years. This cannot be squared either with rudimentary concepts of fair play, or with the Fifth Amendment. This Court should examine "the whole course of the proceedings in order to ascertain whether they offend those canons of decency and fairness which express the notions of justice of English-speaking peoples even toward those charged with the most heinous offenses." See Adamson v. California, 332 U. S. 46, 67-68.

In United States v. Ball, 163 U. S. 662, it was held that a defendant who had appealed from a conviction could not plead the conviction in bar against a second trial in the same proceeding. A contrary result was reached in Kepner v. United States, 195 U. S. 100, where, after an acquittal, the state secured a reversal of the judgment. In Trono v. United States, 199 U. S. 521, the distinction between these earlier cases was explained on the basis that the defendant, by appealing, "waives" his right to plead jeopardy. Mr. Justice Holmes dissented in the Kepner case (and, for the reasons set forth in his dissent, concurred in the result but not in the opinion in the Trono case), because, in his view (195 U. S. at 134) "a man cannot be said to be more than once in jeopardy in the same cause, however often he may be tried. . . . Everybody agrees that the principle (against double jeopardy) in its origin was a rule forbidding a trial in a new and independent case where a man already had been tried once". "Waiver", in his opinion, corresponded neither to the law nor to the psychology of defendants.

Since the Trono case, this Court has rendered a series of decisions restricting the scope of both the "double jeopardy" clause of the Fifth and the "due process" clauses of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments[85] as applied to successive trials in the same proceeding.[86] However during this sequence of decisions holding the double jeopardy and due process clauses inapplicable to successive trials in the same proceeding, there have been constant warnings that the doctrine of these cases by no means applies to situations where the defendant has been subjected to multiple and repetitious proceedings.

---

[85] The distinction between the effect of the two clauses has been sharply drawn in criminal cases coming to this Court from the state courts, since the Fifth Amendment applies to the federal government but not to the states, and since the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment does not encompass the whole body of the Bill of Rights, or the entire reach of "double jeopardy". See, e.g., Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U. S. 319.

[86] See Stroud v. United States, 251 U. S. 15, where a defendant, convicted of first degree murder without capital punishment, obtained a reversal of his conviction, and at the second trial was again convicted and sentenced to be hanged; Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U. S. 19, where after a conviction for second degree murder, the State

In United States v. Oppenheimer, 242 U. S. 85, a new indictment was brought on the same charge after an earlier one had been dismissed by virtue of an erroneous application of a statute of limitations. This Court held that, although there had been no double jeopardy, the second proceeding was barred by res judicata, which Mr. Justice Holmes (who had dissented in the much harsher circumstances of the Kepner case, on the ground that only a single proceeding was there involved) described (242 U. S. at 88) as "a fundamental principle of justice". Writing for a unanimous court, the Justice thus projected the distinction (earlier stated in his dissent in the Kepner case) between subjecting a defendant to multiple and repetitious charges, and carrying a single proceeding through to a final conclusion.

Precisely the same, fundamental distinction was drawn by Mr. Justice Cardozo in the Palko case (302 U. S. at 328): "The state is not attempting to wear the accused out appealed, obtained a reversal of the judgment and, at the second trial a conviction of first degree murder; Bryan v. United States, 338 U. S. 552, where after a criminal conviction was set aside on the defendant's appeal for insufficient evidence, the appellate court directed a new trial even though the defendant's motion for a verdict of acquittal had been erroneously denied; Brock v. North Carolina, 344 U. S. 424, where after the defendant was on trial and in jeopardy the State requested and was granted a mistrial and a continuance because prosecution witnesses had refused to testify on the grounds of self-incrimination, a second trial on the same indictment was held not to violate due process.

---

by a multitude of cases with accumulated trials. It asks no more than this, that the case against them shall go on until there shall be a trial free from the corrosion of substantial legal error". Five years later, in United States ex rel Marcus v. Hess, 317 U. S. 537, Mr. Justice Frankfurter, concurring stated (at 556): "If it be suggested that a succession of separate trials for the enforcement of a great number of criminal sanctions . . . might be a form of cruelty or oppression, the answer is that the Constitution itself has guarded against such an attempt 'to wear the accused out by a multitude of cases with accumulated trials' ".

Condemnation of multiple proceedings against an accused was most recently heard in this Court in Brock v. North Carolina, 344 U. S. 424, in both concurring and dissenting opinions. Chief Justice Vinson, dissenting, once again quoted (at 439) Justice Cardozo's opinion from the Palko case about "a multitude of cases with accumulated trials." He also thought it wrong that the door be opened to the discontinuance of a trial in order that the State (at 431) "might present a stronger case at some later trial". Mr. Justice Frankfurter, concurring, thought that the state court's conclusion that the mistrial was waranted should not be disturbed but stated (at 429): "A State falls short of its obligation when it callously subjects an individual to successive retrials on a charge on which he has been acquitted or prevents a trial from proceeding to a termination in favor of the accused merely in order to allow a prosecutor who has been incompetent or casual or even ineffective to see if he cannot do better a second time."

In the present case, the Government is seeking to do precisely what was condemned by Justice Cardozo in the Palko case, and by Chief Justice Vinson and Mr. Justice

Frankfurter in the Brock case. The Government has shifted from one statute to another, from one type of action to another, and one forum to another in order to see if it (344 U. S. at 429) "cannot do better a second time"—except that this is the fourth time. In the scale of due process, these things cannot be overlooked merely because the earlier proceedings were not technically criminal, and put Bridges in jeopardy of deportation rather than incarceration.

The disregard here of traditional principles and rudimentary conçepts of fair play has led to the perpetration of the very abuses which those principles and concepts are intended to prevent. Fifteen years ago, before Dean Landis, the Government produced witnesses, among whom, in the words of the adjudicator, were "a self-confessed liar"; one to whom "truth matters little"; "a weak-willed, characterless individual . . . . who in desperation was now pursuing new hypocritical tactics"; one whose testimony contained "amazing contradictions, and impossible situations" (Appendix, pp. 38-39). At the time of the Landis hearing, the events in question were relatively fresh, and the adjudicator found no evidence to sustain the charge against Bridges. The following year, when the issue was still relatively fresh, the Government again presented witnesses whose testimony was rejected by Judge Sears and the Attorney General "as being untrustworthy, contradictory, or unreliable". Harry Bridges Before the Attorney General in Deportation Proceedings (U. S. Government Printing Office, 1942) p. 18 (Appendix pp. 39-41). This Court held that the evidence not rejected in the administrative proceeding was insufficient to support the finding of membership. Nevertheless, in 1949, Bridges was faced with the problem of controverting the testimony of a wholly new set of witnesses, relating to events by then ten or more years in the past. Apart from the staling of the issue, the tactics of the Government in its efforts to collect evidence and procure witnesses have been indefensible at many stages of the proceeding.[87]

To hold this indictment barred by the due process clause is not, therefore, an abstract act of reverence to the Constitution. True, this indictment would still be barred under Constitutional principles, whether or not all of fifteen years had passed since the first proceeding, and whether or not all or any of these abuses had been perpetrated by the Government: Over 125 years ago, it was said in Commonwealth v. Old, 5 Litt. 137 (Kentucky, 1824): "That every person acquainted with the history of governments must know that state trials have been employed as a formidable engine in the hands of a dominant administration", and that preservation of the Constitutional safeguards is especially necessary "in a government like ours, so frequently subject to changes in popular feeling and sentiment . . .".[88] There have been several such changes in the years since 1939, but under the Constitution the judicial disposition of criminal accusations must be governed by other and more permanent standards.

---

[87] Dean Landis found that an inmate of San Quentin Penitentiary had been solicited by a government official to give evidence against Bridges under the pressure of "withholding action that might release an assumedly innocent man (the inmate) from jail unless he produced certain testimony". In the Matter of Harry R. Bridges, Findings and Conclusions of the Trial Examiner (U. S. Government Printing Office, 1939), p. 73. Judge Sears found that Bridges' telephone wires had been unlawfully tapped by government agents while the proceeding was pending before him. In the Matter of Harry Renton Bridges, Immigration and Naturalization Service, Department of Justice, File No. 55973/217, Memorandum of Decision, pp. 182-185. At the trial in this very case, the Government produced witnesses who testified that Bridges had attended the National Convention of the Communist Party at New York City in 1936, although, as the court below found (199 F. 2d at 841): "it was established, apparently beyond controversy, that at the very time the 1936 Convention was being held, Bridges was in Stockton, California, making a speech at a union meeting."

CONCLUSION

A case such as this one, involving as it does a long history and numerous and diverse legal questions, is extremely susceptible to fragmentation. Separate examination of each of its many elements is, of course, necessary, for the composite cannot be grasped without weighing and analyzing the components. In this brief we have, perforce, reviewed the case bit by bit and question by question—the ~~several issues~~ arising out of the statute of limitations; the scope and effect of each of the prior adjudications; the impact of the due process clause, and the application of res judicata and estoppel.

We have discussed the statute of limitations, the principles of res judicata, and the due process clause separately because they have distinct characteristics, and the precedents are found in different, though overlapping, clusters. But they are all based on the same ancient but timely judicial safeguards; they are components of a corpus. Many different expressions have been used to identify this policy: repose, security against stale demands, stability of rights and liabilities once determined and of status once established, protection against repetitious litigations, and many others.

---

[88] This language was quoted with approval by this Court in Ex parte Lang, 18 Wall. 163 at 170-171 (U. S., 1873).

The statute of limitations, for example, embodies not only a policy of repose but also, like res judicata and due process, of justice and fairness. As Mr. Justice Story said in Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. 351, 360 (U. S., 1828), a statute of limitations "has a manifest tendency to . . . suppress those prejudices which may rise up at a distance of time, and baffle every honest effort to counteract or overcome them." In default of limitations:

> "Parol evidence may be offered of confessions, (a species of evidence which, it has been often observed, it is hard to disprove, and easy to fabricate,) applicable to such remote times, as may leave no means to trace the nature, extent, or origin of the claim, and thus open the way to the most oppressive charges."

In this very case, the evidence thought by the court below most damaging to Bridges (199 F. 2d at 838-39) consisted of alleged admissions by him of Communist membership, said to have been made in 1935 and 1938, more than a decade before this indictment was brought. Charging a jury on an indictment laid only 21 months after the offense charged, Baron Alderson declared (Queen v. Robins, 1 Cox C. C. 114 (1844)):

> "It is monstrous to put a man on his trial after such a lapse of time. How can he account for his conduct so far back? If you accuse a man of a crime the next day, he may be enabled to bring forward his servants and family to say where he was and what he was about at the time; but if the charge be not preferred for a year or more, how can he clear himself? No man's life would be safe if such a prosecution were permitted."

In conclusion, therefore, the many facets of the case must be allowed to strike the mind in conjunction rather than disparately, for it is all one case. In asking this Court to affirm the judgment below, the Government is seeking to uphold an indictment and conviction that:—

(a) are based on strongly controverted testimony concerning events that took place 15 to 20 years ago:

(b) have rendered nugatory, and reached a result contrary to, carefully deliberated conclusions arrived at when the evidence was fresher;

(c) are barred by the statute of limitations unless the governing statutes be stretched to the breaking point and far beyond their settled judicial interpretation;

(d) are based on a retrial of a factual issue that had been thrice previously litigated between the parties, and cannot be sustained without undermining the basic and beneficial principles of res judicata and estoppel; and

(e) can be sustained only by reading out of the due process clause its protection against wearing out the accused "by a multitude of cases with accumulated trials" (Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U. S. at 328).

It is perhaps irrelevant to inquire what benefits the Government hopes will accrue if the charge against Bridges be now pressed home against him in the face of all these circumstances. But it is highly pertinent to inquire what the effect will be on the nature of the judicial process in America. In this case, there is ample reason to reverse the judgments of conviction under the applicable statutes and principles of law, without recourse to the Constitution. Nevertheless, we urge that > ". . . it not be overlooked that due process of law is not for the sole benefit of an accused. It is the best insurance for the Government itself against those blunders which leave lasting stains on a system of justice . . ." (Mr. Justice Jackson, dissenting, in Shaughnessy v. United States ex rel Mezei, 21 L. W. 4242, March 16, 1953)

For the reasons stated, it is respectfully submitted that the judgment of the court below should be reversed.

April, 1953.

TELFORD TAYLOR
New York, N. Y.

NORMAN LEONARD
San Francisco, Calif.

Counsel for Petitioners

Of Counsel

JOHN P. FRANK
New Haven, Conn.

GLADSTEIN, ANDERSEN & LEONARD
San Francisco, Calif.

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT, U. S.

Office - Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
APR 11 1953
HAROLD B. WILLEY, Clerk

In the

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1952

No. 548

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT,
and J. R. ROBERTSON,
Petitioners,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Respondent.

APPENDIX TO BRIEF FOR THE PETITIONERS

INDEX

PAGE

A. STATUTES

1. 18 U. S. C. 371 1
2. 18 U. S. C. 1015(a) 1
3. 8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 746(a) (5) 2
4. 8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 746(g) 2
5. 18 U. S. C. 3282 3
6. 18 U. S. C. 3287 3
7. Section 1108 of the Revenue Act of 1932, 47 Stat. 169, 288; Section 1110 of the Revenue Act of 1926, 44 Stat. 9, 114 5
8. 8 U. S. C. 738(e) 6
9. 8 U. S. C. 705 7
10. 8 U. S. C. 733; 8 U. S. C. 734 9

B. HOUSE AND SENATE REPORTS AND HEARINGS

1. Wartime Suspension Act of 1942; House of Representatives Report No. 2051, 77th Congress, 2nd Session; Senate Report No. 1544, 77th Congress, 2nd Session 12
2. Section 1108 of the Revenue Act of 1932, House of Representatives Report No. 1492, 72nd Congress, 1st Session 17
3. Hearings before Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives on H. R. 4916, 77th Congress, 1st Session 18
4. House of Representatives Report No. 16, 70th Congress, 1st Session, on S. 1397, the bill repealing the 1921 Suspension Act 20

PAGE

5. Senate Report No. 1592, 77th Congress, 2nd Session, on S. 2731, the bill suspending the running of the statute of limitations with respect to the anti-trust laws 21

6. House of Representatives Report No. 2200, and Senate Report No. 2031, 76th Congress, 3rd Session, on H. R. 9766, the bill to deport Harry Bridges notwithstanding any provision of law . . 22

C. CONGRESSIONAL DEBATE

1. 88 Cong. Rec. 4759-4760, 6160 on H. R. 6484, the Wartime Suspension Act of 1942 23

2. 61 Cong. Rec. 7060-7061, 7640 on H. R. 8298, the 1921 Suspension Act 24

3. 69 Cong. Rec. 473, 842 on S. 1397, the bill repealing the 1921 Suspension Act 26

D. ADMINISTRATIVE REGULATIONS

1. 8 Code Fed. Regs. Sec. 150.5 (Cum. Supp.)—Custody of arrested aliens 27

2. 8 Code Fed. Regs. Sec. 150.8 (Cum. Supp.)—Reopening hearings; departure in lieu of deportation; suspension of deportation 28

8 Code Fed. Regs. Sec. 90.3 (Cum. Supp.)—Board of Immigration Appeals; powers 29

8 Code Fed. Regs. Sec. 90.12 (Cum. Supp.)—Board of Immigration Appeals; reference of cases to the Attorney General 29

3. 8 Code Fed. Regs. Sec. 90.3 (1945 Supp.)—Board of Immigration Appeals; powers 29

PAGE

8 Code Fed. Regs. Sec. 90.12 (1945 Supp.)—Board of Immigration Appeals; reference of cases to Attorney General 31

4. 8 Code Fed. Regs. Sec. 352.1 (Cum. Supp.)—Attachment to Constitution and disposition toward United States.................. 31

8 Code Fed. Regs. Sec. 352.2 (Cum. Supp.)—Investigation as to attachment and attitude.... 31

8 Code Fed. Regs. Sec. 352.3 (Cum. Supp.)—Favorable attitude toward government of petitioner for naturalization for ten years........ 32

8 Code Fed. Regs. Sec. 370.8 (Cum. Supp.)—Preliminary naturalization examinations; facts to be ascertained; manner of conducting and uniformity; limitation 32

8 Code Fed. Regs. Sec. 373.1 (1944 Supp.)—Preliminary hearings under section 333 of the Nationality Act of 1940 33

8 Code Fed. Regs. 373.7 (Cum. Supp.)—Personal representation of Government at court hearings 35

E. COMPARISON OF THE CHARACTER OF THE GOVERNMENT'S EVIDENCE AND THE TIME TO WHICH IT RELATES IN THE THREE PROCEEDINGS 36

F. EVALUATION OF GOVERNMENT WITNESSES IN THE LANDIS-PERKINS PROCEEDING 38

G. EVALUATION OF GOVERNMENT WITNESSES IN THE SEARS-BIDDLE PROCEEDING 39

H. COMPARISON OF THE TESTIMONY IN THIS CASE DEALING WITH EVENTS BEFORE AND AFTER 1941. 41

A. STATUTES

1. Count one of the indictment is based on 18 U. S. C. 371 which provides:

> "If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States, . . . in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such persons do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both."

This statute is the same as Section 37 of the Criminal Code, 18 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 88, in effect at the time the alleged offenses were committed.

2. Count two of the indictment is based on 18 U. S. C. 1015(a) which provides:

> "Whoever knowingly makes any false statement under oath, in any case, proceeding, or matter relating to; or under, or by virtue of any law of the United States relating to naturalization, citizenship, or registry of aliens; * * *
>
> * * * * *
>
> Shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both."

Section 1015(a) of Title 18 (1948 ed.) repealed and superseded Section 346 (a)(1) of the Nationality Act of 1940, 8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 746 (a)(1) which provided:

> "(a) It is hereby made a felony for any alien or other person, whether an applicant for naturalization or citizenship, or otherwise, and whether an employee of the Government of the United States or not—

(1) Knowingly to make a false statement under oath, either orally or in writing, in any case, proceeding, or matter relating to, or under, or by virute of any law of the United States relating to naturalization or citizenship.'

3. Count three of the indictment is based on 8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 746 (a)(5) which provided:

"(a) It is hereby made a felony for any alien or other person, whether an applicant for naturalization or citizenship, or otherwise, and whether an employee of the Government of the United States or not—

(5) To encourage, aid, advise, or assist any person not entitled thereto to obtain, accept, or receive any * * * certificate of naturalization, or certificate of citizenship, or other documentary evidence of naturalization or of citizenship—

a. Knowing the same to have been procured by fraud; or

b. Knowing the same to have been procured by the use or means of any false name or false statement given or made with intent to procure the issuance of such * * * certificate of naturalization, or certificate of citizenship, or other documentary evidence of naturalization or citizenship * * *

* * * * *

(d) Any person violating any provision of subsection (a) of this section shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both."

4. Section (g) of 8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 746 in effect at the time the alleged offenses were committed provided that:

> "(g) No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any crime arising under the provisions of this Chapter unless the indictment is found or the information is filed within five years next after the commission of such crime."

On September 1, 1948, prior to the return of the indictment on May 25, 1949, the 1948 revision of Title 18, U. S. C., became effective. Section 21 of the Act revising Title 18 (June 25, 1948, 62 Stat. 683) provides:

> "The sections or parts thereof of the Revised Statutes or Statutes at Large enumerated in the following schedule are hereby repealed. Any rights or liabilities now existing under such sections or parts thereof shall not be affected by this repeal.

Among the sections so repealed were 18 U. S. C. 746(a)(1), 746(a)(5) and 746(g), supra.

5. 18 U. S. C. 3282 provides:

> "Except as otherwise expressly provided by law, no person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense, not capital, unless the indictment is found or the information is instituted within three years next after such offense shall have been committed."

6. 18 U. S. C. 3287 provides:

> "When the United States is at war the running of any statute of limitations applicable to any offense (1) involving fraud or attempted fraud against the United States or any agency thereof in any manner, whether by conspiracy or not, or (2) committed in connection with the acquisition, care, handling, custody, control or disposition of any real or personal property of the United States, or (3) committed in connection with the negotiation, procurement, award, performance, payment for, interim financing, cancelation, or other termination or settlement, of any contract, subcontract, or purchase order which is connected with or related to the prosecution of the war, or with any disposition of termination inventory by any war contractor or Government agency, shall be suspended until three years after the termination of hostilities as proclaimed by the President or by a concurrent resolution of Congress.

Definitions of terms in section 103 of Title 41 shall apply to similar terms used in this section."[1]

The Wartime Suspension of Limitation Act adopted language similar to that contained in a proviso added to the general three-year statute of limitations, R. S. 1044, by the Act of November 17, 1921, C. 124, 42 Stat. 220, which provided as follows:

---

[1] This section appeared in substantially the same form at 18 U. S. C. 590 (a) before the 1948 revision. The present Wartime Suspension Act as originally passed in 1942, 56 Stat. 747, read as follows:

> "That the running of any existing statute of limitations applicable to the offense, involving the defrauding or attempts to defraud the United States or any agency thereof, whether by conspiracy or not, and in any manner, and now indictable under any existing statutes, shall be suspended until June 30, 1945, or until such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution, or the President, may designate."

This Act was amended by the Contract Settlement Act of 1944, 58 Stat. 649, 667 and the Surplus Property Act of 1944, 58 Stat. 765, 781, which eliminated the phrase "now indictable under any existing statutes", added the clauses now numbered (2) and (3) of 18 U. S. C. 3287, and changed the suspension date from June 30, 1945, to three years after the termination of hostilities as proclaimed by the President or by a concurrent resolution of Congress.

No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense, not capital, except as provided in section 1046 [crimes under revenue laws or slave trade laws], unless the indictment is found, or the information is instituted, within three years next after such offense shall have been committed: Provided, however, That in offenses involving the defrauding or attempts to defraud the United States or any agency thereof, whether by conspiracy or not, and in any manner, and now indictable under any existing statutes, the period of limitations shall be six years. This Act shall apply to acts, offenses, or transactions where the existing statute of limitations has not yet fully run, but this proviso shall not apply to acts, offenses, or transactions which are already barred by the provisions of existing laws.[2]

7. Section 1108 of the Revenue Act of 1932, 47 Stat. 169, 288 amended the Revenue Act of 1926 and provided:

> "That no person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished, for any of the various offenses arising under the internal revenue laws of the United States unless the indictment is found or the information instituted within three years next after the commission of the offense, except that the period of limitation shall be six years—
>
> (1) for offenses involving the defrauding or attempting to defraud the United States or any agency thereof, whether by conspiracy or not, and in any manner,
>
> (2) for the offense of willfully attempting in any manner to evade or defeat any tax or the payment thereof, and

---

[2] The proviso was eliminated from the section by the Act of December 27, 1927, c. 6, 45 Stat. 51. The Section now appears, with slight changes in phraseology, as 18 U. S. C. 3282.

> (3) for the offense of willfully aiding or assisting in, or procuring, counseling, or advising, the preparation or presentation under, or in connection with any matter arising under, the internal revenue laws, of a false or fraudulent return, affidavit, claim, or document (whether or not such falsity or fraud is with the knowledge or consent of the person authorized or required to present such return, affidavit, claim, or document).
>
> For offenses arising under Section 37 of the Criminal Code, where the object of the conspiracy is to attempt in any manner to evade or defeat any tax or the payment thereof, the period of limitation shall also be six years. . . .

Section 1110 of the Revenue Act of 1926, 44 Stat. 9, 114 provided:

> "That no person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any of the various offenses arising under the internal revenue laws of the United States unless the indictment is found or the information instituted within three years next after the commission of the offense: Provided, that for offenses involving the defrauding or attempting to defraud the United States or any agency thereof, whether by conspiracy or not, and in any manner, the period of limitation shall be six years, but this proviso shall not apply to acts, offenses, or transactions which were barred by law at the time of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1924. . . .

8. The relevant provisions of 8 U. S. C. 738(e) upon which the revocation of petitioner's citizenship was based are:

> "When a person shall be convicted under this chapter of knowingly procuring naturalization in violation of law, the court in which such conviction is had shall thereupon revoke, set aside, and declare void the final order admitting such person to citizenship, and shall declare the certificate of naturalization of such person to be canceled. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred to the courts having jurisdiction of the trial of such offense to make such adjudication."

9. The relevant provisions of the Nationality Code, 8 U. S. C. 705, at the time Bridges was admitted to naturalization in 1945 were:

> "No person shall hereafter be naturalized as a citizen of the United States—
>
> (a) Who advises, advocates, or teaches, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization, association, society, or group that advises, advocates, or teaches opposition to all organized government; or
>
> (b) Who believes in, advises, advocates, or teaches, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization, association, society, or group that believes in, advises, advocates, or teaches—
>
> (1) the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law; or
>
> * * * * *
>
> (c) Who writes, publishes, or causes to be written or published, or who knowingly circulates, distributes, prints, or displays, or knowingly causes to be circulated, distributed, printed, published, or displayed, or who knowingly has in his possession for the purpose of circulation, distribution, publication, or display any written or printed matter advising, advocating, or teaching opposition to all organized government, or advising, advocating, or teaching—

(1) the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or all forms of law; or

* * * * *

(d) Who is a member of or affiliated with any organization, association, society, or group that writes, circulates, distributes, prints, publishes, or displays, or causes to be written, circulated, distributed, printed, published, or displayed, or that has in its possession for the purpose of circulation, distribution, publication, issue, or display, any written or printed matter of the character described in subdivision (c).

For the purpose of this section—

(1) the giving, loaning, or promising of money or anything of value to be used for the advising, advocacy or teaching of any doctrine above enumerated shall constitute the advising, advocacy, or teaching of such doctrine; and

(2) the giving, loaning, or promising of money or anything of value to any organization, association, society, or group of the character above described shall continue affiliation therewith; but nothing in this paragraph shall be taken as an exclusive definition of advising, advocacy, teaching or affiliation.

The provisions of this section shall be applicable to any applicant for naturalization who at any time within a period of ten years immediately preceding the filing of the petition for naturalization is, or has > been, found to be within any of the clauses enumerated in this section, notwithstanding that at the time petition is filed he may not be included in such classes."

10. The relevant provisions of the Nationality Code in force at the time Bridges applied for naturalization in 1945, after providing for a declaration of intention (8 U. S. C. 731) and a petition for naturalization (8 U. S. C. 732) were:

> 8 U. S. C. 733. Hearing of petitions; preliminary hearings
>
> (a) The Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner shall designate members of the Service to conduct preliminary hearings upon petitions for naturalization to any naturalization court and to make findings and recommendations thereon to such court. For such purposes any such designated examiner is hereby authorized to take testimony concerning any matter touching or in any way affecting the admissibility of any petitioner for naturalization, to subpoena witnesses, and to administer oaths, including the oath of the petitioner to the petitioner for naturalization and the oath of petitioner's witnesses.
>
> (b) The findings of any such designated examiner upon any such preliminary hearing shall be submitted to the court at the final hearing upon the petition with a recommendation that the petition be granted, or denied, or continued, with the reasons therefor. Such findings and recommendations shall be accompanied by duplicate lists containing the names of the petitioners, classified according to the character of the recommendations, and signed by the designated examiner. The judge to whom such findings and recommendations are submitted shall, if he approve such recommendations, enter a written order with such exceptions as the judge may deem proper, by subscribing his name to each such list when corrected to conform to his conclusions upon such recommendations. One of such lists shall thereafter be filed permanently of record in such court and the duplicate list shall be sent by the clerk of such court to the Commissioner.

8 U. S. C. 734. Same; final hearings

(a) Every final hearing upon a petition for naturalization shall be had in open court before a judge or judges thereof, and every final order which may be made upon such petition shall be under the hand of the court and entered in full upon a record kept for that purpose, and upon such final hearing of such petition the applicant; and, except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, the witnesses shall be examined under oath before the court and in the presence of the court.

(b) The requirement of subsection (a) of this section for the examination of the petitioner and witnesses under oath before the court and in the presence of the court shall not apply in any case where a designated examiner has conducted the preliminary hearing authorized by subsection (a) of section 733; except that the court may, in its discretion, and shall, upon demand of the petitioner, require the examination of the petitioner and the witnesses under oath before the court in the presence of the court.

(c) Except as otherwise specifically provided in this chapter, no final hearing shall be held on any petition for naturalization nor shall any person be naturalized nor shall any certificate of naturalization be issued by any court within thirty days after the filing of the petition for naturalization, nor within sixty days preceding the holding of any general election within the territorial jurisdiction of the naturalization court.

(d) The United States shall have the right to appear before any court in any naturalization proceedings for the purpose of cross-examining the petitioner and the witnesses produced in support of the petition concerning any matter touching or in any way affecting the petitioner's right to admission to citizenship, and shall have the right to call witnesses, produce evidence, and be heard in opposition to the granting of any petition in naturalization proceedings."

B. HOUSE AND SENATE REPORTS AND HEARINGS

1. The Wartime Suspension Act of 1942 was known in the 77th Congress, 2d Session as H. R. 6484 and was the subject of House of Representatives Report No. 2051 and Senate Report No. 1544. Both of these reports are here reproduced in toto:[3]

---

[3] H. R. 8298, which became 42 Stat. 220, the bill amending Section 1044 of the Revised Statutes in 1921, was the subject of House of Representatives Report No. 365, 67th Congress, 1st Session. Most of this report is included in the reports on the 1942 Act, the omitted portion being a legal opinion on the right of Congress to extend the statute of limitations.

House of Representatives Report No. 2051
77th Congress, 2d Session

SUSPENDING STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS FOR FRAUDS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES

Mr. McLaughlin, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following

REPORT

(To accompany H. R. 6484)

The Committeee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6484) to suspend during the present war the running of statutes of limitations applicable to certain offenses, after careful consideration, report the bill favorably to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The purpose of the proposed legislation is to suspend any existing statute of limitations applicable to offenses involving the defrauding or attempts to defraud the United States or any agency thereof, for the period of the present war. Contracting for the United States is done through its various agencies, including the departments and independent establishments and Government-owned and Government-controlled corporations, and frauds against all of these agencies are intended to be embraced by the bill.

During the World War many frauds committed against the Government were not discovered until the 3-year statute of limitations had almost expired, and as stated in the committee report hereinafter referred to, many of the alleged offenses were barred from prosecution. The general criminal statute of limitations (Rev. Stats., sec. 1044) was amended on November 17, 1921, extending the period to 6 years in respect to offenses involving frauds against the United States (42 Stat. 220, U. S. C., title 18, sec. 582). This provision was repealed by the act of December 27, 1927 (45 Stat. 51).

In connection with the World War legislation of this character the committee report (H. Rept. 365, 67th Cong.) stated the following:

> The Department of Justice has been engaged in the investigation and is now engaged in the investigation of various alleged offenses, consisting largely of frauds against the Government which are claimed to have occurred during the war with Germany and since its conclusion. Many of these alleged offenses grew out of the contractual relation of the Government with various persons and corporations engaged in the furnishing of military and naval supplies of various kinds. Many of these transactions require the most minute investigation in order to ascertain the exact facts, and in every case a considerable period must elapse before such facts may be gathered from the files and other sources that the Department may know whether prosecutions are justified or not. In many cases months, and perhaps considerable longer periods, will be required for such investigations.
>
> Under the existing statute of limitations, above quoted, many of these alleged crimes are already barred, and in all such cases under the law no prosecutions can be had if any might be thought advisable. * * *

During normal times the present 3-year statute of limitations may afford the Department of Justice sufficient time to investigate, discover, and gather evidence to prosecute frauds against the Government. The United States, however, is engaged in a gigantic war program. Huge sums of money are being expended for materials and equipment in order to carry on the war.

successfully. Although steps have been taken to prevent and to prosecute frauds against the Government, it is recognized that in the varied dealings opportunities will no doubt be presented for unscrupulous persons to defraud the Government or some agency. These frauds may be difficult to discover as is often true of this type of offense and many of them may not come to light for some time to come. The law-enforcement branch of the Government is also busily engaged in its many duties, including the enforcement of the espionage, sabotage, and other laws.

Your committee is of the opinion that action should be taken at this time to extend the limitations statute so that frauds may be discovered and punished even after the termination of the present conflict, and to insure that the limitations statute will not operate, under the stress of present-day events, for the protection of those who would defraud or attempt to defraud the United States.

The proposed measure has been cleared with the Legislative Committee of the Department of Justice and with the Bureau of the Budget.

Calendar No. 1593

Senate Report No. 1544, 77th Congress, 2d Session

SUSPENDING DURING THE PRESENT WAR, THE RUNNING OF THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS APPLICABLE TO CERTAIN OFFENSES.

July 13, 1942.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Burton, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following

REPORT

(To accompany H. R. 6484)

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6484) to suspend during the present war the running of the statutes of limitations applicable to certain offenses, having considered the same, report the bill favorably to the Senate, with an amendment, with the recommendation that the bill, as amended, do pass. The amendment follows:

Page 1 line 7, strike out all after the word "suspended", and in line 8, strike out the following: "of the present war and for six months thereafter.", and insert in lieu thereof, "until June 30, 1945, or until such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution, or the President, may designate."

The purpose of the proposed legislation is to suspend any existing statutes of limitations applicable to offenses involving the defrauding or attempts to defraud the United States or any agency thereof, for the period of the present war. Contracting for the United States is done through its various agencies, including the departments and independent establishments and Government-owned and Government-controlled corporations, and frauds against all of these agencies are intended to be embraced by the bill.

During the World War many frauds committed against the Government were not discovered until the 3-year statute of limitations had almost expired, and as stated in the committee report hereinafter referred to, many of the alleged offenses were barred from prosecution. The general criminal statute of limitations (Rev. Stats., sec. 1044) was amended on November 17, 1921, extending the period to 6 years in respect to offenses involving frauds against the United States (42 Stat.

220, U. S. C., title 18, sec. 582). This provision was repealed by the act of December 27, 1927 (45 Stat. 51).

In connection with the World War legislation of this character the committee report (H. Rept. 365, 67th Cong.), stated the following:

> The Department of Justice has been engaged in the investigation and is now engaged in the investigation of various alleged offenses, consisting largely of frauds against the Government which are claimed to have occurred during the war with Germany and since its conclusion. Many of these alleged offenses grew out of the contractual relation of the Government with various persons and corporations engaged in the furnishing of military and naval supplies of various kinds. Many of these transactions require the most minute investigation in order to ascertain the exact facts, and in every case a considerable period must elapse before such facts may be gathered from the files and other sources that the Department may know whether prosecutions are justified or not. In many cases months, and perhaps considerably longer periods, will be required for such investigations.
>
> Under the existing statute of limitations, above quoted, many of these alleged crimes are already barred, and in all such cases under the law no prosecutions can be had if any might be thought advisable. * * *.

During normal times the present 3-year statute of limitations may afford the Department of Justice sufficient time to investigate, discover, and gather evidence to prosecute frauds against the Government. The United States, however, is engaged in a gigantic war program. Huge sums of money are being expended for materials and equipment in order to carry on the war successfully. Although steps have been taken to prevent and to prosecute frauds against the Government, it is recognized that in the varied dealings opportunities will no doubt be presented for unscrupulous persons to defraud the Government or some agency. These frauds may be difficult to discover as is often true of this type of offense and many of them may not come to light for some time to come. The law-enforcement branch of the Government is also busily engaged in its many duties, including the enforcement of the espionage, sabotage, and other laws.

Your committee is of the opinion that action should be taken at this time to extend the limitations statute so that frauds may be discovered and punished even after the termination of the present conflict, and to insure that the limitations statute will not operate, under stress of the present-day events, for the protection of those who would defraud or attempt to defraud the United States.

The proposed measure has been cleared with the legislative committee of the Department of Justice and with the Bureau of the Budget.

2. Section 1108 of the Revenue Act of 1932, 47 Stat. 169, 288 is discussed at p. 29 of House of Representatives Report No. 1492, 72d Cong., 1st Sess. as follows (at p. 29):

> "Amendment No. 264: Under existing law, the limitation on prosecutions for offenses arising under the internal revenue laws is three years, except that in the case of offenses involving the defrauding or attempting to defraud the United States the period is six years. The Supreme Court has recently held that under existing law the offense of attempting to defeat and evade income taxes does not necessarily involve the defrauding or attempting to defraud the United States, fraud not being an essential ingredient of such offense, and that therefore the 13-year limitation period is applicable instead of the 6-year limitation period. This amendment prescribes > a 6-year period in the case of the offense of willfully attempting in any manner to evade or defeat any income tax or the payment thereof on the offense of willfully aiding or assisting in the preparation or presentation of false claims, documents, or returns. A 6-year period is also prescribed in the case of conspiracy to attempt in any manner to evade or defeat any tax or the payment thereof. The 6-year period is made to apply as well to these offenses when committed by officers of the United States."

3. H. R. 6484, the Wartime Suspension Act was passed on August 24, 1942 by the 77th Cong., 2d Sess. In the 77th Cong., 1st Sess., H. R. 4916, a bill to suspend the running of the statute of limitations during wartime for any offense punishable under the laws of the United States, was introduced and hearings were held on November 26, 1941 by a subcommittee of the House of Representatives Committee on the Judiciary. The bill did not pass the House of Representatives.

Alexander Holtzoff, a special assistant to the Attorney General, appeared before the subcommittee representing the Department of Justice and recommended that the bill not be passed, since in his opinion, the emergency did not constitute a valid ground for repealing the Statute of Limitations on all crimes. At page 6 of the printed report of the hearings he says:

> ". . . Now, it is a fact that there is one type of crime as to which it might be desirable to extend the statute of limitations, and that is frauds against the Government. I think it would be very desirable if a bill such as was passed in 1921 were enacted at this time, namely, to extend the statute of limitations on crimes involving fraud against the Government, because that is really a matter which might be > affected by the emergency, but I do not feel that we can say properly that the emergency conditions require the suspension of the statute of limitations on all crimes. . . . It would seem reasonable that the statute of limitations should be extended as to frauds against the Government, not indefinitely, but for some period of time. I think some period of time should be set, and if the 1921 act were reenacted, I think it would be a very helpful addition to our statute law. I suggest that the members of the Committee might care to consider amending this bill so as to embody in it the provisions that were contained in the 1920 (misprint, should read 1921) act."

Attached to the Transcript of Hearings is a letter from Attorney General Biddle to Congressman Sumners, Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary dated November 29, 1941. The letter discusses H. R. 4916 and states as follows (at p. 8 of Hearings):

> "I am not aware of any reason why the existence of a state of war or a national emergency requires the extension of the statute of limitations in criminal cases other than those involving frauds against the United States.
>
> It should be observed, however, that during the World War many frauds committed against the Government were not discovered until the 3-year statute of limitations then in effect had almost expired. As a result, the general criminal statute of limitations (Rev. Stats., sec. 1044) was amended on November 17, 1921, by adding thereto a provision enlarging the statute of limitations to a period of 6 years in respect to offenses involving frauds against the United States (42 Stat. 220, U. S. C., title 18, sec. 582). This provision was repealed by the act of December 27, 1927 (45 Stat. 51). If the objective of the measure under consid> eration is to meet a situation similar to that mentioned above, it is suggested that the bill be amended either by enlarging the statute of limitations to a period of 6 years in respect to offenses involving frauds against the United States, as was done in 1921 by the Act of November 17, 1921, or by providing that in the case of fraud against the United States, the statute of limitations shall not begin to run until the fraud is discovered. A somewhat similar provision is found in the existing law relating to the offense of concealment of assets of a bankrupt estate (U. S. C., title II, sec. 52(d)).

>
> In view of the foregoing considerations, I am unable to recommend the enactment of the bill in its present form."

4. The bill repealing the 1921 Suspension Act was known in the 70th Congress, 1st Session, as S. 1397 and is the subject of House of Representatives Report No. 16, 70th Cong., 1st Sess. This report stated that the effect of the bill would be to return to the pre-1921 situation and that:

> "In 1921 the Attorney General represented that he was desirous of having further time to investigate alleged war frauds, and that owing to the nature of the investigations the statute of limitations might run before it would be possible to obtain indictments, and he therefore requested that the period of the statute of limitations applicable to conspiracy to defraud the Government of the United States should be extended from three years to six years. The Congress complied with the request and the limitation was extended from three to six years as to that particular class of offenses.
>
> The reasons for the above change have ceased to exist; that is, the Department of Justice announced > some time ago that it did not propose to attempt any further prosecution of offenses of that character, that is to say, offenses giving rise to the statute. Moreover, the whole period of six years has now run against all offenses of that character and there is no longer any occasion for a six-year statute."

5. The law (56 Stat. 781) passed by the 77th Congress, 2nd Session which suspended until June 30, 1945 the running of the statute of limitations with respect to the anti-trust laws is the subject of Senate Report No. 1592, 77th Cong., 2nd Sess. Page 1 of this report states:

> "This committee had previously reported favorably the bill (H. R. 6848), to suspend the running of the statute of limitations applicable to frauds against the United States, which bill has been enacted into law, approved by the President and is Public Law No. 706. This bill (S. 2731) will accomplish the same purpose as to violations of the anti-trust laws, both civil and criminal."

Attached to this report is a letter from Secretaries Stimson, Forrestal and Biddle dated August 18, 1942 to the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary which stated that they were submitting a bill similar to H. R. 6848, the bill "which suspends the running of the statute of limitations applicable to frauds against the United States." They further stated that S. 2731 is "identical to H. R. 6484, except that, in lieu of providing for suspension of the statute of limitations with respect to frauds against the Government, the proposed bill provides for suspension of the statute of limitations in connection with anti-trust suits—a subject matter not covered by H. R. 6484".[4]

---

[4] The House of Representatives report on S. 2731, H. R. Rep. No. 2480, 77th Cong., 2nd Sess., is the same as the Senate report.

6. A bill known as H. R. 9766 was introduced in the 76th Cong., 3d Sess. This bill provided that the Attorney General take into custody and forthwith deport Harry Bridges notwithstanding any provision of law. The House report on this bill is known as House of Representatives Report No. 2200, 76th Cong., 3d Sess. This bill passed the House of Representatives on June 13, 1940.

The bill was amended in Committee by the Senate by striking out the entire bill and substituting for it a bill directing the Attorney General to investigate Mr. Bridges, and if the investigation warranted, move to have Mr. Bridges deported in the manner provided by law. The Senate Committee report is Senate Report No. 2031, 76th Cong., 3d Sess. and is dated August 21, 1940.

The Senate report discusses the prior administrative hearings before Mr. Landis and concludes that these hearings were thorough and exhaustive and one in which the Government fully presented its case. The report points out that the Landis hearings lasted nine weeks, and consisted of 7724 pages of testimony and 274 exhibits; that the Government called 32 witnesses and, at P. 3, "The charge of indifference upon the part of Government employees is fully negatived by the severe castigation to which they were subjected in the findings of the Trial Examiner as to the extra-legal methods used by them in the procurement of evidence."

Attached to the report is a letter dated June 18, 1940 from the then Attorney General, Robert H. Jackson to Senator Russell, Chairman of the Committee on Immigration. This letter was in reply to a letter from Senator Russell requesting the Department of Justice's views on H. R. 9766. The Attorney General called for the bill's rejection and speaking of previous adjudications concerning Bridges said, at P. 9,

> "The extraordinary character of the bill upon its face is even more impressive viewed against its background. This same alien has been accused, investigated, and tried at great length, and judgment has been rendered that he had not been proved guilty of the charges made against him. By this bill the United States would deny faith and credit to its own duly conducted legal proceedings."

C. CONGRESSIONAL DEBATE

1. The debate on H. R. 6484, the Wartime Suspension Act of 1942, in the 77th Cong., 2d Sess. is found in 88 Cong. Rec. Senator Burton reporting the bill to the Senate says (at 88 Cong. Rec. 6160):

> "Mr. President, before the bill is passed I think I should state briefly that during the last war a number of frauds on the United States were not discovered until the statutes of limitations had about run. Therefore, it became clear that it would be advisable to suspend the running of these statutes of limitations in fraud cases, at least until June 30, 1945, or until such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution, or the President, might designate. It is for that reason that the bill has been passed by the House and is presented to the Senate. I ask that it be passed."

In the House debate, Congresswoman Rankin urged that H. R. 4916, the bill suspending the statute of limitations for all offenses during wartime, which she had introduced a year before, be passed instead of this measure and she describes the 1921 Act and this act as follows (at 88 Cong. Rec. 4759-4760):

> "No doubt exists as to the power of Congress to enact this legislation. Shortly after the last World War, Congress discovered that because of circumstances very similar to those now in existence, a 3-year statute of limitations permitted numerous offenders to escape punishment. In order to preserve the right to prosecute wartime frauds to the fullest extent possible, Congress at that time extended the period of the statute of limitations on frauds against the United States from 3 to 6 years (42 Stat. 220). . . .
>
> The present bill (H. R. 6484) limits the offenses to those involving the defrauding or attempt to defraud the United States or any agency thereof, whether by conspiracy or not, and in any manner, and now indictable under any existing statutes.
>
> May I suggest that the all-inclusive statement is more desirable at this time."

2. The Congressional debate on H. R. 8298, the 1921 Suspension Act, in the 67th Congress, 1st Session, is found in 61 Cong. Rec.

(a) House of Representatives, 61 Cong. Rec. 7060-7061.

> "P. 7060—Mr. Graham—This simply extends the limitation as to crimes against the United States for three years, so that from now on the limitation on crimes committed against the United States such as are defined in this act will be six years instead of three. It extends to no other kinds of crime. Those crimes are described in the proviso as 'offenses involving the defrauding or attempts to defraud the United States or any agency thereof, whether by conspiracy or not, and in any manner, and now indictable under any existing statutes', so that it will be seen that this bill deals with fraud largely.

* * * * *

P. 7061—Mr. Graham. . . . Many of the frauds which were committed in the closing up of war contracts occurred after the end of the war and may yet be prosecuted by the Department of Justice.

Mr. Tilson. . . . Suppose the Shipping Board, or any other large enterprise of the war, may find there has been a gross offense against the Government, there will be no remedy?

Mr. Graham—It is too late. During the period of the war, we will say, somebody made a fraudulent contract and robbed the Government of millions of dollars. I want to say to the gentleman, frankly, he can not be prosecuted. The statute of limitations will run against them and they are out. There are some few that can be reached by this, and in order to give the Department of Justice a little bit of a show to reach some of them that perhaps could be reached we desire to pass this legislation and give them a chance. . . . "

(b) Senate, 61 Cong. Rec. 7640.

"Mr. LaFollette: Mr. President, I sincerely hope that this bill will pass. . . .

I have been informed . . . that there are more than 2,000 cases connected with the Shipping Board where prosecutions would have been brought if the statute of limitations had not run against those offenses on last Saturday. . . . I repeat that I am informed that there are some 2,000 cases within the Shipping Board's organization where, upon the record, as shown by investigation, the parties were subject to prosecution under the section which this bill proposes to amend, and that the statute of limitations as to those cases expired on Saturday the 11th day of November.

* * * * *

Mr. Nelson . . .

I do not think there are as many cases of this nature as the Senator from Wisconsin has intimated. There may be a few. Most of the frauds will consist of attempts upon the part of men who have contracts pending, and are trying to settle them, to impose upon the Government by fraudulent practices; and I think most of the cases involved are cases that will be within this law if we pass it."

3. The Congressional debate on S. 1397, the bill repealing the 1921 Suspension Act, in the 70th Congress, 1st Session, is found at 69 Cong. Rec.

Senator Walsh introduced the bill in the Senate, and stated (69 Cong. Rec. 473):

> ". . . It will be recalled that prior to the year 1921 the statute of limitations as to all offenses against the United States not capital in character was three years. At that time the Attorney General represented that he was desirous of having further time to investigate alleged war frauds, that the facts were intricate and involved, and that possibly the statute of limitations might run before it would be possible to obtain indictments. He asked that the period of the statute of limitations applicable to conspiracies to defraud the Government of the United States should be extended from three years to six years. The Congress promptly responded and extended to six years the period of the statute as to that particular class of offenses.
>
> It is not purposed by the department, as announced some time ago, to attempt any further > prosecutions of offenses of that character; that is to say, offenses giving rise to the statute. Moreover, the whole period of six years has now run against all offenses of that character and there is no longer any occasion for a six-year statute."

In the House the bill was introduced by Mr. LaGuardia. In describing the bill he stated (69 Cong. Rec. 842): ". . . That amendment (the 1921 Suspension Act) extended the time of the period of limitation and was intended to apply only to war frauds from three years to six years". . . . "The period of six years with reference to war cases has now passed. The war frauds are cleaned up by this time" . . . "If anyone has defrauded the Government in cases arising out of the war, if he has not already been indicted, there is not much chance of indicting him now".

In answer to an objection by Congressman Schafer that the amendment would prevent prosecution of certain persons involved in the Tea Pot Dome case where Mr. Schafer claimed that the conspiracy ran until 1924, and its purpose was to loot alien property, Mr. LaGuardia stated: "I do not believe the alien property cases come within the scope of the 1921 amendment".

D. ADMINISTRATIVE REGULATIONS

1. At the time of Bridges' warrant of arrest in the 2nd deportation action on February 12, 1941, the following regulations, among others, of the Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Department of Justice were in force:

> Sec. 150.5 Custody of arrested aliens—
>
> (a) Release on bond or personal recognizance. The amount of bond under which any alien may be > released will be indicated in the warrant of arrest. When the officer in charge is satisfied that a bond in a lessor amount than that stated in the warrant will insure the alien's appearance when wanted, or that the alien may safely be released on his personal recognizance, or paroled to a responsible individual or organization, he is authorized, except as hereinafter provided, to release the alien on bond in an amount less than that set in the warrant but not less than $500, or upon the alien's personal recognizance, or upon parole to a responsible individual or organization, without first securing the approval of the Central Office. . . .[5] (8 Code Fed. Regs. Cum. Supp.)

2. At the time of the decision in Bridges v. Wixon, June 18, 1945, the regulations listed above were still in force, with minor changes, as well as these other pertinent regulations:

> Sec. 150.8 Reopening hearings; departure in lieu of deportation; suspension of deportation—(a) Reopening the hearing. At any time prior to the forwarding of the record of hearing to the Central Office, the officer in charge of the district may direct that a case be reopened for proper cause; and at any time prior to submission of the record to the Board of Immigration Appeals, the Central Office may direct a reopening

---

[5] Amended effective April 25, 1944 to read as follows: Sec. 150.5 Custody of arrested aliens—(a). Release on bond or personal recognizance. An alien arrested in deportation proceedings may, pending final disposition of his case and in the discretion of the officer in charge of the office having custody of the alien, be released under bond, or on his own personal recognizance, or on parole, unless specific instructions to the contrary covering individual aliens or classes of aliens shall have been issued by the Central Office. When release is directed by the officer in charge of the office having custody of the alien under conditions other than those stated in the warrant of arrest, such officer shall make immediate report thereof in writing to the Central Office giving the reasons for the action taken. . . . (8 Code Fed. Regs. 1944 Supp.)

thereof for proper cause. After the record has been submitted to the Board of Immigration Appeals, the case may only be reopened upon direction of the Board of Immigration Appeals. Requests by aliens, or their representatives, for a reopening of a hearing must be in writing and set forth the grounds for the application. . . . (8 Code Fed. Regs. Cum. Supp.)

Sec. 90.3 Board of Immigration Appeals; powers. (a) Subject to the provisions of Sec. 90.12, the Board of Immigration Appeals in behalf of the Attorney General shall have authority:

(1) To issue orders of deportation after proceedings in accordance with law and regulations; to order the cancellation of warrants of arrest issued in such proceedings; and in connection therewith to exercise such of the discretion conferred upon the Attorney General by law as is appropriate to the disposition of deportation proceedings; . . . (8 Code Fed. Regs. Cum. Supp.)

Sec. 90.12 Board of Immigration Appeals; reference of cases to the Attorney General. In any case in which a dissent has been recorded; in any case in which the Board shall certify that a question of difficulty is involved; in any case in which the Board orders the suspension of deportation pursuant to the provisions of section 19(c) of the Immigration Act of 1917, as amended, or in any case in which the Attorney General so directs, the Board of Immigration Appeals shall refer the case to the Attorney General for review of the Board's decision. . . . (8 Code Fed. Regs. Cum. Supp.)

3. On August 1, 1945, prior to Bridges' naturalization, Sections 90.3 and 90.12 of the Regulations were amended to read as follows (8 Code Fed. Regs. 1945 Supp.):

Sec. 90.3 Board of Immigration Appeals; powers. (a) Subject to the provisions of sec. 90.12, the Board of Immigration Appeals in behalf of the Attorney General shall have authority to consider and determine cases involving:

* * * * *

(2) Deportation proceedings, if the Commissioner has recommended deportation.

* * * * *

(b) If the Board's decision in any of the foregoing proceedings is contrary to the decision or recommendation of the Commissioner, on the Commissioner's request the case shall be certified to the Attorney General by the Board of Immigration Appeals for final decision. The Commissioner may in any case arising in exclusion, deportation or administrative fine proceedings, which in his opinion presents a problem of difficulty or policy, submit such cases to the Board of Immigration Appeals for decision and if review by the Attorney General in any such case is desired by the Commissioner, such case shall be submitted to the Board for consideration and certification to the Attorney General.

(c) The Board shall have jurisdiction to consider and decide any case or matter arising under the immigration and naturalization laws which the Attorney General specifically refers to the Board.

(d) In connection with the authority granted to the Board under this Section it shall be empowered to exercise such discretion and power conferred upon the Attorney General by law as is appropriate for the complete disposition of the proceeding, including but not limited to the power to grant permission to re-apply for admission after arrest and deportation or exclusion and deportation.

> Sec. 90.12—Board of Immigration Appeals; reference of cases to Attorney General. In any case in which a dissent has been recorded; in any case in which the Board shall certify that a question of difficulty is involved, or in any case in which the Attorney General so directs, the Board of Immigration Appeals shall refer the case to the Attorney General for review of the Board's decision. . . .

The other sections, set out above, Sec. 150.4(c), 150.5, and 150.8 remained in force unchanged, except for the change in Sec. 150.5 noted in footnote 5, supra.

4. The regulations of the Department of Justice in force during the time Bridges was processing his naturalization petition provided (8 Code Fed. Regs. Cum. Supp.):

> Sec. 352.1 Attachment to Constitution and disposition toward United States. No person shall acquire United States citizenship under the provisions of Chapter III of the Nationality Act of 1940 (except a person subject to the provisions of sections 313, 314, 317 (b), 322, or 323 thereof) unless such person shall have proved his attachment to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and his favorable disposition toward the good order and happiness of the United States for such period or periods as may be required in his particular case, and in the manner provided by Part 373.

> Sec. 352.2 Investigation as to attachment and attitude. The appropriate naturalization officer of the Service, before recommending any petitioner favorably to the court, shall satisfy himself that the petitioner has a fair knowledge of the fundamental principles of the Constitution of the United States, that he is, and has been during the required period or periods, attached thereto, and that it is his intention to assume the duties and responsibilities of citizenship of the United States. The action of such officer at any hearing upon the petition shall be based upon the testimony of the petitioner and his witnesses; the attitude, behavior, and conduct of the petitioner over the required period or periods; the naturalization officer's examination as prescribed by § 356.3 of this chapter, and his independent investigation, and such other evidence as may be available.

Sec. 352.3 Favorable attitude toward government of petitioner for naturalization for ten years. No person (except a person subject to the provisions of section 313, 314, 317 (b), 322, or 323 of the Nationality Act of 1940) may be naturalized who is found to be, or, at any time within the period of ten years immediately preceding the filing of his petition for naturalization, to have been, within any of the classes of persons described in section 305 of said Act. The appropriate naturalization officer of the Service, before recommending any petitioner favorably to the court, shall make a general inquiry to determine whether there is any evidence that the petitioner belongs to any of the classes described in section 305 of the said Act. If there is such evidence, the burden shall be upon the petitioner to refute it and to show that he is qualified for naturalization under the Nationality Act of 1940.

Sec. 370.8 Preliminary naturalization examinations; facts to be ascertained; manner of conducting and uniformity; limitation. Wherever practicable, preliminary examinations of applicants for naturalization and their witnesses shall be made in person and under oath. The applicant and each witness shall be interviewed separately and apart from one another. The purpose of such examinations shall be to obtain accurate and material information bearing upon the applicant's admissibility to citizenship and the qualifications of the witnesses. Both the applicant and the witnesses shall be carefully interrogated to determine whether the applicant has complied with the jurisdictional requirements of law; is mentally and morally qualified for citizenship; is attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and is well disposed to the good order and happiness of the United States. If the applicant has been arrested or charged with the violation of any law or ordinance, the facts shall be ascertained, including information as to whether conviction resulted and the nature and extent of any sentence which may have been imposed. Particular attention shall be given to ascertaining the applicant's complete marital history and the whereabouts of his or her spouse, if married, and minor children, if any. Questions to applicants and witnesses shall be repeated in different form and elaborated, if necessary, until the examining officer is satisfied that the person being interrogated fully understands them. The witnesses shall be questioned to develop not only their own credibility and competency but also the extent of their personal knowledge of the applicant's residence, good moral character, attachment to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and other qualifications for citizenship. Search shall be made of appropriate court and other records and other available sources of information in establishing the qualifications of the applicant and witnesses. The examination shall be limited to inquiry concerning the applicant's residence, good moral character, understanding of and attachment to the fundamental principles of the Constitution of the United States, and his other qualifications to become a naturalized citizen, and shall be uniform throughout the United States.

Sec. 373.1 Preliminary hearings under section 333 of the Nationality Act of 1940. (a) Preliminary hearings conducted under section 333 of the Nationality Act of 1940 shall be open to the public. Wherever possible, a member of the Service other than the person who conducted the preliminary examination, shall serve as designated examiner. Preliminary hearings shall be conducted in person by the designated examiner, or officer, and the petitioner and his witnesses shall be present. The petitioner and witness shall first be duly sworn. The designated examiner shall have before him at the preliminary hearings the record of the preliminary examination in each case. He shall not, however, be limited to the information contained in such record but may use any material evidence of data received from any other source; and he may present and examine other witnesses than those produced by the petitioner.

* * * * *

(c) At the time the designated examiner or officer conducts the preliminary hearing of each petitioner he shall enter on Form N-476 the petition number, petitioner's name, and, upon completion of the examination, fill in the symbols indicating his findings and a brief notation of the reasons for any unfavorable finding. This docket shall be signed by him and shall be made available to the court whenever desired, and after the final hearing shall be filed of record in the field office.

(d) The designated examiner or officer shall prepare in triplicate his findings and recommendations for presentation to the court. . . . (petitions either) granted . . . continued . . . (or) denied. These findings and recommendations shall be signed by the officer in attendance at the final hearing and submitted to the judge of the court at or before the final hearing. After the final hearing has been held, an order of court shall be prepared in triplicate . . . for petitions . . . granted . . . continued . . . (or) denied. The original order of court shall be presented for signature to the judge who presided at the final hearing. . . . (8 Code Fed. Regs. 1944 Supp.)

Sec. 373.7 Personal representation of Government at court hearings. Wherever possible, final naturalization hearings shall be attended personally by naturalization examiners or other members of the Service authorized by the Commissioner. Representatives appearing in behalf of the United States may cross-examine the petitioner and the witnesses produced in support of the petition, and may call other witnesses and produce evidence concerning any matter affecting the petitioner's right to naturalization. In cases where it appears to be necessary, the naturalization officer shall have made a stenographic report of the testimony given in any naturalization proceeding.

E. COMPARISON OF THE CHARACTER OF THE GOVERNMENT'S EVIDENCE AND THE TIME TO

FIRST HEARING

Charges: "After he entered the United States he became and now is a member of or affiliated with an organization, association, society or group that believes in, advises, advocates and teaches the overthrow by force and violence of the government of the United States" (named as the Communist Party in government's bill of particulars).

Name of Govt. Witness	Type of Testimony Given*	Years to Which Testimony Relates
Milner	a, c, d, e	1935–6
Leech	a	1936
Sapiro	d, e	1936–7
Humphreys	a	1935–Aug. 1938
Leppold	f	1935–7
Stark	e	1935
Allen	a	1937
Howard	b, e, f	1936–7
Detrich	b, c, d, e, f	1933–6
Engstrom	a	1936–7
Davis	a, d	1935–6
Castor	a	1936
Mrs. Castor	a	1936
Mrs. Davis	a	1934
Marcus	a	1934
Kessler	a	1934
Mickleson	a	1934
Zanazzi	a	1934
Penaat	e	1934
Bridges (called as witness by Gov't)	c	Dec. 1932-1938

---

*Abbreviations used in these columns are as follows: a—alleged attendance by Bridges at Communist meetings; b—alleged admission by Bridges of Communist membership; c—associations of Bridges with Communists; d—alleged Communistic remarks by Bridges; e—hearsay statements concerning Bridges; f—Opinion evidence of witness.

SECOND HEARING

Charges: "After entering the United States h member of or affiliated with an association, society or group that advises, advocates or teaches the o force or violence of the governm
United States" (named as the Conn in government's opening statements

Name of Govt. Witness	Type of Testimony Given*	Y Tes
Lundeberg	b	1
O'Neil	b, d	1
Barlow	d	1
Lovelace (Mr. & Mrs.)	c, f	1
McCuistion	c	1
Innis	c	1
Rushmore	d	1
Chase	d, e	1
Diner	a	1
Honig		1
Lawrence	a	1
Cannalonga	a	1
St. Clair	a, e	1
Wilmot	a, b, c	A
Thompson	a	1
Kelley	d	1
Bridges (Govt. introduced in evidence excerpts from Bridges' testimony at first proceeding)	c	1

VIDENCE AND THE TIME TO WHICH IT RELATES IN THE THREE PROCEEDINGS.

SECOND HEARING

er entering the United States he has been a mber of or affiliated with an organization, ciation, society or group that believes in, ses, advocates or teaches the overthrow by e or violence of the government of the ted States" (named as the Communist Party overnment's opening statements).

	Type of Testimony Given*	Years to Which Testimony Relates b	1935
	b, d	1937
	d	1935
Mrs.)	c, f	1935
	c	1936
	c	1936
	d	1935
	d, e	1937
	a	1934
	a	1936–7
	a	1934
	a	1936–7
	a, e	1935–6
	a, b, c	Apr. 1938
	a	1934–5
	d	1937
introduced erpts from ony at first	c	Dec. 1932–1938

THIS PROCEEDING

Charges: ". . . That said defendant, Harry Renton Bridges had in truth and in fact belonged to and been a member of the Communist Party in the United States from the year 1933 up to and including said 17th day of September, 1945".

Name of Govt. Witness	Type of Testimony Given*	Years to Which Testimony Relates
Shoemaker	a, b, c	Oct. 1933–1938
Schrimpf	a, c	1934–1935
Harris	b	1938
Ross	a, c, e	1934–1936
Johnson	a, c	1936, 1938
Hancock	a, c, e	1935
Krolek	a, c	1935–1937
Crouch	a, c, f	1934–1936 June 1938, 1941
Michener	a, c	1940, 1943
Wilson	a, c	1944–1945
Rathborne	a, c	1935–1945

F. EVALUATION OF GOVERNMENT WITNESSES IN THE LANDIS-PERKINS PROCEEDING

1. " . . . what is paraded as truth bears the unmistakable marks of falsehood". (In the Matter of Harry R. Bridges, Findings and Conclusions of the Trial Examiner, United States Printing Office, Washington, 1939, Letter of Transmittal, December 28, 1939).[6]

2. Milner:

   "A man who has no regard for an oath." (p. 17)

   "Milner can best be dismissed as a self-confessed liar, a man who has admittedly tried—once successfully—to make falsehood parade as truth". (p. 19)

3. Leech:

   "He lied in . . . in important respects". (p. 75)

4. Sapiro:

   " . . . truth matters little . . .", "inherent improbability". (p. 86)

5. Humphreys:

   " . . . a morass of prevarication". (Ibid., p. 89) "[a] tendency toward prevarication [that] was almost pathological." (p. 110)

6. Engstrom:

   " . . . left a convincing impression that he was not telling the truth". (p. 110)

"A weak-willed, characterless, individual . . . who in desperation was now pursuing hypocritical tactics". (p. 111)

7. Allen:

"sincerity . . . may well be doubted". (p. 96)

8. Ida Castor:

"Her testimony is both contradictory and meaningless". " . . . amazing contradictions and impossible situations". (p. 116)

G. EVALUATION OF GOVERNMENT WITNESSES IN THE SEARS-BIDDLE PROCEEDING

1. "Diner is not an impressive witness. His story . . . is not convincing". (In the Matter of Harry Renton Bridges, Immigration and Naturalization Service, Department of Justice, File No. 55973/217, Memorandum of Decision, September 26, 1941 (United States Government Printing Office, 1941), p. 140)

2. ". . . the testimony of Cannalonga is without value". (Ibid., p. 152)

3. St. Clair:

   "I am not impressed by it (his testimony . . . inherently improbable . . . violent bias". (Ibid., p. 154)

4. Wilmot:

   "Indefinite . . . self-contradictory". (Ibid., p. 155)

5. "I do not credit the testimony of McQuiston and Innes . . ." (Ibid., p. 132)

6. "I do not consider the testimony of Rushmore as establishing Bridges' membership in or affiliation with the Communist Party". (Ibid., p. 133)

7. "I find that the testimony of Chase and Horn falls short of establishing . . . Bridges' membership in the Communist Party". (Ibid., p. 137)

8. "The Presiding Inspector rejected the testimony of numerous witnesses presented to show membership. Independent analysis of their testimony convinces us that its rejection was more than justified". (In re Harry Renton Bridges before the Board of Immigration Appeals in Deportation Proceedings, January 3, 1942, pp. 5 to 6). Supporting this conclusion was an analysis of the testimony of the various witnesses, which was described, inter alia, in these terms: "Patent contradictions and extreme improbabilities", "complete unreliability", "tortuous convolutions", "worthless on its face", "that he lied freely is evident", "valueless", "strong elements of the improbable", "a mental state bordering on ego mania", "neither is worthy of credence", "another discredited witness". (Ibid.)

H. COMPARISION OF TESTIMONY IN THIS CASE DEALING WITH EVENTS BEFORE AND AFTER 1941.

(a) The court below held that evidence of participation in "Communist meetings" "would fall short of proof of actual Communist Party membership" (199 F. 2d at 836). It also held that evidence of expressions of opinion indicative of sympathy with the Communist point of view "would not in itself suffice to furnish the required proof of Communist Party membership" (199 F. 2d at 837). There is no evidence dealing with events after 1938 which does not fall into one of these two categories.

The only evidence which falls outside these categories was evidence respecting an application for membership claimed to have been made in 1933 (Tr. 835-853), testimony about Communist Party dues payments and activities from 1933 to 1938 (Tr. 873-875, 1236-1237, 2862-2869), testimony about Communist Party membership books in 1935 to 1938 (Tr. 869-871) and an admission claimed to have been made in 1938 (Tr. 1697-1704).[7]

---

[7] There was testimony that Bridges was in New York in 1936 at a meeting of the National Committee of the Communist Party; which "if credited" would tend to show Bridges' actual membership in the Communist Party. But the court below said: "Considerable doubt is thrown on this aspect of the case by reason of the fact that it was established, apparently beyond controversy, that at the very time the 1936 convention was being held, Bridges was in Stockton, California, making a speech at a union meeting" (199 F. 2d at 841).

(b) The following is the only testimony dealing with Bridges in the period after September, 1941:

1. There was testimony that in October of 1941 Bridges read a resolution on the floor of a CIO Convention in California "in favor of the Communist policy" of "all-out support for the administration program of aid to the democracies in the war effort" (Government memorandum on certiorari, p. 9).

The Court below said:

> "The danger of attempting to prove any person to be a Communist by evidence of his expression of views which happened to coincide with the program of the Communist Party, is too well understood to require comment here". (199 F. 2d at 838)

2. In November of 1943, Bridges attended what was said to be a Communist meeting during the course of a CIO Convention in Philadelphia, at which it was decided to replace a Communist by a non-Communist, as President of the California State CIO (Tr. 3360-5).

The testifying witness "knew" that the other persons present at this meeting were Communists because "I have at various times attended Party meetings with the individuals mentioned" (Tr. 3355). This was one of the witnesses who testified that non-Communists participated in "Communist Party meetings" (Tr. 3444; see also Tr. 1964-5).

The court below said:

> "The logical fallacy in concluding from this that Bridges must therefore have been a Party member is that it assumes the truth of that which is > sought to be proven. If, in fact, Bridges was not a Party member, his presence at such a meeting would mean no more than that he attended a meeting at which every other person present was a Party member" (199 F. 2d at 836).

3. Bridges attended a meeting "somewhere between 1942 and 1944" (Tr. 3649) with a group of his colleagues in the labor movement, and the Secretary of the Communist Party in California (Tr. 3651).

> "Q. I ask you, Mr. Wilson, was this meeting a labor meeting or a meeting of a group of the Communist Party to discuss a labor problem?
>
> * * * * *
>
> A. It was a group of Communists to discuss the labor problem (Tr. 3651-52).
>
> Q. Can you recall what was said by anyone of the persons who were present, Mr. Wilson?
>
> A. I can not" (Tr. 3650).

The court below recognized that such testimony "would fall short of proof of actual Communist Party membership . . . [and] would not in itself suffice to furnish the required proof of Communist Party membership" (199 F. 2d at 836-37).

4. There is testimony that after 1944 Bridges discussed the activities of what was said to be a Communist committee with Rathborne and Schneiderman (Government's memorandum on certiorari, page 10). Government witness Rathborne testified that Bridges was not a member of this committee (Tr. 5932).

5. There is testimony that, subsequent to September 17, 1945, Bridges, the other petitioners, their union publications, or persons with whom they were associated, expressed views on the Marshall Plan, the Civil War in China, the war in Korea, etc., which were claimed to "parallel" the Communist Party position. Such evidence was rejected by the court below, 199 F. 2d at 837, as not constituting proof of the charge made in the indictment.

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT U.S.

Office Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
APR 30 1953
HAROLD B. WILLEY, Clerk

In the

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1952

No. 548

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT,
and J. R. ROBERTSON,
Petitioners,
vs.
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Respondent.

REPLY BRIEF FOR THE PETITIONERS

Telford Taylor
New York, N. Y.

Norman Leonard
San Francisco, Calif.
Counsel for Petitioners

Of Counsel

John P. Frank
New Haven, Conn.

Gladstein, Andersen & Leonard
San Francisco, Calif.

INDEX

PAGE

I. THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS 1

A. The Wartime Suspension Act 1

B. The Five-Year Period of Limitations Does Not Apply to the Offenses Charged in Counts II and III 8

1. The language of Section 21 reflects much more than a change in style 9

2. The effect of a savings clause preserving "rights and liabilities" 10

3. Legislative history discloses an intent to make the new statute of limitations operative for all prosecutions commenced after its effective date 13

4. The authorities relied upon by the Government in no way discredit the decision in United States v. Obermeier or of the court below 15

II. RES JUDICATA, ESTOPPEL AND DUE PROCESS.... 17

A. The Secretary of Labor's Decision 17

B. Bridges v. Wixon 20

C. The Naturalization Decree 21

D. Due Process 25

III. CONCLUSION 26

CITATIONS

CASES: PAGE

Bindczyck v. Finucane, 342 U. S. 76 . . . . 23, 24
Braverman v. United States, 317 U. S. 49 . . . . 1, 7
~~Bridges, Harry, In~~ re Deportation Proceedings before the Attorney General (May 28, 1942) 19
Bridges v. United States, 199 F. 2d 845 (9th Cir.), pending in this Court Docket No. 549 6
Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135 . . . . 20, 21
British Linen Co. v. Drummond, 10 B. & C. 903 (K. B. 1830) 9
Bruner v. United States, 343 U. S. 112 . . . . 12, 13, 14, 15

Chitwood v. United States, 178 Fed. 442 (8th Cir.) 24
Cole v. Arkansas, 333 U. S. 196 7

De Jonge v. Oregon, 229 U. S. 353 7
De La Rama Steamship Co. v. United States, 334 U. S. 386 . . . . 10, 12, 13
Don v. Lippman, 5 Cl. & F. 1 (H. L. 1837) 8

Epstein v. Glucken, 233 N. Y. 490, 135 N. E. 861 . . 19

Great Northern Railway Co. v. United States, 208 U. S. 452 17

Harisiades v. Shaughnessy, 342 U. S. 580 . . . . . 19, 23, 25
Heikkila v. Barber, 345 U. S. 229 20
Hertz v. Woodman, 218 U. S. 205 17
Hiatt v. Hilliard, 180 F. 2d 453 (5th Cir.) 11
~~Hoiness~~ v. United States, 335 U. S. 297 17

PAGE

Knauer v. United States, 328 U. S. 654 . . . . 4, 24

Lovely v. United States, 175 F. 2d 312 (4th Cir.) . . 11

Marzani v. United States, 168 F. 2d 133 (D. C. Cir.) affirmed 335 U. S. 895, 336 U. S. 922 2

Pearson v. Williams, 202 U. S. 281 19

Quirk v. United States, 161 F. 2d 138 (8th Cir.) . . . 11

Rubens v. Ellis, 202 F. 2d 415 (5th Cir.) 24

Schwinn v. United States, 112 F. 2d 74 (9th Cir.) affirmed per curiam, 311 U. S. 616 3

Sohn v. Waterson, 17 Wall. 596 (U. S., 1873) . . . 13, 16

Spratt v. Spratt, 4 Pet. 393 (U. S., 1831) 23

Tutun v. United States, 270 U. S. 568 23

United States v. Atkins, 260 U. S. 220 20
United States v. Balt. & Ohio R. R. Co., 229 U. S. 244 19
United States v. Cohn, 270 U. S. 339 2
United States v. Gottfried, 165 F. 2d 360 (2d Cir.) . . 2
United States v. Kirby, 176 F. 2d 101 (2d Cir.) . . . 11
United States v. Lindsay, 202 F. 2d 239 (1st Cir.) . 14
United States v. McElvain, 272 U. S. 633 . . . . 1, 2, 7
United States v. Noveck, 271 U. S. 201 . . . . 1, 2, 3, 4
United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243 (2d Cir.) 4, 5, 8, 15
United States v. Oppenheimer, 242 U. S. 85 . . . . . . 11, 16
United States v. Scharton, 285 U. S. 518 . . . . 1, 3, 4
United States v. St. Louis, San Francisco & Texas Ry. Co., 270 U. S. 1 16
United States v. Tommasello, 160 F. 2d 348 (2d Cir.) 7

PAGE

United States v. Wildcat, 244 U. S. 111 20

United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. United States for the Use of Struthers Wells Co., 209 U. S. 306 16

Western Pacific R. R. Corp. v. Western Pacific R. R. Co., 197 F. 2d 994 (9th Cir.) reversed, 345 U. S. , decided April 6, 1953 24

Wilbur v. United States ex rel. Kadrie, 281 U. S. 206 ....19, 25

STATUTES

Act of August 13, 1946, 60 Stat. 1049 9

Act of June 25, 1948, Sec. 21, 62 Stat. 683 . . .8, 9,10, 11

Act of June 25, 1948, 62 Stat. 672 10

Act of June 25, 1948, 62 Stat. 1014 10

Act of August 4, 1949, 63 Stat. 495 10

Act of August 10, 1949, 63 Stat. 579 9

Act of June 27, 1952, 66 Stat. 166, 8 U. S. C 1101 5, 9, 15

Joint Resolution, November 4, 1939, 54 Stat. 4 9

1 U. S. C. 110 15

8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 746(a) 7, 13

8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 746(g) 8

MISCELLANEOUS

Sen. Rep. No. 1515, 81st Cong., 2nd Sess. 5, 23

Sen. Rep. No. 1137, 82nd Cong., 2nd Sess. 5

Harvard Studies in the Conflict of Laws, Vol. IV (1940) 8

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT,
and J. R. ROBERTSON,
Petitioners,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Respondent.

No. 548

REPLY BRIEF FOR THE PETITIONERS

I

THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

A. The Wartime Suspension Act.

The Government's entire brief on this point is bottomed on the erroneous and repeatedly rejected premise that because the indictment alleges falsehoods, it thereby charges crimes of which fraud is a statutory element within the ambit of the 1942 Wartime Suspension of Limitations Act. Apparently, the Government has absorbed nothing from United States v. Noveck, 271 U. S. 201, United States v. McElvain, 272 U. S. 633, United States v. Scharton, 285 U. S. 518 and Braverman v. United States, 317 U. S. 49, except a desperate itch to ignore them (as Braverman: not even cited in the Government's brief), reject them as erroneous (as McElvain, Gov. Br. 47-48), or attempt impossible distinctions (as Noveck, Gov. Br. 36-37).

Most significantly, our discussion (Pet. Br. 23-24, 27-29) of the consequences of re-enactment of the statutory language after, and with express Congressional awareness of, these decisions of this Court, is nowhere alluded to in the Government's brief, for the obvious reason that the Government is unable to formulate any effective reply.

We are obliged to reiterate that the Suspension Act is inapplicable to this indictment for two distinct and wholly independent reasons. First, because fraud is not an element of the crimes charged, within the rule laid down by this Court in the cases cited above. Second, because, even if fraud were such an element here, the indictment would still meet neither the requirement of "pecuniary" fraud specified in Marzani v. United States, 168 F. 2d 133 (D. C. Cir.), nor of fraud arising out of the war, as described in United States v. Gottfried, 165 F. 2d 360 (2d Cir.). We stress the separate and independent character of these requirements, neither of which this indictment meets, because the Government's brief at various points confusingly and erroneously implies or assumes that they are interdependent.[1]

Count II. As anticipated, the Government has indefatigably restated the argument, consistently rejected by this Court (Pet. Br. 41), that fraud must be regarded as an element of the offense charged in Count II because it is the purpose or consequence of the alleged false statement. Thus the Government declares: "To lie knowingly in a naturalization proceeding is to attempt to deceive the United States with respect to the grant of a very valuable right, namely, citizenship. . . . To attempt to gain such a benefit by deception clearly falls within the conventional notion of fraud" (Gov. Br. 30; see also 33).[2]

---

[1] See, e.g., page 35 of the Government's brief: "Petitioners assert that the type of fraud here involved, if it is fraud, is fraud in a secondary sense as that description was used in United States v. Cohn, 270 U. S. 339 (Pet. Br. 36)". This quotation occurs in the portion of the Government's brief dealing with fraud as an essential element of the crime charged, whereas our reference to the Cohn case (Pet. Br. 29-30, 36) is solely in connection with the separate and independent requirement that the fraud be pecuniary or connected with the war.

But on this reasoning, a falsehood told to deprive the Government of taxes justly due would equally be a fraud within the Suspension Act, whereas the Noveck and Scharton decisions held to the contrary. That the falsehoods there charged had a fraudulent purpose was deemed irrelevant, because the statutory crimes charged (perjury in Noveck, false income tax returns in Scharton) were punishable irrespective of the presence or absence of fraudulent purpose. Therefore, fraud was not an element of the crime, and neither the wording nor the purpose of the Suspension Act applied (Pet. Br. 20-26).

The very portion of the Noveck opinion (271 U. S. at 203) quoted by the Government (Gov. Br. 37) gives the key: ". . . the alleged purpose to defraud the United States is not an element of the crime defined in § 125, on which the indictment is based. That allegation does not affect the charge; it need not be proved and may be rejected as mere surplusage". So here "the alleged purpose to defraud" is not an element of the crime defined in Count II; an allegation of fraud would not affect the charge—indeed, Count

---

[2] The Government here cites Schwinn v. United States, 112 F. 2d 74 (9th Cir.), but omits to note that this Court, in affirming that decision per curiam, 311 U. S. 616, carefully refrained from approving the lower court's reasoning that the false statement there involved was fraudulent (Pet. Br. 38, footnote 34).

II does not in fact charge fraud (Tr. 6-7); such an allegation did not have to be—and in fact was not—proved; and it would have been surplusage.

No wonder the Government, albeit shyly, invites this Court (Gov. Br. 31, footnote 12) to overrule the Noveck case.[3] No wonder, in seeking to discredit the concededly square holding in United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243 (2d Cir.) that the Suspension Act does not apply to Count II (Gov. Br. 36), the Government attempts an utterly artificial limitation of the Noveck decision, unsupportable in the light of the subsequent Scharton case.[4]

The Government has endeavored (Gov. Br. 34) to draw from Knauer v. United States, 328 U. S. 654 an atmospheric inference that all false statements in naturalization proceedings are fraudulent. The effort is not only futile,[5] but in plain conflict with the contemporaneous and subsequent content of the naturalization laws. Thus the statutory provisions upon which Count III is based carefuly distinguished

---

[3] The dangerous consequences of this suggestion, set forth in our brief (pp. 42-48), are not dealt with in the Government's brief.

[4] At p. 37 of its brief, the Government states: "Thus the [Noveck] case may well stand for the proposition that the United States is not, under Section 125, necessarily the defrauded party since the statute governs perjury generally and perjury occurs in suits not involving the United States". But the interpretation thus suggested is itself destroyed by the Scharton case, wherein the falsehood was charged under the Revenue Laws, and the United States was therefore "necessarily the defrauded party" under the statute upon which the indictment was based.

[5] The Knauer case involved not a false statement of past fact, but the bona fides of the oath of allegiance (Pet. Br. 74-75). More important, the question there (which did not touch the Suspension Act) was whether the particular statement had a fraudulent purpose. This has nothing to do with the question whether the statute on which Count II is based requires intent to defraud as an essential element of the offense of making a false statement. As has been shown (Pet. Br. 34-37) it does not: it covers all false statements in naturalization proceedings regardless of the presence or absence of fraudulent intent.

(Pet. Br. 38; Appendix 2) between naturalization "procured by fraud" and "procured by the use or means of any false name or false statement".

So, too, the Act of June 27, 1952, 66 Stat. 166, 8 U. S. C. 1101, et seq. (the McCarran-Walter Act) changed the statutory "basis for judicial revocation of naturalization from fraud and illegal procurement to procurement by concealment of a material fact or by wilful misrepresentation" (Sen. Rep. No. 1137, 82nd Cong., 2nd Sess., p. 45). This change was made on the basis of a previous report by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary which concluded (Sen. Rep. No. 1515, 81st Cong., 2nd Sess., p. 769): ". . . that this language will clear up the conflicts that have arisen in cases involving revocation because of fraud or illegality, and that 'concealment of a material fact or . . . wilful misrepresentation' is more easily proved than is an allegation of fraud or illegality."

Thus, both at the time the offenses here were alleged to be committed, and subsequently, the statutory language and legislative history demolish the Government's contention that all falsehoods in naturalization proceedings are fraudulent. For this reason and the others set forth in our brief (pp. 19-48), the Obermeier case is right, the decision below is wrong, and Count II is clearly barred by the statute of limitations.

Count I. The Government's brief (pp. 44-50) is a labored effort to bring Count I within the Suspension Act even though Count II is barred. Of course, Count I is cast in the language of conspiracy to defraud (Tr. 2-6), but it charges nothing but the allegedly false statement by Bridges which is the subject of Count II, plus the usual allegations of conspiracy "with each other" and overt acts (the formal steps in the naturalization proceeding) to ground a conspiracy count.

The Government admits (Gov. Br. 46) that petitioners could have been charged with conspiracy to commit an offense (to wit, the false statement) instead of conspiracy to defraud, in which event, concededly, the applicability of the Suspension Act to Count I would depend on its application to Count II. But the Government cannot show that Count I in fact charges anything more than a conspiracy to commit this offense. The "defrauding" language is simply wrapped around the charge of conspiracy to commit an offense, and adds nothing; it merely lays bare the Government's design to pull Count I into the Suspension Act by using "fraud words" which are surplusage.[6]

Wriggle as they may, the Government cannot escape the conclusion that if fraud is not an element of the offense charged in Count II, it cannot be an element of the conspiracy charged in Count I. Indeed, in an unguarded passage of their memorandum on certiorari (p. 7) in the companion case (Bridges v. United States, pending, No. 549), the Government categorically declares: ". . . the illegality of the conspiracy is predicated on a contravention of the statutory mandate of the Nationality Act."

As for the authorities, the Government complains (Gov. Br. 47): "The principal difficulty with briefing this part of the case is that the answer seems so obvious." But we need not commiserate with the Government, for it immediately appears that they arrive at the "obvious" answer only by asking this Court (Gov. Br. 48) to reject United States v. McElvain, 272 U. S. 633,[7] and by totally ignoring Braverman v. United States, 317 U. S. 49, and our entire argument based on legislative history and Congressional re-enactment (Pet. Br. 27-29).

---

[6] The Government's feeble efforts (Gov. Br. 46) to claim that in Count I "The conspiracy to defraud was thus broader in terms than a mere conspiracy to make a false statement" is unsupported and illogical. Of course, Count I is broader than Count II because the elements of conspiracy (agreement and overt act) are added, but Count I requires only proof of conspiracy to make the false statement.

Count III. Here we have nothing to add to our brief[8] (pp. 38-39) other than to note that, once again, the Government (Gov. Br. 50-52) is clinging to the presence in the statute of the word "fraud", and overlooks that the Suspension Act requires not the mere word but that the offense embrace fraud as an essential element. Count III is cast in the language of fraud, but all that it in fact charges is that the petitioners Robertson and Schmidt assisted Bridges to obtain naturalization by means of allegedly false statement.

---

[7] The Government declares (Gov. Br. 48) that the opinion in the McElvain case "seems to assume, contrary to the fact, that the indictment was for a conspiracy to commit an offense rather than conspiracy to defraud." But this Court was under no such misapprehension in the McElvain case. The very first sentence of Mr. Justice Butler's opinion (272 U. S. at 636) declares that the indictment there in question was "for conspiracy to defraud the United States in respect of its internal revenues."

[8] As we pointed out in our brief, the statute on which Count III is based (8 U. S. C. 746 (a)(5)) includes both clause a, covering certificates procured by fraud, and clause b, covering certificates procured by means of a false statement. Here, as in Count I, the Government has utilized the statutory language of the fraud clause, while alleging facts which would support only an indictment under the false statement clause. Therefore, the crime of "assisting" charged in Count III is no more within the Suspension Act than is Count II. Cf. United States v. Tommasello, 160 F. 2d 348, 350-51 (2d Cir.).

The effort to ascribe independent false statements to Schmidt and Robertson (Gov. Br. 51) is not only directly contrary to the entire theory upon which the case was tried below (cf. De Jonge v. Oregon, 229 U. S. 353; Cole v. Arkansas, 333 U. S. 196), but is inconsistent with the Government's admission that it is Bridges' answers "which form the basis for this prosecution" (Gov. Br. 86).

B. The Five-Year Period of Limitations Does Not Apply to the Offenses Charged in Counts II and III.

In our brief we urged that as a result of the legislative history surrounding the 1948 revision of the Criminal Code, of well recognized principles with respect to repealers and savings clauses, and of well-established Congressional legislative practice, the five-year statute of limitations formerly contained in Section 746(g) of Title 8 cannot be deemed to be "saved" by Section 21 of the 1948 recodification of the Criminal Code. That was both the conclusion and reasoning of the Second Circuit in United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243 and of the court below (199 F. 2d 811, 819-820).

Despite its recognition that prior revisions have contained savings clauses which "in express language" saved periods of limitations, the Government contends that the marked departure from this legislative practice in Section 21 was "merely a change in style of draftsmanship" and should not be accorded the obvious weight which attaches to it. (Gov. Br. 54-57).

The Government has also emphasized the practical importance of a statute of limitations upon the exercise of a right or liability and has urged that even in the absence of express language dealing with limitations, a savings clause preserving "rights and liabilities" must be deemed to include it.[9]

---

[9] It is, of course, almost universally recognized that statutes of limitations are to be classified as "procedural". "It is established in English and Scotch law that the Statute of Limitations is procedural. The same may be said in general of American Statutes of Limitation." 4 Harvard Studies in the Conflict of Laws, 248 (1940). See also

1. The language of Section 21 reflects much more than a change in style.

The suggestion that styles in draftsmanship have changed radically in recent years is hardly borne out by even a hasty examination of recent savings clauses. Just last year, for example, in the McCarran-Walter Act (Act of June 27, 1952, c. 477, Sec. 405, 66 Stat. 166), the Congress was most careful to specify that

> "Nothing contained in this Act . . . . shall be construed . . . . to affect any prosecution, suit, action, or proceedings, civil or criminal, brought, or any status, condition, right in process of acquisition, act, thing, liability, obligation or matter, civil or criminal, done or existing at the time this Act shall take effect; but as to all such prosecutions, suits, actions, proceedings, statutes, conditions, rights, acts, things, liabilities, obligations, or matters the statutes or parts of statutes repealed by this Act are, unless otherwise specifically provided herein, hereby continued in force and effect."[10]

British Linen Co. v. Drummond, 10 B. & C. 903 (K. B. 1830); Don v. Lipmann, 5 Cl. & F. 1 (H. L. 1837).

Indeed, the Government has conceded (Gov. Br. 52) that "an individual has no vested right in any specific statute of limitations . . .".

[10] See also Joint Resolution, November 4, 1939, Section 19, 54 Stat. 4, ("offenses . . . may be prosecuted and punished, and suits and procedures . . . may be commenced and prosecuted in the same manner and with the same effect as if such joint resolutions had not been repealed"); Act of August 13, 1946, c. 959, section 25, 60 Stat. 1049, ("existing provisions of law authorizing suits . . . and governing the conduct or determination of such suits shall continue to apply to any case heretofore or hereafter instituted hereunder . . ."); Act of August 10, 1949, c. 412, section 12 (g), 63 Stat. 579, ("shall . . . have the same effect as if this Act had not been enacted").

Even in the recent codifications, Congress evidently did not believe that the new "style" of saving just rights and liabilities was adequate; for when it wished to be certain of saving "procedural matters" it did so explicitly.[11]

The limited language used in Section 21 cannot be explained on stylistic grounds. It obviously reflects a conscious and knowing use of restricted language by the Congress to which effect must be given by this Court.

2. The effect of a savings clause preserving "rights and liabilities".

The Government urges that since limitations have an important impact upon the exercise of rights or liabilities, the period of limitations must be preserved under a statute saving rights and liabilities. De La Rama Steamship Co.

The Act of June 25, 1948, c. 648, 62 Stat. 1014, passed on the same day as Section 21, provided in Section 4 that "Nothing contained herein shall be construed to prevent the prosecution, punishment, mitigation, or other action, . . . as to any offense made punishable by the Articles of War committed prior to the date of this Act by any person subject to military law . . ."

[11] In the statutes codifying Titles 3 and 14 there appear, not only the provisions saving rights and liabilities, but a specific sections as follows:

> "The provisions of title 3, 'The President', set out in section 1 of this Act, shall be construed as a continuation of existing law and no loss of rights, interruption of jurisdiction, nor prejudice to matters pending on the effective date of this Act shall result from its enactment" (Act of June 25, 1948, c. 644, Section 2, 62 Stat. 672).
>
> "All orders, rules, and regulations of the Coast Guard in effect under provisions of law superseded or amended by this Act shall, to the extent they would have been authorized under this Act, remain in force and effect as the regulations and orders under the provisions of this Act and shall be administered and enforced under this Act as nearly as may be until specifically repealed, amended, or revised" (Act of August 4, 1949, c. 393, Section 4, 63 Stat. 495).

v. United States, 334 U. S. 386, upon which reliance is placed in this connection, does not support such a proposition.[12]

Apart from the distinctions between the case at bar and De La Rama to which we have already adverted,[13] there are other compelling factors which demonstrate that that case is inapposite.

Initially, it must be noted that the applicable savings clause in De La Rama, in addition to preserving the repealed rights and liabilities under the War Risk Insurance Act, provided that "such statute shall be treated as remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper action . . . for the enforcement of such . . . . . liability."

The Court was not unaware of the fact that matters of "procedure" have direct and substantial effects upon "rights and liabilities", but it did not rest its decision on that basis. Rather, the Court relied upon the specific language of the savings clause above quoted and observed that the case demonstrated the importance "of saving the statute and not merely the liability." Id. at 339.

Section 21, of course, purports to preserve only "rights and liabilities."

Secondly in the De La Rama case the entire statute upon which the proceeding was based and out of which all of the rights and liabilities arose was repealed. There was not, as in the instant case, a mere recodification of the law which in no way changed the substantive provisions of the earlier statute.[14] [12] United States v. Oppenheimer, 242 U. S. 85, is also relied upon, but that case had nothing to do with a change in the period of limitations or with a savings clause.

---

[13] See Pet. Br. 51-52. Other cases relied upon by the Government can similarly be distinguished because the proceedings were sub judice at the time the law was changed or because a statute of limitations was in no way involved. E.g., Hiatt v. Hilliard, 180 F. 2d 453 (5th Cir.); Lovely v. United States, 175 F. 2d 312 (4th Cir.); United States v. Kirby, 176 F. 2d 101 (2d Cir.); Quirk v. United States, 161 F. 2d 138 (8th Cir.).

The opinion of this Court just last year in Bruner v. United States, 343 U. S. 112, points up this distinction between the De La Rama case and the instant proceeding. While the Bruner case was in litigation Congress amended the applicable statute to revoke the jurisdiction of district courts with respect to the matter there involved. This court held the amendment to be immediately effective and to apply to pending cases. The general savings clause was held inapplicable because no substantive rights or liabilities had been changed by the new legislation.

Thus in both the Bruner and De La Rama cases the same question was presented, i.e. whether the jurisdiction of a district court, with respect to a pending case, survived a repeal of the statute conferring jurisdiction. In both cases the "dollars-and-cents importance" of the question was presumably the same. The Bruner case held that jurisdiction did not survive because no substantative right or liability had been altered. The De La Rama case reached the opposite conclusion not because "jurisdiction" was itself "substantive," but because rights had been altered and the savings clause was worded in such a manner as to preserve the procedures formerly available for the enforcement of those rights.

---

[14] In the De La Rama case the government reversed the position it had taken in the courts below and did not urge that the district court had lost jurisdiction as a result of the repeal of the War Risk Insurance Act. It was impressed by the fact that the repeal went both to substantative and procedural matters and was not simply a change in jurisdictional matters. It summarized this argument as follows:

> ". . . this Court has apparently drawn a distinction in general terms between substantative and jurisdictional provisions of repealed statutes, holding that the general savings statute applies to substantive rights.
>
> On the other hand, no decision of this Court holds that the general savings statute fails to preserve the jurisdictional provisions of a repealed statute where those provisions are an intrinsic part of the repealed statute and form an integral part of the machinery for enforcing the substantive liabilities preserved by the general savings statute. If such a distinction between statutes which are jurisdictional only and statutes which not only contain jurisdictional provisions but also create substantive liabilities should be held to be valid . . . it would follow that, in this case, the district court's jurisdiction was preserved." (Gov. Br. 5, 6.)

The 1948 codification of the Criminal Code, insofar as here relevant, was directed only to a change in the period of limitations. It did not eliminate the false statement provisions of section 746(a) of Title 8, but merely moved them to Title 18. It is thus clear that the instant case is more comparable to the Bruner decision.

3. Legislative history discloses an intent to make the new statute of limitations operative for all prosecutions commenced after its effective date.

If a period of limiations has not yet expired, Congress certainly may shorten or lengthen the period even with respect to causes of action already existing. Whether a change in the period of limitations applies to causes of action which have already arisen depends upon the language of the Act and Congressional intent. Sohn v. Waterson, 17 Wall. 596 (U. S., 1873).

In private litigation there is always present a constitutional question since a "retroactive" application of a statute of limitations may be a deprivation of property without due process of law. Thus in Sohn, the Court refused to follow the clear language of the act and apply the new provisions retroactively because to do so would destroy the property rights there involved and would raise serious constitutional questions.

In the instant case there is no such reason for departing from the plain meaning of the statutes.[15]

In United States v. Lindsay, 202 F. 2d 239 (1st Cir.), decided just two months ago, Judges Magruder, Woodbury and Hartigan, made this distinction very clear. They applied a new statute of limitations to a civil cause of action already accrued in favor of the Government even though they thereby cut off its ability to proceed since Congress clearly could, without constitutional objection, cut off such a right completely.

Even apart from the unambiguous wording of the statutes here, it is clear that there was an intent to make the new period of limitations operative on the effective date of the codification for all prosecutions commenced thereafter.

It has already been pointed out (Pet. Br. 49, 50) that for at least the past seventy-five years, whenever Congress has sought to preserve the original period of limitations with respect to offenses already committed at the time of a change in the period, it has made express provision to that effect. The importance of this legislative pattern cannot be minimized. In Bruner v. United States, supra, the Court found an intent on the part of Congress to exclude pending cases from the district courts as a result of the fact that in 1898 in dealing with a similar problem Congress had specifically included pending cases whereas in 1951 a similar reservation was not made! In the instant case, Congress has specifically dealt with the applicability of a change in the period of limitations to outstanding causes of action on numerous occasions since 1874 and as recently as 1947. (Pet. Br. 49-50; Gov. Br. 54-56; 1 U. S. C. 110.) The reasoning of the Bruner case therefore becomes even more compelling.[16] [15] Although it would have been clearly proper for Congress to cut off the right to prosecute completely, it carefully avoided such a result in this case (Pet. Br. 51).

---

An intent to make the change from five years to three years is also implicit from the fact that the reviser noted that there was no reason for having a five year period with respect to naturalization crimes and a shorter period for more heinous ones. The presence of a cogent reason for a change in the period of limitations is also reason for applying the change to causes of action which have already accrued as well as to those arising in the future. Thus, the so-called McCarran-Walter Act, supra, enlarged the period of limitations with respect to naturalization and passport crimes from three years to ten years. Under its reasoning in this case, the government would continue to be bound by the three year period for all crimes committed before the effective date of that Act, despite the strong reasons advanced for the extension of that period. Whether or not that is the position of the government, it is the necessary result of their reasoning here.

4. The authorities relied upon by the Government in no way discredit the decision in United States v. Obermeier or of the court below.

Both the court below and the Second Circuit have carefully considered and unanimously rejected the position here taken by the government. In an effort to avoid this result the government has cited numerous opinions of this and other courts. It is submitted that none of them is here controlling.

---

[16] Supra, pp. 9-10; 14.

In United States v. Oppenheimer, 242 U. S. 85, the Court merely rejected the contention of the government that if an accused has successfully urged a plea in bar he has never been in jeopardy. Id. at 87. A decision based on any number of purely procedural matters may clearly become res judicata—the statute of limitations is no exception.

In United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. United States for the use of Struthers Wells Co., 209 U. S. 306 the very structure of the original and amending statutes demonstrated that Congress intended all of the provisions to apply prospectively. Of course, a demonstrable congressional intent[17] is of extreme importance in determining whether the new provisions apply to existing causes of action.

United States v. St. Louis, San Francisco & Texas Ry. Co., 270 U. S. 1, dealt with a civil claim wherein the period of limitations was reduced. No congressional intent with respect to its application could be found.[18] As already pointed out in Sohn v. Waterson, supra, to apply the statute retroactively could cut off some claims completely and would therefore have raised serious constitutional questions. Although the Court did not so state, it apparently refused to presume such an unconstitutional intent. The other alternatives were to apply it prospectively or to start the new period running on the date the new act became effective. Presumably unable to find any reasonable basis for taking this latter view (which was the construction urged by the government), the Court gave the statute a prospective application.

---

[17] Supra, pp. 14-15.

[18] "There is nothing in the language of Paragraph 3 of Section 16, or in any other provision of the Act, or in its history, which requires us to hold that the three year limitation applies, under any circumstances, to causes of action existing at the date of the Act." (Ibid., 270 U. S. 1, 3.)

Hoiness v. United States, 335 U. S. 297, wherein the Court stated that the "policy" of a particular provision requiring courts to disregard niceties of form had been preserved upon the enactment of the Judicial Code, was not a criminal proceeding, did not involve the statute of limitations, and was in litigation long prior to the adoption of the Judicial Code.

The government's handling of Great Northern Railway Co. v. United States, 208 U. S. 452, is surprising. It has here described (Gov. Br. 64) Great Northern as not confining the general savings clause to substantive matters. Yet just a few months ago in its brief to this Court in De La Rama, it stated (pp. 12-13) "In Great Northern Ry. Co. v. United States, . . . the Court held that the general savings statute did not preserve the procedures and remedies of the Elkins Act of 1903 after that Act had been amended by the Hepburn Act of 1906." Although the position of the government may have changed in these months, the Great Northern case must still be given the interpretation placed on it by the Second Circuit in Obermeier, supra, and, indeed, by this Court in Hertz v. Woodman, 218 U. S. 205.

II

RES JUDICATA, ESTOPPEL AND DUE PROCESS

A. The Secretary of Labor's Decision

The Government concedes (Gov. Br. 78) that "The 1938 hearings did end in an administrative determination that, on the evidence presented, Bridges had not been shown to be a member of the Communist Party as of that time." However, the Government contends that this finding is of no effect in the present proceeding for two reasons: first, that the effect of the Secretary of Labor's finding on the factual issue in the present proceeding (Gov. Br. 79) "is not properly before this Court on the present review"; and second, that the Secretary's determination, being administrative in character, should be given no weight as res judicata or by way of estoppel in a subsequent judicial proceeding.

The first of these points is utterly ephemeral. We have contended, with respect both to the Landis-Perkins and the Sears-Biddle determinations, that the issue of Bridges' Communist membership in the present proceeding should have been limited to the period of time since those determinations were made. The Government now argues that this point is not open on certiorari, because (Gov. Br. 79): "The issue raised in the petition was whether the prosecution was barred and that is one of the two issues to which the grant of certiorari was specifically limited by order of this Court." But in fact the question stated in our petition (Petition for Certiorari, p. 3) was whether this proceeding was barred in whole or in part. The italicized words, carefully omitted from the Government's statement of the issue (Gov. Br. 79), were included in the question for the specific purpose of challenging the legality of re-litigating the issue of Bridges' Communist membership prior to the time of the administrative determination.[19] There is not the slightest warrant for the Government's contesting the reviewable status of this issue before this Court.

---

[19] Our Petition (p. 12, footnote 14) and our Reply Memorandum (pp. 3-4) contained argument in support of our contention that the prior administrative determinations estopped the Government from re-litigating the question of Bridges' Communist membership prior to the administrative determinations.

Turning to the Government's second contention, it appears that their denial that a decision in a deportation proceeding is ever res judicata, or grounds for estoppel, is based on: (a) the description of deportation proceedings as "political", citing Harisiades v. Shaughnessey, 342 U. S. 580, 589; (b) the Attorney-General's later refusal to treat the Secretary's decision as binding (Gov. Br. 81); (c) want of mutuality (Gov. Br. 85); and (d) the fact that deportation is an "executive" or "administrative" function.

Only[20] the last of these reasons warrants attention here. As we have shown (Pet. Br. 56-62), numerous types of quasi-judicial administrative proceedings have been accorded the attributes of res judicata in later judicial proceedings, and the deportation proceedings here fall clearly within the quasi-judicial category.

The Government cites Wilbur v. United States ex rel Kadrie, 281 U. S. 206, in an effort to support its statement that "the finding of an examiner in a deportation proceeding is '. . . not a judgment pronounced in a judicial proceeding, but a ruling made by an executive officer in the exertion of administrative authority' " (Gov. Br. 83). But the wholly distinguishable Wilbur case not only has nothing to do with immigration or deportation proceedings; it rested upon an altered interpretation of law (not of fact) by the Solicitor of the Department of Interior, and upon the fact that the statute under which the Secretary's earlier determination was made did not make his prior determination "final" (see 281 U. S. at 217). Compare United States v. Atkins, 260 U. S. 220 and United States v. Wildcat, 244 U. S. 111 (Pet. Br. 61) where "final" orders involving Indian claims were held res judicata. Similarly, in the present case, the Secretary of Labor's determination in the deportation proceeding was "final" under the statute. Heikkila v. Barber, 345 U. S. 229.

---

[20] The Harisiades case is in no way in point here, and the adjective "political" cannot properly mean much more than "executive" or "administrative". The Attorney-General's conclusion in In re Harry Bridges before the Attorney-General in Deportation Proceedings (May 28, 1942, p. 30) was not a departmental rule, and was summarily stated and based on an erroneous application of Pearson v. Williams, 202 U. S. 281. The argument of want of mutuality, long since discredited in the law of remedies (see Judge Cardozo's opinion in Epstein v. Glucken, 233 N. Y. 490; 135 N. E. 861), is frivolous indeed when the lack of mutuality is (as the Government here suggests) caused by a difference in the standard of proof as between civil and criminal proceedings. In any event, the point is quite settled by United States v. Balt. & Ohio R. R. Co., 229 U. S. 244 (Pet. Br. 54, footnote 55).

B. Bridges v. Wixon.

We believe that the effect of Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135, as an estoppel to relitigation of the issue of Bridges' Communist membership prior to 1941, is adequately covered in our brief (Pet. Br. 66-72). Nor, for the reasons stated above (pp. 18-19), is there any doubt that this question is properly before this Court for review.

We desire only to note with interest that the Government, after obstinately arguing (Gov. Br. 77) that the Wixon case cast no doubt on the sufficiency of "the evidence then available" to support a finding that Bridges was a Communist, promptly reverses itself and explains that Bridges' naturalization was not contested by the Government, only three months after the Wixon decision, because the hearing examiner had "ascertained that it had been determined that the Government did not have sufficient evidence at that time to show that Bridges was a member of the Communist Party". (Gov. Br. 86, footnote 36; Tr. 529). The Government's entire contention thus becomes well-nigh preposterous. It is perfectly clear from this circumstance as well as from the Government's abandonment of the deportation proceeding (Pet. Br. 69-70), that the Wixon decision was treated, by the Government and by all others concerned, as a finding that the evidence available, whether in 1941 or 1945, was insufficient to support a determination that Bridges was a member of the Communist Party.

C. The Naturalization Decree.

On this point, the Government opens with the argument (Gov. Br. 85-86) that "the Government did not litigate the issue of Bridges' Communist membership in the naturalization proceedings", and that, therefore, there was no determination by the naturalization court of the factual issue of membership. It is true that the Government did not "litigate" the issue in the sense of opposing Bridges' naturalization.

But the reasons for this failure, as set forth in the Government's brief (at pages 86-87, footnotes 36-37) are truly remarkable. One is given the impression that the hearing examiner (Mr. Lloyd H. Garner) was somehow caught unawares and unsuspecting of the issue, and totally unprepared to come forward with any evidence bearing on the matter. One would never guess, to read this portion of the Government's brief, that the Government's investigative machinery had then been at work for over a decade, and that two protracted administrative hearings, as well as the litigation o. habeas corpus, had preceded Bridges' application for citizenship. The reader is also led to believe that poor Mr. Garner was equipped only with "an affidavit

. . . by a former wife of Bridges, accusing him of being a Communist" which "had come into Garner's possession the morning of the hearing, and into the possession of the Department of Immigration and Naturalization the Friday before". Then, as the Government sadly observes, "aside from this document, Garner had no other evidence to present to the Court". What on earth had happened to the bushels of evidence previously accumulated and presented before Dean Landis and Judge Sears?

It is in this extraordinary context that one must assay the Government's contention (Gov. Br. 85, footnote 35) that it was not obliged to contest the membership issue in the naturalization proceeding, and was at liberty to preserve it for a later day in court. Whatever appeal this argument might have in a situation where the Government had been prevented, by lack of time or for other reasons, from making a full investigation of an applicant for naturalization, it is wholly unrealistic as applied to the actual situation now before this Court.

But the judicial finality of Bridges' naturalization decree does not, of course, rest on these particular circumstances, compelling as they are. For the Government's apparent conception of a naturalization proceeding, as determining only those issues which the Government actively contests, flies in the face of the purpose and structure of the naturalization laws, and is wholly lacking in judicial support. The Government's contention leads straight to the conclusion that every naturalization decree can be challenged, whether by revocation or collateral attack, on any issue except one which the Government has unsuccessfully contested in the naturalization proceeding itself. The far-reaching and unsound effects of such a result are manifest.

The law is clearly to the contrary. Spratt v. Spratt, 4 Pet. 393, 407-408 (U. S., 1831); Tutun v. United States, 270 U. S. 568, 577; Bindczyck v. Finucane, 342 U. S. 76, 80-81, 83-84.[21]

By no means do we mean to suggest that the extent to which a naturalization decree is res judicata is free from vexatious and unsettled questions. The Government's disposition (Gov. Br. 88) to regard our position as just too silly for serious consideration might be tempered by perusal of the Report of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary (Sen. Rep. No. 1515, 81st Cong., 2nd Sess., pp. 756-764), wherein it is stated (at p. 756) that the nature of the fraud which can be relied on as the basis for revocation and the scope of res judicata in naturalization proceedings are "the source of considerable confusion and conflict in the law."

These questions, and their pertinence to the present proceeding, cannot be settled by the generalities relied upon by the Government (Gov. Br. 88-89). As we have pointed out (Pet. Br. 72-79), the Government's standing to challenge the naturalization decree is here fatally weakened because it proceeded by collateral attack, rather than by revocation proceedings. Bindczyck v. Finucane, 342 U. S. 76. Even in revocation proceedings the Government's position would be doubtful enough. This was the very question reserved in the Knauer case (328 U. S. at 670-671). See also Chitwood v. United States, 178 Fed. 442 (8th Cir.). More fundamentally, their argument throughout overlooks that "the doctrine of res judicata does not depend upon whether or not the prior judgment was right. It rests upon the finality of judgments as a matter of public policy, to the end that controversies once decided shall remain in repose." Rubens v. Ellis, 202 F. 2d 415, 418 (5th Cir.).[22]

---

[21] The Government also contends that the naturalization decree did not determine the issue of membership because (Gov. Br. 87) "it is by no means clear that mere membership would have been considered by the court at that time as a bar to naturalization." Having said this, the Government is then obliged to scramble rapidly (Gov. Br. 88, footnote 38) to avoid the inference that the question and answer with respect to membership were not material, since such an inference would destroy the entire basis of the indictment here in question. But it is apparent from the proceedings before the California Superior Court (Tr. 133-145), that the naturalization court did regard the issue of Communist membership as one which had to be determined (Pet. Br. 8-9, 72). See Harisiades v. Shaughnessy, 342 U. S. 580, 593-594: "During all the years since 1920 Congress has maintained a standing admonition to aliens, on pain of deportation, not to become members of any organization that advocates overthrow of the United States government by force and violence, a category repeatedly held to include the Communist Party . . . It [Congress] regarded the fact that an alien defied our laws to join the Communist Party as an indication that he had developed little comprehension of the principles and practice of representative government or else was unwilling to abide by them."

---

[22] A word should be added here about the applicability of the res judicata and estoppel arguments to petitioners Robertson and Schmidt. As the Government points out (Gov. Br. 71, footnote 27), they were not parties to the prior proceedings, and Bridges alone can claim their conclusive effect. Plainly, however, Robertson and Schmidt were seriously prejudiced by the trial court's refusal to restrict the evidence to the period following the administrative proceedings, and the failure to dismiss the indictment against Bridges. Consequently, a reversal of Bridges' conviction or dismissal of his indictment will require reversal as well of Robertson's and Schmidt's convictions.

We also feel obliged to call to the Court's attention the possible bearing on this proceeding of Western-Pacific R. R. Corp. v. Western Pacific R. R. Co., 345 U. S. , decided April 6, 1953. In our petition for certiorari, filed January 14, 1953, the pendency of the Western Pacific case before this Court was mentioned (at p. 6, footnote 5) in connection with the supplemental petition requesting a rehearing before the Court of Appeals en banc (see also Pet. Br. 2, footnote 1a, Pet. Br. 11, footnote 10a). The writ of certiorari granted by this Court does not cover this question, and the following circumstances are set out solely for the Court's information.

After the original decision of the division of the court below (Tr. 8215-8296), petitioners filed a "Petition for Rehearing and Application that Petition for Rehearing be Heard En Banc" (Tr. 8297-8347), in which it was urged that since the original decision conflicted with principles enunciated by this Court (Tr. 8300; 8324-8328) and

D. Due Process.

"Due process does not require that fraud and false swearing shall go unpunished", says the Government in conclusion (Gov. Br. 91). Of course this is true, but it is not the issue here. Due process does require that an accusation of false testimony shall not be used to subject an individual to trial on a factual issue previously and repeatedly determined in his favor in other proceedings. Harisiades v. Shaughnessy, 342 U. S. 580, extensively quoted by the Gov-the decisions of other courts of appeal (Tr. 8313; 8322; 8323-8324), the matter was properly one to be considered en banc.

---

After amending that portion of its opinion which dealt with the "savings clause" problem (supra, pp. 8-17), the court below denied the petition without ruling on the application that it be heard en banc (Tr. 8434). This failure to rule upon the application for a rehearing en banc followed the position taken some months earlier that "petitions, if any, for rehearing en banc in cases determined by three judges will be considered and disposed of by the latter as ordinary petitions for rehearing". Western Pacific R. R. Corp. v. Western Pacific R. R. Co., 197 F. 2d 994, 1016 (9th Cir.).

Thereafter, petitioners filed an "Application for Leave to File Supplemental Petition for Rehearing, Prayer that Supplemental Petition for Rehearing be Heard En Banc, and that Order Denying Petition for Rehearing Be Vacated" (Tr. 8437-8454), which called attention to the fact that no order had ever been entered upon the application to be heard en banc (Tr. 8449-8450), and again urged that in view of the conflicts already mentioned, and other important points involved, including a possible intra-circuit conflict (Tr. 8451-8452), the case was appropriately one to be heard en banc.

The division, recognizing that this application was "similar" to the one involved in the Western Pacific case, reaffirmed "the view taken by us in the Western Pacific case" that "it is not a privilege of litigants to request that their cases be heard en banc" (Tr. 8456-8457; 201 F. 2d 254, 255). Because of the circumstance that the panel had amended its earlier opinion, it permitted the filing of the application; however, it specifically ordered it to be filed as a "petition to the 'Division'", and it treated it "as a second petition for rehearing" and "as such", denied it (Tr. 8459-8460; 201 F. 2d 254, 256), apparently without reaching the "merits of the en banc issue". Western Pacific case, supra.

ernment, has no bearing on the question here, nor may it be overlooked that Bridges is presently a citizen, not an alien. Beyond this, we rest on our brief (pp. 79-87).

III

CONCLUSION

The Government's brief is pregnant with the worry that statutes of limitations and the principle of res judicata may allow the guilty to escape punishment, and fraud to escape detection. "If one indulges in the fantasy that those who violate laws cold-bloodedly calculate that they will be safe if they can avoid prosecution for a particular statutory term . . ." (Gov. Br. 52). "It would indeed be an odd application of the principle of res judicata to bar a court from protecting the integrity of its own proceedings . . . (Gov. Br. 88).

But these principles have been developed to preserve, not to frustrate, the judicial process. It is difficult enough to resolve a contested issue of fact when the evidence is fresh; after the lapse of many years it is wiser not to authorize the attempt. A later judgment on the same issue is intrinsically no more reliable, and may well be less so, than an earlier one; it is wholly possible for perjured testimony to be imposed on a court in a proceeding to set aside an earlier one as fraudulent. All this we have already and, we think, compellingly explored (Pet. Br. 42-48, 78-81, 85-90), no matter how little reaction has been stimulated in the Government's brief.

For the reasons stated, it is respectfully submitted that the judgment of the court below should be reversed.

TELFORD TAYLOR
New York, N. Y.

NORMAN LEONARD
San Francisco, Calif.
Counsel for Petitioners

Of Counsel

JOHN P. FRANK
New Haven, Conn.

GLADSTEIN, ANDERSEN & LEONARD
San Francisco, Calif.

April, 1953.

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT. U.S.

Office-Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 13 1953
HAROLD B. WILLEY, Clerk

No. 548

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT AND J. R. ROBERTSON, PETITIONERS

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

ON PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

MEMORANDUM FOR THE UNITED STATES

INDEX

Page
Opinions below 1
Jurisdiction 2
Questions presented 2
Statutes involved 2
Statement 2
Argument 10
Conclusion 35
Appendix 37

CITATIONS

Cases:

Bridges, Ex parte, 149 F. Supp. 292 12
Bridges v. United States, 199 F. 2d 811 17
Bridges v. Wixon, 144 F. 2d 927 12
Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U.S. 135 11, 13, 27
Chevillard v. United States, 155 F. 2d 929 34
Commissioner v. Sunnen, 333 U.S. 591 14
Curley v. United States, 130 Fed. 1, certiorari denied, 195 U.S. 628 21
De La Rama S.S. Co. v. United States, No. 368, this Term, decided February 2, 1953 26
Del Guercio v. Pupko, 160 F. 2d 799 19
Falter v. United States, 23 F. 2d 420, certiorari denied, 277 U.S. 590 18
Flynn ex rel. Ham Loy Wong v. Ward, 95 F. 2d 742 14
Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U.S. 698 16
Fullerton-Krueger Lumber Co. v. Northern Pacific Ry. Co., 266 U.S. 435 25
Glasser v. United States, 315 U.S. 60 18, 34
Haas v. Henkel, 216 U.S. 462 21
Hammerschmidt v. United States, 265 U.S. 182 18
Hazel-Atlas Co. v. Hartford Co., 322 U.S. 238 15
Helvering v. Mitchell 303 U.S. 391 16
Hiatt v. Hilliard, 180 F. 2d 453 25
Hoiness v. United States, 335 U.S. 297 25
Jordan v. De George, 341 U.S. 223 18
Kessler v. Strecker, 307 U.S. 22 11
Klapprott v. United States, 335 U.S. 601 16
Knauer v. United States, 328 U.S. 654 15, 16, 19
Lovely v. United States, 175 F. 2d 312, certiorari denied, 338 U.S. 834 25

Cases—Continued

Page

Mac Innis v. United States, 191 F. 2d 157, certiorari denied, 342 U.S. 953 30

Marzani v. United States, 168 F. 2d 133, affirmed by an equally divided court, 335 U.S. 895, and reaffirmed by an equally divided court on reargument, 336 U.S. 922 20, 21

Miller v. United States, 24 F. 2d 353, certiorari denied, 276 U.S. 638 18

Mock Kee Song v. Cahill, 94 F. 2d 975 14

Pearson v. Williams, 202 U.S. 281 14

People v. Driessen, 178 Mich. 118, 144 N.W. 526 26

Schwinn v. United States, 112 F. 2d 74, affirmed, 311 U.S. 616 19

United States v. Beacon Brass Co., 344 U.S. 43 21

United States v. Bridges, 86 F. Supp. 922 17

United States v. Choy Kum, 91 F. Supp. 769 19

United States v. Farina, 184 F. 2d 18, certiorari denied, 340 U.S. 875 35

United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. United States for the use of Struthers Wells Co., 209 U.S. 306 25

United States v. Fotopulos, 180 F. 2d 631 34

United States ex rel. Hassell v. Mathues, 27 F. 2d 137 26

United States v. Hirsch, 100 U.S. 33 18

United States v. Kirby, 176 F. 2d 101 25

United States v. Klinger, 199 F. 2d 645, petition for a writ of certiorari pending, No. 527 22

United States v. McElvain, 272 U.S. 633 20

United States v. Ness, 245 U. S. 319 19

United States v. Noveck, 271 U.S. 201 18, 19, 20

United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243, certiorari denied, 340 U.S. 951 21, 24, 25

United States v. Oppenheimer, 242 U.S. 85 26

United States v. Reisinger, 128 U.S. 398 26

United States v. Saracino, 43 F. 2d 76 19

United States v. Scharton, 285 U.S. 518 20

United States v. St. Louis, San Francisco & Texas Ry. Co., 270 U.S. 1 25

United States v. Toner, 173 F. 2d 140 34

United States v. Ulrici, 28 Fed. Cas. p. 328, No. 16,594, 3 Dillon 532 26

United States v. Williams, 341 U.S. 58 15, 16

United States v. Williams, 341 U.S. 70 15

United States ex rel. Hassell v. Mathues, 27 F. 2d 137 26

Weinhandler v. United States, 20 F. 2d 359, certiorari denied, 275 U.S. 554 19

Young v. Territory of Hawaii, 160 F. 2d 289, certiorari denied, 331 U.S. 849 35

Statutes: Page

Act of November 17, 1921, c. 124, Sec. 1, 42 Stat. 220, R.S. 1044 . . . . 18, 39
Act of December 27, 1927, c. 6, 45 Stat. 51 40
Act of June 28, 1940, 50 Stat. 673, amending 40 Stat. 1012, 41 Stat. 1008, 8 U.S.C. 137 11
Act of June 25, 1948, 62 Stat. 683 . . . . 16, 17, 23-24, 25, 38

Criminal Code:

Section 37, 18 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] 88, now 18 U.S.C. 371 37

Nationality Act of October 14, 1940, 54 Stat. 1137:

Section 338(e) (8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] 738(e)) 3
Section 346(a) (8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] 746(a), now 18 U.S.C. 1015(a) 3, 37
Section 346(a)(1) (8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] 746(a)(1)), 17, 18, 23-24, 37
Section 346(a)(5) (8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] 746(a)(5)), 17, 18, 19, 23, 24, 38
Section 346(d) (8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] 746(d) 38
Section 346(g) (8 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] 746(g)), 17, 23, 24, 25, 38

United States Code:

18 U.S.C. (1946 ed.) 590a 39
18 U.S.C. 3282 . . . . 16, 39, 40

Wartime Suspension of Limitations Act, 18 U.S.C. 3287 17, 39

Miscellaneous:

Federal Register, Volume 12, page 1 . . . . 17, 39
Wigmore, Evidence (3d ed. 1940) § 1980 32

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

No. 548

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT AND J. R. ROBERTSON, PETITIONERS

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

ON PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

MEMORANDUM FOR THE UNITED STATES

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the Court of Appeals, as amended on denial of rehearing (R. 8354-8433), is reported at 199 F. 2d 811. The opinion of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California denying a series of motions to dismiss the indictment (R. 10-41) is reported at 86 F. Supp. 922. The opinion of that court on the issue of res judicata raised during the trial is reported at 87 F. Supp. 14.[1]

---

[1] See also opinions on revocation of bail after judgment. 93 F. Supp. 989, reversed, 184 F. 2d 881.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Court of Appeals was entered on September 6, 1952 (R. 8296). A petition for rehearing was denied on November 18, 1952 (R. 8434). On November 28, 1952, the time for filing a petition for a writ of certiorari was extended to January 16, 1953, by order of Mr. Justice Douglas. The petition was filed January 14, 1953. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U. S. C. 1254(1). See also Rules 37(b)(2) and 45(a), F. R. Crim. P.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether the fact that two previous attempts to deport an alien because of alleged communist activity had failed precludes a prosecution relating to false statements in his naturalization proceedings with respect to membership in the Communist Party.

2. Whether the prosecution is barred by the statute of limitations.

3. Whether reversible errors were committed during the trial.

STATUTES INVOLVED

The applicable statutes are set forth in the Appendix, infra, pp. 37-40.

STATEMENT

On May 25, 1949, an indictment in three counts was returned against the petitioners in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California. Count one charged all three petitioners with conspiracy to defraud the United States in the proper administration of its naturalization laws by fraudulently representing, in the proceedings for the naturalization of Harry Bridges, that he had never belonged to the Communist Party of the United States. The second count charged Bridges alone with the crime of knowingly making a false statement under oath relating to his naturalization proceedings, in violation of 8 U.S.C. (1946 ed.) 746 (a), now 18 U.S.C. 1015 (a). The third count charged the other petitioners with fraudulently aiding and abetting Bridges to procure naturalization in violation of 8 U.S.C. (1946 ed.) 746(a). (R. 3-8.) After a trial by jury, petitioners were found guilty on the counts in which they were named (R. 8036-8038) and sentenced as follows: Bridges to two years on count I and five years on count II, the sentences to run concurrently; each of the other petitioners to two years imprisonment on counts I and III, the sentences to run concurrently (R. 235-240). After judgment was entered, the citizenship of Bridges was revoked under Section 338 (e) of the Nationality Act of 1940, 8 U.S.C. (1946 ed.) 738 (e). On appeal the conviction was affirmed (R. 8296).

At the trial, the Government proved that at his naturalization hearing on September 17, 1945, Bridges was asked whether he did then or ever had belonged to the Communist Party of the United States, and whether he did then or had ever belonged to any organization that advocated the overthrow of the government by force and violence. He replied in the negative (Gov. Ex. 3, R. 480; R. 138-139). It was also shown that the other petitioners, who were witnesses for Bridges in connection with his application, had been individually questioned by a hearing examiner at a preliminary examination held on August 8, 1945; that each of them had denied that he himself was a member of the Communist Party and had stated that to his knowledge Bridges was not a member of the Communist Party (R. 457-459; 463-464). At the naturalization hearing, the witnesses testified that they vouched for the loyalty of Bridges to the United States (R. 134).

The lengthy evidence adduced by the Government at the trial was designed to show that prior to, at the time of, and subsequent to these naturalization proceedings, Bridges was in fact an active member of the Communist Party, known to be such by the other petitioners. Salient portions of that evidence may be summarized as follows:

A. The Recruitment of Bridges into the Communist Party

In 1933, there was a confused situation in the labor movement on the west coast waterfront, with different groups endeavoring to obtain dominance (R. 4101-4103; 4770-4775). The Communist Party decided to take an active part in the situation and to bolster an A. F. of L. union, the International Longshoreman's Association, hereinafter referred to as I. L. A. (R. 1247-1249). John Schomaker, a government witness and an admitted Communist (R. 674-687), testified that it was decided that Bridges was the best potential leader for the longshoremen's union (R. 887-888, 957, 1247-1249). At a meeting at Bridges' home in late October, 1933, they discussed revitalization of the I. L. A. (R. 732-736, 819-827).

Thereafter, Schomaker saw Bridges two or three times a week at his home, or another prearranged meeting place, and occasionally going or coming to the waterfront (R. 832-833).

One day during the winter of 1933, when Schomaker and a man named Jones[2] had met Bridges in a restaurant (R. 835-837), Jones asked Bridges, "When are you going to join the Party, Harry?" After some conversation, Schomaker left for 15 or 20 minutes. On his return, he joined Jones and they went to the headquarters of the San Francisco Communist Party. Jones showed Schomaker an application for membership in the Communist Party bearing the signature of Bridges which Schomaker recognized and could identify (R. 841-853). Jones turned in the application at headquarters (R. 863-864, 1224).

Schomaker testified that he saw Bridges on numerous occasions pay his Communist Party dues in accordance with normal Party practice to the unit secretary (R. 873-875).[3] In December, 1935, after Schomaker had become a section organizer of the waterfront section of the Communist Party (R. 871), Bridges gave Schomaker his Communist Party book to be "controlled." The practice was to turn in the old book and receive a new one. About the middle of January 1936, Schomaker gave new books to each Party member, including Bridges, at a Communist unit meeting (R. 869-870). Again in the winter of 1936, Schomaker received Bridges' old Communist Party book, and issued him a new one in January 1937 (R. 871).

---

[2] Jones testified as a defense witness that he had been a member of the Communist Party since the middle of 1932 (R. 3811).

[3] In the Communist Party, the unit was the home base to which a member was assigned and paid dues (R. 5830). The chairman of the unit, known as a unit organizer, was contact man between the unit and the next higher echelon, the section (R. 683-684). The section organizer was in turn responsible to his district organizer (R. 727-728). In each region, the governing group was the District Committee. The district which included California was known as "District 13". Nationally the Party was governed by the Central or National Committee, of which a small policy-making group was known as the Politburo (R. 2409-24).

B. The Participation of Bridges in other Communist Activities During the 1930's

After the recruitment of Bridges into the Communist Party, he became a member of the District Committee, and of the Bureau, the executive committee of the District Committee (R. 1236-1237). Bridges and petitioner Schmidt were also members of the waterfront section of the Communist Party in San Francisco (R. 5858). Schomaker attended numerous Communist meetings at which Bridges and Schmidt were present (R. 895). The government witness Lawrence Ross, who was county organizer for San Francisco County (R. 2854), testified that he heard Bridges give a talk at a closed meeting restricted to leading Communist Party members about the situation on the waterfront as it concerned the Communist Party (R. 2862-2869, 2886-2887). Bridges and Schmidt attended closed Communist Party meetings at which persons stood at the door to recognize the Communist members as they entered (R. 921-935, 2871-2879).

Two government witnesses, John Schomaker and Irene Patti Harris, described a meeting held at the home of Jack Shaw on Pine Street early in the fall of 1938 at which Bridges gave a speech. Bridges made a plea for the persons present to become members of the Communist Party and told the group that he was a member (R. 1697-1704). Mrs. Harris testified (R. 1704):

> Yes. That made a very impression [sic]. I was flabbergasted when I heard him say that, because he had been accused, and I had heard it denied. And when he made that statement, why, it made a very much impression on me [sic].

See also R. 877-878.

C. The Communist Central Committee

Three witnesses, Paul Crouch, Manning Johnson and Lawrence Ross, described the election of Bridges at the 1936 Communist Convention in New York to what was then the Central Committee of the Communist Party. Bridges was elected under the name of "Harry Rossi."[4] (R. 2355-2357, 2892-2895.)

---

[4] This alias of "Rossi," applied to Harry Bridges, grew out of the 1934 general strike in San Francisco (R. 2236-2237). At that time, Sam Darcy reported to a meeting of the National or Central Committee, giving a detailed account of the general strike in San Francisco. In this report, Sam Darcy mentioned that "Comrade Bridges" had wielded more power than Mayor Rossi in San Francisco. Jay Peters, as a result of that, thereupon affixed the alias of "Comrade Rossi" to Bridges. Thereafter, whenever reports were given on activities in California by the leading organizers, he was referred to as "Rossi". Under the name of Rossi, his name was put on the list of the 1936 convention (R. 2239-2240).

Manning Johnson, who had held a number of posts in the Party, was elected to the National Committee in 1936 (R. 2074-2075, 2080-2083). After his election, he met the other committee members, including Bridges, who went under the alias of "Rossi" (R. 2088). At one closed session, Stachel introduced Bridges to the National Committee, and Bridges received a big ovation (R. 2229, 2234). It was explained that Bridges henceforth would not be brought to meetings of the National Committee because of his strategic position in the labor movement on the Pacific coast, and because, if it became known that he was a member of the Communist Party, he would no longer be able to move and work in the Party interests (R. 2234).

Paul Crouch attended the 1938 national convention. The procedure at this time was different from that of 1936. Prior to the final election session, the Central Committee called a meeting of the district organizers, the editors, and a few top leaders of the Party, to discuss nominations and procedure at the convention. William Schneiderman proposed the name of Bridges, stating that while he was temperamental, he had made an important contribution. Schneiderman thought Bridges would contribute more on than off the Central Committee. At the end, Earl Browder, referring to Bridges, said "Comrade Derkin or Dargan" would be put on the Central Committee. Crouch voted for Bridges. At the convention, in reading the list of nominees, the speaker said, "The next person to go on the Central Committee is a well-known West Coast labor leader," but he did not mention Bridges' name. Crouch testified that "at that moment the entire convention burst into stormy applause" (R. 2358-2361).

D. Other Communist Activity in the 1940's

At the 1941 convention of the California State C. I. O., Crouch, who was then a member of the Bureau of District 13 (R. 2338), was told to see that Bridges carried out decisions of the Political Bureau of District 12, after June 22, 1941, when the Soviet Union was attacked by Germany. There had been a District Bureau meeting in Schneiderman's office on July 9, 1941, at which the policy of the Communist Party toward this issue was discussed, and also the reluctance of Bridges to go along with the Party line. Crouch had made a motion that if it became necessary to expel Bridges from the Party, this was not to be made public (R. 2723-2724, 2737). It was decided to prepare a resolution to be given by Bridges at the 1941 State C. I. O. convention to place him unequivocally on record in favor of the then Communist policy of full support for the allies (R. 2738-2739). The resolution that was given by Bridges at the convention (Gov. Ex. 8; see R. 2367-2368) was prepared by Crouch during the two weeks preceding the convention, at the instructions of District 13 and William Schneiderman (R. 2362-2371). The resolution read by Bridges on the floor of the convention urged all-out support of the administration program of aid to the democracies in the war effort (R. 2367-2368).

5

After 1944, in San Francisco, there was organized a special committee known as "God's Committee" which consisted of local San Francisco Communists who were connected with the San Francisco C. I. O. Council. Among its members were Schneiderman, Rathborne, who was then secretary-treasurer of the California Council; government witness George Wilson, the secretary of the Bridges Victory Committee; and petitioner Robertson, an officer of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union. On a number of occasions, Rathborne discussed the activities of this committee with Bridges and Schneiderman together (R. 3640, 5834, 5842-5843, 5930-5933).

The government witness George Wilson attended Communist meetings in 1944 and 1945 with petitioner Robertson, who was attached to the same Communist unit (R. 3647-3648). He also attended other meetings at which Bridges and Schmidt were present (R. 3649-3652).

ARGUMENT

1. Petitioners contend (Pet. 7-14) that the indictment instituting the present prosecution is barred under the principles of res judicata, estoppel, or the due process provision of the Fifth Amendment (Pet. 3, 7-14). This contention assumes that there was a previous adjudication of fact which precluded an examination into whether petitioner Bridges swore falsely when on September 17, 1945 he stated to the naturalization court that he did not then, and had never, belonged to the Communist Party in the United States. To establish a prior adjudication of this issue, petitioners cite two deportation proceedings commenced in 1938 and 1940, against petitioner Bridges more particularly described in Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135, 137.

The first proceeding was instituted in 1938 on the ground that Bridges, who was then an Australian alien, had been and then was a member of or affiliated with the Communist Party of the United States and that that Party advised and taught the overthrow by force of the Government of the United States. Under the statute then in force, past membership or past affiliation was insufficient for deportation, present affiliation being required. Kessler v. Strecker, 307 U. S. 22. A hearing was had before an examiner, James M. Landis, who concluded that the evidence established neither that Harry Bridges "is a member of nor affiliated with" the Communist Party of the United States. The Secretary of Labor sustained the examiner and dismissed the proceedings in January 1940.

By the Act of June 28, 1940,[5] Congress amended the statute to provide for deportation of any alien who was "at the time of entering the United States, or has been at any time thereafter," a member of or affiliated with an organization of the character attributed to the Communist Party in the first proceeding. A second deportation proceeding was instituted against Bridges under the amended statute on the ground that he had been a member of or affiliated with that organization. Another hearing was had before the inspector designated to conduct the hearings, Charles B. Sears, who found that the Communist Party of the United States was an organization of the character described in the statute, that the Marine Workers' Industrial Union was affiliated with the Communist Party and was an organization of the same character, and that after entering this country Harry Bridges had been affiliated with both organizations, and had been a member of the Communist Party. He recommended deportation. The case was heard by the Board of Immigration Appeals which found that Bridges had not been a member of or affiliated with either of those organizations at any time after he entered this country. The Attorney General reviewed the decision of the Board, and rendered an opinion in which he made findings in accordance with those proposed by the inspector and ordered Harry Bridges to be deported. Bridges, after surrendering himself to the custody of the District Director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, challenged the legality of his detention by a petition for a writ of habeas corpus in the District Court for the Northern District of California. That Court denied the petition and remanded petitioner to the custody of the Director. Ex parte Bridges, 49 F. Supp. 292. The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirmed the judgment of the trial court. Bridges v. Wixon, 144 F. 2d 927. This Court reversed the judgment below on two grounds, neither of which went to the merits of the deportation order. The first ground was that Judge Sears and the Attorney General had misconstrued the term "affiliation" as employed in the statute there involved; the second, that the hearing was unfair by virtue of the fact that certain unsworn statements of the government witness O'Neil were read into the record as substantive evidence, and not merely for the purposes of impeachment. Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135, 156.

---

[5] 40 Stat. 1012, 41 Stat. 1008, 54 Stat. 673, 8 U.S.C. 137.

The decision of this Court in Bridges v. Wixon was thus not a determination that Bridges was not a member of the Communist Party, nor even a determination that the evidence was insufficient to prove that he was a member of the Party.[6] It was merely a determination that the hearing at which he had been found to be a member of the Communist Party was not properly conducted, and therefore in legal effect no hearing at all. Manifestly, such a holding is not an adjudication of the facts which were in issue at that hearing.

---

[6] Petitioners' statement that "this Court clearly held that the record contained no substantial evidence, in support of the charge of Communist Party membership, against Bridges" (Pet. 11) is even more clearly contrary to the specific language of the decision. After finding that certain evidence had been improperly received, this Court stated, 326 U. S. at 155-156:

> * * * Whether the finding would have been made on this record from the testimony of Lundeberg alone is wholly conjectural and highly speculative. Not only was Lundeberg admittedly hostile to Bridges. Not only did the Attorney General fail to rule that on the basis of Lundeberg's testimony alone Bridges had been a member of the party. But beyond that, the Board of Immigration Appeals significantly concluded that apart from O'Neil's unsworn statements the evidence of Bridges' membership was too flimsy to support a finding. It is thus idle to consider what the Attorney General might have ruled on the basis of the other evidence before him. Cf. United States v. Dunton, 291 F. 905, 907. The issue of membership was too close and too crucial to the case to admit of mere speculation. Since it was error to admit O'Neil's unsworn statements against Bridges, since they were so crucial to the findings of membership, and since that issue was so close, we are unable to say that the order of deportation may be sustained without them.

In any case, there is no room for the application of the principles of res judicata, even assuming that those principles, which have never been applied to deportation proceedings, pertain.[7] Manifestly the administration charge that Bridges was subject to deportation in 1938 and 1940 is not the same as the criminal charge that he conspired to defraud the United States, and made a false oath in his naturalization proceeding in 1945. Thus the doctrine of res judicata in the strict sense of binding the parties as to every issue which could have been raised is wholly inapposite. Commissioner v. Sunnen, 333 U. S. 591, 597-598.

Nor is petitioner aided by the principle of collateral estoppel which applies "only as to those matters in issue or points controverted, upon the determination of which the finding or verdict was rendered." Commissioner v. Sunnen, supra, and cases cited. At most, what was decided in the prior proceedings was that Bridges had not been shown to be a member of the Communist Party before

---

[7] See Pearson v. Williams, 202 U. S. 281; Flynn ex rel. Ham Loy Wong v. Ward, 95 F. 2d 742 (C. A. 1); Mock Kee Song v. Cahill, 94 F. 2d 975, 977 (C. A. 9). Since, even on the assumption that res judicata applies to administrative determinations, there is no room for its application in the present case, the conflict which petitioners allege (Pet. 9-10) is not here involved.

1940. The issue as of 1945 when Bridges swore that he was not a member, was, of course, not at all involved in those proceedings. Thus the Government did not attempt to re-litigate any issue actually decided in the deportation hearings.[8] There was here less possibility of re-litigation of decided facts than was presented in United States v. Williams, 341 U. S. 58, where this Court found an acquittal of a substantive crime no bar to a conviction for perjury at the trial. See also dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Douglas, United States v. Williams, 341 U. S. 70, at pp. 95-96.

Petitioners also contend (Pet. 13) that the decree naturalizing Bridges was itself conclusive of the fact "of non-membership in the Communist Party." But any finding that may be implicit in the Court's decree was induced by the very fraud which is now under attack in this proceeding. It would indeed be an odd application of the principle of res judicata to bar the Government from protecting the integrity of its own proceedings on the ground that the final order in those proceedings precludes a further inquiry, criminal or otherwise, as to whether the legal processes had been abused. There can be no question of the power of the courts to undo a decree which has been reached through fraud. Knauer v. United States, 328 U. S. 654; cf. Hazel-Atlas Co. v. Hartford Co., 322 U. S. 238. The issue of fraud "* * * was not in issue in the proceedings and neither was adjudicated nor could have been adjudicated" (Knauer v. United States, 328 U. S. 654, 670-674). Just as the certificate of naturalization may be cancelled on a showing of fraud and illegality in its procurement, so the parallel criminal sanctions under the Nationality Act may be imposed for the perpetration of the same fraud, specifically for the false swearing in the case at bar. Cf. Klapprott v. United States, 335 U. S. 601, 610 (opinion of Mr. Justice Black).

---

[8] To establish the falsity of the 1945 statement the Government did not rely on the evidence which had been introduced at the prior deportation hearings. All of the government's witnesses were new.

The argument that the present indictment, following the prior proceedings, violates the Fifth Amendment (Pet. 13-14) certainly cannot be sustained on the basis of double jeopardy. It is perfectly clear that the prior deportation proceedings were not penal in nature (Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698), and it is equally clear that even if the same conduct were involved in the two proceedings (an assumption contrary to the fact), the double-jeopardy prohibition does not apply to non-criminal sanctions (Helvering v. Mitchell, 303 U. S. 391). The general argument that repetitious proceedings against an individual on the same charge violate the Fifth Amendment (Pet. 14) is merely another method of stating the res judicata argument with constitutional overtones. The answer was given by this Court in United States v. Williams, 341 U. S. 58.

2. Petitioners contend that trial on an indictment returned in 1949 for offenses committed in 1945 was barred by the three-year statute of limitations (18 U. S. C. 3282, infra, p. 39) incorporated into the Criminal Code by the Act of June 25, 1948,

62 Stat. 683, 828. The Government contends, however, and both courts below held, that the Wartime Suspension of Limitations Act (18 U. S. C. (1948 rev.) 3287) suspended the running of the statute of limitations until December 31, 1949.[9] In addition, we believe that the saving provision of the Act of June 25, 1948, revising Title 18 (Section 21, 62 Stat. 862), preserved as to counts 2 and 3 the earlier five-year statute of limitations (8 U. S. C. 746 (g), infra, p. 38) applicable in 1945 to offenses against the naturalization laws.[10]

(a) The Suspension Act is applicable:

(1) Fraud is a necessary element of each of the offenses charged.—The pertinent provisions of the Suspension Act suspend the operation of the statute of limitations as to offenses "involving fraud or attempted fraud against the United States or any agency thereof in any manner, whether by conspiracy or not * * *" (Appendix, infra, p. 39). We submit that all three counts of the indictment charge offenses which involve fraud against the United States.

---

[9] The President proclaimed the cessation of hostilities on December 31, 1946 (12 F. R. 1).

[10] The trial court in denying a motion to dismiss the indictment based its holding in part on the applicablity of the five-year provision of 8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 746 (g), infra, p. 38). United States v. Bridges, 86 F. Supp. 922, 926-927. The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in a prior opinion upheld the district court, but on rehearing, reversed itself to hold that the savings clause preserved only the penal provisions 8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 746(a)(1), 746(a)(5)), and not the special five-year statute of limitations incorporated in the same section, 8 U. S. C. 746 (g). Bridges v. United States, 199 F. 2d 811, 819-820.

Count one charges a conspiracy to defraud the United States, a crime requiring proof of specific intent to defraud the United States. Cf. Jordan v. De George, 341 U. S. 223, 232; Glasser v. United States, 315 U. S. 60, 66-67; Hammerschmidt v. United States, 265 U. S. 182, 187; United States v. Hirsch, 100 U. S. 33, 35. Under the prototype of the present legislation, the 1921 proviso to R. S. 1044 (Appendix, infra, p. 40), this Court in United States v. Noveck, 271 U. S. 201, cited the conspiracy statute, R. S. 37, as an illustration of an offense (p. 204) "* * * in which defrauding or an attempt to defraud the United States is an ingredient under the statute defining the offense." See also Miller v. United States, 24 F. 2d 353, 360 (C.A. 2), certiorari denied, 276 U. S. 638; Falter v. United States, 23 F. 2d 420 (C.A. 2), certiorari denied, 277 U. S. 590.

The third count against petitioners Schmidt and Robertson was laid under Section 346(a)(5) of the Nationality Act (Appendix, infra, p. 38), which made it a felony to aid any person not entitled thereto to obtain a certificate of naturalization "knowing the same to have been procured by fraud * * *." Manifestly this involves fraud.

Only the statute involved in the second count against Bridges alone, making it a felony "knowingly to make a false statement under oath" in a naturalization proceeding (Section 346(a)(1) of the Nationality Act, Appendix, infra, p. 37) does not in terms use the word fraud. We submit, however, that fraud is clearly "involved" within the meaning of the Suspension Act.

This Court has long recognized that false swearing in a naturalization proceeding—invariably involving as it does a deceit directed at the United States through which the rights which attach to citizenship, and the documents evidencing those rights, are obtained—is a fraud against the United States. Knauer v. United States, 328 U. S. 654, 671-673; United States v. Ness, 245 U. S. 319, 324; see also Del Guercio v. Pupko, 160 F. 2d 799 (C.A. 9); Schwinn v. United States, 112 F. 2d 74 (C.A. 9), affirmed, 311 U. S. 616; United States v. Saracino, 43 F. 2d 76 (C.A. 3); United States v. Choy Kum, 91 F. Supp. 769 (N.D. Calif.). This provision is not like the general perjury statute, where the offense as defined may not necessarily involve the United States. Cf. United States v. Noveck, 271 U. S. 201. Here the false swearing must be in connection with obtaining a valuable right from the United States. An intent to defraud the United States may be inherent in statutory language although not spelled out in any set formula of words. Weinhandler v. United States, 20 F. 2d 359, 360-361 (C.A. 2), certiorari denied, 275 U. S. 554. The absurdity of giving controlling weight to the use of the word "fraud" as against the substance of the crime defined, is well illustrated by this case, for on such theory, the aiders and abettors could be prosecuted as in count 3, since Section 346(a)(5), infra, p. 38, used the word "fraud" but the principal could not.

(2) Fraud, under the Suspension Act, does not import a propriety or pecuniary loss to the govern- ment.—Petitioners also urge that the Suspension Act applies only to crimes involving a pecuniary or proprietary loss to the government, relying on Marzani v. United States, 168 F. 2d 133 (C.A. D.C.), affirmed by an equally divided Court, 335 U. S. 895, and reaffirmed by an equally divided Court on reargument, 336 U. S. 922.[11] In that case the Court of Appeals reversed certain counts, not necessary to sustain the judgment, on the ground that the suspension provision was inapplicable to a prosecution under the False Claims Act, for falsely swearing to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, that the defendant had never been a member of the Communist Party. The court based its holding that the fraud contemplated by the Suspension Act must involve pecuniary or proprietary loss to the government because of the court's conception of United States v. Noveck, 271 U. S. 201; United States v. McElvain, 272 U. S. 633; and United States v. Scharton, 285 U. S. 518. None of these cases, however, supports the result reached. In the Noveck case, as we have pointed out (supra, p. 18), this Court referred specifically to the general conspiracy statute as an example of a statute in which fraud against the United States was an ingredient. It is significant that this particular statute should have been referred to because by the time the Noveck case was decided, the contention that there could be no conspiracy to defraud the United States without an aim to deprive it in a pecuniary or proprietary way had long been discarded. Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S. 462; Curley v. United States, 130 Fed. 1 (C.A. 1), certiorari denied, 195 U. S. 628.[12]

---

[11] Marzani's petition for a writ of certiorari to this Court did not raise the question of the suspension provision. The government argued, as independent grounds for affirmance of the judgment, that the counts reversed below had improperly been held not to fall within the Suspension Act, but, in the absence of an opinion by this Court it is impossible to tell whether this Court deemed that question properly before it.

(3) The Conflict on the Applicability of the Suspension Act.—Although, for the reasons set forth above, we believe the decision below is correct, it is in conflict with the decision of the Second Circuit in United States v. Obermeier,[13] 186 F. 2d 243, 256-257 (C.A. 2), certiorari denied, 340 U. S. 951, on the question whether Section 346(a)(1) of the Nationality Act, upon which the second count is based, defines a crime involving fraud within the meaning of the Suspension Act. It also conflicts in principle with the holding in Marzani v. United States, supra, that fraud against the United States

---

[12] Petitioner's reliance upon this Court's recent decision in United States v. Beacon Brass Co., 344 U.S. 43, is misplaced. In holding that the indictment there involved, alleging a willful attempt to evade taxes under Section 145(b) of the Internal Revenue Code—an attempt which was probably also a violation of former Section 35(a) of the Criminal Code—stated an offense within Section 145(b), this Court observed that the three-year statute of limitations applicable to offenses under Section 35(a) had run. 344 U.S. at p. 45. But the possibility that the statute had been tolled by the suspension statute was neither raised nor presented for decision in that case.

[13] The Obermeier case involved three counts, one of which was timely without regard to the Suspension Act. Since concurrent sentences had been imposed on all three counts, the holding of the Court of Appeals as to the Suspension Act affected only a $1,000 fine imposed in addition to the prison term on one of the counts held barred. This Court denied not only the Government's petition but also a petition by Obermeier with respect to the count on which his conviction was upheld.

within the meaning of the Suspension Act must involve pecuniary or proprietary loss.

The conflict relates to a matter of diminishing importance. In view of the proclamation of cessation of hostilities on December 31, 1946, the terminal date under the Suspension Act for the prosecution of offenses committed before that date and normally subject to the three-year statute of limitations was, in the government's view, December 31, 1952, and December 31, 1949, in the view taken by the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in United States v. Klinger, 199 F. 2d 645, petition for a writ of certiorari pending, No. 527. While we stated in the petition for certiorari in the Klinger case that there are over one hundred prosecutions which may be effected by the question there raised, that number represents all indictments for offenses considered covered by the Suspension Act which were returned between December 31, 1949 and December 31, 1952. Most of those involve offenses clearly falling within the terms of the Suspension Act, such as cases arising under the Surplus Property Act or cases clearly involving pecuniary fraud.[14] While we have no exact figures on the breakdown, we know of no other cases arising under the Nationality Act which would be affected by the conflict with the Ober-

---

[14] As set forth in our Statement as to Jurisdiction, United States v. Grainger, this Term, involving a false claim as distinguished from a false statement under former Section 35(A) of the Criminal Code, is such a case. The statements under the heading, "The Question is Substantial," in the jurisdictional statement in that case, referred to by petitioners (Pet. 19), have reference to the merit of the issue raised, rather than to its importance.

meier decision.[15] The conflict with Marzani on the issue of the necessity of showing pecuniary fraud covers a broader field, but still far less than the total of one hundred cases referred to above.

(b). The running of the five-year statute of limitations applicable to counts two and three of the indictment was preserved by a saving provision in its 1948 repealer.

At the time of the commission of the crimes charged in counts two and three, the penal provisions of the Nationality Act were governed by a special 5-year statute of limitations (8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 746 (g), infra, p. 38) incorporated in the same Section of the Act which defined the various nationality crimes. If the 5-year limitations period controls the prosecution of offenses defined by 8 U.S.C. 746(a)(1), infra, p. 37, and 746(a)(5), infra, p. 38, the prosecution which was instituted by the filing of the indictment on May 25, 1949 was timely instituted as to these two counts.

Despite the decision of the court below (which reversed itself on this point on rehearing), and the opinion in United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243 (C.A. 2) certiorari denied, 340 U. S. 951, the government's view is that the saving provisions in the repealer (Section 21 of the Act of June 25, [15] We contend, infra, that, despite the holding in Obermeier and in the decision below, the five-year limitations period of 8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 746(g) should be held applicable to a prosecution, such as this, for an offense under the Nationality Act which occurred prior to the revision of the Criminal Code in 1948.

---

1948, 62 Stat. 683) saved this special 5-year statute.

Section 21 provides in part:

> The sections or parts thereof of the Revised Statutes or Statutes at Large enumerated in the following schedule are hereby repealed. Any rights or liabilities now existing under such sections or parts thereof shall not be affected by this repeal. * * *. [Among the sections so repealed was the limitation provision of Section 346(g) of the Nationality Act of 1940, supra.]

The reasoning of the Obermeier opinion is that Congress intended to preserve the status quo only as to so-called "substantive" matter in the repealed Criminal Code and to discard the "procedural". On this premise, although Section 346(a)(1), and (a)(5) survive the repeal with respect to acts committed before the repealer in 1948, subsection (g) of the same Section, does not.

This artificial attempt to limit the saving provision of Section 21 to "substantive" matter destroys its obvious intent of preserving the status quo on earlier offenses. The process of simplifying and clarifying the law would be fairly painful if subsequently enacted provisions were constantly intermingling with the earlier provisions. The new provisions—particularly in a complete codification—establish their own independent structure and do not fit together with the contradictory earlier provisions. For this reason, it is normally appropriate to leave the earlier provisions as they stand applicable to cases antedating the change in the law, and simply to permit the passage of time to make their unsatisfactory details no longer relevant. This is particularly true as to a special statute of limitations such as Section 346(g) of the Nationality Act. For that reason, newly enacted statutes of limitations are construed to operate prospectively, absent some direction to the contrary. United States v. St. Louis, San Francisco & Texas Ry. Co., 270 U. S. 1. Fullerton-Krueger Lumber Co. v. Northern Pacific Ry. Co., 266 U. S. 435; United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. United States for the use of Struthers Wells Co., 209 U. S. 306.

Furthermore, the reasoning in Obermeier, on which petitioners rely, assumes the postulate that a statute of limitations is merely a procedural provision and therefore cannot be a "right or liability" within the meaning of the saving provision. We do not believe that the word "liability" includes only the bare language defining a particular offense. Section 21 has been given a broader meaning to include all matters which limit the punishment of a crime in any way. We believe such meaning was intended by Congress. Cf. Hoiness v. United States, 335 U. S. 297, 300-301; Hiatt v. Hilliard, 180 F. 2d 453 (C.A. 5); United States v. Kirby, 176 F. 2d 101 (C.A. 2); Lovely v. United States, 175 F. 2d 312 (C.A. 4), certiorari denied, 338 U. S. 834. The term liability was used not only to preserve the mere formal definitions of the crime, but also all of the elements which limit the punishment to which the defendants became liable on commission of the acts charged. United States v. Reisinger, 128 U. S. 398; United States v. Ulrici, 28 Fed. Cas. p. 328, No. 16,594, 3 Dillon 532, 534; People v. Driessen, 178 Mich. 118, 144 N. W. 526.

In a recent case this Court, dealing with a comparable issue arising under Section 13 of the Revised Statutes (1 U. S. C. 109), stated:

> * * * But where the object of Congress was to destroy rights in the future while saving those which have accrued, to strike down enforcing provisions that have special relation to the accrued right and as such are part and parcel of it, is to mutilate that right and hence to defeat rather than further the legislative purpose. * * *. [De La Rama SS. Co. v. United States, No. 368, this Term, decided February 2, 1953.]

Finally, even if the word liability saved only substantive liabilities, whatever that term means in the abstract, a statute limiting the time within which a defendant may be prosecuted "* * * goes to his liability as a matter of substantive law * * *". United States v. Oppenheimer, 242 U. S. 85; United States ex rel. Hassell v. Mathues, 27 F. 2d 137 (E. D. Pa.). There is no reasonable basis for relegating the provision which defines the time during which the United States may bring an action, and the defendant remains liable to prosecution, to the category of procedural matters which do not in any way limit rights and liabilities.

3. Petitioners make four arguments to show that they have been unconstitutionally denied a fair trial.

(a) It is contended that the trial court erred in refusing to accept in evidence the Supreme Court's opinion in Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135, apparently offered on the theory that the opinion justified petitioners Robertson and Schmidt in believing that Bridges was not a Communist. Both testified to this effect at the trial. Thus Schmidt testified (R. 4225-4226):

> Q. Well, Mr. Schmidt, in this case you are charged with entering into a fraudulent conspiracy to deceive our Government and to evade the laws of the United States. Will you tell us, please, what were your bases for making those answers as you gave them, and what were your reasons?
>
> A. Well, No. 1: My very long association through the years with Harry Bridges in our trade union activity, which came to mean that this man is engaged in the same sort of activity which I happen to be engaged in, which has as its objective to improve the standard of living of the workers, and I didn't think that that was a bad thing; and, secondly, I had read the decision of the Supreme Court, and I thought, well, as long as the highest tribunal in the United States of America has made a decision with respect to this case, the matter is now settled for all time; and I had no hesitation to recommend this man for citizenship.[16]

---

[16] See also Schmidt's testimony at R. 4617 to the effect that "I studied the majority decision and I studied the concurring decision, and I made up my mind then and there that President

Robertson testified substantially to the same effect at R. 4617-4618, 4624-4625.

Since, as pointed out above, the opinion in actuality did not pass on the factual issue as to whether Bridges was a member of the Communist Party, permitting the opinion to be read in evidence would hardly serve to bolster this testimony. Its exclusion could not therefore have been prejudicial to the petitioners. Certainly the admission of the opinion would have confused the jury and necessitated an attempt to explain its significance in relation to the jury's fact-finding function.

Moreover, the evidence shows that all three petitioners met together in Communist meetings after 1940, and that each knew that the other was a Communist (see, for example, R. 3646-3652). Robertson, besides being an officer of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, was a member of the special committee of the Communist Party in San Francisco known as "God's Committee" after 1944 (R. 5834, 5842, 5930-5931). Schmidt, who played a prominent part in various Communist meetings over decades, was a Communist Party member at least as early as May 1934 (R. 1312-1314). The Supreme Court's decision in Bridges v. Wixon, supra, obviously had no bearing on what these petitioners knew about the activities of Bridges in the Communist Party.

(b) Petitioners next contend that the trial court committed prejudicial error in addressing certain

---

Bridges was not, had never been, and was never affiliated with the Communist Party; and the Supreme Court of the United States is something that I think speaks with authority."

questions to the defense witness, Father Paul Meinecke, which they say tended to indicate that the priest was mentally unbalanced (R. 4380-4381), and in giving certain instructions to the jury with respect to these questions, which they say compounded the error (R. 4387).

Father Meinecke, a Catholic priest who had been stationed in San Francisco but subsequently transferred to a small town in Nevada, was called as a character witness for Bridges (R. 4352-4355). He testified that the reputation of Bridges for truth, honesty, and integrity "is of the best" but qualified this answer by saying that this was his "personal opinion" based on personal association (R. 4358). The Court questioned the witness as follows (R. 4380-4383):

> Q. Do you have difficulty, Father, with your memory or recollection under ordinary conditions?
>
> A. In Nevada there are no clocks and no calendars. We don't know one day from another, and it is easy for one to become careless about pegging dates, although I wasn't that way when I was here in San Francisco.
>
> Q. In San Francisco, Father, you were perfectly conversant and well oriented, weren't you, with respect to dates and the like?
>
> A. That's right.
>
> Q. Since you went to Nevada your orientation has become poor, has it?
>
> A. No; the years have sort of run together. I say a couple of years ago, and then I remember back, it was 15 years ago.

Q. Have you been recently subjected to medical treatment, Father?

At this point, there was violent protest from defense counsel.[17] The court instructed the jury as follows (R. 4382-4383):

> The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I say to you at this stage of the case that the questions that I asked were asked in perfect propriety. Any question I addressed to the priest was born as a result of the examination conducted on direct and cross-examination. Mr. MacInnis invited me to query the priest. At that juncture I refrained from interrogating him.
>
> I say to you that the respect I have for the priest or any priest or any man of the cloth, be he Catholic, Protestant or any other faith or denomination, is not to be reflected upon by anything I asked this man. A witness coming into a court of law, ladies and gentlemen, subjects himself or herself to cross-examination, and when a person responds to direct questions, that person in the course of events is to be and should be subjected to cross-examination. I believe that the questions presented by Mr. Donohue to this priest were dignified and proper. I think that the questions I asked the priest were dignified and proper.

After defense counsel made a motion for a mistrial, the court gave a cautionary instruction which included the following (R. 4386-4387):

---

[17] The outburst at this point was the basis of the conviction for contempt of one of defense counsel. See MacInnis v. United States, 191 F. 2d 157 (C.A. 9), certiorari denied, 342 U.S. 953.

Latterly, in my examination of Father Meinecke some mention was made by counsel concerning the asserted impropriety of a question on my part to the father. I might say to you that that was not born of any desire on my part, nor was it designed to inquire into Father Meinecke's mental processes. Nor was it to reflect upon his integrity. The question was born and conceived out of a desire on my part to accord fairness to the witness, for the reason that mention was made during the course of this testimony that he left San Francisco for Nevada; an inference might be drawn from that departure that it had something to to do with activities in trade unionism and the like. The father on the witness stand volunteered that he asked to be transferred. I merely wanted to inquire, ladies and gentlemen, a very simple question, not born of curiosity on my part, but born of a desire to provide you with all the facts surrounding the father, and it was to the end that I might inquire as to his health. Very many people have to leave large metropolitan areas to go to less burdensome parishes and that was the reason underlying my question.

On the redirect examination (R. 4476-4482), Father Meinecke was questioned by defense counsel as to his memory and his health (R. 4480-4482). The record thus refutes the contention that the court was guilty of prejudicial misconduct.

But even assuming that the court's conduct in regard to the witness, Father Meinecke, constituted error, it was not so prejudicial as to constitute grounds for reversal. As we have indicated, Father Meinecke testified only as to his personal opinion and not as to Bridges' reputation. Cf. Wigmore, Evidence (3d ed. 1940) § 1980. And in addition to Father Meinecke, there were eleven other character witnesses who testified in Bridges' behalf.

(c) Petitioners next contend that they were prejudiced by an erroneous and improper limitation on the cross-examination of Lawrence Kesler, whom they identified as a "key prosecution witness" (Pet. 21). It appears that Kesler was called to identify a hotel registration card introduced as Government's Exhibit 9, which was relevant to show that another Government witness, Michener, was in San Francisco at a particular time to attend a Communist Party meeting at which Michener had testified that Bridges was also present.

Kesler's direct examination related solely to identifying the card, and stating the circumstances in which he got it from the hotel (R. 3578-3580). His cross-examination also went fully into these circumstances (R. 3584-3598).

Defense counsel then attempted to broaden the inquiry to show the witness' purposes in testifying and to show that the prosecution had withheld the production of the card in order not to be embarrassed by pinning its showing of Bridges' whereabouts to definite dates, on which Bridges might have shown that he was elsewhere. Thus, defense counsel asked (R.3598):

Q. Mr. Kesler, have you the desire unjustly > and contrary to the facts, to procure a conviction of the defendants in this case?

He stated this to be preliminary to questions designed to determine "this man's motive and interest right now" (R. 3598). He stated further, in defending this question (R. 3599):

> * * * this little card that was put in so inadvertently now, if your Honor please, convicts the officers of the prosecution of fraud, corruption, deceit and concealment, and I will show you how in a moment.

The defense theory apparently was that the failure of Michener, whose presence at the hotel was being shown by the card, to testify himself that he was present on that date, made appropriate and permissible defense cross-examination of Kesler to prove some kind of fraud, dishonesty, or trickery on the part of the prosecution.

But it is clear that these questions went beyond the scope of proper cross-examination. The reasons which might have caused Michener not to testify as to the visit in question to San Francisco are wholly unrelated to the question whether Kesler's testimony-in-chief was credible. The purpose of permitting attacks on credibility is to show that the testimony-in-chief should not be believed. The attacks on Kesler here involved could have had no such effect. The only significance of his testimony on direct was to identify an exhibit whose authenticity is not attacked. The petitioner's challenge to this witness, ostensibly an attack on his credibility, in fact was an attempt to show that somehow the prosecution was proceeding unfairly and, presumably thereby, to show by indirection that Kesler was not credible. It was surely not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to refuse to permit such cross-examination.

Limitation of cross-examination is peculiarly within the province of the trial court. Glasser v. United States, 315 U.S. 60, 83; United States v. Fotopulos, 180 F. 2d 631, 640 (C.A. 9); Chevillard v. United States, 155 F. 2d 929, 935 (C.A. 9). The extent to which collateral matters can be brought in to test credibility is especially subject to the discretion of the trial court. United States v. Toner, 173 F. 2d 140, 144 (C.A. 3). Patently, the attempt to bring in evidence as to the whole preparation of the Government's case, the witnesses interviewed, and all of the collateral matters incident to trial preparation, as petitioners here sought to do (R. 3605-7), far transcends any direct test of a particular witness' credibility, and the scope of the narrow issue developed through him on the direct examination.[18]

(d) Petitioners finally contend that prejudicial error was committed when the jury were told that a reasonable doubt was one "for which a good reason can be given" (R. 7885-7886). Their argument

---

[18] An additional point is made by petitioners, although apparently not as an independent ground of review, that the trial court read certain language from another opinion which, they say, reflected on their counsel. Whatever the significance of the language was, the court advised the jury to disregard it as soon as it's possibly prejudicial effect was called to the court's attention (R. 3610

(Pet. 22-23) takes the language out of context. The whole passage is as follows:

> The term reasonable doubt means a doubt for which a good reason can be given, in light of all the evidence. It means a doubt which is substantial and not merely shadowy. It does not mean a doubt which is merely capricious or speculative. Neither does it mean a doubt born of reluctance on the part of a juror to perform an unpleasant duty, or a doubt arising out of sympathy for a defendant or out of anything other than a candid consideration of all the evidence presented.
>
> Without its being restated or repeated, you are to understand that the requirement that a defendant's guilt be shown beyond a reasonable doubt is to be considered in connection with and as accompanying all the instructions that are given to you.
>
> Remember that the defendant or defendants are entitled to any reasonable doubt, as defined, that you may have in your minds; but at the same time also remember that if you have no such doubt, the government is entitled to a verdict.

In context, it is plain that the definition of reasonable doubt is standard, complete, and fair. Cf. United States v. Farina, 184 F. 2d 18, 21 (C.A. 2), certiorari denied, 340 U.S. 875; Young v. Territory of Hawaii, 160 F. 2d 289 (C.A. 9), certiorari denied, 331 U.S. 849.

CONCLUSION

If the conflict on the suspension statute seems to this Court sufficiently important to necessitate review, then we respectfully submit that the grant of certiorari should be limited to the issue of whether the prosecution is barred by the statute of limitations.

Respectfully submitted,

WALTER J. CUMMINGS, JR.,
Solicitor General.
WARREN OLNEY III,
Assistant Attorney General,
JOHN F. DAVIS,
Special Assistant to the Attorney General.
BEATRICE ROSENBERG,
CARL H. IMLAY,
JOHN R. WILKINS,
Attorneys.

FEBRUARY 1953.

APPENDIX

1. Count one of the indictment is based on Section 37 of the Criminal Code, 18 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] 88, in effect at the time the offenses were committed (now 18 U.S.C. [1948 rev.] 371). It provided:

> If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each of the parties to such conspiracy shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

2. Counts two and three are based on Section 346 of the Nationality Act of 1940, c. 876, 54 Stat. 1137, 8 U.S.C. 746, which was in effect at the time of the offenses. It provided in pertinent part as follows:

> (a) It is hereby made a felony for any alien or other person, whether an applicant for naturalization or citizenship, or otherwise, and whether an employee of the Government of the United States or not—
>
> (1) Knowingly to make a false statement under oath, either orally or in writing, in any case, proceeding, or matter relating to, or under, or by virtue of any law of the United States relating to naturalization or citizenship.[19]

* * * * *

---

[19] Repealed and superseded by 18 U.S.C. (1948 rev.) 1015(a):

"Whoever knowingly makes any false statement under oath, in any case, proceeding, or matter relating to, or under, or by

> (5) To encourage, aid, advise, or assist any person not entitled thereto to obtain, accept, or receive any certificate of arrival, declaration of intention, certificate of naturalization, or certificate of citizenship, or other documentary evidence of naturalization or of citizenship—
>
> a. Knowing the same to have been procured by fraud; * * *
>
> * * * * *
>
> (d) Any person violating any provision of subsection (a) of this section shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.
>
> * * * * *
>
> (g) No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any crime arising under the provisions of this Act unless the indictment is found or the information is filed within five years next after the commission of such crime.

On September 1, 1948, prior to the return of the indictment on May 25, 1949, the 1948 revision of Title 18, U.S.C., became effective. Section 21 of the act revising Title 18 (June 25, 1948, 62 Stat. 683) provides:

> The sections or parts thereof of the Revised Statutes or Statutes at Large enumerated in the following schedule are hereby repealed. Any rights or liabilities now existing under such sections or parts thereof shall not be affected by this repeal.

---

virtue of any law of the United States relating to naturalization, citizenship, or registry of aliens; * * *

* * * * *

"Shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both."

Among the sections so repealed were Section 346(a)(1) and (a) (5) of the Nationality Act, supra, upon which counts two and three were based, and also subsection (g) of the same section, the special five-year limitation provision incorporated into that same section which also defines the various crimes under the Act.

4. Section 3282 of the 1948 revision of Title 18 provides:

> Except as otherwise expressly provided by law, no person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense, not capital, unless the indictment is found or the information is instituted within three years next after such offense shall have been committed.

5. 18 U.S.C. (1948 rev.) 3287 reads in part as follows:

> Wartime suspension of limitations. When the United States is at war the running of any statute of limitations applicable to any offense (1) involving fraud or attempted fraud against the United States or any agency thereof in any manner, whether by conspiracy or not, * * * shall be suspended until three years after the termination of hostilities as proclaimed by the President or by a concurrent resolution of Congress.[20]

The Wartime Suspension of Limitations Act adopted language similar to that contained in a proviso appended to R. S. 1044 by the Act of November 17, 1921, c. 124, 42 Stat. 220, which read as follows:

---

[20] The President proclaimed the termination of hostilities on December 31, 1946. 12 F.R. 1.

This section appeared in substantially the same form at 18 U.S.C. 590a before the 1948 revision.

> No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense, not capital, except as provided in section 1046 [crimes under revenue laws or slave trade laws], unless the indictment is found, or the information is instituted, within three years next after such offense shall have been committed: Provided however, that in offenses involving the defrauding or attempts to defraud the United States or any agency thereof, whether by conspiracy or not, and in any manner, and now indictable under any existing statutes, the period of limitations shall be six years. This Act shall apply to acts, offenses, or transactions, where the existing statute of limitations has not yet fully run, but this proviso shall not apply to acts, offenses, or transactions which are already barred by the provisions of existing laws. [Italics supplied.][21]

---

[21] The italicized language was placed in this section by the Act of November 17, 1921, supra. It was eliminated from the section by the Act of December 27, 1927, c. 6, 45 Stat. 51. The section without the italicized language now appears, with slight changes in phraseology, as 18 U.S.C. 3282.

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT U.S.

Office - Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
MAR 27 1953
HAROLD B. WILLEY, Clerk

No. 548

In the Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1952

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT AND J. R. ROBERTSON, Petitioners

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

On Petition For a Writ of Certiorari To The United States Court of Appeals For The Ninth Circuit

---

MEMORANDUM FOR THE UNITED STATES IN OPPOSITION TO PETITIONERS' PETITION FOR ENLARGEMENT OF SCOPE OF REVIEW ON CERTIORARI

In the Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1952

No. 548

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT AND J. R. ROBERTSON, Petitioners

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

On Petition For a Writ of Certiorari To The United States Court of Appeals For The Ninth Circuit

---

MEMORANDUM FOR THE UNITED STATES IN OPPOSITION TO PETITIONERS' PETITION FOR ENLARGEMENT OF SCOPE OF REVIEW ON CERTIORARI

Petitioners' application for enlargement of the scope of review on certiorari presents, as to Question 3 of the petition for a writ of certiorari, no new matter not already presented in the petition and answered in the Government's memorandum in reply thereto (pp. 26-35).

The only aspect of Question 3 to which petitioners specifically advert in their present application is the exclusion from evidence of this Court's opinion in Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U.S. 135. Petitioners now say that that point is related to the question of res judicata presented by Question 1 in the petition for a writ of certiorari. But that question is one of law, the solution of which does not call for submission of the opinion to the jury as part of the evidence in the case. Exclusion of the opinion as evidence, of course, does not prevent the courts from taking it into consideration in determining its effect as a prior adjudication, as the court below did. R. 838-7. It is to be observed that the offer as evidence for the jury was not based upon the theory of res judicata but for its bearing upon the witness' state of mind. R. 526-7, 4226-7, 4248-9.

Respectfully submitted,

ROBERT L. STERN,
Acting Solicitor General

March 1953

☆U. S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE 1953—247818/P O.1359

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT, U.S.

Office - Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
APR 28 1953
HAROLD B. WILLEY, Clerk

No. 548

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT, AND
J. R. ROBERTSON, PETITIONERS
v.
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR THE UNITED STATES

INDEX

Page
Opinions below 1
Jurisdiction 2
Questions presented 2
Statutes involved 2
Statement 6
A. The naturalization proceedings 7
B. Recruitment of Bridges into the Communist Party 11
C. The participation of Bridges in Communist activities during the 1930's 14
D. The Communist Central Committee 16
E. Other Communist activity in the 1940's 18
Summary of argument 20
Argument:
I. The prosecution is not barred by the statute of limitations 26
A. The Suspension Act is applicable 27
1. The Suspension Act is applicable to Count II of the indictment 32
(a) The offense of obtaining citizenship by means of a false statement involves fraud against the United States 32
(b) The Suspension of Limitations Act is not limited in application to pecuniary frauds or war frauds 38
2. The Suspension Act is applicable to Count I 44
3. The Suspension Act is applicable to Count III of the indictment 50
B. Section 21 of the Act of June 25, 1948, revising the Criminal Code, saved the five-year statute of limitations in the Nationality Act of 1940 for offenses here involved in Counts II and III 52
1. The basic purpose of the saving provision is to preserve the status quo on earlier offenses 54
2. Statutes of limitations are to be construed prospectively unless a contrary intent clearly appears 57

Argument—Continued

Page

3. This Court and the Courts of Appeals have applied the language used in Section 21 to provisions other than those defining substantive rights 61
4. The language of the 1948 revision does not indicate a Congressional intent to have the statute of limitations operate retrospectively 65

II. The indictment is not barred as to petitioner Bridges under the principles of res judicata, estoppel, or the due process provision of the Fifth Amendment 71
A. There is no final binding adjudication of fact in the deportation proceedings 74
B. The naturalization decree in 1945 is not conclusive of any issues in the present proceedings 85
C. The indictment was not barred by the Fifth Amendment 89

Conclusion 92

CITATIONS

Cases:

Bigelow v. Old Dominion Copper Co., 225 U. S. 111 85
Brenci v. United States, 175 F. 2d 90 33
Bridges v. Wixon, 144 F. 2d 927, reversed, 326 U. S. 135 ..... 24, 72, 73, 76, 77, 78, 82
Bridges, Ex parte, 49 F. Supp. 292 76
Carlson v. Landon, 342 U. S. 524 83
Churchill Tabernacle v. Federal Communications Commission, 160 F. 2d 244 81
Collins v. Loisel, 262 U. S. 426 78
Commissioner v. Sunnen, 333 U. S. 591 ..... 25, 74, 85, 89
Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U. S. 351 85
Curley v. United States, 130 Fed. 1, certiorari denied, 195 U. S. 628 35
Danebo Lumber Co. v. Koutsky-Brennan-Vana Co., 182 F. 2d 489, certiorari denied, 340 U. S. 830 ..... 44, 49
De La Rama Steamship Co. v. United States, 344 U. S. 386 ..... 62, 65
Del Guercio v. Pupko, 160 F. 2d 799 33
Federal Communications Commission v. Pottsville Broadcasting Co., 309 U. S. 134 80
Federal Trade Commission v. Motion Picture Advertising Co., 344 U. S. 392 74
Federal Trade Commission v. Raladam Co., 316 U. S. 149 84
Flynn ex rel. Ham Loy Wong v. Ward, 95 F. 2d 742 82
Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698 82
Furrow v. Koutsky-Brennan-Vana Co., 182 F. 2d 496, certiorari denied, 340 U. S. 830 ..... 44, 49

Cases—Continued | Page

Glasser v. United States, 315 U. S. 60 — 22, 45, 50

Grandview Dairy v. Jones, 157 F. 2d 5, certiorari denied, 329 U. S. 787 — 81

Great Northern Railway Co. v. United States, 208 U. S. 452 — 64

Grin v. Shine, 187 U. S. 181 — 38

Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S. 462 — 35, 38, 39

Hallowell v. Commons, 239 U. S. 506 — 64

Hammerschmidt v. United States, 265 U. S. 182 — 43

Harisiades v. Shaughnessy, 342 U. S. 580 — 25, 82, 90

Harris v. Biszkowicz, 100 F. 2d 854 — 78

Haruichi Yoshihara v. Carmichael, 115 F. 2d 110 — 33

Hazel-Atlas Co. v. Hartford Co., 322 U. S. 238 — 88

Heikkila v. Barber, 345 U. S. 229 — 83

Hertz v. Woodman, 218 U. S. 205 — 64

Hiatt v. Hilliard, 180 F. 2d 453 — 63

Hoiness v. United States, 335 U. S. 297 — 61–62

Home Loan Bank Board v. Mallonee, 196 F. 2d 336 — 81

Johannessen v. United States, 225 U. S. 227 — 88

Keokuk and Western R. Co. v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 301 — 85

Kessler v. Strecker, 307 U. S. 22 — 75, 78

Klapprott v. United States, 335 U. S. 601 — 89

Knauer v. United States, 328 U. S. 654 — 21, 25, 33, 34, 88

Lovely v. United States, 175 F. 2d 312, certiorari denied, 338 U. S. 834 — 63

Maney v. United States, 278 U. S. 17 — 88

Marzani v. United States, 168 F. 2d 133, affirmed, 335 U. S. 895, 336 U. S. 922 — 21, 31, 42

Miller v. United States, 24 F. 2d 353, certiorari denied, 276 U. S. 638 — 21, 42, 43, 48

Morse v. United States, 267 U. S. 80 — 78

National Labor Relations Board v. Baltimore T. Co., 140 F. 2d 51, certiorari denied, 321 U. S. 795 — 81

National Rifle Association of America v. Young, 134 F. 2d 524 — 81

Pearson v. Williams, 202 U. S. 281 — 24, 83

People v. Driessen, 178 Mich. 118, 114 N. W. 526 — 57

Pinkerton v. United States, 328 U. S. 640 — 73

Quirk v. United States, 161 F. 2d 138 — 69

Russell v. United States, 278 U. S. 181 — 59, 69

Schneiderman v. United States, 320 U. S. 118 — 87

Schwinn v. United States, 112 F. 2d 74, affirmed, 311 U. S. 616 — 33

Segal v. Travelers Insurance Co., 94 F. Supp. 423 — 84

Sekov Corp. v. United States, 139 F. 2d 197 — 84

Spencer v. Railroad Retirement Board, 166 F. 2d 342 — 81

Stillman v. United States, 177 F. 2d 607 — 69

Stone v. Stone, 136 F. 2d 761 — 30

Cases—Continued Page

Tutun v. United States, 270 U. S. 568 — 88
United States v. Beacon Brass Co., 344 U. S. 43 — 36
United States v. Choy Kum, 91 F. Supp. 769 — 33
United States v. Cohn, 270 U. S. 339 — 35, 38
United States v. Falter, 23 F. 2d 420 — 48
United States v. Gilliland, 312 U. S. 86 — 35
United States v. Gottfried, 165 F. 2d 360, certiorari denied, 333 U. S. 860 — 21, 43
United States v. Grainger, Nos. 634, 635, and 636, Oct. Term, 1952 — 38
United States v. Kirby, 176 F. 2d 101 — 63
United States v. La Societe Francaise De Bien. Mut., 152 F. 2d 243, certiorari denied, 327 U. S. 793 — 81
United States v. McElvain, 272 U. S. 633 — 31, 47
United States v. Noveck, 271 U. S. 201 — 21, 29, 31, 32, 36, 37, 38, 47
United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243, certiorari denied, 340 U. S. 951 — 22, 31, 36, 56, 63, 66
United States v. Oppenheimer, 242 U. S. 85 — 23, 56, 60, 70
United States v. Reisinger, 128 U. S. 398 — 68-69
United States v. Saracino, 43 F. 2d 75 — 34
United States v. Scharton, 285 U. S. 518 — 31, 37
United States v. Smith, 342 U. S. 225 — 44
United States v. St. Louis, San Francisco & Texas Ry. Co., 270 U. S. 1 — 23, 57
United States v. Sotne & Downer Co., 274 U. S. 225 — 80, 90
United States v. Ulrici, 28 Fed. Cas. p. 328, No. 16,594, 3 Dillon 532 — 69
United States v. Willard Tablet Co., 141 F. 2d 141 — 84
United States v. Williams, 341 U. S. 58 — 26, 73, 74, 89, 91
United States ex rel. Hassell v. Mathues, 27 F. 2d 137 — 57
United States ex rel. Jankowski v. Shaughnessy, 186 F. 2d 580 — 33
United States ex rel. Lamp v. Corsi, 61 F. 2d 964 — 33
United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. United States for the use of Struthers Wells Co., 209 U. S. 306 — 58, 69
Wallace Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 323 U. S. 248 — 80, 84
Weinhandler v. United States, 20 F. 2d 359 — 38
Wilbur v. United States ex rel. Kadrie, 281 U. S. 206 — 83
Wong Chow Gin v. Cahill, 79 F. 2d 854 — 82

Statutes:

Act of February 10, 1939, 53 Stat. 1a (codifying Title 26 as the Internal Revenue Code), Sec. 4 (d) — 56
Act of June 28, 1940, 54 Stat. 673, 8 U. S. C. 137 — 75
Act of July 30, 1947, 61 Stat. 633, 640, Sec. 2 — 67
Act of June 25, 1948, 62 Stat. 683 (revising 18 U. S. C.), Sec. 21 — 4, 53, 56, 61, 70, 71

Statutes—Continued	Page
Criminal Code, 1909 revision, 35 Stat. 1155, Secs. 343, 344	55
Criminal Code, 1946 ed.:
Sec. 35 (A)	36
Sec. 37, 18 U. S. C. 88	2, 27, 38, 45
Sec. 125	36
18 U. S. C. 550	51
18 U. S. C. 590a	55
Criminal Code, 1948 rev.:
18 U. S. C. 2	51
18 U. S. C. 371	2, 45
18 U. S. C. 1015 (a)	3, 6
18 U. S. C. 1425	31
18 U. S. C. 1621	36
18 U. S. C. 3282	5, 26, 68
18 U. S. C. 3287	5, 26, 27, 39
D. C. Code 30-103	30
Nationality Act revision of 1906, 34 Stat. 603, Sec. 25	55
Nationality Act revision of 1918, 40 Stat. 542, 547, Sec. 2	55
Nationality Act of 1940, c. 876, 54 Stat. 1137, 8 U. S. C. 501, et seq.:
Secs. 301-341 (8 U. S. C. 701-741)	87
Sec. 305 (8 U. S. C. 705)	87
Sec. 307 (8 U. S. C. 707)	87
Sec. 338 (8 U. S. C. 738)	34
Sec. 346 (a) (8 U. S. C. 746 (a))	6
Sec. 346 (a) (1) (8 U. S. C. 746 (a) 1)	3, 28, 37, 46, 52
Sec. 346 (a) (5) (8 U. S. C. 746 (a) (5)	4, 28, 50, 52
Sec. 346 (d) (8 U. S. C. 746 (d))	4
Sec. 346 (g) (8 U. S. C. 746 (g))	4, 52
Sec. 347 (8 U. S. C. 747)	55
Revised Statutes of 1874:
Sec. 5398	55, 65
Sec. 5399	55, 65
1 U. S. C. 109	64, 70
1 U. S. C. 110	66
Wartime Suspension of Limitations Act, 18 U. S. C. (Supp. V), Sec. 3287	5, 26, 27, 39
Miscellaneous:
Black's Law Dictionary (3d ed.), p. 813	33
Bridges, Harry, In re Deportation Proceedings before the Attorney General (May 28, 1942)	81
Davis, Administrative Law, pp. 563-613	82
12 Fed. Reg. 1	5, 26
1 Freeman, Judgments (5th ed., 1925), Sec. 407	72
H. Rep. 304, 80th Cong.	67
H. Rep. 1789, 59th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 2	35
H. Rep. No. 2051, 77th Cong., 2d Sess.	41

Miscellaneous—Continued

Page

H. Rep. 1205, 72d Cong., 2d Sess. 66

Schopflocher, The Doctrine of Res Judicata in Administrative Law, 1942 Wisconsin Law Rev. 5–42, 198–235 82

Scott, Collateral Estoppel by Judgment, 56 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 5 85

S. Rep. No. 1544, 77th Cong., 2d Sess. 41

Webster's New International Dictionary (2d ed., 1934), 1003 33

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

No. 548

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT, AND
J. R. ROBERTSON, PETITIONERS

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

---

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR THE UNITED STATES

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the Court of Appeals, as amended on denial of rehearing (R. 8354–8433), is reported at 199 F. 2d 811. The opinion of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California denying a series of motions to dismiss the indictment (R. 10–41) is reported at 86 F. Supp. 922. The opinion of that court on the issue of res judicata raised during the trial is reported at 87 F. Supp. 14.[1]

---

[1] See also opinions on revocation of bail after judgment. 93 F. Supp. 989, reversed, 184 F. 2d 881.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Court of Appeals was entered on September 6, 1952 (R. 8296). A petition for rehearing was denied on November 18, 1952 (R. 8434). On November 28, 1952, the time for filing a petition for a writ of certiorari was extended to January 16, 1953, by order of Mr. Justice Douglas. The petition was filed January 14, 1953 and granted on March 9, 1953 (R. 8437). The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U. S. C. 1254 (1). See also Rules 37 (b) (2) and 45 (a), F. R. Crim. P.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether the fact that two previous attempts to deport an alien because of alleged communist activity have failed and that a court has entered a decree granting him naturalization precludes a prosecution relating to false statements in the alien's naturalization proceedings with respect to membership in the Communist Party.

2. Whether the prosecution is barred by the statute of limitations.

STATUTES INVOLVED

1. Count one of the indictment is based on Section 37 of the Criminal Code, 18 U. S. C. [1946 ed.] 88, in effect at the time the offenses were committed (now 18 U. S. C. [1948 rev.] 371). It provided:

> If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United > States, or to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each of the parties to such conspiracy shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

2. Counts two and three are based on Section 346 of the Nationality Act of 1940, c. 876, 54 Stat. 1137, 8 U. S. C. 746, which was in effect at the time of the offenses. It provided in pertinent part as follows:

> (a) It is hereby made a felony for any alien or other person, whether an applicant for naturalization or citizenship, or otherwise, and whether an employee of the Government of the United States or not—
>
> (1) Knowingly to make a false statement under oath, either orally or in writing, in any case, proceeding, or matter relating to, or under, or by virtue of any law of the United States relating to naturalization or citizenship.[2]
>
> * * * * *

---

[2] Repealed and superseded by 18 U. S. C. (1948 rev.) 1015 (a):

> Whoever knowingly makes any false statement under oath, in any case, proceeding, or matter relating to, or under, or by virtue of any law of the United States relating to naturalization, citizenship or registry of aliens; * * *
>
> * * * * *
>
> Shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

> (5) To encourage, aid, advise, or assist any person not entitled thereto to obtain, accept, or receive any certificate of arrival, declaration of intention, certificate of naturalization, or certificate of citizenship or other documentary evidence of naturalization or of citizenship—
>
> a. Knowing the same to have been procured by fraud; * * *
>
> * * * * *
>
> (d) Any person violating any provision of subsection (a) of this section shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.
>
> * * * * *
>
> (g) No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any crime arising under the provisions of this Act unless the indictment is found or the information is filed within five years next after the commission of such crime.

3. On September 1, 1948, prior to the return of the indictment on May 25, 1949, the 1948 revision of Title 18, U. S. C., became effective. Section 21 of the Act revising Title 18 (June 25, 1948, 62 Stat. 683) provides:

> The sections or parts thereof of the Revised Statutes or Statutes at Large enumerated in the following schedule are hereby repealed. Any rights or liabilities now existing under such sections or parts thereof shall not be affected by this repeal.

Among the sections so repealed were Section 346 (a) (1) and (a) (5) of the Nationality Act, supra, upon which counts two and three were based, and also subsection (g) of the same section, the special five-year limitation provision incorporated into that same section which also defines the various crimes under the Act.

4. Section 3282 of the 1948 revision of Title 18 provides:

> Except as otherwise expressly provided by law, no person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense, not capital, unless the indictment is found or the information is instituted within three years next after such offense shall have been committed.

5. 18 U. S. C. (1948 rev.) 3287 reads in part as follows:

> Wartime suspension of limitations. When the United States is at war the running of any statute of limitations applicable to any offense (1) involving fraud or attempted fraud against the United States or any agency thereof in any manner, whether by conspiracy or not, * * * shall be suspended until three years after the termination of hostilities as proclaimed by the President or by a concurrent resolution of Congress.[3]

---

[3] The President proclaimed the termination of hostilities on December 31, 1946. 12 F. R. 1.

This section appeared in substantially the same form at 18 U. S. C. 590a before the 1948 revision.

STATEMENT

On May 25, 1949, an indictment in three counts was returned against the petitioners in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California. Count one charged all three petitioners with conspiracy to defraud the United States in the proper administration of its naturalization laws by having Harry Bridges fraudulently petition for and obtain naturalization and by fraudulently representing, in the proceedings for the naturalization of Bridges, that he had never belonged to the Communist Party of the United States. The second count charged Bridges alone with the crime of knowingly making a false statement under oath relating to his naturalization proceedings, in violation of 8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 746 (a), now 18 U. S. C. 1015 (a). The third count charged the other petitioners with fraudulently aiding, advising, and assisting Bridges to procure naturalization in violation of 8 U .S. C. (1946 ed.) 746 (a). (R. 3–8.) After a trial by jury, petitioners were found guilty on the counts in which they were named (R. 8036–8038) and sentenced as follows: Bridges to two years on count I and five years on count II, the sentences to run concurrently; each of the other petitioners to two years imprisonment on counts I and III, the sentences to run concurrently (R. 235–240). After judgment was entered, the citizenship of Bridges was revoked under Section 338 (e) of the Nationality Act of 1940, 8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 738 (e). On appeal the conviction was affirmed (R. 8296).

A. THE NATURALIZATION PROCEEDINGS

At the trial, the Government proved that on June 23, 1945, petitioner Bridges went to the office of the Immigration and Naturalization Service in San Francisco and there filed an application for a Certificate of Arrival and a Preliminary Form for Petition for Naturalization (R. 449–450, 469, Gov. Ex. 1). On his application form (Gov. Ex. 1) he indicated that the two prospective witnesses for his naturalization would be Paul Schnur and Henry Schmidt. In a discussion with petitioner Robertson and others in the Bridges defense committee office, Bridges had indicated that he was going to use these two men as his naturalization witnesses (R. 4651–4652).

Pursuant to written instructions to appear before an examiner for preliminary examination and to bring his witnesses, on August 8, 1945, Bridges appeared before the naturalization deputy, Garner (R. 451, 454). Petitioner Robertson accompanied Bridges, his attorney, and his proposed witnesses, and waited outside the hearing room (R. 462–463, 4606). After swearing Bridges in, Garner questioned him about various facts called for by the application form. Garner then called for his two naturalization witnesses. (R. 451–452, 461.)

Petitioner Schmidt was the first witness. He swore that he had known Bridges since about 1932 or 1933, that he saw him at least once a month or oftener in connection with their business, and that both he and Bridges were officers of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union. On being asked if either he or Bridges was a Communist or a member of the Communist Party, Schmidt answered "no" to both questions. (R. 456–459, 468–469, 487–490, Gov. Ex. 2.)

Schmur was next sworn in but he was not acceptable as a witness because of lack of evidence of citizenship. At this juncture petitioner Robertson, who had accompanied Bridges to the hearing room, substituted as a witness for Bridges. He testified that he had known Bridges since about 1934, that both were ILWU officers and saw each other frequently, and that neither he nor Bridges was a member of the Communist Party. He also stated that in his opinion the applicant was qualified for citizenship, and was attached to the principles of the Constitution as required by law. (R. 459–464, Gov. Ex. 2.)

The petition was typed up in triplicate and signed by Bridges (R. 454, 455, 465). Petitioners Schmidt and Robertson signed the affidavit form on the reverse side of the petition and swore inter alia, that "I have personal knowledge that the petitioner is and during all such period [since August 1, 1940] has been a person of good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the United States, and in my opinion the petitioner is in every way qualified to be admitted a citizen of the United States."

On September 17, 1945, Bridges appeared before Judge Thomas Foley of the Superior Court in San Francisco for the naturalization hearing. Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson were both present in court as qualifying witnesses (R. 465–466). The certified and authenticated copy of the naturalization hearing was received in evidence as Government Exhibit No. 3 (R. 480; see also R. 133–145). Appellants Robertson and Schmidt testified that they had known Bridges for five years or longer; that he was a resident of the county at that time; that they vouched for his loyalty to the United States. They recommended him as a person of good moral character and recommended him to the court for citizenship. (R. 134.) In addition to other questions, the following question was asked Bridges and he gave the following answer (R. 138; see also Gov. Ex. 3):

> Q. Do you now, or have you ever, belonged to the Communist Party in the United States?
>
> A. I have not, I do not.

That answer is the foundation for count 2 of the indictment.

The following questions and answers thereto by Bridges were also adduced (R. 138–139; see also Gov. Ex. 3):

> Q. Do you now, or have you ever, belonged to any organization that advocated the overthrow of the government by force or violence?
>
> A. No.
>
> * * * * *
>
> Q. (By Mr. Garner): Have you ever been known, or used, any other name at any time?
>
> A. No.

After Garner had concluded his questioning of the witnesses and Bridges, a judgment admitting him to citizenship was entered (R. 552–553). Both Schmidt and Robertson remained in the court room until the proceedings were concluded (R. 4332, 4657).

The lengthy evidence adduced by the Government shows that over a long period of time prior to the naturalization proceedings Bridges had in fact been an active member of the Communist Party and was known to have been such by petitioners Robertson and Schmidt. This evidence may be summarized as follows:

B. RECRUITMENT OF BRIDGES INTO THE COMMUNIST PARTY

In 1933, there was a confused situation in the labor movement on the west coast waterfront, with different groups endeavoring to obtain dominance (R. 4101–4103; 4770–4775). The Communist Party decided to take an active part in this situation and to bolster an A. F. L. union, the International Longshoremen's Association, hereinafter referred to as the I. L. A. (R. 1247–1249). John Schomaker, a Government witness, testified that Sam Darcy, the district organizer of the Communist Party for District 13, which included California, asked him and Herman Mann, a unit organizer, who would be best as a leader for the Longshoremen's union. It was decided that petitioner Bridges was the best potential leader (R. 887–888, 957, 1247–1249). Schomaker and Mann visited petitioner Bridges at his home in late October 1933, and they discussed the revitalization of the I. L. A. (R. 732–736, 819–827).

Thereafter, Schomaker saw petitioner Bridges two or three times a week at his home, or another pre-arranged meeting place and occasionally going to or coming from the waterfront (R. 832–833). Some of these meetings were at Communist Party Headquarters at 37 Grove Street in San Francisco (R. 962–963). Bruce B. Jones was present at some of the meetings Schomaker had with Bridges. Schomaker had known Jones since about 1931 and saw him at closed meetings of the Communist Party, i. e., meetings restricted to members of the Communist Party. (R. 833–835.)[4]

One day during the winter of 1933, Schomaker and Jones had a meeting with Bridges in a restaurant in San Francisco (R. 835–837). On this occasion, Jones asked Bridges, "When are you going to join the Party, Harry?" Bridges said, "What about the name?" It was suggested that Bridges employ as a party name his mother's maiden name which was Dorgan (R. 469; see also R. 4717). After some conversation, Schomaker left the two other men for 15 or 20 minutes. (R. 839–841.) On his return, he joined Jones and they went to their headquarters of the San Francisco Communist Party. Jones showed Schomaker an application for membership in the Communist Party bearing the signature of Bridges which Schomaker recognized and could identify. (R. 841–853.) Jones and Schomaker arrived at 37 Grove Street and went into the office of Sam Darcy, the district organizer of District 13 (R. 853–854, 866.) Jones thereupon turned Bridges' application for membership in the Communist

---

[4] Jones testified as a defense witness that he had been a member of the Communist Party since the middle of 1932 (R. 3811). He was also a member of the Marine Workers Industrial Union and met Schomaker at the MWIU Hall (R. 3811).

Party over to Sam Darcy (R. 863–864, 1224).

Schomaker testified that he saw Bridges on numerous occasions pay his Communist Party dues in accordance with the normal Party practice to the unit secretary[5] (R. 873–874). He saw him pay dues to Herman Mann, Norma Perry, and J. C. Clark, who were unit secretaries at various times (R. 874–875).

In December 1935, after Schomaker had become a section organizer of the waterfront section of the Communist Party (R. 871), Bridges gave Schomaker his Communist Party book to be "controlled." The practice was to turn in the old book and receive a new one. About the middle of January 1936, Schomaker gave new books to each Party member, including Bridges, at a Communist unit meeting (R. 869–870). Again in the winter of 1936, Schomaker received Bridges' old Communist Party book, and issued him a new one in January 1937 (R. 871).

---

[5] In the Communist Party, the unit was the home base to which a member was assigned and paid dues (R. 5830). The chairman of the unit, known as a unit organizer, was contact man between the unit and the next higher echelon, the section (R. 683–684). The section organizer was in turn responsible to his district organizer (R. 727–728). In each region, the governing group was the District Committee. The district which included California was known as "District 13." Nationally the Party was governed by the Central or National Committee, of which a small policy-making group was known as the Politburo (R. 2409–2424).

In addition to units and sections, there were also "fractions" within each labor group which met as a Communist organization to discuss problems within the labor group in which the particular fraction functioned (R. 5900). A fraction meeting was held by Communist union members to plan an activity in a non-Communist meeting to follow (R. 1764). There were "Top Fractions" which existed in the San Francisco District Council of the Maritime Federation and in the California State C. I. O. as well as in the national union organizations (R. 5828–5829, 5834–5844, 5931).

Bridges' Communist Party book was made out in the name of "Harry Dorgan" (R. 885–886), Dorgan being his mother's maiden name. Dorgan thereafter became his Party name (R. 1236).

C. THE PARTICIPATION OF BRIDGES IN COMMUNIST ACTIVITIES DURING THE 1930'S

After the recruitment of Bridges into the Communist Party, he became a member of the District Committee, and of the Bureau, the executive committee of the District Committee (R. 1236–1237). Bridges and petitioner Schmidt were also members of the waterfront section of the Communist Party in San Francisco (R. 5858). Schomaker and other government witnesses attended numerous Communist meetings at which Bridges and Schmidt actively participated (R. 894–905, 910–935, 937–941, 950–951, 1006–1007, 1341–1363, 1763–1764, 1911–1928, 2890–2892, 5849–5858, 5888–5894). The Government witness Lawrence Ross, who was county organizer for San Francisco County (R. 2854), testified that he heard Bridges give a talk at a closed meeting restricted to leading Communist Party members about the situation on the waterfront as it concerned the Communist Party (R. 2862–2869, 2886–2887). Bridges and Schmidt attended closed Communist Party meetings at which persons stood at the door to recognize the Communist members as they entered (R. 921–935, 2871–2879).

Moreover, Bridges' relations with the Maritime Federation of the Pacific and the C. I. O. were not limited to their general meetings and activities; he also was active in Communist "fraction" meetings which planned Communist strategy to be infiltrated into their operations (R. 5847–5856, 5865–5871, 5888–5891).

Two government witnesses, John Schomaker and Irene Patti Harris, described a meeting held at the home of Jack Shaw on Pine Street early in the fall of 1938 at which Bridges gave a speech. Bridges made a plea for the persons present to become members of the Communist Party and told the group that he was a member (R. 1697–1704). Mrs. Harris testified (R. 1704):

> Yes. That made a very impression [sic]. I was flabbergasted when I heard him say that, because he had been accused, and I had heard it denied. And when he made that statement, why, it made a very much impression on me [sic].

Schomaker also testified that petitioner Bridges on this occasion spoke about the international situation and the necessity of the workers joining a political party that would fight in the interest of the workers, particularly in view of the rise of Fascism. Bridges "stated very emphatically that all workers who were interested in stopping these things should join the Communist Party, because he was a member of the Communist Party and he was there to fight such goings on" (R. 877–878).

D. THE COMMUNIST CENTRAL COMMITTEE

Three witnesses, Paul Crouch, Manning Johnson and Lawrence Ross, described the election of Bridges at the 1936 Communist Convention in New York to what was then the Central Committee of the Communist Party. Bridges was elected under the name of "Harry Rossi."[6] (R. 2080–2089, 2229–2233, 2355, 2351–2357, 2361, 2892–2895.)

Manning Johnson, who had held a number of posts in the Party, was elected to the National Committee in 1936 (R. 2074–2075, 2080–2083).[7]

---

[6] This alias of "Rossi," applied to Harry Bridges, grew out of the 1934 general strike in San Francisco (R. 2236–2237). At that time, Sam Darcy reported to a meeting of the National or Central Committee, giving a detailed account of the general strike in San Francisco. In this report, Sam Darcy mentioned that "Comrade Bridges" had wielded more power than Mayor Rossi in San Francisco. Jay Peters, as a result of that, thereupon affixed the alias of "Comrade Rossi" to Bridges. Thereafter, whenever reports were given on activities in California by the leading organizers, he was referred to as "Rossi". Under the name of Rossi, his name was put on the list of the 1936 convention (R. 2239–2240).

[7] The National or Central Committee was comprised of the outstanding leaders in the Communist movement throughout the country, and its membership was selected on the basis of the particular district or type of industry from which

After his election, he met the other committee members, including Bridges, who went under the alias of "Rossi" (R. 2088). At one closed session, Stachel introduced Bridges to the National Committee, and Bridges received a big ovation (R. 2229, 2234). It was explained that Bridges henceforth would not be brought to meetings of the National Committee because of his strategic position in the labor movement on the Pacific coast, and because, if it became known that he was a member of the Communist Party, he would no longer be able to move and work in the Party interests (R. 2234). Paul Crouch testified this meeting of the new Central Committee was for the purpose of electing the Politburo of the Party (R. 2361).

Paul Crouch attended the 1938 national convention. The procedure at this time was different from that of 1936. Prior to the final election session, the Central Committee called a meeting of the district organizers, the editors, and a few top leaders of the Party, to discuss nominations and procedure at the convention. William Schneiderman proposed the name of Bridges, stating that while he was temperamental, he had made an important contribution. Schneiderman they came. The major emphasis was laid on persons from the basic or strategic or mass-production industries such as steel, mining, marine, packing, railroad and so forth. In 1936, there were about 50 members on the Committee. (R. 2078-2091.)

---

thought Bridges would contribute more on than off the Central Committee. At the end, Earl Browder, referring to Bridges, said "Comrade Derkin or Dargan" would be put on the Central Committee. Crouch voted for Bridges. At the convention, in reading the list of nominees, the speaker, Earl Browder, said, "The next person to go on the Central Committee is a well-known West Coast labor leader," but he did not mention Bridges' name. Crouch testified that "At that moment the entire convention burst into stormy applause". (R. 2358–2361.)

E. OTHER COMMUNIST ACTIVITY IN THE 1940'S

At the 1941 convention of the California State C. I. O., Crouch, who was then a member of the Bureau of District 13 (R. 2338), was told to see that Bridges carried out decisions of the Political Bureau of District 12, after June 22, 1941, when the Soviet Union was attacked by Germany. There had been a District Bureau meeting in Schneiderman's office on July 9, 1941, at which the policy of the Communist Party toward this issue was discussed, and also the reluctance of Bridges to go along with the Party line. Crouch had made a motion that if it became necessary to expel Bridges from the Party, this was not to be made public (R. 2723–2724, 2737). It was decided to prepare a resolution to be given by Bridges at the 1941 State C. I. O. convention to place him unequivocally on record in favor of the then Communist policy of full support for the allies (R. 2738–2739). The resolution that was given by Bridges at the convention (Gov. Ex. 8; see R. 2367–2368) was prepared by Crouch during the two weeks preceding the convention, at the instructions of District 13 and William Schneiderman (R. 2362–2371). The resolution read by Bridges on the floor of the convention urged all-out support of the administration program of aid to the democracies in the war effort (R. 2367–2368).

Another Communist meeting was held in Rathborne's room in a San Francisco hotel in the summer of 1943 in connection with the California C. I. O. Executive Committee Meeting. Besides Rathborne and Wilson, another government witness, Bridges; Schneiderman, the Secretary of District 13 of the Communist Party, and others attended. A dispute between Rathborne and the Secretary of the I. L. W. U. was discussed. Schneiderman warned both that there were channels within the Communist Party to settle such difficulties, and that they should "get in line and stay in line" or they would be subject to strict Party discipline. (R. 3650–3652, 5880–5887.)

After 1944, in San Francisco, there was organized a special committee known as "God's Committee" which consisted of local San Francisco Communists who were connected with the San Francisco C. I. O. Council. Among its members were Schneiderman, Rathborne, who was then secretary-treasurer of the California Council; government witness George Wilson, the secretary of the Bridges Victory Committee; and petitioner Robertson, an officer of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union. On a number of occasions, Rathborne discussed the activities of this committee with Bridges and Schneiderman together. (R. 3640, 5834, 5842–5843, 5930–5933.)

The government witness George Wilson attended Communist meetings in 1944 and 1945 with petitioner Robertson, who was attached to the same Communist unit (R. 3647–3648). He also attended other meetings at which Bridges and Schmidt were present (R. 3649–3652).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I

With respect to petitioners' argument that the prosecution was barred by the three-year statute of limitations, it is the Government's position that the running of the statute was suspended by the Wartime Suspension of Limitations Act, and that apart from that Act the five-year limitation of the 1940 Nationality Act continued to apply by reason of the saving clause in the repeal section.

A. The Wartime Suspension Act applies to offenses involving fraud against the United States. This Court has interpreted the Act as applying only when the fraud is an essential element of the crime as defined in the statute. United States v. Noveck, 271 U. S. 201. There is no question that all three offenses here in issue involve fraud within the ordinary meaning of the term.

Count II contains the allegation that petitioner Bridges knowingly made a false statement under oath in a naturalization case. The heart of this offense is fraud, since it involves a deceit practiced on the Government in order to acquire a very valuable status. In Knauer v. United States, 328 U. S. 654, this Court, in a revocation of naturalization case, treated a false oath as fraud. Moreover, the Congressional intent to treat false statements in such cases as fraud is clear. The fact that pecuniary loss to the United States was not involved does not remove the offense from the scope of the Suspension Act. The purpose and legislative history of the Act show that it was intended to apply to frauds generally. The authority of Marzani v. United States, 168 F. 2d 133 (C. A. D. C.), affirmed by an equally divided Court, 335 U. S. 895, 336 U. S. 922, is outweighed by Miller v. United States, 24 F. 2d 353 (C. A. 2), certiorari denied, 276 U. S. 638, and United States v. Gottfried, 165 F. 2d 360 (C. A. 2), certiorari denied, 333 U. S. 860.

Count I charges a conspiracy to defraud the United States and is based on the statutory provision referring to "conspiracy to defraud," rather than "conspiracy to commit an offense."

Under the statute, this is a distinct and separate offense. Glasser v. United States, 315 U. S. 60. Obviously a conspiracy to defraud is an offense involving fraud. Quite independent of the false statement offense of Count II, Count I involves fraud against the United States and falls within the statute. In fact, the conspiracy statute was selected by this Court in the Noveck case as an example of an offense falling within the Suspension Act.

As to Count III, aiding and assisting in obtaining a naturalization certificate by fraud, it is equally apparent that an offense involving fraud against the United States is charged. Since an aider or abettor is by statute a principal, there can be no question based on the degree of involvement.

B. Under the Nationality Act of 1940, a five-year statute of limitations applied to offenses charged in Counts II and III. When the provisions establishing criminal liability were repealed at the time of the enactment of the new Criminal Code, Section 21 of the statute effecting the revision contained a saving clause preserving all "rights and liabilities" under existing law. It is our contention, contrary to the holding of the court below and of the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243, that this saving clause preserved the five-year statute as to the offenses here involved.

Generally speaking, it has been the practice of Congress to keep old limitation clauses when it enacted codifications. This makes for convenience and certainty. Moreover, statutes, including statutes of limitation, are customarily given a prospective interpretation. United States v. St. Louis, San Francisco & Texas Ry. Co., 270 U. S. 1. The particular saving clause in this case, and other clauses using similar language, have been interpreted to preserve the effect of statutory provisions which were not substantive in character. Since this Court has held that statutes of limitation really affect "rights and liabilities" (United States v. Oppenheimer, 242 U. S. 85), it is only reasonable to assume that in the revision of the Criminal Code the revisers intended to preserve existing limitations.

II

The second issue on which this Court granted certiorari was whether the present prosecution was barred by reason of previous proceedings dealing with the same subject matter. Petitioners assert that two prior deportation proceedings in 1938 and 1941 and the 1945 naturalization decree bar the present prosecution for perjury under the principles of res judicata, estoppel, or due process of law.

A. As to the deportation proceedings, the only fact findings in the 1941 proceedings were those of the examiner, approved by the Attorney General, to the effect that the petitioner Bridges had been affiliated with, and a member of, the Communist Party, and was therefore subject to deportation. The deportation order was countermanded by this Court in a habeas corpus proceeding. Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135. But the grounds for granting the writ were that the Attorney General had adopted an improper definition of affiliation, and that Bridges had been denied a fair hearing by reason of the introduction of incompetent testimony. Thus there are no findings in that proceeding which could serve as res judicata or estoppel in the present proceeding.

The 1938 deportation proceeding decided only that it had not been established that Bridges was a member of the Communist Party as of the time of the proceeding. That is clearly not a finding that in 1945 he was not and had never been a Communist. Since the critical issue in the 1938 case is not the issue here, there is no basis for an estoppel by judgment even if it be assumed that that principle is as applicable to administrative as to judicial proceedings. It has been held, however, that res judicata and estoppel do not apply to some classes of immigration proceedings (Pearson v. Williams, 202 U. S. 281); and in view of the nature of deportation cases there is sound basis for refusing to apply the rule here so as to bar a court or jury from re-examining a matter decided only administratively, particularly in view of the fact that the administrative agency involved does not apply the rule to successive proceedings before it.

B. As to the naturalization decree, the issue as to Bridges' Communist membership was not litigated in that proceeding, and was not decided by the court. Therefore, there is no room for collateral estoppel. Commissioner v. Sunnen, 333 U. S. 591. Moreover, the Government may not be precluded from prosecuting a witness for knowingly making a false statement because the perjury was successful and deceived the court before which it was perpetrated. Certainly the Government must be free to protect its own processes against fraud. Knauer v. United States, 328 U. S. 654.

C. As to the alleged violation of the Fifth Amendment resulting from successive proceedings, it should be pointed out that the second deportation proceeding resulted from a change in the substantive law. This Court has repeatedly held that Congress has full power to alter the law respecting the rights of aliens to remain here. Harisiades v. Shaughnessy, 342 U. S. 580. Following the second deportation proceeding, it was the petitioner, not the Government, who instituted the naturalization proceeding. If the petitioner gave false testimony in that proceeding (and the jury so found), certainly it was not only the right but the duty of the Government to bring him to trial. Here there is no double jeopardy, no repetitive trial of Bridges for the same offense. Nor is there any doctrine in American law which grants a witness a license to commit perjury. Cf. United States v. Williams, 341 U. S. 58, 62.

ARGUMENT

I

THE PROSECUTION IS NOT BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

Petitioners' contention is that prosecution under all three counts of the indictment against them is barred by the three-year limitation provision of Section 3282 of the Criminal Code. 18 U. S. C. (Supp. V) 3282. Two different, and alternative, arguments are urged in opposition to this view. First, the Wartime Suspension of Limitations Act, 18 U. S. C. (Supp. V) 3287, suspended the running of the statute of limitations until December 31, 1949,[8] a date after the date of petitioners' indictment (May 25, 1949). Second, only as to counts II and III, the saving provision of the Act of June 25, 1948, revising Title 18, preserved the earlier five-year statute of limitations applicable to offenses under the nationality laws so that wholly apart from the Suspension Act the time did not expire until 1950.

---

[8] The President proclaimed the cessation of hostilities on December 31, 1946 (12 Fed. Reg. 1).

A. THE SUSPENSION ACT IS APPLICABLE

The applicability of the Wartime Suspension of Limitations Act in this case depends on whether the offenses with which petitioners, Bridges, Robertson, and Schmidt are charged are offenses "involving fraud or attempted fraud against the United States."

In terms, the Act provides:

> When the United States is at war the running of any statute of limitations applicable to any offense (1) involving fraud against the United States or any agency thereof in any manner, whether by conspiracy or not, * * * shall be suspended until three years after the termination of hostilities as proclaimed by the President or by a concurrent resolution of Congress.

The first count of the indictment against petitioners charged them with conspiracy to defraud the United States by impairing, obstructing and defeating the proper administration of its naturalization laws; specifically, by having petitioner, Bridges, fraudulently petition for and obtain naturalization by falsely stating that he had never been a member of the Communist Party. It is based on Section 37 of the Criminal Code (18 U. S. C. [1946 ed.] 88), which provides, in relevant part, that "If two or more persons conspire * * * to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each of the parties to such conspiracy shall be fined * * *." Supra, pp. 2-3.

The second count of the indictment charged Bridges, alone, with having willfully and knowingly testified falsely under oath as a witness in his naturalization proceeding that he was not and had never been a member of the Communist Party. This count was based on Section 346 (a) (1) of the Nationality Act of 1940, 54 Stat. 1137, 1163, 8 U. S. C. [1946] 746 (a) (1), which made it a felony "for any alien or other person, whether an applicant for naturalization or citizenship, or otherwise * * * (1) Knowingly to make a false statement under oath, either orally or in writing, in any case, proceeding, or matter relating to, or under, or by virtue of any law of the United States relating to naturalization or citizenship." Supra, p. 3.

The third count of the indictment charged that petitioners Schmidt and Robertson had willfully and knowingly encouraged, aided, advised and assisted Bridges to obtain, accept and receive a Certificate of Naturalization which was to be procured, and was procured by fraud, as these petitioners knew, which fraud consisted of false and fraudulent statements made by Bridges in his naturalization hearing to the effect that he had never been a member of the Communist Party. The count was based on Section 346 (a) (5) of the Nationality Act of 1940, 54 Stat. 1137, 1164, 8 U. S. C. [1946] 746 (a) (5), which made it a felony " * * To encourage, aid, advise or assist any person not entitled thereto to obtain, accept, or receive any certificate of arrival, declaration of intention, certificate of naturalization, or certificate of citizenship, or other documentary evidence of naturalization or citizenship—a. Knowing the same to have been procured by fraud * * *." Supra, p. 4.

The question is, whether these offenses involve fraud against the United States. As to the first count of the indictment, surely, an offense under a statute which requires the proof of a specific intent to defraud the United States involves fraud against the United States.[9] It involves fraud because it says so, and it involves fraud because the crime, conspiracy to defraud the United States, necessarily requires proof of acts which, without respect to labels, amounts to such a fraud.

It would seem just as clear that the third count of the indictment involves fraud. For there, the offense is under a statute which requires proof that the defendants aided, advised or assisted a fraud. The involvement is a shade less direct than under the conspiracy statute but it is nevertheless plain that the offense involves fraud against the United States. A specific intent to aid, advise, or assist another to defraud is by any reasonable standard a specific intent to defraud.

---

[9] United States v. Noveck, 271 U. S. 201, moreover, states flatly that offenses under the general conspiracy statute "involve fraud" within the meaning of an earlier suspension provision. We shall discuss this case more fully later in this brief.

The offense charged in the second count, on analysis, also involves fraud. To lie knowingly in a naturalization proceeding is to attempt to deceive the United States with respect to the grant of a very valuable right, namely, citizenship. The fact that the end sought is a status, rather than money or proprietary gain, should make no difference.[10] To attempt to gain such a benefit by deception clearly falls within the conventional notion of fraud.

Nonetheless, the petitioners contend that the offenses here in question do not involve fraud within the meaning of the suspension provision. They assert that fraud is not involved (1) unless an intent to defraud is specifically required in the statute defining the offense and (2) unless a pecuniary or proprietary fraud (or the "hurly-burly of war") is involved (Pet. Br. 19–20). They urge that no such specific intent to defraud is involved in the second count of the indictment here and that Counts I and III must stand or fall with Count II (Pet. Br. 34). They also argue that no pecuniary or proprietary fraud, or war crime, is involved in any of the cases (Pet. Br. 29).

---

[10] Deceit in the attainment of the marital status is generally referred to as fraud. See, e. g., D. C. Code 30–103; Stone v. Stone, 136 F. 2d 761 (C. A. D. C.).

We shall not take issue here with petitioners' first point, that the fraud referred to in the Suspension Act must be found as an essential element in the offense as defined in the statute rather than as an element in the crime as alleged in the indictment. As petitioners point out (Pet. Br. 22–23), that is the clear holding of this Court in United States v. Noveck, 271 U. S. 201, and United States v. Scharton, 285 U. S. 518, under earlier suspension statutes.[11] The court below, as well as the courts of appeals in the District of Columbia and in the Second Circuit have found that this same rule is applicable to the 1942 Suspension Act. Marzani v. United States, 168 F. 2d 133 (C. A. D. C.), affirmed, 335 U. S. 895, 336 U. S. 922; United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243 (C. A. 2), certiorari denied, 340 U. S. 951.[12]

---

[11] This position is not so clear in United States v. McElrain, 272 U. S. 633, where the Court looked through the statutory offense (conspiracy to defraud the United States) to the nature of the particular offense (defeating the collection of a tax).

[12] Although we do not ask the Supreme Court to overrule its position in Noveck, it might be noted that it would be more consistent with the original intent of Congress to examine into whether the particular offense alleged in an indictment involves fraud, rather than to rely on the statutory definition of the offense, which of necessity is more general in its terms. It does not always make sense to make the suspension rest on the language of the statute. For example, many of the offenses previously defined in the Nationality Act of 1940 (8 U. S. C. 746) were codified in a single section in the Criminal Code (18 U. S. C. (Supp. V) 1425). The new section encompasses a group of offenses which are de-

1. The Suspension Act is applicable to Count II of the indictment

Without accepting petitioners' thesis that the applicability of the Suspension Act with respect to the conspiracy count (Count I), or the aiding and assisting count (Count III), is dependent upon its application to the substantive count (Count II), it may still be convenient to accept petitioners' order of presentation and discuss Count II first. Basically the petitioners present two arguments why the Suspension Act should not apply to Count II, namely (a) the statutory offense does not involve fraud and (b), even if it does involve fraud in a broad sense, it does not involve a pecuniary or war fraud which is necessary to bring the Suspension Act into play.

(a). The offense of obtaining citizenship by means of a false statement involves fraud against the United States. The offense here involved is defined in the statute as "knowingly to make a false statement under oath, either orally or in writing, in any case * * * relating to naturalization or citizenship" (supra, p. 3). In other words, it is made criminal to attempt to acquire citizenship on the basis of lies.

---

fined by the term "contrary to law." Thus, under this particular section, some provisions previously specifically based on "frauds" are now swallowed up in the more general "contrary to law" provision. Under the rule established in the Noreck case, the suspension statute would no longer apply to these offenses.

Fraud is defined as "a false representation of a matter of fact * * * which deceives and is intended to deceive another * * *". Webster's New International Dictionary (2d ed., 1934) 1003.[13] The effect of false testimony in a naturalization case is to obtain or to attempt to obtain the benefits of citizenship to which a person is not entitled by means of deceit. The falsehoods not only interfere with the administration of the Nationality Act, but also result in the acquisition of a right to which the applicant is not entitled. Thus, such lies perpetrate a fraud against the United States. Cf. Schwinn v. United States, 112 F. 2d 74 (C. A. 9), affirmed, 311 U. S. 616; United States v. Choy Kum, 91 F. Supp. 769 (N. D. Calif.). The courts have consistently characterized falsehoods in proceedings under the naturalization laws as frauds. Del Guercio v. Pupko, 160 F. 2d 799 (C. A. 9); Haruichi Yoshihara v. Carmichael, 115 F. 2d 110 (C. A. 9); United States ex rel. Lamp v. Corsi, 61 F. 2d 964 (C. A. 2); United States ex rel. Jankowski v. Shaughnessy, 186 F. 2d 580 (C. A. 2); Brenci v. United States, 175 F. 2d 90 (C. A. 1).

---

[13] Cf. Knauer v. United States, 328 U. S. 654, 657: "Fraud connotes perjury, falsification, concealment, misrepresentation." See also Black's Law Dictionary (3d ed.) p. 813: "Fraud consists of some deceitful practice or willful device, resorted to with intent to deprive another of his right, or in some manner to do him an injury."

Although this Court has not previously been called upon to analyze the nature of a false statement under the statutory provision here involved, it was called upon in Knauer v. United States, 328 U. S. 654, to appraise the nature of a false statement in a comparable situation. That case involved a proceeding under Section 338 of the Nationality Act of 1940 (8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 738) to revoke an order of naturalization on the ground of fraud, the fraud involved being the alleged false oath that the petitioner was attached to principles of the Constitution when he was in fact a thorough-going Nazi. The Court stated (328 U. S. at 671):

> Moreover, when an alien takes the oath with reservations or does not in good faith forswear loyalty and allegiance to the old country, the decree of naturalization is obtained by deceit. The proceeding itself is then founded on fraud. A fraud is perpetrated on the naturalization court.

See also United States v. Saracino, 43 F. 2d 76 (C. A. 3). If, for the purposes of denaturalization, a lie told in the course of naturalization proceedings constitutes a fraud against the United States, it is difficult to understand how a lie told in the proceedings is not a fraud within the meaning of the suspension provision. In each case, the emphasis is on the fact that the lie is for the purpose of obtaining benefits under the naturalization laws to which the witness, or the person for whom he lies, is not entitled.[14]

Petitioners assert that the type of fraud here involved, if it is fraud, is fraud in a secondary sense as that description was used in United States v. Cohn, 270 U. S. 339 (Pet. Br. 36). In this respect, petitioners apparently seek to classify the offense here with the type of frauds which have as their sole basis interference with or obstruction of lawful governmental functions. Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S. 462; United States v. Gilliland, 312 U. S. 86; Curley v. United States, 130 Fed. 1 (C. A. 1), certiorari denied, 195 U. S. 628. While there is an element of interference with Government functions in this case, it is by no means necessary to rest it upon that ground, for here the offense consists in obtaining or seeking to obtain from the United States Government a right which is valuable beyond price. It would be strange indeed if the acquisition of United States citizenship was considered any less valuable, any less real, than a monetary advantage.

---

[14] The fact that lies told in a citizenship proceeding should be considered frauds for purposes of denaturalization was made clear in the House Report in its comments dealing with cancellation on grounds of fraud where it was stated in H. Rep. 1789, 59th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 2:

> The conditions that have been revealed by special investigations of the frauds committed against the naturalization laws render wholly unnecessary any argument upon the necessity at this time of fully exercising all the authority in naturalization matters conferred by the Constitution upon Congress. * * * The worst and most glaring frauds have consisted in perjury, false impersonation, and the sale and use of false and counterfeit certificates of naturalization.

It must be conceded that the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has held that the particular offense alleged in Count II does not involve fraud. United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243, certiorari denied, 340 U. S. 951. That Court's reference to "perjury or false swearing" as the gist of the offense (186 F. 2d at 257) may indicate that it misinterpreted United States v. Noveck as requiring a holding that fraud is not involved when the crime involves those elements.[15] It is true that the offense charged in United States v. Noveck was perjury under Section 125 of the Criminal Code, the general perjury section now codified in 18 U. S. C. 1621. It was charged in the particular case that the defendant had committed perjury by making false statements in his income tax return, "for the purpose of defrauding the United States." The Suspension of Limitations Act there involved was the 1921 statute, 42 Stat. 220, which was similar to the statute here involved. In a brief opinion this Court held that the prosecution was barred by the statute since the offense did not come within the provision relating to frauds against the United States because (271 U. S. at 203):

---

[15] It is clear that this Court's recent observation in United States v. Beacon Brass Co., 344 U. S. 43, 45, that the three-year statute of limitations was applicable to an indictment under former Section 35 (A) of the Criminal Code for a false statement made in an attempt to evade income taxes, was not a holding on that point. The point was neither raised nor presented for decision in that case.

> * * * the alleged purpose to defraud the United States is not an element of the crime defined in § 125, on which the indictment is based. That allegation does not affect the charge; it need not be proved and may be rejected as mere surplusage. * * * The construction of §§ 125 and 1044 contended for by the Government divides perjury ito two classes. It makes one include offenses having the elements specified in § 125 and the other to include those containing the further element of purpose to defraud the United States.

Thus the case may well stand for the proposition that the United States is not, under Section 125, necessarily the defrauded party since the statute covers perjury generally and perjury occurs in suits not involving the United States. The case does not hold that to give false testimony is not deceit or fraud.[16]

---

[16] It is to be remarked that petitioners do not rely upon the fact that the statutory provision here involved (8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 746 (a) (1)) does not use the word "fraud". Presumably petitioners refrain from making this argument because of the adverse effect the converse of that argument would have on their claim that Counts I and III, where the offenses do use the word "fraud", are also not subject to the Suspension Act. It should be noted, however, that the district court in the Northern District of California, relying upon United States v. Scharton, 285 U. S. 518, recently held that the statute must refer to fraud against the United States

(b) The Suspension of Limitations Act is not limited in application to pecuniary frauds or war frauds. Petitioners devote an entire subsection of their brief to the proposition that the Suspension Act is limited in its application to frauds which are pecuniary in nature or which arise out of the war (Pet. Br. 29–34). In part, this argument is apparently based on the concept that the fraud in this case merely involves obstructing governmental functions as in Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S. 462. As pointed out above, whether or not that type of activity is encompassed within the Suspension Act,[17] the fraud here

---

"in so many words". United States v. Grainger, on appeal, No. 634, 635, and 636, this Term. We respectfully refer this Court to our brief in that case for a discussion of this aspect of the problem. It should suffice here merely to refer to the decision of the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in Weinhandler v. United States, 20 F. 2d 359, at 361, where that court held that the use of the precise words was not essential on the authority of Grin v. Shine, 187 U. S. 181, 189.

[17] There is an indication in the Noveck case that this Court construed fraud broadly enough to include the "secondary sense" referred to in United States v. Cohn, 270 U. S. 339. In Noveck this Court said (271 U. S. at 204):

> Its [the language of the statute] purpose is to apply the six year period to every case in which defrauding or an attempt to defraud the United States is an ingredient under the statute defining the offense. There are several such offenses. Section 37 affords an illustration.

The "Section 37" referred to was the conspiracy section of the Criminal Code (18 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 88) and it was this very section which had been given the broad construction in Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S. 462. The issue in that case was involved is far more closely related to the usual type of fraud which is involved in acquiring a valuable right through deceit.

The language of the Suspension Act in referring to "* * * any offense (1) involving fraud or attempted fraud against the United States or any agency thereof in any manner" seems designed to include all manner of frauds. And aside from the language of the section, its basic reason for being is opposed to the limited con-whether certain indictments charging defendants with conspiracy to defraud the United States in fact charged an offense against the United States. The indictments alleged that the defendants had agreed that one of them should give to the others certain Agriculture Department data in advance of publication. The Court held the indictment good, observing (216 U. S. at 479–480) that it was > * * * not essential that such a conspiracy should contemplate a financial loss or that one shall result. The statute is broad enough in its terms to include any conspiracy for the purpose of impairing, obstructing or defeating the lawful function of any department of Government. Assuming, as we have, * * * that this statistical side of the Department of Agriculture is the exercise of a function within the purview of the Constitution, it must follow that any conspiracy which is calculated to obstruct or impair its efficiency and destroy the value of its operations and reports as fair, impartial and reasonably accurate, would be to defraud the United States by depriving it of its lawful right and duty of promulgating or diffusing the information so officially acquired in the way and at the time required by law or departmental regulation. That it is not essential to charge or prove an actual financial or property loss to make a case under the statute has been more than once ruled.

---

struction urged by petitioners. The singling out of cases involving fraud for suspension of the statute of limitations obviously stemmed from the fact that fraud might not be discovered until a considerable time after the offense had been committed. The very nature of fraud is that it is a concealed offense which must be sought out. That factor is involved, whether the spoils of the fraud be cash or privileges. There would be no logic in drafting a statute to protect the Government from the effects of deceptive behavior and then limiting it to those cases where the deception could be measured in terms of dollar amounts. Such an approach ignores the underlying policy against deceit.

Petitioners have exercised commendable zeal in assembling a considerable body of legislative history in an attempt to support their position. However, the volume of this legislative history is in startling contrast to its pertinency to the issue here involved. What the references in the brief proper (Pet. Br. 30–31) and the page upon page of materials in the appendix (Pet. Appendix, pp. 11–27) add up to is that the Congressional committees and speakers cited frauds in war contracts as examples of offenses which should not be allowed to escape punishment during the excitement of war. It is not strange that Congress should have seized upon war contracts as an example of the type of situation they wished to encompass within the suspension provision. But the mere selection of this example does not support the view that Congress intended to limit the statute to such cases. In fact, it is strange indeed that, if Congress had any such intent, it did not affirmatively express it. On the contrary both House and Senate Reports stated the objective of the Act in broad terms (H. Rep. No. 2051 and S. Rep. No. 1544, 77th Cong., 2d Sess.):

> During normal times the present 3-year statute of limitations may afford the Department of Justice sufficient time to investigate, discover, and gather evidence to prosecute frauds against the Government. The United States, however, is engaged in a gigantic war program. Huge sums of money are being expended for materials and equipment in order to carry on the war successfully. Although steps have been taken to prevent and to prosecute frauds against the Government, it is recognized that in the varied dealings opportunities will no doubt be presented for unscrupulous persons to defraud the Government or some agency. These frauds may be difficult to discover as is often true of this type of offense and many of them may not come to light for some time to come. The law-enforcement branch of the Government is also busily engaged in its many duties, including the enforcement of the espionage, sabotage, and other laws.

> Your committee is of the opinion that action should be taken at this time to extend the limitations statute so that frauds may be discovered and punished even after the termination of the present conflict, and to insure that the limitations statute will not operate, under the stress of present-day events, for the protection of those who would defraud or attempt to defraud the United States.[18]

Petitioners find support in Marzani v. United States, 168 F. 2d 133 (C. A. D. C.), affirmed, 335 U. S. 895, 336 U. S. 922. We urge that the case, in so far as it holds that the Suspension Act "does not apply to offenses in which defrauding the United States in a pecuniary way is not an essential ingredient," is in error and should not be followed.

As opposed to the holding in the Marzani case, there are two decisions of the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. The first of these is Miller v. United States, 24 F. 2d 353, certiorari denied, 276 U. S. 638, dealing with conspiracy to defraud the United States in the allowance of claims to property seized by the Alien Property Custodian. Although there was property involved in the case, the allegations dealt with fraud resulting from depriving the United States of its right to the disinterested and conscientious services of its agents. The court stated, at page 359:

---

[18] No interference to the contrary can be drawn from Mrs. Rankin's failure to persuade Congress to adopt as a substitute for 3287 a provision suspending limitations provisions as to all crimes against the United States committed during the war. There is no inconsistency between hesitating to defer all prosecutions and singling out for special treatment crimes involving deception.

> The Attorney General and the Custodian had promised, under oath, to protect the rights of the government and to give it conscientious service. If the facts established a fraud, and the jury was so satisfied, and the government was deprived of any of these, there was dishonesty and false dealing, and it was cheated and defrauded.

The court then referred to this Court's opinion in Hammerschmidt v. United States, 265 U. S. 182, which gave a broad definition to fraud in connection with the construction of the False Claims Act.

The second case decided by the Second Circuit was United States v. Gottfried, 165 F. 2d 360, certiorari denied, 333 U. S. 860. In this case, the fraud involved was the obtaining through a false statement of a larger sugar ration than was permissible under the regulations of the Office of Price Administration. Funds and property of the United States were in no way involved. The petitioners attempt to distinguish that case from the present one on the grounds that the fraud involved was in the nature of a war fraud, and they seek for support in the opinion in Judge Hand's statement (165 F. 2d at 368) that he understood the purpose of the statute was "not to let crimes pass unpunished which had been committed in the hurly-burly of war * * *" (Pet. Br. 33). It is very apparent, not only from Judge Hand's words but from the context in which they were written, that he was referring to the time when the fraud occurred rather than the nature of the offense (Pet. Br. 33–34).[19] Nor can petitioners find any support for their position in the language of this Court in United States v. Smith, 342 U. S. 225, where all of the Justices, whether in the majority or in the dissent, treat the pertinency of the period of hostilities to the suspension statute as a time factor rather than as determining the nature of the offense.

As to Count II, therefore, it appears that the statutory offense involved is one which, by the terms of the statute, involves fraud against the United States and one which is subject to the Suspension of Limitations Act.

2. The Suspension Act is applicable to Count I

Count I of the indictment alleges an offense under the conspiracy section of the Criminal

---

[19] See also Danebo Lumber Co. v. Koutsky-Brennan-Vana Co., 182 F. 2d 489, 491 (C. A. 9), certiorari denied, 340 U. S. 830; Furrow v. Koutsky-Brennan-Vana Co., 182 F. 2d 496, 499–500 (C. A. 9), certiorari denied, 340 U. S. 830, where conspiracies to violate O. P. A. regulations in blackmarketing transactions invoking lumber were referred to as frauds against the United States, the statute of limitations on which would be suspended.

Code, which presently is 18 U. S. C. 371 and was formerly Section 37 (18 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 88). The conspiracy in Count I is alleged to be unlawful under the portion of the section which makes it illegal to conspire "to defraud the United States." It should be noted that the same section also makes it illegal to conspire "to commit any offense against the United States." These are two distinct crimes, one of which requires proof of some separate statutory offense which the conspirators have joined together to violate, whereas the other does not require references to any other statutory offense at all. In Glasser v. United States, 315 U. S. 60, 66–67, this Court said:

> It is unnecessary to explore the merits of the argument that the indictment is defective on the ground that it charges a conspiracy to commit a substantive offense requiring concerted action, namely, bribery, because, "The indictment does not charge as a substantive offense the giving or receiving of bribes; nor does it charge a conspiracy to give or accept bribes. It charges a conspiracy to * * * defraud the United States, the scheme of resorting to bribery being averred only to be a way of consummating the conspiracy and which, like the use of a gun to effect a conspiracy to murder, is purely ancillary to the substantive offense." United States v. Manton, 107 F. 2d 834, 839.

To make this distinction clear, the present petitioners could have been charged with conspiring to make false statements in a naturalization case in violation of Section 746 (a) (1) of the Nationality Act of 1940, in which case the offense would have constituted a conspiracy to commit another crime against the United States. Here, however, the defendants were charged with conspiring to defraud the United States by falsely applying for citizenship for one of their number and in connection therewith making false statements under oath. The conspiracy to defraud was thus broader in terms than a mere conspiracy to make a false statement.

The reason for spelling out at such length what seems to be obvious is that petitioners frequently fall into confusion in their brief and appear to be arguing that the conspiracy count constituted merely a conspiracy to commit the substantive offense charged in Count II (Pet. Br. 25, 34). Had this been the fact, it is obvious from the terms of the Suspension Act itself that the conspiracy count would have been subject to the Suspension Act only if the substantive offense, which was the basis of the conspiracy, involved fraud. It is, of course, our contention that Count II in this case does involve fraud; but it also is our position that Count I is quite independent of Count II, and that, even if it should be held that Count II does not involve an offense the limitation on which is subject to suspension, nevertheless Count I is not barred by the statute of limitations.

The principal difficulty with briefing this part of the case is that the answer seems so obvious. Here is a statute which makes it a crime to "conspire * * * to defraud the United States in any manner," almost the identical words of the Suspension Act, "fraud * * * against the United States * * * in any manner, whether by conspiracy or not * * *." Here is an allegation in the indictment, which was proved on trial, that the defendants had conspired to defraud the United States. If the words of the statute were used to convey their ordinary and usual meaning, this case must fall within the statute. As a matter of fact, in United States v. Noveck, 271 U. S. 201, this Court cited as an example of a statute involving fraud the very conspiracy statute which is here involved. Petitioners would discount this reference by reason of the fact that in a later case, United States v. McElvain, 272 U. S. 633, the Court held that not all conspiracies involve fraud (Pet. Br. 40). But the Court may there have had reference to the fact that conspiracies to commit offenses which do not involve fraud are not subject to suspension. The case itself went on the ground that, since the three-year statute involved did not apply to internal revenue offenses, the suspension act was similarly inapplicable to conspiracies to commit such offenses. The opinion seems to assume, contrary to the fact, that the indictment was for a conspiracy to commit an offense rather than conspiracy to defraud. The court below, after careful analysis, found that the case was not authority for excluding Count I from the Suspension Act (R. 8374–8375).

On the other hand, conspiracies to defraud, rather than conspiracies to commit particular offenses, have been held to fall within the Suspension Act. The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, in holding that an indictment under the conspiracy provision was covered by the Suspension Act, stated in United States v. Falter, 23 F. 2d 420, 426, that:

> * * * the proviso [the 1921 suspension provision] applied to the case at bar admits of no question. * * * The fraud was neither an incident nor the purpose of the crime, as in U. S. v. Noveck * * *, nor an offense against the revenue laws, as in U. S. v. McElvain * * *. The conspiracy to defraud was the crime, and the crime consisted only in the fraudulent conspiracy.

In the following year, the same court held again that the suspension provision was applicable to a case arising under the general conspiracy statute. Miller v. United States, 24 F. 2d 353, 360. The court stated:

> A successful conspiracy, which defrauds the United States of its governmental rights or property, is an offense involving the defrauding of the United States, whether by conspiracy or not. Hammerschmidt v. United States, supra; United States v. Owen et al. (D. C.) 32 F. 534.

In addition, two recent Ninth Circuit decisions have stated that the wartime suspension provision is applicable to prevent the running of the statute of limitations against conspiracies to defraud the United States. See Danebo Lumber Co. v. Koutsky-Brennan-Vana Co., 182 F. 2d 489, 491, certiorari denied, 340 U. S. 830; Furrow v. Koutsky-Brennan-Vana Co., 182 F. 2d 496, 499–500, certiorari denied, 340 U. S. 830.[20]

Petitioners envisage an attempt by the Department of Justice to extend statutes of limitations generally by drafting indictments under the conspiracy count, rather than under the substantive law provisions of the Criminal Code (Pet. Br. 45). This overlooks the fact that nothing would be availed in this respect by charging conspiracies to commit substantive offenses, rather than the substantive offenses themselves, since it is recognized that the fraud in such cases must inhere in the substantive offense. And, so far as charging "conspiracies to defraud" are concerned, that offense, as is pointed out above, is quite separate and apart from the substantive offenses defined in the Criminal Code. See Glasser v. United States, 315 U. S. 60. If the Department of Justice charges conspiracies to defraud, it will be bound to support those charges by the evidence; if it does, there is every reason why the Suspension Act should apply. Thus the conspiracy statute does not, and cannot, present an avenue for extending statutes of limitations beyond the period intended by Congress.

---

[20] In the Danebo case, the court stated:

> Here is a felonious conspiracy to defraud the United States under the then section 37 of the Criminal Code * * *. The blackmarketing of lumber is sought to be concealed by deceiving the O. P. A. officers in the performance of their duties created by this war-time legislation. On this conspiracy the statute of limitations apparently has not yet expired, its running being tolled for three years by the Act of August 24, 1942, 56 Stat. 747, 18 U. S. C. A. § 590a [now § 3287] as amended.

3. The Suspension Act is applicable to Count III of the indictment

The offense covered by Count III is aiding and assisting in obtaining a certificate of naturalization "knowing the same to have been procured by fraud." (8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 746 (a) (5).) As with Count I, petitioners assert that the application of the Suspension Act to this count must stand or fall upon its applicability to Count II (Pet. Br. 38). This is clearly without merit since here the statute involved does not even make any direct reference to the offense charged in Count II. As petitioners have so thoroughly demonstrated, it is the statutory offense, not the indictment, which determines the applicability of the Suspension Act (Pet. Br. 20–24). Count III clearly stands on its own base. Petitioners seek to tie this count to Count II by pointing out that the fraud involved in the particular indictment is the false statement on which Count II is based (Pet. Br. 38). But on examination of the indictment, it is immediately apparent that Count III deals with the false statements of petitioners Schmidt and Robertson, and not the false statements by Bridges (R. 7–8). It is therefore apparent that not even the same facts underlie the two counts.

The involvement of "fraud" against the United States when considered with relation to aiding and assisting is not specifically spelled out in the Suspension Act, as it is with conspiracy, but it is if anything a more direct involvement since an aider or abettor was under the Criminal Code then in effect, as now, considered a principal. 18 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 550, now 18 U. S. C. (Supp. V) 2. Therefore, if the obtaining of a certificate of naturalization by fraud is a fraud against the United States, then aiding or abetting in doing so falls in the same category.

Thus our argument for the application of the Suspension Act to Count III combines all the arguments heretofore urged with respect to Counts II and I. It is the same type of offense, the same kind of fraud against the United States, that is involved in Count II, but in addition Congress has used in this case, as in the conspiracy statute, the very term "fraud."

It is true of course that statutes of limitations perform a very real service in the criminal law. But it is also true that an individual has no vested right in any specific statute of limitations and that Congress in 1942 had the perfect right to provide for suspension of limitations on crimes involving frauds until three years after the termination of hostilities. If one indulges in the fantasy that those who violate laws cold-bloodedly calculate that they will be safe if they can avoid prosecution for a particular statutory term, then one should equally assume that they add to the calculated risk the effect of suspension statutes during time of war. In this respect it should be noted that the Suspension Act was passed in 1942, and that the alleged fraudulent acts took place in 1945.

B. SECTION 21 OF THE ACT OF JUNE 25, 1948, REVISING THE CRIMINAL CODE, SAVED THE FIVE-YEAR STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS IN THE NATIONALITY ACT OF 1940 FOR OFFENSES HERE INVOLVED IN COUNTS II AND III

Section 346 of the Nationality Act of 1940 (subsections (a) (1) and (a) (5) of which form the basis, respectively, of the second and third counts of the present indictment) contained as subsection (g) the following limitations provision:

> (g) No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any crime arising under > the provisions of this Act unless the indictment is found or the information is filed within five years next after the commission of such crime.

The Act of June 25, 1948, revising the Criminal Code, contained the following provisions:

> SEC. 21. The sections or parts thereof of the Revised Statutes or Statutes at Large enumerated in the following schedule are hereby repealed. [Section 346 was listed.] Any rights or liabilities now existing under such sections or parts thereof shall not be affected by this repeal.

Thus during the period when the offenses occurred (June to September, 1945), there was a five-year statute of limitations. The statutory provisions covering both the offenses and the statute of limitations applicable thereto were repealed by the Act revising the Criminal Code, effective September 1, 1948, subject to a clause preserving existing "rights and liabilities." The indictments were found in 1949. The question is: Did the saving clause apply to subsection (g), the limitations provision, so that the five-year limitation continued to be applicable to offense perpetrated prior to September 1948?

The district court concluded that the period of limitations set out in Section 346 (g) defined the limits of petitioners' "liability" for the violations with which they were charged and therefore that this prosecution was saved by Section 21 (R. 165–166). The court of appeals, after first agreeing with this view (R. 8225–8229), amended its opinion to hold that the savings clause did not preserve liability under the repealed five-year limitations provision (R. 8364–8367). There are a number of reasons why we think the district court was right.

1. The basic purpose of the saving provision is to preserve the status quo on earlier offenses

It is a normal and proper practice in legislative revision to make provision for the preservation of rights and liabilities under repealed provisions. The purpose is obvious. The process of simplifying and clarifying the law would be extremely painful if subsequently enacted provisions were constantly intermingled with earlier provisions. The new provisions—particularly in a complete codification—contain their own pattern, which has no place in a medley of contradictory earlier provisions. For this reason, it is normally appropriate to leave the earlier provisions as they stand, and simply to permit the passage of time to make their unsatisfactory details no longer relevant.

In line with this policy, the prior revisions of the criminal laws of the United States have contained saving clauses which, in express language, saved prior statutes of limitations as to prior offenses.

Thus the Revised Statutes of 1874 contained two sections which read as follows:

> SEC. 5598. All offenses committed, and all penalties or forfeitures incurred under any statute embraced in said revision prior to said repeal, may be prosecuted and punished in the same manner and with the same effect, as if said repeal had not been made.
>
> SEC. 5599. All acts of limitation, whether applicable to civil causes and proceedings, or to the prosecution of offenses, or for the recovery of penalties or forfeitures, embraced in said revision and covered by said repeal, shall not be affected thereby, but all suits,, proceedings, or prosecutions, whether civil or criminal, for causes arising, or acts done or committed prior to said repeal, may be commenced and prosecuted within the same time as if said repeal had not been made.

Two sections with essentially the same phraseology were included in the 1909 revision of the Criminal Code as Sections 343 and 344 (35 Stat. 1159).

A similar purpose had appeared in more limited revisions. Thus, in the various revisions of the Nationality Act in 1906, 1918, and 1940, it was provided that, for the purpose of the prosecution of all crimes against the naturalization laws committed prior to the effective date of each such act, "the existing naturalization laws shall remain in full force and effect"[21] thus preserving provisions dealing with limitations. Section 4 (d) of the Act of February 10, 1939, 53 Stat. 1a, codifying Title 26 as the Internal Revenue Code, specifically saved prior limitation periods as to prior offenses.

---

[21] 34 Stat. 603, Sec. 25; 40 Stat. 542, 547, Sec. 2; 54 Stat. 1137, 1168, Sec. 347.

The far more cryptic language of the 1948 revision gives rise to the problem in this case. The position taken by petitioners on the basis of the decision in United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243 (C. A. 2), certiorari denied, 340 U. S. 951, holding that the Section 21 savings provision did not preserve the five-year limitation period of the Nationality Act as to offenses under that statute before the revision, is that the absence of a similar specific clause relating to limitations in the 1948 revision means that it was the intention of Congress to have the shorter period apply retrospectively. It is the Government's position that the change in language represents merely a change in style of draftsmanship and that there was no intent in the 1948 revision to depart radically from the pattern of prior revisions of keeping the status quo for prior offenses as to all matters which, in a practical sense, go to the "right" or the "liability."

There can be no doubt that a statute of limitations in a practical sense does go to the right or liability. As Justice Holmes said in United States v. Oppenheimer, 242 U. S. 85, 87, in rejecting the Government's contention that a judgment for defendant in a criminal case could not be res judicata if it was based on a statute of limitations, a judgment on that ground "goes to his liability as matter of substantive law and one judgment that he is free as matter of substantive law is as good as another. A plea of the statute of limitations is a plea to the merits." This is the practical meaning of "liability" and this is the way we think it was used in Section 21 of the 1948 act. Cf. United States ex rel. Hassell v. Mathues, 27 F. 2d 137 (E. D. Pa.); People v. Driessen, 178 Mich. 118, 114 N. W. 526.

2. Statutes of limitations are to be construed prospectively unless a contrary intent clearly appears

Because of the fact that there have generally been specific saving clauses as to statutes of limitations, there are few cases which on their facts relate directly to the specific factual situation here presented. Nevertheless, this Court has indicated the guideposts which would normally be applied in construing a general saving clause such as is here involved.

One such guidepost is the general rule, specifically applied to statutes of limitations, that legislation will be construed prospectively unless a contrary intent clearly appears. In United States v. St. Louis, San Francisco & Texas Ry. Co., 270 U. S. 1, the Supreme Court, in holding that a statute of limitations did not bar a cause of action which had accrued before its enactment, said:

> That a statute shall not be given retroactive effect unless such construction is required by explicit language or by necessary implication is a rule of general application. It has been applied by this Court to statutes governing procedure, United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. United States, 209 U. S. 306; and specifically to the limitation of actions under another section of Transportation Act, 1920. Fullerton-Krueger Lumber Co. v. Northern Pacific Ry. Co., 266 U. S. 435. There is nothing in the language of paragraph 3 of § 16, or in any other provision of the Act, or in its history, which requires us to hold that the three-year limitation applies, under any circumstances, to causes of action existing at the date of the Act.

And in United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. United States for the use of Struthers Wells Co., 209 U. S. 306, where it was contended that an amendment to an act relating only to procedure necessarily takes effect upon causes of action existing when the statute was passed, this Court said (at pp. 316–317):

> * * * If the limitation as to the district in which the suit upon the bond could be brought were to be regarded as simply matter of procedure (which we do not assert), we still think it is not to be construed as applying retrospectively. As it is only a question of intention we are not prepared to hold that the section is prospective to > its operation in regard to all its other provisions, but retrospective in the one instance, as to the district in which the suit is to be commenced. Even matters of procedure are not necessarily retrospective in their operation in a statute, and we see no reason for holding that this statute, of but one section, should be split up in its construction, and one portion of it made applicable to cases already existing and other portions applicable only to the future.

In Russell v. United States, 278 U. S. 181, in considering the time limitation for suits in the Revenue Act of 1924, this Court said (at p. 188):

> Paragraph (e), (2), of § 278 expressly directs that that section shall not affect any assessment made before June 2, 1924. Counsel for the United States maintain that to extend the time for bringing suit thereon does not "affect" an assessment within the meaning of the paragraph. We cannot agree. Some real force must be given to the words used—they were not employed without definite purpose. The rather obvious design, we think, was to deprive § 278 of any possible application to cases where assessment had been made prior to June 2, 1924.

These decisions make it clear, we think, that the distinction for constitutional purposes between "right" and "remedy" in order to determine whether a change impairs a vested right is a different concept from the distinction between "right and liabilities" and "procedure" in determining whether a change is prospective or retrospective. When interpreting the intent of Congress, and particularly saving clauses in general revisions, there may still be a difference between "rights and liabilities" and "procedure," but it is on a different basis from that involved in determining issues of constitutionality where the retrospective intent has clearly been shown.

There is a difference between "procedures" such as rules of evidence or order of proof, which may well be made applicable to cases already pending, and rules, however they are characterized, relating to time limitations on the institution of a prosecution. The presence or absence of the right to particular courtroom procedure, particular rules of evidence, particular rights to witnesses, have only an indirect effect on a person's ultimate liability.

The effect of a time limitation is quite otherwise. It applies or it does not. It is in this respect far more akin to provisions defining the elements of the crime. There is no basic difference on the conduct of the court, or in its impact on criminal administration, between a challenge to a conspiracy indictment on the ground that no intent to defraud is alleged and a challenge that the prosecution is barred by time. Cf. United States v. Oppenheimer, 242 U. S. 85. Limitations in a practical way truly "affect" the "right" and the "liability."

3. This Court and the Courts of Appeals have applied the language used in Section 21 to provisions other than those defining substantive rights

Beyond the application of general principles of retroactivity, the Government's view is also supported by judicial recognition of the applicability of language like that in Section 21 to preserve rights and liabilities under provisions which do not define substantive aspects of crimes. In Hoiness v. United States, 335 U. S. 297, this Court held that the "policy expressed * * * in R. S. § 954 * * *" was preserved by Section 39 of the act revising Title 28 (a saving clause identical with Section 21 with which we are here concerned). Yet Section 954, which provided that judgment on appeal should be given without respect to technical defects, could not by any standards be called a substantive "right" or "liability." The conclusion is clear, therefore, that this Court recognizes no such limitation on the language of the Section 21 saving provision.[22]

---

[22] Hoiness, in detail, was as follows: A District Court had entered an order dismissing an admiralty suit for want of jurisdiction, directing that the respondents have costs, and directing the submission of findings of fact and conclusions of law in accordance with this order. A short time later, it entered an order incorporating findings and conclusions and again reciting that the libel was dismissed. An appeal was taken from the latter order. The Court of Appeals dismissed this appeal, holding that the first order was the final order and that the later decree was not appealable. The Supreme Court concluded that, since the appeal was taken to the Court of Appeals within three months of either order, it was timely;

In De La Rama Steamship Co. v. United States, 344 U. S. 386, this Court recently rejected a contention by the Government that, although Section 109 of Title I, the general saving statute, operated to save the liability of the United States under the War Risk Insurance Act, then repealed, nonetheless, the provisions of that Act giving jurisdiction over such claims to the District Courts was not saved, and that therefore recourse to the Court of Claims was necessary. The Court stated (at p. 390):

> * * * But where the object of Congress was to destroy rights in the future while saving those which have accrued, to strike that although the petition for appeal referred only to the second order, the "defect was of such a technical nature that the Court of Appeals should have disregarded it in accordance with the policy expressed by Congress in R. S. § 954, 28 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) § 777," which provided in part: "No summons, writ, declaration, return, process, judgment, or other proceedings in civil causes, in any court of the United States, shall be abated, arrested, quashed, or reversed for any defect or want of form; but such court shall proceed and give judgment according as the right of the cause and matter in law shall appear to it * * *."

---

The Court accepted the "policy" of this section to be to disregard niceties of form and to give judgment as the right of the cause should appear to it. The Court noted that after the dismissal of the appeal in the Court of Appeals, Section 954 was repealed by Section 39 of the act revising Title 28, which is identical with Section 21 of the act revising Title 18. But, it said, "the policy expressed in § 954 was preserved as respects cases pending at the time of the repeal, since the repealing statute provides that 'Any rights or liabilities now existing under such sections or parts thereof shall not be affected by this repeal.'" (335 U. S. at 300–301.)

> down enforcing provisions that have special relation to the accrued right and as such are part and parcel of it, is to mutilate that right and hence to defeat rather than further the legislative purpose. * * *

Thus, this Court has explicitly recognized the applicability of savings provisions in phraseology similar to that involved here, as to matters which are clearly not substantive rights or liabilities.

There are similar decisions in the Courts of Appeals. In Hiatt v. Hilliard, 180 F. 2d 453 (C. A. 5), the Court held that the method of computing time off for good behavior was governed by the statute in effect at the time the sentence was imposed, and that the prisoner was not entitled to have good time credited in accordance with the 1948 revision. Compare Lovely v. United States, 175 F. 2d 312 (C. A. 4), certiorari denied, 338 U. S. 834, holding that, where the punishment provision with respect to a crime was changed by the 1948 revision, Section 21 "saved" the earlier, more severe penalty as to an offense committed before the revision. See also United States v. Kirby, 176 F. 2d 101 (C. A. 2).

These recent decisions refute the proposition set forth in United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243, 253 (C. A. 2), certiorari denied, 340 U. S. 951, that the decisions of this Court establish the proposition that Section 13 of the revised statutes, now 1 U. S. C. 109, "saves existing substantive rights and liabilities from repeal but does not preserve 'remedies' or 'procedure' prescribed in the repealed statute." If the cases ever established such a general proposition, they have in effect been overruled by the cases discussed above.[23]

---

[23] In fact the cases cited established no such rule.

Great Northern Railway Co. v. United States, 208 U. S. 452, involved Section 10 of the Hepburn Act which provided that the amendments provided by that Act (relating to general procedure in cases for the Interstate Commerce Commission and means of enforcing its orders in the courts) should not affect causes then pending in the courts. The Court held that, since Section 10 spoke only of the procedure to be applied in pending cases, this evidenced no Congressional intent to cut off the right to prosecute for offenses committed prior to but prosecuted after enactment of the Hepburn Act. The right to prosecute, it held, was saved by the provisions of Section 13 of the Revised Statutes (now 1 U. S. C. 109). This is not the equivalent of saying that Section 13 had application only to substantive definitions of offenses.

Hertz v. Woodman, 218 U. S. 205, was cited merely because it said of the Great Northern case that the saving clause of the Hepburn Act applied only to "remedies and procedure," and therefore "not by implication in conflict with the general provision of Section 13, which saved penalties, forfeitures and liabilities" (at p. 218). But again this dictum is not the equivalent of saying that nothing which does not amount to a substantive definition of a crime can be considered a liability. The actual holding of the Hertz case was that a tax was imposed at the time of the death of a settler of a trust, so as to be saved by a repealing statute which preserved taxes theretofore imposed, even though, under the prior statute, the tax was not due and payable until one year from the date of death, by which time the repealing statute had become effective.

Hallowell v. Commons, 239 U. S. 506, held that an act withdrawing the jurisdiction of the United States Courts over certain Indian claims and restoring exclusive jurisdiction over those matters to the Secretary of Interior was to be

4. The language of the 1948 revision does not indicate a Congressional intent to have the statute of limitations operate retrospectively

As we have shown, under settled rules of statutory construction, and under the decisions of this Court, a saving clause which saved "rights and liabilities" as to prior offenses should, in the absence of a contrary intent, be construed to save limitations periods as to such prior offenses. The question thus comes down to whether the absence of a specific reference to limitations in the saving clause of the 1948 revision, in the light of the fact that specific clauses saving limitations were included in prior revisions, is such a clear indication of Congressional policy as to require departure from the general rules of construction.

The argument is that the initial enactment of Section 5599 dealing specifically with limitations, and the inclusion of a similar section in the 1909 revision of the Criminal Code, show that the general sections like R. S. 5598 were deemed in-applied retroactively. The opinion rests largely on the fact that the Court found such retroactive intent from the sweep of the language vesting authority in the Secretary a consideration which would be controlling as to any savings clause. The court did say that "the reference of the matter to the Secretary, unlike the changes with regard to suits upon bonds, takes away no substantive right but simply changes the tribunal that is to hear the case". But this amounts to no more than saying that the forum is not a matter which inures with the right, a conclusion with which this Court disagreed in the recent De La Rama case, supra.

---

sufficient to save limitations provisions. Hence, it is argued, the similar language of Section 21 must have similar effect.[24] We submit, however, that failure to follow the phraseology of earlier revisions has very little to do with the meaning of the 1948 revision. The customs of legislation have changed since 1874. Redundance is no longer thought necessary to insure that courts will properly give recognition to the obvious and straightforward meaning of words. The basic philosophy of the drafters of the 1948 revision was rather to simplify language and avoid redundancy. For example, the House Report on the bill which evolved into the 1948 revision stated (H. Rep. 304, 80th Cong., pp. 7, 8):

---

[24] The Obermeier opinion also refers to the fact that in 1933, the general section was repealed as obsolete whereas 5599 was retained. This was because it was thought the repeal of the section which had specifically preserved the various limitations provisions which had barred civil war claims might open up the argument that there was no longer any period of limitations as to such claims. The Committee report on the section incorporated also the view expressed by Secretary of War Patrick J. Hurley that another provision, Section 3 of the 1933 act, was not adequate to assure the barring of civil war claims because that provision "refers only to 'rights' and 'liabilities' and not to remedies, recourse to which may be barred by limitation." See H. Rep. 1205, 72nd Cong., 2nd Sess. Out of an obvious abundance of caution, Congress retained Section 5599, codifying it as Section 110 of Title I. We submit, however, that in view of the far-fetched reasoning which gave rise to the initial fears, and the complexity which would have been involved in relying upon a 1933 act to save a repealed 1874 statute of limitations, this overabundance of caution can hardly be said to be an authoritative legal interpretation.

> By assigning to chapter 1 all general provisions and definitions it was possible to omit repetitive phrases common to many sections.
>
> * * * * *
>
> A clear and uniform style was an important aim of this revision. Verbose phrases were pruned, ambiguous terms rewritten, and archaic expressions eliminated. * * *

It is not likely that the revisers, working under such a philosophy, would use two sections to accomplish that which one could accomplish merely because other revisers had, in an excess of caution, resorted to redundance.[25]

It is difficult to believe that all three revisions in 1947 and 1948 (Titles 1, 18 and 28), by the use of the shortened phraseology that "rights or liabilities" under prior statutes should not be "affected," intended sub silentio radically to depart from the pattern of the prior revisions of keeping the status quo as to all matters which in a practical way do affect the rights and liabilities. The notes to the Revision of Title 18 do indicate an intention to make some changes. In this connection the revisers noted with respect to Section 3282 of the new code that they saw no reason for having a limitations period for offenses against the naturalization laws different from that for offenses generally. But this does not indicate that they expected or intended their change of the limitations period to operate retroactively. In this connection, it is significant that the revisers made no provision and no mention of any time period in which offenses, which would be barred by the shorter three-year period but which had as much as two years longer to run under the old statute, would be prosecuted. Petitioners argue that the fact that the revision was not effective until three months after it was passed indicates that the intention was to give the government a period during which to take care of such prosecutions. But the 1909 revision of the Criminal Code, approved March 9, 1909, was not made effective until January 1, 1910, and yet, as noted above, periods of limitations as to prior offenses were specifically preserved. Three months is a short period of time in which to compress two years.

---

[25] It should be noted that Section 2 of the Act of July 30, 1947, 61 Stat. 633, 640, enacting Title I into positive law uses language identical to that of Sec. 21 of Title 18 to preserve "rights and liabilities." Yet the miscellaneous collection of statutory provisions assembled in the 1940 editio of Title I, to which this saving clause refers, cannot in any conventional sense be described as principally "substantive." Similarly as noted above the saving clause of Title 28 is identical with the statute here involved.

By the time of the 1948 Revision this Court had indicated in its decisions that the word "liability" in a saving clause should be applied in a simple, common-sense way. In United States

v. Reisinger, 128 U. S. 398, construing Section 13 of the Revised Statutes to subject a defendant to prosecution under a repealed statute, the Court indicated its notion of the scope of "liability" by the following language quoted from United States v. Ulrici, 28 Fed. Cas. p. 328, No. 16,594, 3 Dillon 532, 534 (128 U. S. at 403):

> * * * Moreover, any man using common language might say, and very properly, that Congress had subjected a party to a liability, and, if asked what liability, might reply, a liability to be imprisoned. This is a very general use of language, and surely it would not be understood as denoting a civil proceeding. I think, therefore, that this word "liability" is intended to cover every form of punishment to which a man subjects himself by violating the laws of the country.[26]

It had indicated in Russell v. United States, 278 U. S. 181 (see supra, p. 59) that the word "affect" in a savings clause related to the time of bringing suit. It had indicated in United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. United States, 209 U. S. 306, 316–317 (see supra, pp. 58–59) that the use of a single section to deal with a wide variety of situations indicated a non-technical use of language, and that such a single section would not be interpreted to result in a medley of prospective and retroactive applications. It had indicated that it regarded the period of limitations on criminal offenses as going to the liability as a matter of substantive law. United States v. Oppenheimer, 242 U. S. 85 (see supra, pp. 56–57).

---

[26] See also Quirk v. United States, 161 F. 2d 138, 143 (C. A. 8): "The function of a saving clause is to preserve something from immediate interference. Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Stewart, 253 U. S. 149 * * *." Cf. Stillman v. United States, 177 F. 2d 607, 614 (C. A. 9).

In the light of all these decisions, revisers in 1947 and 1948 could well believe that a saving clause which provided briefly that "rights or liabilities" should not be "affected" was ample to accomplish the purpose of the more redundant language of previous revisions of preserving the status quo as to any matter which in a practical way affected the right or the liability under a prior statute.

If, instead of re-enacting the offenses created by the Nationality Act, the 1948 revision had repealed them completely, there is no doubt that Section 21, or in the alternative 1 U. S. C. 109 would have saved the liability to prosecution for offenses committed before the revision. And it certainly would not have been contended that the liability was saved without the limitations created by the statute which gave rise to the offense. We submit that the situation is no different because there has been a re-enactment instead of a repeal. The 1948 revision controls offenses committed after its effective date. For the period before that time, former rights and liabilities, with all the collateral aspects which in a practical sense affect those rights and liabilities, are controlled by the statutes in effect when the offense was committed.

In the light of the general principle that statutes of limitations will be construed prospectively unless a contrary intent is clearly shown; that "rights or liabilities" as used in a saving clause have been interpreted as referring to more basis definitions; that the period of limitations for a criminal offense does in a very practical way affect the liability, we submit that the statute of limitations as to Nationality Act offenses was a part of the "liability" which, under Section 21 of the Act of June 25, 1948, was not "affected" by the revision as to prior offenses. Hence the five-year period of limitations in effect when the acts which form the bases of Counts II and III were committed governs those counts of the instant indictment, and the prosecution thereon was not barred, irrespective of the scope of the Suspension Act.

II

THE INDICTMENT IS NOT BARRED AS TO PETITIONER BRIDGES UNDER THE PRINCIPLES OF RES JUDICATA, ESTOPPEL, OR THE DUE PROCESS PROVISION OF THE FIFTH AMENDMENT [27]

Petitioners contend that the indictment and conviction of Bridges are barred under the principles of res judicata, estoppel, or due process of law. Their argument is that two prior deportation proceedings, instituted in 1938 and 1941 respectively (the latter of which was before this Court in Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135), represent binding adjudications of fact that Bridges was not in 1938, nor from the time of his entry until 1941, a member of the Communist Party, with the result that the government was precluded at this trial from offering any evidence to show that Bridges was a member of the Communist Party at those times (Pet. Br. 53). They further argue that the naturalization decree in 1945 was a binding adjudication that he was not a Communist up to the decree (Pet. Br. 54). It is the government's position that nothing in any of these proceedings is binding on the government on the issues involved in the present case and that the government was therefore free to offer at the trial any evidence which it had to show that Bridges in 1945 swore falsely when he stated under oath that he was not and had not been a member of the Communist Party.[28]

---

[27] Although petitioners do not specifically acknowledge the limitation (but see Pet. Br. fn. 52), it is readily apparent that this issue arises only as to Bridges. Neither of the other two petitioners were parties to any of the prior proceedings and may claim no advantage from either the doctrine of res judicata, or collateral estoppel. 1 Freeman, Judgments (5th ed. 1925) Sec. 407.

---

[28] The contention that the previous deportation hearings precluded the present criminal action under the doctrine of res judicata, was first raised by motion to dismiss the indictment (R. 11), which was denied by the trial court (86 F. Supp. 922, 928). During the trial, counsel for Bridges moved to limit any evidence of Bridges' membership in the

Before discussing each of the prior proceedings and the effect of the decision in each, it should be noted that there is no basis whatsoever for application in this case of the principles of double jeopardy or res judicata in the strict sense of binding parties as to causes of action which have been litigated. The double jeopardy clause of the constitution is violated only if there is a second trial for the identical offense. United States v. Williams, 341 U. S. 58; Pinkerton v. United States, 328 U. S. 640, 644. There has been no previous criminal prosecution against Bridges, and, even if a deportation proceeding could be likened to a criminal trial, it is obvious that a trial in 1939 and 1941 could hardly have involved the same offense as that stemming from an act committed in 1945. Similarly res judicata in the sense of binding the parties "not only as to every matter which was offered and received to sustain or defeat the claim or demand, but as to any other admissible matter which might have been offered

---

Communist Party to the period from June 1945 to the time of the naturalization hearing in August 1945, contending that the decision of this Court in Bridges v. Wixon, on June 18, 1945, decided any question of Communist membership before that date (R. 736–818), although this Court had of course been concerned only with the legality of the detention under a 1941 deportation order. The trial court, in a memorandum opinion on this point (87 F. Supp. 14), ruled that this Court had not finally passed on the issue of Bridges' membership in the Communist Party, and observed that the evidence of Communist membership was not declared insufficient as a matter of law.

for that purpose" applies only to suits "involving the same cause of action". Commissioner v. Sunnen, 333 U. S. 591, 597. A criminal prosecution for swearing falsely is obviously not the same cause of action as that involved in proceedings to determine whether Bridges was deportable or in a proceeding to determine whether he should be naturalized.

Thus, aside from the contention that the very bringing of the prosecution violated due process, a contention we discuss infra, page 89, the "res judicata" issue in this case is actually one of the application of the principle known as collateral estoppel, which applies "only as to those matters in issue or points controverted, upon the determination of which the finding or verdict was rendered." Commissioner v. Sunnen, 333 U. S. 591, 597–598; see also Federal Trade Commission v. Motion Picture Advertising Co., 344 U. S. 392, 397–398; United States v. Williams, 341 U. S. 58, 63. Neither in the deportation proceedings nor the naturalization action was the issue of Bridges' membership in the Communist Party actually determined so as to preclude the government from relitigating that issue as to any point in time.

A. THERE WAS NO FINAL BINDING ADJUDICATION OF FACT IN THE DEPORTATION PROCEEDINGS

The first deportation proceeding against Bridges was instituted in March 1938, on the ground that Bridges, an Australian national, was then a member of or affiliated with the Communist Party. Under the statute then in force, past membership or past affiliation was insufficient for deportation; the alien had to be found to be a member at the time the warrant issued. Kessler v. Strecker, 307 U. S. 22.[29] At the conclusion of the hearings, the examiner found that Bridges was neither a member of, nor affiliated with, the Communist Party. The Secretary of Labor sustained the examiner and dismissed the proceedings in January 1940.

By the Act of June 28, 1940,[30] Congress amended the statute to provide for deportation of any alien who was "at the time of entering the United States, or has been at any time thereafter," a member of or affiliated with an organization of the character attributed to the Communist Party in the first proceeding. A second deportation proceeding was instituted against Bridges in 1941 under the amended statute on the ground that he had been a member of or affiliated with that organization. Another hearing was had before the inspector designated to conduct the hearings who found that the Communist Party of the United States was an organization of the character described in the statute, that the Marine Workers' Industrial Union was affiliated with the Communist Party and was an organization of the same character, and that after entering this country Harry Bridges had been affiliated with both organizations, and had been a member of the Communist Party. He recommended deportation. The case was heard by the Board of Immigration Appeals which found that Bridges had not been a member of or affiliated with either of those organizations at any time after he entered this country. The Attorney General reversed the decision of the Board, and rendered an opinion in which he made findings in accordance with those proposed by the inspector and ordered Harry Bridges to be deported.

---

[29] That decision was rendered before the hearings on the warrant against Bridges which were conducted from July to September 1939.

[30] 54 Stat. 673, 8 U. S. C. 137.

Bridges, after surrendering to the custody of the District Director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, challenged the legality of his detention by a petition for a writ of habeas corpus in the District Court for the Northern District of California. That court denied the petition and remanded petitioner to the custody of the Director. Ex parte Bridges, 49 F. Supp. 292. The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirmed the judgment of the trial court. Bridges v. Wixon, 144 F. 2d 927. This Court reversed the judgment below on two grounds, neither of which went to the merits of the deportation order. Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U. S. 135. The first ground was that the hearing examiner and the Attorney General had misconstrued the term "affiliation" as employed in the statute; the second that the hearing was unfair by virtue of the fact that unsworn statements of the government witness O'Neil were considered, not merely for impeachment purposes, but as affirmative evidence. This Court specifically declined to pass upon whether the evidence in addition to that which it held improperly received would in itself have sustained the finding of membership in the Party, stating that "Whether the finding would have been made on this record from the testimony of Lundeberg alone is wholly conjectural and highly speculative." 326 U. S. at p. 155.

Thus the decision in Bridges v. Wixon and the proceeding which was there under review are not final adjudications of any issue of fact. The decision of this Court is not a determination that Bridges had not been a member of the Communist Party, nor even a determination that the evidence then available was not sufficient to prove that he had been a member of the party. It was merely a determination that the hearing at which he had been found as a fact to have been a member of the Communist Party had not been properly conducted, and therefore was, in legal effect, no hearing at all. Obviously, such a conclusion to a habeas corpus proceeding is not a binding determination of any issue of fact. A discharge on habeas corpus for jurisdictional defects at the trial does not preclude a re-trial of the issue of guilt. See Collins v. Loisel, 262 U. S. 426, 430; Harris v. Biszkowicz, 100 F. 2d 854, 856 (C. A. 8). In fact "no discharge by writ of habeas corpus will operate as a bar to further proceedings in the same cause, unless the inquiry on the petition for writ involves a full investigation into the merits of the case,—the guilt or innocence of the accused." Morse v. United States, 267 U. S. 80, 85. The net effect of this Court's decision in Bridges v. Wixon is that, for the purposes of collateral estoppel, the 1941 hearings are nonexistent.[31]

The 1938 hearings did end in an administrative determination that, on the evidence presented, Bridges had not been shown to be a member of the Communist Party as of that time. Clearly this could, at the very most, be binding on the issue of membership as of that particular time. Kessler v. Strecker, 307 U. S. 22. This petitioners concede (Pet. Br. 53). Certainly it was not essential to this proceeding to prove Communist membership as of that time in 1938. Bridges had sworn that he was at no time a member of the Communist Party (R. 138) and membership at any time before or after 1938 would have been sufficient to support the indictment. Therefore even if the prior finding is treated as the equivalent of an order by a court of competent jurisdiction, it would not be a bar to this proceeding.

---

[31] Petitioners make a brave attempt to save their point by arguing that this Court's order in Bridges v. Wixon amounted to a finding that without O'Neil's testimony there was no evidence to sustain the order of deportation (Pet. Br. 66). But the reference in the opinion to the receipt of incompetent evidence not being by itself ground for granting habeas corpus, on which petitioners rely, was directly related to the fact that there was not merely the receipt of incompetent evidence, but the absence of a fair hearing. 326 U. S. at 156.

Petitioners now contend that certain evidence bearing upon membership at the particular time involved should have been excluded from the present trial and that the jury should have been instructed to accept the prior determination for the period to which it applied (Pet. Br. 54). While we shall point out that no error was committed in refusing to accept the prior findings as binding, we should not overlook the fact that the issue as now raised is not properly before this Court on the present review. The issue raised in the petition was whether the prosecution was barred and that is one of the two issues to which the grant of certiorari was specifically limited by order of this Court (R. 8437). It is quite a different question to appraise the effect of evidence which was admitted[32] and to examine the instruction to the jury. This was not undertaken by the court below and should not be considered here.

---

[32] Even if excludible on the direct issue of membership in 1938, the evidence might have been admitted anyway to prove a continuing relationship which would support a finding of later membership.

We turn now to a consideration of whether, in any event, findings by the Secretary of Labor in a deportation proceeding should be held binding on the Government in a subsequent criminal trial. This Court has observed that "* * * the differences in origin and function between administrative bodies and courts 'preclude wholesale transplantation of the rules of procedure, trial, and review which have evolved from the history and experience of courts'." Wallace Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 323 U. S. 248, 253; Federal Communications Commission v. Pottsville Broadcasting Co., 309 U. S. 134, 143. In the Wallace Corporation case the contention was made that the National Labor Board could not, after having reached a determination in one proceeding, reconsider the evidence to reach a different result in a second proceeding. This Court in rejecting this contention, said (ibid., p. 253):

> We cannot, by incorporating the judicial concept of estoppel into its procedure, render the Board powerless to prevent an obvious frustration of the Act's purposes.

See also United States v. Stone & Downer Co., 274 U. S. 225, where this Court refused to extend the rule of collateral estoppel to decisions of the Court of Customs Appeals on determinations of fact in duty classifications.[33] In that case the Court gave weight to the factor that the agency's own rules did not accord binding effect to prior findings. In this respect it should be noted that in the second deportation proceeding the Attorney General specifically refused to treat the prior proceeding as res judicata, stating that the doctrine was inapplicable. See In re Harry Bridges before the Attorney General in Deportation Proceedings (May 28, 1942, p. 30).

The lines which distinguish those administrative actions which are deemed conclusive from those which are not have never been precisely drawn.

---

[33] Some lower courts have similarly refused to extend the rule of res judicata and collateral estoppel to administrative proceedings on similar grounds. Churchill Tabernacle v. Federal Communications Commission, 160 F. 2d 244, 246 (C. A. D. C.) (proceedings of the Federal Communications Commission); Home Loan Bank Board v. Mallonee, 196 F. 2d 336, 389 (C. A. 9) (proceedings of the Home Loan Bank Board); Grandview Dairy v. Jones, 157 F. 2d 5, 9 (C. A. 2), certiorari denied, 329 U. S. 787 (decision of War Food Administrator); Spencer v. Railroad Retirement Board, 166 F. 2d 342, 343 (C. A. 3); United States v. La Societe Francaise De Bien. Mut., 152 F. 2d 243, 246 (C. A. 9), certiorari denied, 327 U. S. 793 (decision of Commissioner of Internal Revenue); National Rifle Association of America v. Young, 134 F. 2d 524 (C. A. D. C.) (D. C. Unemployment Compensation Board). It has been held that an administrative agency, charged with the protection of the public interest, is not even precluded from taking appropriate action to rectify past mistakes, much less from reexamining a new complaint based on new evidence. National Labor Relations Board v. Baltimore T. Co., 140 F. 2d 51, 54–55 (C. A. 4), certiorari denied, 321 U. S. 795, and cases cited.

See Davis, Administrative Law, pp. 563–613; Schopflocher, The Doctrine of Res Judicata in Administrative Law, 1942 Wisconsin Law Rev. 5–42, 198–235. It is unnecessary to try to draw them here. For purposes of this case, it is sufficient to note that deportation hearings have never been considered to work an estoppel against proceedings of a similar character, and therefore a fortiori not against a criminal prosecution, Wong Chow Gin v. Cahill, 79 F. 2d 854, 857 (C. A. 9); Flynn ex rel Ham Loy Wong v. Ward, 95 F. 2d 742 (C. A. 1).[34] The political character of the issue, the executive nature of the proceeding and the public interest involved all lead to the conclusion that deportation hearings are the type of administrative action in which the judicial principles of res judicata and collateral estoppel have no place.

As this Court pointed out in Harisiades v. Shaughnessy, 342 U. S. at 589, "such matters [as the deportation of aliens] are so exclusively entrusted to the political branches of government as to be largely immune from judicial inquiry or interference." See also Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698, 731. The power to expel aliens may be exercised entirely through executive officers, and their findings are not subject to direct review in the courts. Heikkila v. Barber, 345 U. S. 229; Carlson v. Landon, 342 U. S. 524, 534. Since the deportation findings are not subject to judicial ratification they cannot constitute stare decisis, and have none of the other attributes of a judgment rendered by a court. The finding of an examiner in a deportation proceeding is "* * * not a judgment pronounced in a judicial proceeding, but a ruling made by an executive officer in the exertion of administrative authority," Wilbur v. United States ex rel. Kadrie, 281 U. S. 206, 217.

---

[34] It should be noted that the three dissenting judges in Bridges v. Wixon thought the order of deportation after the 1941 hearings should be sustained against the contention in that case that the 1938 hearings were res judicata on the issue of membership in the Communist Party.

A far closer analogy to deportation proceedings than the proceedings of the United States Tax Court on which petitioners' argument is partly based (Pet. Br. 58) was before this Court in Pearson v. Williams, 202 U. S. 281, where this Court held that the decision of a Board of Special Inquiry to admit an alien, is not res judicata in a subsequent proceeding, and that the matter may be later reopened and the alien excluded on the same grounds as those which were passed upon in the first instance. This Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Holmes said (pp. 284–285):

> * * * The board is an instrument of the executive power, not a court. It is made up, as we have mentioned, of the immigant officials in the service, subordinates of the Commissioner of Immigration, whose duties are declared to be administrative by § 23.

> Decisions of a similar type long have been recognized as decisions of the executive department, and cannot constitute res judicata in a technical sense.

The authority to deport is a continuing one and is not terminated by its exercise on one occasion. Cogent reasons for deportation may be revealed by new evidence which was not passed on in a previous proceeding because of its unavailability. The important political function of determining the right of an alien to remain in the United States cannot be hampered by a prior determination on different evidence. Cf. Wallace Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, supra; Federal Trade Commission v. Raladam Co., 316 U. S. 149, 152.

If a decision rendered in a deportation proceeding is not res judicata in a subsequent proceeding of the same kind, it follows that such a determination is not res judicata in a later judicial proceeding, especially where new evidence is introduced. There is indeed considerable question whether any administrative action unreviewed by judicial authority is binding on a court. Sekov Corp. v. United States, 139 F. 2d 197 (C. A. 5); Segal v. Travelers Insurance Co., 94 F. Supp. 123 (D. D. C.); contra, United States v. Willard Tablet Co., 141 F. 2d 141 (C. A. 7). Certainly, we submit, it should not be binding in a criminal prosecution. The determination of issues of fact in a criminal case is a function for the jury. Clearly no decision by an administrative official against an alien could have binding effect in view of the different standard of proof required for conviction for a crime. On the theory that estoppel by judgment must be mutual (Bigelow v. Old Dominion Copper Co., 225 U. S. 111, 127; Keokuk and Western R. Co. v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 301, 317), this alone would bar application of the principle of estoppel. But beyond that, we submit that no administrative decision should take away from a jury its function of determining guilt as well as innocence on the basis of any evidence relevant to the issue to be decided.

B. THE NATURALIZATION DECREE IN 1945 IS NOT CONCLUSIVE OF ANY ISSUES IN THE PRESENT PROCEEDING

Petitioners assert that the naturalization decree in 1945 conclusively determined that Bridges was not a Communist at any time during the entire period covered by the indictment (Pet. Br. 54). In order for this to be so, the issue as to whether Bridges was a Communist from 1933 to 1945 (the period covered by the indictment) must have been litigated in the naturalization proceeding and decided by the court in issuing the naturalization order. Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U. S. 351; Commissioner v. Sunnen, 333 U. S. 591, 598; Scott, Collateral Estoppel by Judgment, 56 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 5.[35] Neither of these conditions prevails.

---

[35] If an issue is not contested in a particular case, a finding on it, even though necessary to the judgment, will not be

The record makes it abundantly clear that the Government did not litigate the issue of Bridges' Communist membership in the naturalization proceedings (R. 479, 492).[36] Aside from the questions addressed to Bridges himself as to his membership (R. 138), the answers to which form the basis for this prosecution, the Government made no further inquiry with respect to his membership in the Communist Party and did not seek to controvert his testimony.[37] binding in a later case. A party is not obligated to defend a position in the first case at the risk of abandoning it forever. For reasons wholly extraneous to the merits of his position he may wish not to contest the issue and he is not forced to do so at the risk of losing it. This is one of the differences between res judicata and collateral estoppel.

---

[36] Lloyd H. Garner, the hearing examiner who conducted the preliminary examination, and represented the Government in Bridges' naturalization proceeding, testified as a Government witness on the trial (R. 466–467). At the time of the preliminary examination he had recommended that an investigation be made of the loyalty and attachment to the Constitution of Bridges (R. 479, 491, 536). He heard nothing further from the investigation before the subsequent court hearing (R. 492).

At the time of the naturalization proceeding in court, he was instructed merely to present the facts to the court, and not to put in any objection to the petition for citizenship (R. 479, 492). He ascertained that it had been determined that the Government did not have sufficient evidence at that time to show that Bridges was a member of the Communist Party (R. 529).

[37] Garner did present "for what it [was] worth" an affidavit signed by a former wife of Bridges, accusing him of being

In the second place, the decree of naturalization itself cannot be interpreted as including a determination on the issue of membership in the Communist Party. Certainly it does not do so explicitly (R. 552–553), and there is no ground whatsoever for an assertion that there was an implicit finding of absence of membership. Nothing in the Nationality Act of 1940, which controlled at the time of the decree, specifically made naturalization dependent upon the absence of past membership in the Communist Party (8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 701–741). At most, the issue of membership might have been considered by the court as pertinent to the determination of whether the applicant was then, and had been for the five years preceding, attached to the principles of the Constitution (8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 707), and of whether he was, or during the past ten years had been, a member of an organization advocating the overthrow of the Government by force or violence (8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 705). But in view of this Court's recent decision in Schneiderman v. United States, 320 U. S. 118, it is by no means clear that mere membership would have been considered by the court at that time as a bar to naturalization. In any event, in view a Communist, which the court refused to admit in evidence (R. 139). This affidavit had come into Garner's possession the morning of the hearing, and into the possession of the Department of Immigration and Naturalization the Friday before (R. 514). Aside from this document, Garner had no other evidence to present to the court (R. 515).

---

of the time difference, petitioners' claim that the decree was a bar to the present prosecution is very clearly without support.[38]

In the third place, the Government cannot be precluded from a prosecution for knowingly making a false statement under oath by reason of the fact that the perjury was successful and deceived the court before which it was perpetrated. It would indeed be an odd application of the principle of res judicata to bar a court from protecting the integrity of its own proceedings on the ground that the final order in those proceedings precludes a further inquiry, criminal or otherwise, as to whether the legal processes had been abused. There can be no question of the power of the courts to undo a decree which has been reached through fraud. Knauer v. United States, 328 U. S. 654; Maney v. United States, 278 U. S. 17, 23; Tutun v. United States, 270 U. S. 568, 578; Johannessen v. United States, 225 U. S. 227, 240-241. See also Hazel-Atlas Co. v. Hartford Co., 322 U. S. 238, 246. If, through misrepresentation or deceit, the applicant for naturalization conceals the true facts, and the naturalization court is thereby precluded from considering them, manifestly such issues are not merged in the naturalization decree. Certainly the issue of fraud could not in any sense be considered one of the "* * * matters in issue or points controverted, upon the determination of which the finding or verdict was rendered." Commissioner v. Sunnen, supra (333 U. S. 591, 598).

---

[38] This does not mean that the question and answer involved in the present proceeding were not material. This issue was raised before the court below on appeal and disposed of briefly but cogently (R. 8390, 8391). It is not an issue here.

Just as the certificate of naturalization may be canceled on a showing of fraud and illegality in its procurement, so the parallel criminal sanctions under the Nationality Act may be imposed for the perpetration of the same fraud, specifically for the false swearing in the case at bar. Cf. Klapprott v. United States, 335 U. S. 601, 610 (opinion of Mr. Justice Black). The issue of fraud, specifically the false swearing by which the certificate of naturalization and the attendant rights of citizenship were obtained, is no more immune from examination in this criminal proceeding, than it would be in a separate cancelation proceeding. The decree of naturalization no more bars a prosecution for false swearing than an acquittal for a substantive offense bars a prosecution for perjury. Cf. United States v. Williams, 341 U. S. 58. Whenever a fraud on the court is discovered before the statute of limitations has run, such fraud can and should be prosecuted.

C. THE INDICTMENT WAS NOT BARRED BY THE FIFTH AMENDMENT

Petitioners argue that repetitious proceedings against an individual on the same charge violate the Fifth Amendment, so that the mere bringing of this prosecution violates due process. This is really another method of stating the res judicata argument with constitutional overtones. Clearly the doctrine of res judicata is not itself constitutional in nature, but is subject to modification to meet the needs of particular situations. Cf. United States v. Stone & Downer Co., 274 U. S. 225. In any event, the argument has no relation to the facts of this case. As we have shown, the only time the truth of petitioner's 1945 oath was in issue was in this proceeding.

There has been no repetitious litigation in any sense. True, there were two deportation hearings, but the second was brought under a changed statute which broadened the basis of deportability from membership in a prescribed organization at a particular moment to membership at any time after entry. It has long been held that an alien has no vested right to remain in this country and that the rules for deportation may be changed. In Harisiades v. Shaughnessy, 342 U. S. 580, this Court stated at pp. 586–588:

> Under our law, the alien in several respects stands on an equal footing with citizens, but in others has never been conceded legal parity with the citizen. Most importantly, to protract this ambiguous status within the country is not his right but is a matter of permission and tolerance. The Government's power to terminate its hospitality has been asserted and sustained by this Court since the question first arose.

> * * * So long as the alien elects to continue the ambiguity of his allegiance his domicile here is held by a precarious tenure.
>
> That aliens remain vulnerable to expulsion after long residence is a practice that bristles with severities. But it is a weapon of defense and reprisal confirmed by international law as a power inherent in every sovereign state. Such is the traditional power of the Nation over the alien and we leave the law on the subject as we find it.

When the second deportation case terminated inconclusively, Bridges himself, not the Government, instituted the third "litigation," when he applied for naturalization. In that uncontested "litigation," he and the other petitioners swore falsely. It is absurd to argue that it is somehow unfair for the Government to seek to punish Bridges when it came into possession of facts which showed that the oath which he voluntarily took in 1945 was untrue and a fraud on the court. Clearly the Government can prosecute an individual each time he commits a crime separate and distinct from any other for which he has been tried. Clearly it can, in such proceeding, offer any evidence it has to prove such crime unless an issue has been adjudicated in such a way as to have acquired judicial finality irrespective of reality. Due process does not require that fraud and false swearing shall go unpunished. Cf. United States v. Williams, 341 U. S. 58, 62.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons the judgment of the Court of Appeals should be affirmed.

Respectfully submitted.

ROBERT L. STERN,
Acting Solicitor General.
WARREN OLNEY III,
Assistant Attorney General.
JOHN F. DAVIS,
Special Assistant to the Attorney General.
BEATRICE ROSENBERG,
CARL H. IMLAY,
JOHN R. WILKINS,
Attorneys.

APRIL 1953.

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT, U.S.

Office - Supreme Court, U.S.
JAN 14 [illegible]

In the

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1952

No. 549

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES,
Petitioner,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

Telford Taylor
New York, N. Y.

Norman Leonard
San Francisco, Cal.

Counsel for Petitioner

INDEX

	PAGE
Opinions below	1
Jurisdiction	1
Questions presented	2
Statutes involved	2
Statement	3
Specification of errors to be urged	3
Reasons for granting the writ	4
Conclusion	7

CITATIONS

Cases:

Baumgartner v. United States, 322 U. S. 665	4
Cole v. Arkansas, 333 U. S. 196	7
De Jonge v. Oregon, 299 U. S. 353	7
Klapprott v. United States, 335 U. S. 601	4
Schneiderman v. United States, 320 U. S. 118	4
United States v. Bruno, 25 F. Supp. 793, D. C. N. J.	5, 6

Statutes:

28 U. S. C. Sec. 1254 (1)	2
8 U. S. C. Sec. 738(e)	2, 4
18 U. S. C. Sec. 1425	5
18 U. S. C. Sec. 1015(a)	5
Act of March 3, 1903, c. 1012, Sec. 39	5
Act of June 29, 1906, c. 3592, Sec. 23	6

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, Petitioner, vs. UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.	No. ......

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

Petitioner, Harry Renton Bridges, respectfully prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review a judgment of United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit entered in the above entitled case on September 6, 1952.

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the District for the Northern District of California is reported at 90 F. Supp. 989. The opinion of the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirming the judgment below has not yet been officially reported; it is printed at Tr. 22-25.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of The Court of Appeals was entered on September 6, 1952. The order of the Court of Appeals denying petitioner's timely petition for rehearing was entered on November 18, 1952. On December 9, 1952 Mr.

Justice Douglas of this Court entered an order extending the time for filing a petition for certiorari to and including January 16, 1953. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U. S. C. 1254 (1).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirmed an order of the District Court for the Northern District of California revoking the citizenship of petitioner Bridges pursuant to 8 U. S. C. 738 (e) after his conviction for making a false statement in his naturalization proceeding.

There is this day being filed a petition for a writ of certiorari (No. 548) to review the affirmance of the judgment of conviction.

The questions presented here are:

1. Whether the conviction sought to be reviewed in that case should not be set aside and whether, therefore, the order here sought to be reviewed should not automatically fall with it.

2. Whether there was a lawful basis for the order of revocation since petitioner was not convicted of "knowingly procuring naturalization in violation of law" as is required by 8 U. S. C. 738 (e).

STATUTES INVOLVED

The relevant provisions of 8 U. S. C. 738 (e) upon which the revocation of petitioner's citizenship was based are:

> "When a person shall be convicted under this chapter of knowingly procuring naturalization in violation of law, the court in which such conviction is had shall thereupon revoke, set aside, and declare void the final order admitting such person to citizenship, and shall declare the certificate of naturalization of such person to be canceled. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred to the courts having jurisdiction of the trial of such offense to make such adjudication."

STATEMENT

Since, as indicated, the revocation order here sought to be reviewed arose out of and is dependent upon the conviction under review in No. 548 there is no need to restate the factual background of the cases. We respectfully refer the court to the statement contained in the petition in that case.

After the criminal conviction had been returned, the Government moved for, and succeeded in obtaining over the opposition of petitioner, an order from the trial court declaring petitioner's citizenship revoked and a decree revoking, setting aside and declaring void the order admitting him to citizenship. (Tr. 3, 8; 90 F. Supp. 989).

Appeals from these orders were timely filed to the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit which affirmed them on September 6, 1952. A petition for rehearing was denied on November 18, 1952.

SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS TO BE URGED

The court below erred in affirming the trial court's revocation of petitioner's citizenship and in holding that petitioner had been convicted of knowingly procuring naturalization in violation of law.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

1. The petition for the writ in No. 546 shows the reasons why the conviction on a charge of making a false statement in the naturalization proceedings should be reversed and set aside. We respectfully refer the Court to the reasons for granting the writ set forth in that petition. The writ here should issue so that upon the disposition of that case appropriate orders may be made in this one.

2. Irrespective of the disposition of that case; there is an additional reason why the writ should be granted here.

Petitioner was not convicted of knowingly procuring naturalization in violation of law. Section 738(e) is a very carefully drafted statute. It does not provide that upon conviction for any violation of the nationality code citizenship may be revoked. On the contrary, it provides that revocation shall occur only upon conviction for "knowingly procuring naturalization in violation of law". These words are clearly words of limitation and must be strictly construed against the Government (cf. Schneiderman v. United States, 320 U. S. 118; Baumgartner v. United States, 322 U. S. 665, and Klapprott v. United States, 335 U. S. 601). If Congress had intended to authorize revocation for any violation of the Nationality Law, it would have not have inserted these words of limitation into Section 738(e).

Not only was petitioner not convicted of knowingly procuring naturalization in violation of law, he was not even charged with that offense. He was charged in the first count with conspiracy which is a separate offense and neither of the courts below predicated their holdings upon his conviction on the conspiracy count. He was charged in the second count with false swearing in a naturalization proceeding. That charge is a different one from the charge of knowingly procuring naturalization in violation of law.[1]

In order to sustain its order of revocation, the trial court held that the conviction for one offense "constitutes" a conviction for the other (Tr. 10). The court below did not even consider the issue (Tr. 25).

The two offenses are separate and distinct. Knowingly procuring citizenship in violation of law is now to be found in 18. U. S. C. 1425, which is contained in Chapter 69 of Title 18, a chapter dealing exclusively with matters relating to nationality and citizenship. False swearing in a naturalization proceeding is now to be found in 18 U. S. C. 1015(a) which is contained in Chapter 47 of Title 18, a chapter dealing generally with false swearing and fraudulent statements and not specifically with naturalization or nationality matters.

Not only are these two sections separate and distinct parts of the code at the present time but throughout their entire history they have been separate and distinct (cf. United States v. Bruno, 25 F. Supp. 793 (D. C. N. J.)) and the added punishment of automatic revocation has always been applied only to the offense of knowingly procuring naturalization in violation of law and not to the offense of false swearing in a naturalization proceeding.[2]

---

[1] The charge in the indictment did not depend upon the fact of procuring naturalization and was sustainable, irrespective of whether or not citizenship had been procured. United States v. Bruno, infra.

[2] Sec. 39 of the Act of March 3, 1903 (57 Cong. 2d Sess., Ch. 1012) (32 Stat. 1213, p. 22) provided

> "First: Any person who procures naturalization in violation of the provisions of this section shall be fined * * * and imprisoned * * * and the court in which such conviction is had

In 1938, for example, the two offenses were in separate codes, and even apart from the fact that automatic revocation followed upon conviction for illegal procurement and not for false swearing, they carried different criminal penalties. Thus, in United States v. Bruno, supra, the statutes are quoted which make it clear that the offense of illegal procurement was punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 and imprisonment of not more than five years or both, while the offense of false swearing was punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 and imprisonment for not more than five years. 25 F. Supp. 793 at p. 794.

In the foregoing case, the court said: "False procurement of naturalization and false swearing in a naturalization proceeding are entirely different. Under the view this court takes the defendant was guilty of an offense when he swore falsely in the naturalization proceeding. He committed another offense when he procured naturalization based upon his false swearing". Ibid at p. 794.

> shall thereupon adjudge and declare the order or decree and all certificates admitting such person to citizenship null and void."
>
> "Second: Any person who * * * in any naturalization proceeding procures or gives false testimony as to any material fact shall be fined * * * and imprisoned * * *"

Section 23 of the Act of June 29, 1906 (59th Cong., C. 3592) (34 Stat. 596, p. 603), provided as follows:

> "First: * * * Any person who knowingly procures naturalization in violation of the provisions of this Act shall be fined * * * and imprisoned * * * and upon conviction the court in which said conviction is had shall thereupon adjudge and declare the final order admitting such person to citizenship void."
>
> "Second: * * * Any person who in any naturalization proceeding knowingly procures or gives false testimony as to any material fact shall be fined * * * and imprisoned * * *".

The Government might have, but it did not charge, petitioner with the offense of illegal procurement. It cannot now exact from him a penalty which attaches only to the uncharged offense. To impose a penalty for a crime not charged would be a "sheer denial of due process". (Cf. De Jonge v. Oregon, 299 U. S. 353 and Cole v. Arkansas, 333 U. S. 196).

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, it is respectfully submitted that this petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

TELFORD TAYLOR,
New York, N. Y.

NORMAN LEONARD,
San Francisco, Cal.

Counsel for Petitioner

January, 1953.

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT, U.S.

Office Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
FEB 13 1953
HAROLD B. WILLEY, Clerk

No. 549

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, PETITIONER

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

ON PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

MEMORANDUM FOR THE UNITED STATES

INDEX

Page
Opinion below 1
Jurisdiction 1
Question presented 2
Statutes involved 2
Statement 2
Argument 3
Conclusion 7

CITATIONS

Cases:

Johannessen v. United States, 225 U.S. 227 6
Klapprott v. United States, 335 U.S. 601 6
Knauer v. United States, 328 U.S. 654 6
Maney v. United States, 278 U.S. 17 6

Statutes:

Nationality Act of 1940, 54 Stat. 1158:
  Section 338(a) (8 U.S.C. 738(a)) 3, 5, 6
  Section 338(e) (8 U.S.C. 738(e)) 2, 4, 5, 6
  Section 346(a)(2) (8 U.S.C. 746(a)) 4

United States Code:
  18 U.S.C. [1946 ed.] 88 7

Miscellaneous:

Hearings before the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization on H.R. 6127, superseded by H.R. 9980, 76th Cong., 1st sess., p. 471 4

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

No. 549

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, PETITIONER

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

ON PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

MEMORANDUM FOR THE UNITED STATES

OPINION BELOW

The opinion of the court below (R. 22) is reported at 199 F. 2d 845.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Court of Appeals was entered on September 6, 1952 (R. 26), and a petition for rehearing was denied on November 18, 1952 (R. 27). On December 9, 1952, Mr. Justice Douglas entered an order extending the time for filing a petition for a writ of certiorari to and including January 16, 1953. The petition was filed on January 14, 1953. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. 1254(1).

QUESTION PRESENTED

Whether, assuming the lawfulness of a conviction of the petitioner for having made a false statement in his naturalization proceeding, the district court in which he was convicted had power, immediately after his conviction, to order his denaturalization, under 8 U.S.C. 738(e), as a person who had been convicted of "knowingly procuring naturalization in violation of law."

STATUTES INVOLVED

Section 338(e) of the Nationality Act of 1940, 54 Stat. 1158, 8 U.S.C. (1946 ed.) 738(e) provides:

> When a person shall be convicted under this Act of knowingly procuring naturalization in violation of law, the court in which such conviction is had shall thereupon revoke, set aside, and declare void the final order admitting such person to citizenship, and shall declare the certificate of naturalization of such person to be canceled. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the courts having jurisdiction of the trial of such offense to make such adjudication.

STATEMENT

At the time of the filing of the indictment against the petitioner Bridges, in the case now before this Court as No. 548,[1] a denaturalization proceeding was also instituted, pursuant to Section 338(a) of the Nationality Act of 1940, 8 U.S.C. 738(a). Action on this, however, was stayed pending the judgment of the trial court in the criminal proceeding (86 F. Supp. 931). After judgment against petitioner was entered in the criminal proceeding, government counsel filed a motion to revoke, set aside, and declare void the final order admitting petitioner to citizenship (R. 4). On June 16, 1950, a memorandum opinion and order were handed down (R. 3-7) relative to the denaturalization proceeding, and on June 20, 1950, a decree revoking, setting aside, and declaring void the final order admitting petitioner to citizenship (R. 8-12) was signed. The Court of Appeals affirmed the validity of the decree (R. 22).

---

[1] The facts stated in that petition are incorporated here by reference.

ARGUMENT

1. The Government's memorandum on the petition for certiorari in No. 548 sufficiently deals with the issues as to the validity of the criminal conviction on the basis of which the order of denaturalization was issued. If the writ should be granted in that case, it is submitted that this petition should be held without action until the disposition of that case on the merits and then disposed of appropriately.

2. Petitioner also contends that he was not convicted "of knowingly procuring naturalization in violation of law," and therefore that the condition for revoking citizenship set forth in Section 338(e) of the Nationality Act of 1940, supra, p. 2, has not been satisfied. He argues that Section 338(e) refers only to a conviction of the specific charge of procuring naturalization in violation of law as set forth in Section 346(a)(2) of the Nationality Act, and not to a violation of any other of the penal provisions in connection with the procurement of citizenship such as Section 346(a)(1), for violation of which petitioner was convicted.[2]

This interpretation of Section 338(e) does violence to its obvious purpose. If Congress had intended Section 338(e) to apply only to a violation of one of the many penal provisions under Section 346, it would undoubtedly have so indicated. The comments on the proposed draft of this Act submitted to the House Committee (II Hearings before the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization on H. R. 6127, superseded by H. R.

---

[2] The pertinent parts of Section 346(a) (8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 746(a)) are:

> It is hereby made a felony for any alien or other person, whether an applicant for naturalization or citizenship; or otherwise, and whether an employee of the Government of the United States or not—
>
> (1) Knowingly to make a false statement under oath, either orally or in writing, in any case, proceeding, or matter relating to, or under, or by virtue of any law of the United States relating to naturalization or citizenship.
>
> (2) Knowingly to procure or attempt to procure—
>
> a. The naturalization of any such person, contrary to the provisions of any law; or > b. Documentary or other evidence of naturalization or of citizenship of any such person, contrary to the provisions of any law.
>

9980, 76th Congress, 1st session, at p. 471) state as to Section 338:

> Proposed subsection (e) is a continuance of provisions now present in the naturalization statutes giving the Federal courts authority, as a part of criminal proceedings, to revoke the naturalization fraudulently procured and cancel the certificate of naturalization. * * *

This reveals the overriding policy of revoking the citizenship of anyone convicted under any of the penal provisions under circumstances which establish that naturalization was obtained either illegally or by fraud. It is specious to contend that a conviction of petitioner for false swearing in his naturalization hearing does not fully establish that he "knowingly procured naturalization in violation of law."

Section 338(e), moreover, is in pari materia with Section 338(a), which provides for a civil proceeding for the cancellation of naturalization on the ground of fraud or on the ground that such naturalization was illegally procured.[3] Section 338(a) covers any naturalization which was unauthorized by law (Maney v. United States, 278 U.S. 17) or which was procured through fraud or other illegal contrivance (Johannessen v. United States, 225 U.S. 227). See also Knauer v. United States, 328 U.S. 654, 672-673. It is apparent that Section 338(e) was intended to make unnecessary the civil suit provided for in Section 338(a) whenever it is established by a conviction in a criminal proceeding that the naturalization of the defendant was obtained by any fraudulent contrivance in violation of law. The same bases for denaturalization which obtain under Section 338(a) also obtain under Section 338(e). The difference between the two sections is procedural, not substantive.

---

[3] Section 338(a) (8 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) 738(a)) provides: "It shall be the duty of the United States district attorneys for the respective districts, upon affidavit showing good cause therefor, to institute proceedings in any court specified in subsection (a) of section 301 in the judicial district in which the naturalized citizen may reside at the time of bringing suit, for the purpose of revoking and setting aside the order admitting such person to citizenship and canceling the certificate of naturalization on the ground of fraud or on the ground that such order and certificate of naturalization were illegally procured."

Since the burden of proof is greater in a criminal proceeding in which the defendant has the benefit of a trial by jury, it is unreasonable to suppose that Congress intended to require a retrial of the issues in a civil proceeding when fraud in obtaining naturalization by the giving of false testimony in the naturalization proceeding has been proved beyond a reasonable doubt by a conviction in the criminal action. It is clear that an alien who knowingly testified falsely, with an obvious view to facilitating his naturalization, would, under Section 338(e), knowingly have procured such naturalization in violation of the Nationality Act.[4]

---

[4] The identical issue here involved was adverted to in Klapprott v. United States, 335 U. S. 601 (opinion of Mr. Justice Black) where it was said, at p. 610:

> 8 U. S. C. § 746 makes it a felony for applicants for naturalization or others to violate federal laws relating to

3. We believe also that petitioner's conviction on the conspiracy count of the indictment against him furnishes a basis for the revocation action. While this count charges a conspiracy to defraud the United States under 18 U. S. C. [1946 ed.] 88, which obviously is not part of the Nationality Act of 1940, nevertheless, the illegality of the conspiracy is predicated on a contravention of the statutory mandate of the Nationality Act. That Act prescribes the steps for obtaining naturalization in explicit terms. It was to subvert those explicit directions that the illegal combination in which petitioner participated was formed. It is sufficient to come within the provisions of Section 338(e) that the conviction establishes a crime the elements of which violate the express mandate of the Nationality Act for obtaining citizenship.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, it is respectfuly submitted that the petition for a writ of certiorari be denied, unless the writ is granted in No. 548, in naturalization. Had petitioner been found guilty of making the false oath here charged, he could have been convicted of and punished for a felony under this section. But he could have been convicted only after indictment and a jury trial at which he would have been present and represented by counsel. A conviction would have required a proof of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, on testimony of witnesses given in the presence of the accused who would have had an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses against him. In the event of such a conviction under required procedural safeguards, § 738 (e) authorizes courts to revoke citizenship and cancel naturalization certificates.

---

which case this petition should be held without action until final disposition of that case.

WALTER J. CUMMINGS, JR.,
Solicitor General.

WARREN OLNEY, III,
Assistant Attorney General.

BEATRICE ROSENBERG,
JOHN R. WILKINS,
Attorneys.

FEBRUARY, 1953.

MOTION FILED APR - 6 1953 SUPREME COURT, U.S.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1952

No. 548

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT and J. R. ROBERTSON,

Petitioners,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Respondent.

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE A BRIEF AS AMICUS CURIAE AND BRIEF.

WESTERN MECHANICS LOCAL 700, INTERNATIONAL UNION MINE, MILL AND SMELTER WORKERS OF LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA,

By JOHN W. PORTER,

112 West Ninth Street,
Los Angeles 15, California,

Attorney for Amicus Curiae.

Parker & Company, Law Printers, Los Angeles. Phone MA. 6-9171.

SUBJECT INDEX

PAGE

Motion for Leave to File a Brief as Amicus Curiae 1

Brief of Western Mechanics Local 700, International Union, Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers of Los Angeles, California, Amicus Curiae 3

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES CITED

CASES

	PAGE
Adamson v. California, 332 U. S. 46	4
Choy Yuen Chan v. United States, 30 F. 2d 516	4
Kotteakos v. United States, 326 U. S. 711	6
Louisiana v. Resweber, 329 U. S. 459	4
United States v. Anzalone, 197 F. 2d 714	5
United States v. Marzani, 168 F. 2d 133	5
United States v. McElvain, 272 U. S. 633	5
United States v. Noveck, 271 U. S. 201	5
United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243	5
United States v. Scharton, 285 U. S. 518	5
Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356	5

RULES

Rules of the United States Supreme Court, Rule 27, par. 9	1

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1952

No. ....

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT and J. R. ROBERTSON,

Petitioners,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Respondent.

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE A BRIEF AS AMICUS CURIAE.

To the Honorable The Chief Justice of the United States and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Comes now Western Mechanics Local 700, International Union Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers of Los Angeles, California, and respectfully moves this Court, pursuant to Rule 27, paragraph 9 of the Rules of this Court, for leave to file the accompanying brief in this case as amicus curiae. The consent of the attorney for the petitioners herein to the filing of this brief has been obtained and filed with the Clerk of the Court. The consent of the attorney for the respondent was requested but was refused. The interests of Western Mechanics Local 700, International Union Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers of Los Angeles, California, and its reasons for asking leave to file a brief amicus curiae, are set forth below:

Movant is a trade union with 6,000 workers engaged in the warehousing industry and its members have watched with growing concern the almost 20-year persecution and harassment of Harry Renton Bridges. There is a strong feeling among its members that this "relentless crusade" against Bridges has been because he has given his trade union militant and inspired leadership. Movant and its members are concerned lest trade union leadership of that kind be regarded as the basis for criminal conduct.

Movant is also concerned about the singling out of Bridges and his associates for special treatment and application with respect to the laws governing the operation of the statute of limitations and with respect to the administration of criminal justice. It appears to movant and its members that not only has there been a relentless persecution of Bridges, but that in order to achieve the end sought, it has been necessary to apply the law to Bridges and his associates in a manner in which it has never been applied to any other person.

Because movant and its members believe that a cornerstone of American democracy is fair and equal treatment before the law to all persons, they are concerned about what has happened in this case and ask leave to file the attached brief so that this Court may have the benefit of their views.

Respectfully submitted,

WESTERN MECHANICS LOCAL 700, INTERNATIONAL UNION MINE, MILL AND SMELTER WORKERS OF LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA,

By JOHN W. PORTER,

Attorney for Moving Party.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1952

No. ....

Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson,

Petitioners,

vs.

United States of America,

Respondent.

Brief of Western Mechanics Local 700, International Union, Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers of Los Angeles, California, Amicus Curiae.

By leave of Court first had and obtained, Western Mechanics Local 700, International Union Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers of Los Angeles, California, herewith files the following brief as amicus curiae in the above-entitled cause and urges the Court that the petition for certiorari now prayed for by petitioners be granted.

I.

For almost twenty years now Harry Renton Bridges has been the object of a relentless crusade unique in the annals of American jurisprudence. That this crusade commenced with Bridges' emergence as an ~~outstanding~~ trade union leader in the great San Francisco strike of 1934, is of considerable concern to all who believe that a strong vigorous and militant trade union movement is an essential element of American democracy. That the chief instigators and moving figures of this crusade were either anti-labor elements or professional patrioteers, is also of concern to those who believe that such forces represent unhealthy elements in any democratic society.

Although the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit made reference to the long history of proceedings against Bridges, it failed to appreciate their full significance. Contrary to the reasoning of many cases decided by this Court, it held that such a long continued series of persecutions did not deprive Bridges of due process of law. Mr. Justice Frankfurter has said that due process of law requires that there be no "brutal subjection of an individual to successive retrials." (Louisiana v. Resweber, 329 U. S. 459.) And the Court below, over twenty years ago, said that due process of law prohibited the government from requiring that one lawfully admitted be "called upon again and again to prove his right to remain."

Choy Yuen Chan v. United States, 30 F. 2d 516.

It would seem that by disregarding what has been done to Bridges for the last twenty years, the Court below ignored the fact that such a course of conduct "offend(ed) those canons of decency and fairness which express the notions of justice of English speaking people." (Adamson v. California, 332 U. S. 46.) The due process clause, protecting as it does, the "ultimate decency in a civilized society" (ibid., at 61) should not permit what has been done here to go unchallenged. At the very least, it requires this Court to review the proceedings below to see whether or not they measure up to the standards which this Court has applied in so many other cases.

II.

Movant is also concerned with what appears to have been a discriminatory application of judicial principles to Bridges and his associates. This Court, and every other Circuit Court of Appeals which has had occasion to consider the question, has held that a perjurious or false statement, whether in connection with so-called "tax frauds" or "naturalization frauds" or "citizenship frauds" or "employment frauds" is not within the scope and effect of the Wartime Suspension Act. And in every single case but this one, an indictment or the counts thereof, based upon such a false statement made more than three years before the return day, has been dismissed.

United States v. Noveck, 271 U. S. 201;

United States v. McElvain, 272 U. S. 633;

United States v. Scharton, 285 U. S. 518;

United States v. Marzani, 168 F. 2d 133;

United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243.

See also:

United States v. Anzalone, 197 F. 2d 714.

The Court below ignored these cases and applied a special rule to Bridges and his associates. Not only because this decision squarely conflicts with the decisions of this Court and those of other courts of appeals should this Court grant the petition for certiorari but also because such judicial discrimination against the petitioners is, as to them, a denial of due process of law. Compare this situation with Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, where it was held that discrimination in the application of an otherwise valid statute constituted a denial of equal protection of the laws.

Furthermore, the Court below approved the trial court's application to this case, and this case alone, of an instruction that a reasonable doubt means a doubt for which "a good reason would be assigned." So far as we know, no court has ever approved such an instruction before. As a matter of fact, the Court of Appeals stated that such an instruction was not to be "commended." It did not consider how that instruction, together with other conduct of the trial court, such as an improper limitation of the right of cross-examination to the defendants, hostile and prejudicial comments by the trial judge during the course of the trial, and other similar matters, resulted in the kind of error which must require reversal.

Kotteakos v. United States, 326 U. S. 711.

For this radical departure from normal rules governing the administration of criminal law, and in order that the trial courts may be properly advised concerning their duties and obligations in criminal cases, this Court should grant the petition and rule upon the questions presented.

It appears significant to us that only in the case involving Bridges and his associates was such a wide departure from the normal rules condoned by an appellate court.

For the foregoing reasons, amicus curiae joins in the prayer of petitioners that the writ of certiorari be granted and the entire cause be reviewed by this Court.

Respectfully submitted,

WESTERN MECHANICS LOCAL 700, INTERNATIONAL UNION MINE, MILL AND SMELTER WORKERS OF LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.

By JOHN W. PORTER,

Attorney for Amicus Curiae.

Service of the within and receipt of a copy thereof is hereby admitted this..................day of April, A. D. 1953.

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT, U.S.

MOTION FILED APR 17 1953

In the Supreme Court
OF THE
United States

October Term, 1952

No. 548

Harry Renton Bridges, J. R. Robertson, and Henry Schmidt, Petitioners,
vs.
United States of America,
Respondent.

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE BRIEF AS AMICUS CURIAE AND BRIEF OF INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION (AND CERTAIN OF ITS AFFILIATED LOCALS) AS AMICUS CURIAE.

International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union (and certain of its affiliated locals),
Amicus Curiae,
By Allan Brotsky,
240 Montgomery Street, San Francisco 4, California,
Attorney for Amicus Curiae.

In the Supreme Court
OF THE
United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

No. 548

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, J. R. ROBERTSON, and HENRY SCHMIDT, Petitioners,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Respondent.

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE BRIEF AS AMICUS CURIAE.

To the Honorable Fred M. Vinson, Chief Justice of the United States, and to the Honorable Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Comes now the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union[1] (hereinafter referred to as

---

[1] The following locals of the ILWU join in the presentation of this motion:

Local 16, Juneau, Alaska; Local 39, Seward, Alaska, Local 41, Juneau, Alaska; Local 62, Ketchikan, Alaska; Local 82, Seward, ILWU), and respectfully moves this Court, pursuant to Rule 27 (Paragraph 9), for leave to file the accompanying brief in this case as amicus curiae. The consent of the attorney for the petitioners herein to the filing of this brief has been obtained and filed with the Clerk of this Court. The consent of the attorney for the respondent was requested on April 13, 1953.

The interests of said ILWU and its locals, and its reasons for asking leave to file a brief amicus curiae are:

As stated in its motion for leave to file a brief as amicus curiae submitted while the above-entitled matter was pending on certiorari, ILWU is a trade union of approximately 70,000 members whose leading officers are the petitioners in the above-entitled matter. ILWU pointed out in said motion how for almost twenty years its members have watched with great

---

Alaska; Local 87, Wrangell, Alaska; Local 97, Anchorage, Alaska; Local 1, Raymond, Wn.; Local 3, Seattle, Wn.; Local 4, Vancouver, Wn.; Local 7, Bellingham, Wn.; Local 9, Seattle, Wn.; Local 19, Seattle, Wn.; Local 21, Longview, Wn.; Local 23, Aberdeen, Wn.; Local 24, Aberdeen, Wn.; Local 32, Everett, Wn.; Local 37, Seattle, Wn.; Local 51, Port Gamble, Wn.; Local 8, Portland, Ore.; Local 12, North Bend, Ore.; Local 18, Astoria, Ore.; Local 31, Bandon, Ore.; Local 45, Rainier, Ore.; Local 48, Reedsport, Ore.; Local 50, Astoria, Ore.; Local 68, St. Helens, Ore.; Local 2, San Francisco, Calif.; Local 5, Petaluma, Calif.; Local 6, San Francisco, Calif.; Local 11, San Jose, Calif.; Local 13, Wilmington, Calif.; Local 14, Eureka, Calif.; Local 17, Broderick, Calif.; Local 26, Los Angeles, Calif.; Local 29, San Diego, Calif.; Local 33, San Pedro, Calif., Local 34, San Francisco, Calif.; Local 36, San Francisco, Calif.; Local 46, Port Hueneme, Calif.; Local 54, Stockton, Calif.; Local 63, Wilmington, Calif.; Local 91, San Francisco, Calif.; Wilmington, California Unit, Local 26; Fresno Compress & Warehouse Union, Pinedale, Calif.; Local 142, Honolulu, T.H.; Local 207, New Orleans, La.; Local 208, Chicago, Ill.; Local 209, Cleveland, Ohio; Local 222, Washington, D.C.; Kauai Labor Council, Honolulu, T.H.; Northern California District Council; ILWU Federated Auxiliaries; ILWU Ladies Auxiliary No. 5; ILWU Ladies Auxiliary No. 8; ILWU Ladies Auxiliary No. 1.

concern the prosecution and harassment of their President, Harry Renton Bridges, and more recently of their other officers who are also petitioners herein. The union noted the belief on the part of its members that these prosecutions arose out of the fact that these officers were giving to this segment of the labor movement militant and inspired leadership and the concern that such leadership should be the basis for criminal prosecutions. The union also noted its concern with what appeared to be an arbitrary and discriminatory application of legal principles to these petitioners and its suspicion that such unequal treatment was being accorded to them only because of the fact of such leadership.

Since filing the foregoing motion, ILWU has had an opportunity to peruse the memorandum which the prosecution filed in response to the petition for writ of certiorari. This memorandum suggests other reasons why ILWU should be permitted to file a brief amicus curiae in addition to those heretofore assigned.

It appears to ILWU that the government's approach to the whole problem of the persecution of these officers of the union is cynical and hypocritical; that in the memorandum, the government admits for the first time much of what the ILWU has said about this case ever since its inception and makes clear that the prosecution of these officers is a direct attack upon the interest and welfare of the 70,000 members of the union. It is in order to demonstrate these points and to set forth the union's position on them, particularly with respect to observations made in the government's memorandum, that leave to file this brief is now sought.

Dated, San Francisco, California,
April 15, 1953.

Respectfully submitted,
INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND
WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION (and certain of its affiliated locals),
Amicus Curiae,
By ALLAN BROTSKY,
Attorney for Amicus Curiae.

In the Supreme Court
OF THE
United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

No. 548

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, J. R. ROBERTSON, and HENRY SCHMIDT, Petitioners,
vs.
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Respondent.

BRIEF OF INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION (AND CERTAIN OF ITS AFFILIATED LOCALS) AS AMICUS CURIAE.

By leave of Court first had and obtained, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union (hereinafter referred to as ILWU), and certain of its affiliated locals named in the foregoing motion, herewith files the following brief amicus curiae in the above-entitled cause.

I.

This Court has issued a writ to review the question of whether prior proceedings against Harry Renton

Bridges, which culminated in Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U.S. 135, are a bar to this prosecution.

We take this to mean that this Court will be reviewing the history of those proceedings. Even a superficial examination of that history demonstrates that the "Bridges case" is part and parcel of the story of the efforts of Pacific Coast maritime workers to better the miserable conditions under which they worked prior to 1934. There is no history of Harry Bridges which is separate and apart from the history of trade union organization on the West Coast since 1934. Were it not for the fact that Bridges was a leading figure in the development of that trade unionism, there is no question but what there would be no case now pending in this Court.

A history of Bridges' leadership of this union amply demonstrates why the membership is concerned with his case. Prior to the 1934 strike longshoremen in San Francisco were earning 85¢ an hour, were required to "kick-back" to straw bosses for employment, had no health or safety codes to protect them against occupational hazards, had no job security, had no pension or welfare plans or any of the other benefits which they now enjoy. The wretchedness of their working conditions as well as the efforts of the present petitioners to alleviate them are a matter of record in both this Court and the court below.

In more recent years the same situation has obtained with respect to the workers in the Hawaiian Islands who have been organized by this union under the leadership of petitioners herein. These petitioners cannot be separated from their union nor can their union be separated from them.

It is more than ironic that at almost every critical juncture of the union's history—in its fight for improved wages, for the maintenance of its hiring halls, for the organization of the workers in Hawaii—a proceeding of one kind or another has been instituted against Bridges or its other officers. It has happened too often to be a mere coincidence.

The members of this union resist the notion that prosecutions should be undertaken in order to deprive them of leadership which they sorely need in their daily trade union struggles.

II.

ILWU is concerned by a suggestion in the government's memorandum that the prosecution of its officers is "a matter of diminishing importance."[7] It may be a matter of no importance to the government prosecutors who thus cynically sought to avoid review in this Court by suggesting to the Court that if they were permitted to "get away with" this prosecution despite the conflicting opinions of the Courts of Appeals in the Second Circuit and in the District of Columbia, there would be no further prosecutions of this kind; and that if they were only permitted to jail Bridges and his associates, no Court would again be called upon to accept their strained interpretation of the Suspension Act.

But it is a matter of great importance to the members of this union first, that they not be deprived of leaders who have given successful guidance in the economic struggles depicted above; and second, that no set of laws or judicial decision be twisted and distorted in order to achieve the incarceration of any persons—much less the leaders of a militant trade union.

The government in its memorandum has admitted to this Court for the first time in history of this case many things which this union has been saying about the case, things which the government did not admit to the Courts below. It now concedes that it has pressed this prosecution in the face of unanimous decisions of other Courts which would have declared it outlawed. It has thereby revealed that from the beginning its motive was not to obtain a correct ruling on the law (as it might have done had it pressed other cases to final decision), but to incarcerate these three petitioners irrespective of what the law was.

We do not believe that this Court will countenance the cynical approach to basic human freedom that such a position reveals, and we respectfully join with petitioners in praying that their convictions be reversed.

Dated, San Francisco, California,
April 15, 1953.

INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND
WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION (and certain of its affiliated locals),
Amicus Curiae,

By ALLAN BROTSKY,
Attorney for Amicus Curiae.

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT. U.S.

MOTION FILED JAN 23 1953

Nos. 548-549

In the Supreme Court
of the United States

OCTOBER TERM — 1952

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT
and J. R. ROBERTSON,
Petitioners,
vs.
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Respondent.

Motion for Leave to File a Brief as Amici Curiae

and

Brief of Local 8, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Portland, Oregon, Local 50, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Astoria, Oregon, Local 21, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Longview, Washington, Auxiliary of Local 12, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Coos Bay, Oregon, Auxiliary of Local 11, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Vancouver, Washington, as Amici Curiae

PETERSON & POZZI,
Attorneys at Law,
Equitable Building,
Portland 4, Oregon.

1-53

STEVENS-NESS LAW PUB. CO.

INDEX

Page

Adamson v. California, 332 U.S. 46 7

Choy Yuen Chan v. United States, 30 F. 2d 516 7

Kotteakos v. United States, 326 U.S. 711 9

Louisiana v. Resweber, 329 U.S. 459 6-7

United States v. Anzalone, 197 F. 2d 714 8
United States v. McElvain, 272 U.S. 633 8
United States v. Marzani, 168 F. 2d 133 8
United States v. Noveck, 271 U.S. 201 8
United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243 8
United States v. Scharton, 285 U.S. 518 8

Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356 8

In the Supreme Court
of the United States

OCTOBER TERM — 1952

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT
and J. R. ROBERTSON;
Petitioners,
vs.
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Respondent.

Motion for Leave to File a Brief as Amici Curiae

and

Brief of Local 8, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Portland, Oregon, Local 50, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Astoria, Oregon, Local 21, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Longview, Washington, Auxiliary of Local 12, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Coos Bay, Oregon, Auxiliary of Local 11, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Vancouver, Washington, as Amici Curiae

TO THE HONORABLE THE CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE UNITED STATES AND THE ASSOCIATE JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES:

Comes now Local 8, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Portland, Oregon, Local 50, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's

Union of Astoria, Oregon, Local 21, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Longview, Washington, Auxiliary of Local 12, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Coos Bay, Oregon, Auxiliary of Local 11, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Vancouver, Washington, and moves this Court pursuant to Rule 27, paragraph 9 of the Rules of Court, for leave to file the accompanying brief as amicus curiae. The consent of the attorney for the petitioners herein has been obtained and filed with the Clerk of the Court. The consent of the attorney for respondent was requested and denied by letter dated January 13, 1953.

The interests of said Local 8, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Portland, Oregon, Local 50, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Astoria, Oregon, Local 21, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Longview, Washington, Auxiliary of Local 12, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Vancouver, Washington, and their reasons for asking leave to file a brief as amicus curiae are as follows:

Movants are locals and auxiliary locals of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union representing approximately 3,000 members of the longshore industry, and their members have a strong feeling that the persistent and relentless trials against Bridges have been solely because of his leadership in the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union.

Your petitioner is also concerned with the fact of the singling out of the petitioners in the within cause for special treatment and the application with respect to the laws governing the Statute of Limitations and criminal procedure. It appears that the laws have been given a completely different interpretation in so far as the within petitioners are concerned, than they have been given for any one else who has come within the said laws. It is the belief of these movants and their members then that the petitioners have not been afforded due process of law nor equal protection of the laws of these United States.

Respectfully submitted,

LOCAL 8, INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION OF PORTLAND, OREGON,

LOCAL 50, INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION OF ASTORIA, OREGON,

LOCAL 21, INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION OF LONGVIEW, WASHINGTON,

AUXILIARY OF LOCAL 12, INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION OF COOS BAY, OREGON, AUXILIARY OF LOCAL 11, INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION OF VANCOUVER, WASHINGTON,

By: ....

PETERSON AND POZZI,
Attorneys at Law,
413 Equitable Building,
Portland, Oregon.

In the Supreme Court
of the United States

OCTOBER TERM — 1952

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, HENRY SCHMIDT
and J. R. ROBERTSON,
Petitioners,
vs.
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Respondent.

Brief of Local 8, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Portland, Oregon, Local 50, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Astoria, Oregon, Local 21, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Longview, Washington, Auxiliary of Local 12, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Coos Bay, Oregon, Auxiliary of Local 11, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Vancouver, Washington, as Amici Curiae

---

By leave of Court first had and obtained, Local 8, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Portland, Oregon, Local 50, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Astoria, Oregon, Local 21, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Longview, Washington, Auxiliary of Local 12, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Coos Bay, Oregon, Auxiliary of Local 11, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Vancouver, Washington, herewith file the following brief as amicus curiae in the above-entitled cause and urge the Court that the petition for certiorari now prayed for by petitioners be granted.

I.

For almost twenty years now Harry Renton Bridges has been the object of a relentless crusade unique in the annals of American jurisprudence. That this crusade commenced with Bridges' emergence as an outstanding trade union leader in the great San Francisco strike of 1934, is of considerable concern to all who believe that a strong vigorous and militant trade union movement is an essential element of American democracy. That the chief instigators and moving figures of this crusade were either anti-labor elements or professional patrioteers, is also of concern to those who believe that such forces represent unhealthy elements in any democratic society.

Although the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit made reference to the long history of proceedings against Bridges, it failed to appreciate their full significance. Contrary to the reasoning of many cases decided by this Court, it held that such a long continued series of persecutions did not deprive Bridges of due process of law. Mr. Justice Frankfurter has said that due process of law requires that there be no "brutal subjection of an individual to successive retrials". Louisiana v. Resweber, 329

U. S. 459. And the Court below, over twenty years ago, said that due process of law prohibited the government from requiring that one lawfully admitted be "called upon again and again to prove his right to remain." Choy Yuen Chan v. United States, 30 F. 2d 516.

It would seem that by disregarding what has been done to Bridges for the last twenty years, the Court below ignored the fact that such a course of conduct "offend(ed) those canons of decency and fairness which express the notions of justice of English speaking peoples." Adamson v. California, 332 U.S. 46. The due process clause, protecting as it does, the "ultimate decency in a civilized society", (ibid. at 61) should not permit what has been done here to go unchallenged. At the very least, it requires this Court to review the proceedings below to see whether or not they measure up to the standards which this Court has applied in so many other cases.

II.

Movant is also concerned with what appears to have been a discriminatory application of judicial principles to Bridges and his associates. This Court, and every other Circuit Court of Appeals which has had occasion to consider the question, has held that a perjurious or false statement, whether in connection with so-called "tax frauds" or "naturalization frauds" or "citizenship frauds" or "employment frauds" is not within the scope and effect of the Wartime Suspension Act. And in every single case but this one, an indictment or the counts thereof, based upon such a false statement made more than three years before the return day, has been dismissed.

> United States v. Noveck, 271 U.S. 201.
> United States v. McElvain, 272 U.S. 633.
> United States v. Scharton, 285 U.S. 518.
> United States v. Marzani, 168 F. 2d 133.
> United States v. Obermeier, 186 F. 2d 243.

See also United States v. Anzalone, 197 F. 2d 714.

The Court below ignored these cases and applied a special rule to Bridges and his associates. Not only because this decision squarely conflicts with the decisions of this Court and those of other courts of appeals should this Court grant the petition for certiorari, but also because such judicial discrimination against the petitioners is, as to them, a denial of due process of law. Compare this situation with Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356, where it was held that discrimination in the application of an otherwise valid statute constituted a denial of equal protection of the laws.

Furtherfore, the Court below approved the trial court's application to this case, and this case alone, of an instruction that a reasonable doubt meant a doubt for which "a good reason could be assigned". So far as we know, no court has ever approved such an instruction before. As a matter of fact, the Court of Appeals stated that such an instruction was not to be "commended". It did not consider how that instruction together with other conduct of the trial court, such as an improper limitation of the right of cross examination to the defendants, hostile and prejudicial comments by the trial judge during the course of the trial, and other similar matters, resulted in the kind of error which must require reversal. Kotteakos v. United States, 326 U.S. 711.

For this radical departure from normal rules governing the administration of criminal law, and in order that the trial courts may be properly advised concerning their duties and obligations in criminal cases, this Court should grant the petition and rule upon the questions presented.

It appears significant to us that only in the case involving Bridges and his associates was such a wide departure from the normal rules condoned by an appellate court.

For the foregoing reasons, amicus curiae joins in the prayer of petitioners that the writ of certiorari be granted and the entire cause be reviewed by this Court.

Respectfully submitted,

LOCAL 8, INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION OF PORTLAND, OREGON,

LOCAL 50, INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION OF ASTORIA, OREGON,

LOCAL 21, INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION OF LONGVIEW, WASHINGTON, AUXILIARY OF LOCAL 12, INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION OF COOS BAY, OREGON, AUXILIARY OF LOCAL 11, INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION OF VANCOUVER, WASHINGTON,

By: ....

Attorneys at Law,
413 Equitable Building,
Portland, Oregon.

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT, U.S.

MOTION FILED FEB – 2 1953

In the Supreme Court
OF THE
United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, J. R. ROBERTSON, and HENRY SCHMIDT,
Petitioners,
vs.
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Respondent.
No. 548

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES,
Petitioner,
vs.
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Respondent.
No. 549

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE A BRIEF AS AMICUS CURIAE AND BRIEF OF INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION (AND CERTAIN OF ITS AFFILIATED LOCALS) AS AMICUS CURIAE.

INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION (and certain of its affiliated locals),
Amicus Curiae.

By ALLAN BROTSKY,
240 Montgomery Street, San Francisco 4, California,
Attorney for Amicus Curiae.

P[illegible]AU-WALSH PRINTING CO., SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

Subject Index

Page
Motion for leave to file a brief as amicus curiae 1
Brief of International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union (and certain of its affiliated locals) as amicus curiae 5

Table of Authorities Cited

Cases

Pages
Adamson v. California, 332 U.S. 46 7

Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U.S. 135 .... 2, 9

Choy Yuen Chan v. United States, 30 F. (2d) 516 7

Kotteakos v. United States, 326 U.S. 711 9

Louisiana v. Resweber, 329 U.S. 459 6

Marzani v. United States (D.C. Cir.), 168 F. (2d) 133; aff'd 335 U.S. 895, 336 U.S. 922 8

United States v. Anzalone (3 Cir.), 197 F. (2d) 714 8
United States v. Beacon Brass Co., Inc., 344 U.S. 43 8
United States v. Grainger, ... F. Supp. ...... (N.D. Cal. December 5, 1952) 8
United States v. McElvain, 272 U.S. 633 8
United States v. Noveck, 271 U.S. 201 8
United States v. Obermeier (2 Cir.), 186 F. (2d) 243, cert. den. 345 U.S. 951 8
United States v. Scharton, 285 U.S. 518 8

Wolcher v. United States (9 Cir., November 17, 1952), ... F. (2d) 9

Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356 8

Statutes

Wartime Suspension Act (18 U.S.C. 3287) 7

Rules

Rules on Appeal, Rule 27, paragraph 9 2

In the Supreme Court
OF THE
United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, J. R. ROBERTSON, and HENRY SCHMIDT, Petitioners,
vs.
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Respondent.
No. 548

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, Petitioner,
vs.
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Respondent.
No. 549

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE A BRIEF AS AMICUS CURIAE.

To the Honorable Fred M. Vinson, Chief Justice of the United States, and to the Honorable Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Comes now the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union[1] (hereinafter referred to as

---

[1] The following locals of the ILWU join in the presentation of this motion: Local 15, Bellingham, Wn., Local 32, Everett, Wn., Local 23, Aberdeen, Wn., Local 24, Aberdeen, Wn., Local 7, ILWU), and respectfully moves this Court, pursuant to Rule 27 (Paragraph 9), for leave to file the accompanying brief in this case as amicus curiae. The consent of the attorney for the petitioners herein to the filing of this brief has been obtained and filed with the Clerk of this Court. The consent of the attorney for the respondent was requested on January 27, 1953, but no reply has yet been received.

The interests of said ILWU and its locals, and its reasons for asking leave to file a brief amicus curiae are:

ILWU is a trade union of approximately seventy thousand members. These persons, more than most others, have watched with great concern the almost twenty-year persecution and harassment of their President, Harry Renton Bridges, and the more recent involvement therein of their other officers, J. R. Robertson and Henry Schmidt. There is a strong feeling among the members of this union that this "relentless crusade"[2] against Bridges arises out of the Bellingham, Wn., Local 4, Vancouver, Wn., Local 9, Seattle, Wn., Local 1, Raymond, Wn., Local 3, Seattle, Wn., Local 19, Seattle, Wn., Local 68, St. Helena, Ore., Local 48, Reedsport, Ore., Local 26, Los Angeles, Calif., Local 91, San Francisco, Calif., Local 13, Wilmington, Calif., Local 29, San Diego, Calif., Local 2, San Francisco, Calif., Local 17, Broderick, Calif., Local 6, San Francisco, Calif., Local 33, San Pedro, Calif., Local 11, San Jose, Calif., Local 10, San Francisco, Calif., Local 63, Wilmington, Calif., Local 36, San Francisco, Calif., Local 62, Ketchikan, Alaska, Local 85, Petersburg, Alaska, Local 30, Ketchikan, Alaska, Local 142, Honolulu, T.H., Local 207, New Orleans, La., and Local 209, Cleveland, Ohio.

---

A Motion for Leave to File a Brief Amicus Curiae and a Brief Amicus Curiae on behalf of certain other locals of the ILWU, to-wit: Local 8, Portland, Ore., Local 50, Astoria, Ore., Local 21, Longview, Wn., Auxiliary of Local 12, Coos Bay, Ore., and Auxiliary of Local 11, Vancouver, Wn., has already been submitted to the Court.

[2] Murphy, J., in Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U.S. 135, at 157.

fact that he has given to this trade union militant and inspired leadership. ILWU and its members are concerned that trade union leadership of this kind can be regarded as the basis for criminal conduct.

ILWU is also concerned about the singling out of Bridges and his associates for special treatment by the Court below, especially with respect to the laws governing the application of the statute of limitations and the administration of criminal justice. It appears to ILWU and its members that not only has there been a continuous persecution of Bridges throughout the years, but that in order to achieve the ends sought it has been necessary to apply the law to Bridges and his associates in a manner in which it has never been applied to any other persons.

Because ILWU and its members believe that a cornerstone of American democracy is fair and equal treatment under the law, it is concerned about what has happened in this case and therefore prays leave to file the attached brief.

Dated, San Francisco, California,
February 2, 1953.

Respectfully submitted,
International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union (and certain of its affiliated locals),
Amicus Curiae.

By Allan Brotsky,
Attorney for Amicus Curiae.

In the Supreme Court
OF THE
United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, J. R. ROBERTSON, and HENRY SCHMIDT, Petitioners, vs. UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Respondent.	No. 548
HARRY RENTON BRIDGES, Petitioner, vs. UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Respondent.	No. 549

BRIEF OF INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION (AND CERTAIN OF ITS AFFILIATED LOCALS) AS AMICUS CURIAE.

By leave of Court first had and obtained, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union (hereinafter referred to as ILWU), and certain of its affiliated locals named in the foregoing motion, herewith files the following brief amicus curiae in the above-entitled causes, and urges that the pending petitions for certiorari herein be granted.

I.

For almost twenty years now Harry Renton Bridges has been the object of a relentless crusade unique in the annals of American jurisprudence. That this crusade followed upon Bridges' emergence as an outstanding leader of Maritime labor in the great San Francisco strike of 1934 is of considerable concern to the members of the unions he there led. It must also be of concern to those who believe that strong and vigorous trade unionism is an essential element of American democracy and ought not to be the basis for governmental persecution. That the chief instigators and the moving figures of this crusade have been either anti-labor elements or professional patrioteers, is also of concern to those who believe that such forces represent unhealthy elements in any democratic society.

Although the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit made reference to the long history of proceedings against Bridges, it failed to appreciate their full significance. Contrary to the reasoning of many cases decided by this Court, it held that such a long continued series of persecutions did not deprive Bridges of due process of law.

Mr. Justice Frankfurter has said that due process of law requires that there be no "brutal subjection of an individual to successive retrials". (Louisiana v. Resweber, 329 U.S. 459.) And the Court below itself, over twenty years ago, said that due process of law prohibited the Government from requiring that one lawfully admitted be "called upon again and again to prove his right to remain". (Choy Yuen Chan v. United States, 30 F. (2d) 516.)

It would seem that by failing to give any effect to what has been done to Bridges for the last twenty years, the Court below ignored the fact that such a course of conduct "offend[ed] those canons of decency and fairness which express the notions of justice of English speaking peoples." (Adamson v. California, 332 U.S. 46.) The due process clause, protecting as it does the "ultimate decency in a civilized society" (ibid. at 61), does not permit what has been done here to go unchallenged. At the very least, it requires this Court to review the proceedings below to see whether or not they measure up to the standards which this Court has applied in so many other cases.

II.

ILWU is also concerned with what appears to have been a discriminatory application of judicial principles to Bridges and his associates. This Court, and every Court of Appeals which has had occasion to consider the question, has held that a perjurious or false statement, whether in connection with so-called "tax frauds" or "naturalization frauds" or "citizenship frauds" or "employment frauds", is not within the scope and effect of the Wartime Suspension Act. (18 U.S.C. 3287.) And in every single case but this one, an indictment (or the counts thereof) based upon such a false statement made more than three years before the return day, has been dismissed. United States v. Noveck, 271 U.S. 201; United States v. McElvain, 272 U.S. 633; United States v. Scharton, 285 U.S. 518; Marzani v. United States [D.C. Cir.], 168 F. (2d) 133, aff'd. 335 U.S. 895, 336 U.S. 922; United States v. Obermeier [2 Cir.], 186 F. (2d) 243, cert. den. 345 U.S. 951. Cf. United States v. Beacon Brass Co., Inc., 344 U.S. 43; United States v. Anzalone [3 Cir.], 197 F. (2d) 714; United States v. Grainger, ......F. Supp. ...... [N.D. Calif., December 5, 1952].)

The Court below ignored these cases and applied a special rule to Bridges and his associates. This Court should grant the petitions for certiorari not only because the holding below conflicts with the decisions of this Court and of various Courts of Appeals, but also because such judicial discrimination against the petitioners is, as to them, a denial of due process of law. Compare this situation with Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356, where it was held that discrimination in the application of an otherwise valid statute constituted a denial of the equal protection of the laws.

III.

Furthermore, the Court below approved the trial Court's application to this case, and this case alone, of an instruction that a reasonable doubt meant a doubt for which "a good reason could be assigned". So far as we know, no Court has ever approved such an instruction before. As a matter of fact, the Court of Appeals stated that such an instruction was not to be "commended". It did not consider how that instruction, together with other conduct of the trial Court, such as an improper limitation of defense cross-examination, hostile and prejudicial comments by the trial judge during the course of the trial, and other similar matters, resulted in the kind of error which must require reversal. (Kotteakos v. United States, 326 U.S. 711.)

The Court below appears to have condoned errors which normally would require a reversal of the judgments of conviction. As a matter of fact, on the day before the Court below denied the petition for rehearing in this case, it decided another case in a manner inconsistent with its decision here. In Wolcher v. United States (9 Cir., November 17, 1952), ... F. (2d) ....., the Court below, relying upon the rationale of this Court in Kotteakos v. United States, supra, reversed a conviction because of the erroneous exclusion of documentary evidence offered to corroborate the defendant's testimony. In the case of these petitioners, however, the Court below failed to apply the Kotteakos rule to the selfsame error of excluding from evidence a decision of this very Court (Bridges v. Wixon, 326 U.S. 135), offered by petitioners to corroborate their testimony.

For this radical departure from normal rules governing the administration of criminal law, and in order that the trial Courts may be properly advised concerning their duties and obligations in criminal cases, this Court should grant the petition and rule upon the questions presented.

ILWU regards it as significant that only in a case involving Bridges and his associates was such a wide departure from the normal rules of criminal law condoned by an Appellate Court.

For the foregoing reasons, amicus curiae joins in the prayer of petitioners that the writ of certiorari be granted and the entire cause be reviewed by this Court.

Dated, San Francisco, California,
February 2, 1953.

International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union (and certain of its affiliated locals),
Amicus Curiae.

By Allan Brotsky,
Attorney for Amicus Curiae.